In this solempne counsaill dyuerse and many thynges of the realme were there debated and concluded: and emongest other, yt was determyned that the lady Elizabeth wyfe to kynge Edwarde the.iiii.shoulde loase and forfeyte all her Landes and possessyons,because she had voluntarely submytted her selfe and her daughters wholy to the handes of kyng Richarde,contrarye to the promes made to the lordes and nobles of thys realme in the begynnyng,of the conspiracy ymagyned agaynst kyng Richard,whiche at her desyre and request lefte all that they had in Englande and fled to kyng Henry into Britteyne,and there receaued a corporall othe of him to mary her eldest daughter,which office she abode not by, but made yt frustrate and voyde, through whose double doynges yt had lyke to haue succeded, that neyther the mariage coulde take place,nor yet the noble men whyche at her request toke kyng Henrys parte,might not returne agayne wythout ieopardie of lyfe, but lyue styll in perpetuall banyshement and myserable exyle. Thys was a greueous offence and a heynous cryme: howbeyt the sequele thereof well digested, yt was thoughte by some men that she deserued not by equytie of iustyce so great a losse and so great a punyshement: For surely she dyd not so great hurte or hynderaunce to kynge Henry and hys confederates by her reconciliacion to kynge Rychard, but tenne tymes more she profyted theym and auaunced theyr cause. For her submyssyon made to hym,he neglectynge Goddes lawes, honest order and Christyan relygion, presumynge to accumulate myschiefe vpon myschiefe,delyred of her the mariage of her daughter hys naturall nyece, whyche whyche thynge he woulde not haue thought lykely to haue obteyned: The quene and her daughters styll for feare of him contynuyng in sanctuary. Whiche vnlawful desyre (consyderynge for that entent he had ryd hys wyfe oute of the worlde) prouoked the Ire of God and the swoorde of vengeaunce agaynste hym, whereby hys fynall ruyne and fatall falle, shortely after ensued and succeded to hys myserable confusyon, and to the exaltacyon of kynge Henry and auauncement of hys whole company.

Hereby a manne may perceaue that wycked and maligne persones be not brought to ruyne by the hande of a temporall iudge, but by the wyll of God led and thereto apoynted, as menne that make hast to approche and to come to that ende that they haue deserued. By thys foly and inconstancy of the quene, she incurred the hatred and displeasure of many men, and for that cause lyued after in the Abbey of Barmandsey beside Southwarke a wretched and a myserable lyfe, where not many yeres after she deceassed and is buryed wyth her husbande at Wyndsore. Suche are all worldly chaunces, nowe in prosperyte and aboundaunce, mutable and chaungeable and full of inconstancy: and in aduersitye often chaunge from euell to good and so to bettre, to the entent that they that be in wealthe and flowe in the aboundaunce of all thynges, shall not thynke theim selfes in suretye to tary styll in that degree and state: and that they that be in misery and calamytie shall not despayre nor mystrust God, but lyue in hope, that a better daye of comforte and gayne, wyll once apere and come. And yet although fortune ruleth many thynges at her wyll and pleasure, yet one woork that thys quene hathe made cannot bee forgotten nor put in obliuion. At what tyme that kynge Edward her husband reigned, she founded and erected a notable College in the vniuersyte of Cambridge for the fyndynge of Scholers desyrous of good litterature and learnynge, and endued yt wyth sufficient possessions for the longe mayntenaunce of thesame, whiche at thys daye is called the quenes College, a name surely mete for suche a place, wherin Scholers diligently studyeng in all doctryne and sciences, proue excellent clercke̅s and come to great honoures

When all thynges in thys counsaill were seriously concluded and agreed to the kynges mynde, he returned to the cytie of London, geuynge in commaundement that the nexte sondaye ensuyng, Edward the younge Erle of Warwike to bee brought from the Towre through the moost publyke and vsuall stretes of London, to the cathedrall churche of saynt Paule. This younge gentleman (as he was commaunded) shewyng him selfe openly too euery body in the procession tyme, taried ther the hygh masse, hauynge communicacion openly wyth many noble men, and wyth theim in especially that weer suspected and thought to haue been partakers of the commocion against the kyng, to this purpose and effect, that they myght perceaue the fonde Iryshemen, for a vayne shadowe and vntrue feycyon, vnaduysedly too excytate and moue warre a- Ba.37.a agaynst hym and his realme, without any iust cause or laufull occasion. Howbeyt to cuell dysposed persones or brayneles men, thys medicyne nothyng auayled nor proffyted. For the erle of Lyncolne sonne to Jhon de La poole duke of Suffolke, and Elizabeth syster to kynge Edwarde the forth thynkyng it not mete to neglect and omyt so open an occasion of new trouble & mischiefe offred and exhibited, determined to vp holde, forteffye, & bolster the enterpryce of the Jrishemen, least that they myght be seduced, and caused to desyst & leaue of their incepted enterpryce, and attempted purpose: And doubteles the man beyng of great wyt and intelligence, and of no small iudgement, but halfe infected wyth the venemous skabbe of the late cuyle battaile, coulde not wyth a quyet mynde suffre kyng Henry beyng pryncipall head of the contrary faccion to reigne in quyet, but cõsultyng wyth sir Thomas Broughton, and certeyne other of his trusty frendes, purposed to saile into Flaũders to his aunte the lady Margaret duches of Bourgoyne late wyfe to duke Charles, trustynge by her healpe to make a puyssaunt army of men, and to ioyne with the compaignyous of the newe rayfed sedicion. Therfore, after that the kyng had dissolued the Parliament, whiche then was holden: he fled secretly into Flaunders to the lady Margarete, where Fraunces lorde Louell landed certeyne dayes before. And there they beyng altogether, euery man accordyng to his mynde reasoned, argued, and debated what was best to doo. After longe cõmunycacion had, this fynall conclusyon was agreed vpon, that the erle of Lyncolne and the lorde Louel should go to Jrelande, and there attende vpon her countrefeacte nephewe, and to honor him as a kyng, and with the powre of the Jrishemen to bryng him to Englande, and sendyng for all their frendes, shoulde without delaye geue battaile to kynge Henry: So that yf their doynges had good and prosperous successe, then the forsayde Lambert (mysnamed the Erle) shoulde by the consent of the counsaill be deposed, and Edwarde the true Erle of Warwyke to be delyuered oute of pryson, and after by the aucthoritie and aide of his frendes of the nobilitie, should be published, proclaymed, and anoynted kyng.

But kyng Henry thynkyng his nobles to be well appeased with the syght of Edward the very sonne of the duke of Clarence, nothynge mystrustyng any man to be so folishe to inuent, feigne, or countrefeate anye thynge more of him, or anye so mad or vndiscrete (especially of his realme) as to beleue that Lambert was very Edward, onely myndynge the suppressyng of the Flagicius Jrishemẽ, studied how to subdewe and represse their bolde entrepryce and sedicious coniuracion. And hearing sodeynly that the Erle of Lyncolne with other were fled & gone to hys aduersaries, beynge therwith sodeynly moued: thought euen with stronge hand and marciall powre to ouercome hys enemyes and euell wyllers, whose maliciousnes he could by no counsaill nor pollecy eschewe nor auoyde: And beyng thus determyned, he commaunded certeyne of his capitaynes to prepare an hoste of men oute of euery parte of hys realme, and them to bryngе and conduyte into one place assygned, that whē his aduersaries should come forwarde, he myght with his populous multitude & great powre sodeynly set on theim, & so ouercome and banquisshe them altogether. And mystrustyng that other would folowe the Erle of Lyncoln into Flaunders, he caused the East partes, and all the borders theraboutes to be diligently kept, that none other myght escape or geue them succoure. And commyng to the toune of saynt Edmondes bury, he was certifyed that the lord Thomas Marques of Dorcet was cōmyng to excuse & purge hym selfe before hym, for certeyne thynges that he was suspected to haue done lightely when he was in Fraunce. To whom the kynge did send the Erle of Oxenford to intercept him ridyng on his torney and to conueigh him to the Towre of London, to trye his truth and proue his pacīēce. For if he were hys frende as he was in dede, he should not be miscontented to suffre so lytle a reproche & rebuke for his princes pleasure. If he were not hys frend, there to tary in sauetye that he might do no dāmage nor hurt to hym. And from thence the kyng went furth to Norwiche, & tarryng there Christmas daye, departed after to Walsyngham, and cōmyng there into the churche of oure lady, prayed deuoutly and made supplicacīōs to almighty God, that by his diuine powre and through the intercession of our lady, he might eschew the snares & preuy worckynges of hys enemies, and preserue him selfe and his country from the imminēt daungier, and to reduce agayne the streynge shepe to their right folde and true shepard, that be amysse: hys orysons fynesshed, from thence by Cambridge he returned shortly to London.

In thys meane tyme the Erle of Lyncolne and the lorde Louell, had gotten by the ayde of the layd Margaret, aboute twoo thousand Almaynes, with Martyne Swarde a noble man in Germany, and in marciall feactes verye expert, to be their cheueteyne, and so sailyng into Ireland. And at the cytie of Dyuelyn, caused younge Lambert to be proclaymed and named kyng of Englande, after the most solempne fassyon, as thoughe he were the very heyre of the bloud royall lyneally borne and discended. And so wyth a great multitude of beggerly Irishemen, allmost all naked and vnarmed sauynge skaynes and mantelles, of whom the lorde Thomas Gerardine was capiteyne and conductor, they sayled into Englande with this newe founde kyng, and landed for a purpose at the pyle of Fowdrey within lytle of Lancastre, trustyng there to be ayded with mony by Sir Thomas Broughton one of the chiefe compaignions of this vnhappy conspiracy.

The kyng not slepynge his matters, but mystrustyng and smellyng the storme that folowed, before the enemyes arryued, he dispatched certeyne horsemen throughout all the west partes of the realme, chiefely to attende the cōmyng and arryuall of his enemyes, secondarely to wayte for suche espialles as came out of Ireland, & them to apprehend & compell to shew & declare the secretes of their enemyes. When he had gathered al his hoste together, ouer the which, the duke of Bedforde & the erle of Oxenforde, were chefe capiteynes, he went to Cōuentry, where he beynge, hys light horsemen accordyng to their duetie returned & certefyed him that ỹ erle of Lincolne was landed at Lancastre with his new king.

The which when the kyng understode was so, he consulted with his nobilitie and councellers to knowe if it were for the best to encountre with theim oute of hand, or let theim dragge awhile, for this mattre bothe requyred counsaill and also celerite. After they had layed their heades together and well debated the matter, it was determyned that they should set vpō theim without any further delaye, least that their powre by lon-ge sufferaunce & delatyng of tyme myght be augmented & greatly mul- x tiplyed. And so after such aduysemēt takē, he remoued to Nottyngham, and there by a lytle wood called Bowres he pytched his feelde: to whom shortely after came the lorde George Talbot Erle of Shrewsbury, the lorde Straunge, Sir Jhon Cheyny valeaunt capitaynes, wyth many other noble and expert men of warre, For the kyng had cōmaunded and geuen in charge before, that all persons of the counties adioynyng that were hable & of strengthe to cary weapon shoulde be ready in an houres warnynge, in case that any nede shoulde requyre. Therfore pycked fellowes and hardy patsonages and suche as were lyke menne, were chosen in all the haste, and of this sorte a great armye was coacted and gathe- xx red together: So the kynges army was wondrefully encreased, & from tyme to tyme greatly augmented.

In this space, the erle of Lyncoln beyng entred into Yorkeshire, passed softely on his iourney without the spoylyng or hurtyng of any man, trustyng therby to haue some company of people resorte vnto hym: but after that he perceaued fewe or none to folow him, and that it was to no purpose to returne backe, consydryng his enemyes were all ready to set vpon him, he determined firmely to trye the fortune of battaile, remembryng that the chaunce of Mars dothe stand euer vpō. vi. or. vii. & that kyng Henry not. ii. yeres before with a small powre of men vanquished xxx kyng Richard & all his mightie armye. And herupon puttyng a sure confidence vpō hys compaigny, directed his waye from Yorke to Newarke vpō Trent, to thentent that there he (as he trusted) augmētyng his compaigny might set vpon the kyng, whō he knew to be but. ii. daies iorney from hym. Albeit, before he came there, kyng Henry was in hys bosome and knewe euery houte what the Erle did, came the night before that he fought, to Newarke, and there approched nere hys enemyes soner then they loked for hym, and there tarying a lytle went. iii, myles further and pitched hys feelde & lodged there that night. The erle of Lyncolne certefyed of hys commyng, was nothynge afearde, but kepte styll on his ior- xl ney, and at a lytle village called Stoke nigh to the kynge and his army planted hys campe. The next daye folowynge, the kynge deuyded hys whole nombre into three battailes, and after in good arraye approched nigh to the toune of Stoke, where was an equall and playne place for bothe parties to darreigne the battaile,

When

When the place was apoynted and ozdeined to trye the vttermoſt by ſtroke of battaile, the erle ſet furth his army, and geuyng a token to his compaignye, ſet vpon hys aduerſaries with a manly courage deſtrynge hys ſouldyours that daye to remembze his honoure, and their awne lyues. And ſo bothe the armyes ioyned and fought earneſtly and ſharply, in ſo muche that the Almanyes beynge tryed and expert menne in warres and marciall feates, were in all thynges, alwell in ſtrengthe as pollecye egall and equyualent wyth the Engliſhemen: but as foz Martyne Swarde theyz chiefe capitayne and leader, not many of the Englyſhemen, bothe foz valyaunt courage of a ſtoute ſtomack and ſtrengthe and agilyte of body was to bee compared oz reſembled wyth hys manhoode. Of the otherſyde, the Iryſhemen, although they foughte hardely and ſtucke to it valyauntly, yet becauſe they were after the manner of theyz countrey almoſte naked, wythout harneys oz armure, they were ſtryken downe and ſlayne lyke dull and bzute beaſtes, whoſe deathes and deſtruccyons was great diſcouragynge and abaſhement to the reſidue of the company. Thus they fought foz a ſpace ſo ſoze and ſo egrely of bothe partes, that no man coulde well iudge to whome the victozy was lyke to enclyne: But at length, the kynges fozward beynge full of people and well foztefyed wyth wynges, whyche onely bothe beganne and contynued the fyght, ſet vpon the aduerſatyes wyth ſuche a foꝛce and violence, that fyrſt they oppreſſed and kylled ſuche capitaynes one by one as reſiſted theyz myght and puyſſaunce, and after that put all the other to fearfull flyght, the whyche were eyther appzehended as captyues and pzyſoners in theyz flyght tunnynge awaye, oz elles ſlayne and bzought to confuſyon in a ſmall moment. But when thys battaile was fynyſhed and fought oute to the extremytie, then it well apered what high pzowes, what manly ſtomakes, what courageous hartes and what valyaunt courage was in the kynges aduerſaryes. Foz there their chiefe capiteynes the Erle of Lyncolne and the lozde Louell, Syz Thomas Bzoughton, Martyn ſwarde & the lozde Gerardyne capiteyne of the Iriſhemen were ſlayne and founde dead. Howbeyt, ſome affyzme that the lozde Louell toke hys hozſſe & would haue fled ouer Trent, but he was not hable to recouer the fartherſide foz the highnes of the banke and ſo was dzowned in the ryuer. There were kylled at that battaile wyth their fyue capiteynes befoze reherced of that partye aboute foure thouſand: Of the kynges parte there were not halfe of them whych fought in the fozward and gaue the onſet ſlayne oz hurt: Then was Lambert the yonglynge whych was falſely repozted to be the dukes ſonne of Clarence, and hys maſter ſir Richard Symond pzieſte bothe taken, but neither of them put to death, becauſe that Lambert was but an innocẽt pooze ſoule, a bery chylde, and was not of age to do any ſuche entrepzyce of his awne deuyce, and the other was a pzieſt, which yet to thentẽt he might remẽbze that the ſtone oftẽ tymes falleth on the head of hym that caſtethe it into ỹ ayer, & that many a man maketh a rod foz his awn taile when he entendeth it for another, thys priest for penaunce was cõmitted to perpetual pryson & miserable captiuite. But this Lambert in cõclusion was made the kynges faulkener, after that he had been a turne broche and executed such vile officies in the kinges kytchin & skollarye for a space. And thus was all the high entrepryce that lady Margaret had deuised & set furthe at this tyme, turned to naught and brought to none effect & to an euell cõclusion. Of which chaunce, when she was aduertysed & enformed in the country of Flaunders, she was very sorye at the harte & much lamented and deplored, that her ymagined purpose sorted to suche an infortunate ende & effect, incontinently deuisyng, practisyng & ymagenyng some greate and more difficile enterprice, by the which she might vexe and perturbe yet once agayne the kyng of England and hys whole region: Whiche purpose, euen as she inuented yt, so she set yt forwarde as shalbe shewed herafter plainly.

After that kyng Henry had thus asswaged and appeased these matters beynge of so great a moment and weight, with no great mocion, tumulte or trouble, & had not only escaped and defaced the apparant and ymminẽt perell with a small conflict, and no great daungerous brunt or ieopardy, but also repressed & suppeditate the cyuile dissencion and interior stryfe, in maner as he woulde haue wyshed it, he might thynke hym selfe at one tyme cleane ryd & delyuered from two euelles together, both from feare present & also that was to come. For certeynly when he ponդred & diligently consydered his aduersaries (whose puissaunce he bothe in nombre and force farre did surmount and precell) at the very poynte so fiercely to ioyne and to byd hym battaile, he much suspected & no lesse mistrustedthẽ ỹ they had some preuy fautoures and secret coũcelers (the whiche when tyme and place should requyre or expostulate) would with their strength, ayde succoure and assyst them agaynst him and his puyssaunce. But when he perceaued and sawe the hoost of hys enemyes manifestli vanquished and put to flight, he cõmaunded that no man should kyll or sleye the Erle of Lyncolne, but that he should be brought to him alyue, to thentent that he might shewe & bewraye both the foũtayne and originall begynnyng, and also the confederates, aiders and comforters of his late practysed sedicious cõspiracy. But the fame is, that the souldyours woulde not so do, fearynge least paraduẽture the sauyng of hys only lyfe (as yt should haue been in dede) the lyfe of many other shoulde haue been lost, or at the least in ieopardye. Thys battaile was fought on a saturdaye beyng the .xvi. daye of Juyn the yeze of our lorde thousand foure hundreth .lxxxix. and towarde thende of the second yere of the reigne of this kynge: In the whyche yere also Thomas Burchier Archebishopp of Cauntourbury dyed, into whose roome Jhon Morton late bishopp of Ely, a manne of egall learnyng, vertue and pollecye with his predecessours, whome Alexander of that name the .vi. bishop of Roome created Cardinall, and the kynge preferred hym to thoffyce of the highe Chauncelour of Englande: Now to returne to my purpose.

After thys victory obteyned, and after the kynge had gathered and collected the prayes & spoyles of the Feelde together, and buryed theym that there were slayne, he remoued to Lyncolne, and there reposed hym selfe thre dayes, and caused euery daye one processyon to be celebrate, to rendre humble thankes to almightye God, for hys tryumphant victory and ouerthrowe of hys enemyes. Then dyd he execution of suche rebelles and traytoures as were taken in the felde, eyther at the battaile, or in the chace. And shortely after he went into Yorkeshyre, and there costed the country ouerthwart, searchynge by explorators and prieuy enquyries, where hys aduersaryes gathered theyr army agaynst hym, entendyng earnestly to wede oute, and purge his lande of all seditious seede and double harted fruyte, yf yt were possyble: and suche as were founde culpable in any one poynte, wer cõmytted to pryson, & either raunsomed by fyne or extint by deathe.

Burgh 30.

The thirde yere.

In the myddest of August entrynge into the.iii. yere of hys troubelous reigne, he by iorneyng arryued at newcastell vpõ Tyne, a very porpre towne, situate on the hyther parte of Northumberland, where he taryed the remnaunt of the somer, and beynge there, sent in Ambassade into Scotland to kyng James the thyrde, kyng of Scottes, Richard Foxe whych not longe before was made bishoppe of Excettre, and wyth hym syr Richard Edgecombe knyght comptroller of hys house. The summarye of their commyssion was to conclude a truce for a tyme, or a longe league and an amytie. For kyng Henry estemed it bothe honorable and profytable yf he myght haue perfyght peace and assured amytie wyth prynces adioynyng and hys next neighboures. And before all other with kyng James of Scotlande, to thentent that hys subiectes hauyng knowlege of the amytie, and despairyng vtterly to haue any refuge, comforte or succoure of the Scottes, or othere theyr neighboures nere and adioynyng, cõtrary to their olde vsage, trust and expectacion, myght the better be cõtinued in the faithe, duetie & loyaltie towardes their prynce and souereigne lorde. The Ambassadours whẽ they were come into Scotland to the kyng, were of him both gently entreteined & after the most louyng fassyõ receaued & fully harde. To whom at the fyrst, he shewed his good hart, his true mynde, tendre zele, and fraternall affeccyõ, that he hym selfe contynually bare, and yet dyd entende to shewe towardes kynge Henry, although his subiectes were of a contrary mynde and opinyon, playnly protestyng & declaryng to them his vassalles to be bothe by nature and wylfull disposicion, diuerse and cõtrary euer to the Englishe nature and English naciõ: thinkyng surely that they for the most part, would neuer cõsent & longe agree with the Englishmen, accordyng to their olde crafty varietie: wherfore least that he should offend or minister cause of occasiõ to them (as in dede al men were not his frendes in Scotlãd at that tyme) he desired ỹ Ambassadours to cõsent ẅ truce & abstinẽce of warre for seuen for seuen yeres, not onely in open audience, but on hys honor he promy-sed firmely in secret communicacion (as secret as a confessyon made to a preest) that he for hys parte would kepe contynuall peace with the kyng of Englande durynge their lyues, but apparauntly he promysed that or these .vii. yeres, shouid be passed and fully fynesshed that he would renue agayne the truce for other .vii. yere, so that kynge Henry & he shoulde be and lyue in peace, concorde, and moste assured amitye, duzynge their naturall lyues. And thys dyd kyng James conclude with kyng Henry, because that he knewe hym selfe, hys actes, yea and hys name to be had in suche despyte and hatred of the more parte of hys dysloyall people, that p nothynge (whatsoeuer he dyd) was estemed, regarded, well spoken of or had in anye pryce: Suche was the malicious hartburynynge of the Scottes agaynst their naturall lorde. The Ambassadours perceauyng the hartye mynd and faithfull beneuolence of this kyng towardes their master kyng Henry, accepted and assented to his offre, and ratefyed the-same: And returnyng home shewed the kynge all the matter in ordre as yt was proponed, assented and concluded. Wyth whyche tydynges, he perceauynge the kynge of Scottes good mynde towardes hym, and ap-parauntly perceauynge that as that tempestyous and stormy season requyred, yt was not to hys small commoditie and profyte, reioysed mer- pp uelously that hys Ambassade came to so good an effecte: and shortely after reculed backe agayne from Newcastell to Yorke, and so towarde his cytie of London. And in the waye beynge at Leycestre, dyuerse Ambassadours sent from Charles the Frenche kynge came to hys presence, whyche declared and shewed to hym that theyr kyng Charles had reco-uered manye Tounes, Cyties and garrysons whyche before that tyme were possessed and holden of Maximilian kynge of Romanes and Archeduke of Austryce, and that he nowe moued battayle agaynst Frau-ces duke of Bryteyne, because he kepte, ayded and succoured in hys ter-ritorie and dominion diuerse noble prynces and hygh personages of the rrp realme of Fraunce, whyche were treytoures and rebelles agaynste hym, his realme and seigniory, of the which the chief leader was Lewes duke of Orlyaunce: And therfore he desyred hym for the olde frendshyp and familiarite practysed betwene them, that he would either ayde, assayste & helpe hym, or elles stande neuter betwene both parties, neither helpynge nor hurtyng any of bothe partes, lyke a cypher in algorisme that is toy-ned to no figure but onely occupieth a place.

Kyng Henry well remembryng that although he had founde muche frendshyp at the Frenche kynges hande in his necessitie and that by hym partely and his he obteyned his kyngdome, yet forasmuche as he espyed rl vpon what vnsure ground this quarell was begonne agaynst the Bry-tones, wyth this message was not well contented nor yet pleased. For he whyche sawe as farre in the Frenche kynges brest as hys Phisicion did in hys vryne, knewe perfightly that he had neyther occasyon by any iust tytle to inuade the duchy of Bryteyne, nor yet any displeasure mynistred to hym

to hym,by reason whereof he might iustly haue any shadowe to make a quarell to the duke of Bryteyne,but onely to delate, amplifye and pro-pagate farther hys auctho3itie,domynion and possession. For the Frenche kyng and hys counsail knewe well that duke Fraunces was an impotent man,lytargious,sore deceased and well stryken in age, and had neuer anye heyre male to inheret and possede hys duchy, wherefore they determyned by some meanes easely to compasse that the duchy of Bryteyne should brcuely comebndre their iure and subiection, and so without grounde,without cause or reasonable demonstracion, bncompelled,he intymated and made open warre agaynst the duke and Brytanicall nacion.Kyng Henry perceaupnge that thys newe attempted enterprice nothyng sounded to his profit or emolument,callyng to mynd and consyderynge that yf the Duchy of Bryteyne and the people of thesame whyche had been euer frendly & louyng to Thenglyshe nacion,and was alwayes for their entrecourse to his realme both necessary and profitable,shoulde come bndre the thraldome & subiection of the Frenche kyng that daimmage more then profite were likely to ensue and folowe,determyned wyth hym selfe to ayde and take parte with the duke,perceaupng well that all hys affaires was nowe in perell and set in a broyle and hasard.The occasion that moued hym therunto was the kyndlyng of the paternall loue and tendre affeccion whyche the duke euer shewed hym, sith hys fyrst arriuall and entryng into Bryteyne,and his fidelite to hym alwaye apparauntly shewed durynge the tyme of hys there abydynge and residence. On the other parte,when he remembred the greate benefyte that he had accepted and receaued at the Frenche kynges hande by hys bountyfull and pryncely liberalitie, thought it bothe necessary, honest and consonant to reason to forgett the bngrate offence agaynst the duke of Bryteyne commytted and perpetrated, and to persuade and aduyse the Frenche kyng to desyste from berynge or inuadynge the duke of Brytayne, least anye scruple or sparke of ingratitude might insurge or kyndle bytwene them two. This matter was so doubtfull and so full of ambyguities that the kynge in longe consultacion lefte no questyon nor doubte bnalked, nor bndiscussed,and yet no aunswere nor no conclusyon coulde satisfye or please hys doubtfull mynde and gentle harte, lothe to offende anye of theim, of whome he had receaued eyther benefite or frendship:But in conclusion,he fel to this ful determaincion, that yf battayle should nedes succede and folowe,then he of very duetie was bounde and obliged not to denye nor to forsake the duke of Bryteyne,to whom he was so muche beholdyng but to aide,assist & comfort him with all hys powre, and openly to kepe from hym all wronges and iniuries, and to defende & resiste all hys aduersaries & enemyes. Yet in the meane season,least he should of the other parte make his high frend hys extreme enemy,hys aunswere was to the Ambassadoures that he would take trauayle & study,bothe to hys great peyne & cost,that betwene the Frenche kyng theire souereigne lord & the duke of Bryteyne,bothe beyng hys indifferent frendes, some gentle pacificacion or amicable accorde might be concluded and accepted. And so assone as the kynges Ambassadours were dimysed, he sent on message Chzistopher Urswike to Charles the Frenche kynge: First to gratulate in his behalfe the victozy that he had obteyned vpon Waxmilian kyng of Romanes. Secondarely and after to declare what tumulte and insurrection was here in England, and howe by mere force and manhood he had vanquyshed and repressed the rebelles and traytours, and eyther dystroyed or brought to subiection, the whole rablemēt and nombze. Thyrdly, offryng him selfe as a meane x and intercessor of peace and amytie betwene the Frenche kynge Charles and the duke of Bzuteyne: geuyng hym farther in charge that yf he should perceaue the Frenche kyng to geue open eare to his request and to enclyne to hys desyze, that then he shoulde withoute delaye resorte to the duke of Bzuteyne and desyze him to be contented at his desyze to endeuer hym self to an honozable peace and concorde, rather then to warre and dubyous dissencion, which peace with Goddes grace he lytle doubted, the duke beynge wyllyng shortely to compasse and bzynge to conclusion. Whyle Chzistopher Uzswicke was traucylynge in thys cōmissyon, kyng Henry returned with great tryumphe to his cytie and chamxx bze of London, haupnge the victozy and ouerhand of hys enemyes and rebellious aduersaries, whereof the cytezens were very glad & reioysed hartely, consideryng that such dāmages, such oppzession, such perel and losse as they thought to haue susteyned, was by the death of such disturbers of peace & trāquillitie, as the kyng had late ouercome, cleane take away, auoyded & suppzessed. Also the kyng hym self trustyng faithfully that all the bzādes of mischiefe kyndled before against him, was by this victozy vtterly extinguished & brought to asshes, could not but be mery & reioyce. For which cause, he shewed hym selfe both lowely & corteous towardes all, rewardyng & promotyng most bountifully & liberally all xxx such persones, which not only did hasarde their goodes, their possessiōs, liuinges and substaunce, but also their lyues and bodyes in his defence and quarell. And not longe after, he delyuered lozd Thomas Marques Dozset out of the Towze of London, acceptyng him to his high fauour and olde familiaritie, because his truth and fidelitie had been tryed and proued by sondzy & dyuerse argumētes and assaies, In which pastyme, the kyng for the perfyght loue and syncere affeccion that he bare to hys quene and wyfe lady Elizabeth, caused her to be crouned and enoynted quene on saynt Katherynes daye in Nouembze withall solempnytie to suche a high estate & degree apperteignyng. In the meane season Chris-xl stopher Urswike was come to the Frenche kyng lyng at Tholouse, & of him after the most louyng and frendely fassyon that coulde be, receaued and entreteined. And assone as he had shewed and declared his message, the Frenche kyng shewed hym selfe outwardly, although inwardly he otherwyse entended, to be therewith contented and that very well pleased that the kyng of Englande shoud be the meane of peace and Arbiter

indifferent betwene the duke and him. This answere made, the English Ambassadour tooke his iorney streyght thence as he was comaunded into Britteyne, and shewed the duke vpon hys Masters behalfe all thynges geuen him in charge and commission: But the duke (because him self had bene longe sycke and therby hys memory and wyt was decayed and appaired) he appoynted to heare the message with other of his councelers, Lewes duke of Orleaunce whiche was fled thether out of Fraunce. When this duke had hearde the Ambassadours declare their message, perceauynge that it touched a peace whiche he thought sounded neither to his profyt nor pleasure, wherfore he beyng somwhat tyckeled with the message answered and sayed, that it was more mete & conuenient that kyng Henry (considerynge and remembrynge the great kyndenes & humanitie that he had receaued at the dukes hand) shoulde with all the power and strength he might, helpe the duke of Britteyne beyng by the Frenchemē inuaded with yron, fyre and bloude, then to attempt or procure any fryuelous or vayne composycion or cōcorde. Yea and although he had neither receaued nor remembred any benefyte done to him by the duke, yet should he consydre that the countrey of Britteyne was in maner a bullwerck and a stronge wall for the Englishmen in defence of the Frenchemen, the which yf yt should come into the handes of the Frenche nacion, then were his continuall enemyes next to the gate of his realme, whiche thyng he would not suffre if he remembred the Prouerbe that sayth, when thy neighboures house is a fyer, thy staffe stādeth nexte the dore. Thus muche was the duke of Orlyaunce beyng of the French bloud, an enemy to hys naturall countrey, because that he beynge next of the bloud royall to the croune of Fraunce, was repulsed from the chiefe estate and gouernaunce of the realme, and the kynges suster put in highest authoritie, durynge the minorite of the kynge, he abandoned his awne natiue countrey, and hauynge onely refuge in the duchy of Brytayne for hys awne sauegarde, profyt and emolumēt, spake these woordes that he declared and opened. For well he knew, that kyng Henry was not therof all ignorant, that it was neither profitable nor cōmodious for ỹ realme of England, to haue the duchy of Britteyne possessed of the Galles, considering the sea costes of bothe the countreys, to lye directelye one agaynst the other. Then returned this Christopher agayne into Fraūce, and there taried certeyne dayes, declaryng to kyng Charles what answer was made to hym by the Britteynes, & shortly after returned into England agayn. Whyle these thinges were thus in doynge, the Frēche kyng beseged with a great puissaunce the stronge citie of Nauntes in Britteyne. And the more gredyer that he was of hys purpose, & the more haste he made for gayning hys praye, so moch the more did he exhorte ỹ kyng of England with letters, writynges and blandymētes, by sondrie and diuers messengers, for to treate and conclude a peace, vnytie & concorde betwixt the duke of Britteyne and hym, fearing least when he had almost wonne hys race, kynge Henry woulde put hym beside his sadle,

whõme he dyd halfe suspect to be a backe frende of hys, and prone and ready to take the Brytones parte.

Wherfore he sent in Ambassade Bernarde a Scotte borne, called ꝑ lord Daubeney, in all the hast to kyng Henry, to desyre hym in any wise to make some ende whatsoeuer it were, of this warre and controuersy.
And therupon the kyng beyng desirous of thesame, whiche had rather all thinges myght be ended by peace then by dynt of swearde, least that he should be driuen to take parte wyth the Brytons agaynste the Frẽch nacion, elected emonge all other.iii.oratours. The first was Jhon sainct Abbot of Abyndon, Jhon Lilye borne in Luke, the bishop of Ro- x mes collector, doctor of lawe, and Rychard Edgecõbe knyght, both for age and prudent sagacitie, fatherly, a wyse & a graue personage, which for renuyng of the olde amitye, were commaunded first to go to repayre to the Frenche kyng, and after that to the duke of Brityne, to whome he gaue a longe commission with sufficient instructions. But or euer these Ambassadours proceded on their iorney, Jhon Lylie fel sycke on the gowte, so that he was not able to trauayle in so long a iorney, and so weightye a busynes, for whome was elected and chosen Chrystopher Urswike, and so they.iii. sayled into Fraunce (as they were cõmaunded) and when they had communed a space with the Frenche kyng, concer- xi nyng the forme of the peace & concorde to be concluded, Rychard Edgecombe, and Chrystopher Urswike, departed streight to the duke of Bri-teine, thinkinge ye and nothing doubting, but they there shoulde knyt vp the knot, and finall conclusiõ of their Ambassade, accordyng to their awne request and desyre, but all their hope was vayne, and turned to a vanitie. For the duke, vpon great deliberacion, constantly repudiated and refused euery condicion by them offred or demaũded. Which thin-ges when they succeded not accordyng to their expectacion, the Ambas-sadours deposinge and relinquishynge all hope and esperance of any peace or concord to sorte to any good effect or purpose, reculed backe to xxx the Frenche kyng agayne, defrauded and spoyled of their entent and purpose, and there to hym declared what was their aunswer and fynall resolucion, and yet makyng there abode in Fraunce, they intimated to the kyng of England by their letters all their actes and exployt. But, or their letters came to the kynges hãdes, lyr Edward, lord Wooduile vncle to the Quene, a valyaunt Capitayne, and a bolde Chãpion, either abhorryng ease and ydlenes, or inflamed with ardent loue and affeccion toward the duke of Britaine, desyred very earnestly of kynge Henry, ỹ yf it were hys will and pleasure, that he with a conuenient number of good men of warre woulde transport hym selfe into Briteine, for ỹ aide yi and defence of duke Fraunces, the kynges assured and proued frende.
And least it should sowe or kyndle any dissenciõ or ingratitude betwene the Frenche kyng and him, he sayde that he woulde steale priuely ouer, and without any licence or passporte, as though no man shoulde thinke or doubte but he were fled, & abandoned the realme without any fraude or

or male engyn. But the kyng, which had a firme confidence, that peace should be made by the polletique prouision and wyse inuencion of hys elected Ambassadours, woulde in nowyse geue the brydle to hys hote, hasty and wilde desire, but streyghtly prohibited hym to attempte anye suche strategeme or enterprice, thinkynge that it stode not with hys honor to offende the Frenche kyng, to whome he woulde shewe as muche amitie and humanitie as he myght, for suche a matter that coulde neyther greatly profite the Brytonnes, nor yet cause hym to surceasse of his appoynted inuasion and pretensed enterprice. Yet this lord Wooduile hauyng playne repulse and denyall of the kynge, coulde not thus rest, determyned to worke his busynes secretly without any knowlege of the kyng, and went streyght into the Isle of wight, wherof he was made tu-let and capiteyne, and there gathered together a crewe of tall & hardye personages, to the number of.iiii.C. and with prosperous wynde and wether arryued in Briteyne, and ioyned hym selfe with the Brytons a-gaynst the Frenche power and nacion. The rumor of this doyng was sone blowen into the courte of Fraũce, whiche made the Ambassadours of Englande not smally abashed, which knowing perfightly ỹ Frenche hartes to be prone and ready at all tymes to reuenge and do outrage to suche as displeased them, were sodainly afraied least the commõ people coulde not witholde their handes from quereling or fraying. Albeit the lawe of armes, and the treuth it selfe did defende and preserue them from iniury. But whiles the oratoures were in this perplexite and fear of daungier, and whiles the Frenchmen suspected this facte to be done by a cautell of kyng Henry, there came other new messengers from hym to the Frenche kyng, to purdge hym selfe to his frend of the suspected ingratitude, certifiyng hym and declaring (by most euident tokens & apparant argumentes) that the lord Wooduile without his knowlege or consent, was sayled ouer into Britayne with so small a number of men, which smal handful, neither it becõmed a prince to sende or set forward, neither yet coulde do to the Brytaynes any great aide or succoure: To the which message and excuse, albeit the Frenche kynge adhibited but small credence, yet he some what mitigate of his angre and furious agony, dissimuled the matter (accordyng to the Frẽch nature) with a flatteryng countenaunce. So the Ambassadours renuynge a league and a-mitie betwene their kyng and him for.xii. monethes, retuned into Eng-lande againe, and shewed the kyng al such thinges that they had either heard or sene there. The kyng of England well perceyued by the report of hys newly returned Oratoures, that the Frenche kynge wrought all hys feates by subtyll craft and cloked collusion, treatyng and mocionynge peace and concorde, when he desyred nothing so much as discord and warre, and that purpose he auaunced and set forwarde with sayle & power, to the vttermost point of his habilite. Wherfore kyng Henry beyng assured of all the French kynges actes and cogitaciõs, determined now with all celerite to set forth out of hand al such thinges as here be-foze had cõcluded, cõcerning the warre of Bzitayne, as you haue heard. Wherfoze he called his high courte of Parliament, and there fyzst consulted with the peres and cõmynaltie of hys realme, foz the aidyng of ꝑ duke of Bzitayne. Then foz the mainteinaunce of ꝑ warres, diuers summes of money were graũted and geuen, beside certayne decrees & actes made foz the vtilite of the common wealth. And assone as the Parliament was ended, he caused mustres to be had in certayne places of hys realme, and souldiours mete foz the warre to be put in a redynes. Yet least peraduenture he might seme willingly to breake the amitie, which was betwene the Frenche kynge and hym, he sente diuers notable Ambassadoures into Fraunce, to certefye the Frenche kynge, that of late he hadde kepte a solempne Parliamente, in the whiche it was condiscended and agreed by the lozdes tempozall and spirituall, and knyghtes of counties, and magistrates of cities, and bozoughes of his realme not onely conssideryng the relief, comfozte, and aide that he had receyued at the dukes hande, bothe foz the sauegard of hys lyfe, and foz the recouerying of hys enheritaunce and kyngdome, but also remembzyng that Bzytayne of auncient tyme was subiect & vassall to the realme of Englande, which counttey also hath been frendly, and aiders to the English nacion when it was vexed, bothe with fozeyn powers and domesticall sedicion, to aide, comfozte and assist the Bzytishe nacion with all their strength, might and habilite againste all their enemyes, frendly admonishyng hym that he should either desist from hys warre in Bzytayne newly incepted, oz els not be greued if he did agre (as reason woulde) to the myndes, iudgement and determinacion of the pzinces and pzelates of hys realme, assuryng hym in the woozde of a kynge, that hys armye should onely discende in the duchy of Bzitayne, not to inuade oz make warre in the Frenche kynges realme oz territozyes, but onely to defend the duchy of Bzitayne, and to pzofligate and expell all the intrudozs & inuadours of the French nacion, whiche iniustly occupied and inuaded the Bzytannicall tytles and seignozies. With these commaundemẽtes the English Ambassadours departed, and declared to the Frenche kyng all the mynde and will of their kyng and souereigne lozd. Whiche message he dissimuled as litle to regarde as the byting of a flee, as thoughe the Englishmen in the battaile, whiche he knewe to be at hande, coulde do no enterpzice (as it happened in dede) either necessary to be feared, oz wozthy to be remembzed. The cause of hys so saiyng was thys, he knowynge that hys army was puyssaunt and stronge in Bzitayne, and that the Bzitaynes had but a few Englishmen with the lozde Wooduile, of whome he passed litle, and seyng that Englãd had not yet sent any army thether foz the dukes succour, iudged surely that hys army woulde do some great exployte (as they did in dede) befoze either the duke shoulde be purueyed oz any aide ministred. And as he imagened, so it folowed, foz the Frenchmen so soze oppzessed the countrey of Bzitayne, and bzent and distroyed cities, and beleged the toune of Fõgeres, so that the duke of Bzitaine was encouraged by the duke of Dzliaunce, and other rebel-les of the Frenche kyng manfully to fight and geue battaile to ỹ Frēch army. And so the xxv. daye of July they set forward, & came to a toune whiche the Frenchmen had gotten, called sainct Aulbyne. The Frenchmen were not ignorannt of their commyng, but put theim selfes in a re-dynes. Of whiche armye was Capitaynes, The lorde Lewes of Treuoyle, vyscount of Thonars a Gascoyn, Adrian lorde of Mountfal-coysse. On the Bzytones parte were cheueteynes, Lewes duke of Dzlaunce, and the pzynce of Dzenge, whiche because they and other of the Frenchemen were all on horsebacke, were mistrysted of the Bzytones, least they woulde at their mooste nede flye.

Wherfore they discended on fote, and the duke and the pzince put thē selfes in the battaile of the Almeynes: The Marshall of Rieux was ap-poynted to the vauntgarde. The middle warde was delyuered to the lord Dalebert, and the rerewarde to the lorde Chateaw Bzyand, and to make the Frenchemen beleue that they had a great number of Englishmen (notwithstandynge there were but foure hundreth with the lorde Woodvile) they appareled a thousand and seuen hundreth Bzytons in cotes with red crosses after the English fasshion. When bothe the ar-myes were approchyng to the other, the ordinaunce shot so terribly and with suche a violence, that it sore dammaged and encombred bothe the parties. When the shot was finished, bothe the vantgardes ioyned together with suche a force that it was maruell to beholde. The Englishmen shot so fast, that the Frēchmen in the forward, were fayne to recule to the battayle where their horsemen were. The rereward of the French men, seyng thys fyrst discōfiture began to flye, but the Capitaynes rett-red their men together agayn, & the horsemē set fiercely on ỹ Bzytaines, and slewe the mooste parte of the fotemē. When the forward of the Bzy-tones perceaued that their horsemē nor the Almanies came not forward they prouided for thē selfes, & fled some here, and some there, where they thought to haue refuge or succour. So that in conclusiō the Frenchmē obteyned the victory, & slew all such as ware red crosses, supposyng thē all to be Englishmē. In thys cōflict were slayn almost all the Englishmen, & six M. Bzytones, Emongest whome were founde dead the lorde Woodvile, & the lord James Galeas borne in Napels. And of ỹ Bzy-tones there were slayne the lord of Leon, the lorde Mountfort, the lorde Pontlabbe & many noble & notable persones of the Bzitish nacion. Of the French nacīō were slayne. xii. C. persones. The pzynce of Dzenge, & the duke of Dzliaunce were taken pzysoners, which duke (although he were next heyre apparaūt to the croune of Fraūce) should haue lost hys head, if lady Jane hys wyfe which was syster to Charles ỹ Frēch kyng, had not obteynen pardō & remissiō of his trespasse & offence. Howbeit he was lōg after kept pzysoner in the great Toure at Bourges in Berry.
This infortunate metyng chaūced to ỹ Bzitaynes on a mōday beynge the. xxvii. day of July, in ỹ yere of our redēpcion. M. cccc. lxxxviii. & in ỹ iii. yere of kyng Henry the. vii.

When

When these newes were brought into Englande, the kynge bigt-lantly forseyng what was like to chaunce, thought it necessary to accelerate the mattre before concluded, wherefore with all spede he sent Robert Lorde broke, Syr Jhon Cheyny, syr Jhon Middelton, syr Raufe Hilton, syr Rychard Corbett, syr Thomas Leighton, syr Richard Laton and syr Edmond Cornewall, all lusty and courageous capitaynes with viii.M. men well armed, and warlike furnyshed to ayde and assist the Brytones agaynst the Frenchemen. These tolymen of warre had suche prosperous wynde, that they arryued in Brytayne euen as they woulde wyshe or desyre. And after that they had recreated their spirites, and refreshed them selfes a litle after their labour and iourney, they puttinge thē selfes in good ordre of battaile, marshed forward toward their enemyes, and not farre from them encamped them selfes. But when the Frenchmen knew of their landyng, whome they knew by no small experience (and especially so long as they were freshe and lusty) to be in maner inuincible. And so at the beginnyng they were all blanke, & for feare kept them selfes craftily and politikly within their campe. And after that, they sent forth a small company of lighte horsemen, the whiche to wery and fatigate the stoute stomackes and haute courages of the English army, made in diuers places of the army, skyrmisshes, outcryes & alarmes. So for a certayne space they vsed thys kynde of daliyng wt the Englishmen, but euer the losse turned to the Frenchmen, & they bare the woorse away, by reason of the archers that so sore galled theim and theyr horsses with arowes, that their bragging incursions were sone left and done. But beholde the mutacion of this worlde, whyle this warre was thus set forward, Fraunces duke of Britayne departed out of this lyfe, so that the Englishmen were in a doubtfull labirinth, and a great ambiguyte. For the chiefe rulers of the Brytaynes, beyng some of them corrupted with money, and some sturred with desyre of deuision and controuersie, fell into deuision emonge them selfes, so that they semed not to tendre the defence and protection of their naturall countre, but rather mynded the dystruction and vttre confusion of thesame. Whiche deuision the Englishmen perceauyng, and also considerynge that it was in the myddest of wynter, in the whiche tyme it is not wholsome for men to lye in the frosty and moyst feeldes, were compelled in maner by necessitie within .v. monethes that they went forwarde, to returne backe agayn into Englande.

After thys Charles the frenche kynge hauyng thus the vpperhand of the Brytones, perceauyng that Maximilian kyng of Romanes laboured to haue in mariage, Anne sole heire to Fraūcis duke of Britaine for her younger suster was late dead, whiche he thoughte was neither for hys profyte nor aduauntage, concluded a peace with the Brytones. By whiche treatie he had the lady deliuered into hys possession, & after her deliueraunce, he refusyng and repudiatynge the mariage of the lady Margaret, daughter to the forsayd kyng of Romanes, espoused ỹ lady

Anne duches of Bzytayne, by whiche meanes the duchye of Bzitayne was annexed to the croune of Fraunce, as here after shall appere when it toke effect, whiche was not two yeres after.

OWe to the mony layde out, as conterninge the sumptuousnes of thys battaile. It was decreed by the iii. estates (as you haue heard) in Englande before that any souldioures were sent into Bzitaine, that for the expence of that warre, euery man should be taxed and assessed at the some of hys substaūce, and should paye the tenth penny of hys gooddes, for the maintenaunce of the warre in Bzitayn. Which money the mooste parte of them that dwelt about the Bishoprike of Durham & Yorkeshire, refused vtterly to paye, either thinking thē selfes ouercharged with the greatnes of the same, and therewith greued, or excited and procured throughe the euell counsayll and sedicious persuasion of certayne persones, whiche preuely conspired agaynst the kynge, to put him to new trouble and busines. Therfore suche as were by the kinges commaundement made Collectoures and gatherers of the summe taxed, after that they coulde not get the money, accordynge to the extractes to them by the commissioners deliuered, made their complaint preuely to Henry the. iiii. Erle of Northumberland, chiefe ruler of the Northepartes. And he immediatly vpō the knowlege therof, signefied the kynges grace by hys letters, that the people greatly grudged and murmured, makynge open Proclamacion that they haue ben charged of late yeres with innumerable incommodities and oppressions, without any defaut or desert, and that now there was a houge some requyred of them, which neither they were hable to satisfie so great a demaunde, nor yet woulde once consent to paye any one peny of the sayde summe requyred. The kynge commaunded the erle in any wyse by distresse or otherwyse accordyng to hys discrecion, to exacte the money of the people, and by cōpulsion to enforce suche to payment as whyned moost at it, least ỹ it might appere that the decrees, actes and statutes, made and confirmed by him and hys high courte of Parliament, shoulde by hys rude and rusticall people be infrīged, despised and vilepended. The rude rashe and vnaduised people, hearynge this aunswer of the kynge, by and by violently set vpon the erle by the procurement of a simple felowe called Jhon of Chambre, whome the erle entreated with fayre woordes to come to reason, but they latyng to hys charge that he was the chiefe author & principall causer of thys taxe and tribute payynge, both hym and diuers of hys housholde seruauntes, furiously and shamefully murthered & kylled. Diuers afferme that the Northernemē bare against this erle continuall grudge, sith the death of kyng Rychard, whome they entirely loued and highly fauoured, whiche secret serpēt caused their fury to wade farther then reason coulde retract or restreyne. Although thys offence were great and haynous, yet ther succeded after a more mischief and a greater inconuenience. For incontinent the Northenne to cloke the homicide and manslaughter, by a violence put on their armure and assembled in flockes, and elected to theim a capitayne called syr Jhon Egremonde knyght, a person no lesse seditious then factious and desirous of trouble, and ordred theim selfes lyke men of warre, and passinge by the countreys, they published and declared that they would byd battail to the kynge, onely for the tuicion and defence of their common libertye and fredome, whiche he woulde plucke, and by hys extreme power take & bereue frō thē. But when their cause should be discided with blowes & handstrokes, their fury was asswaged & refrigerate, their hartes were in their heeles, and their stomackes as coulde as any stone, & euery one wished that this tumult were retracted and quenched, which was now already not smokynge but enflamed: And in cōclusion, euery man ranne awaye, some this way, and some that way, as men amased when they lacke counsayl, skatered and dispersed in diuers places. Whē euery mā was returned, the mattre was ended as they imagened, but whyle they diligently laboured to saue their lyfes by flyght, they sought their awne destruccion. For the most parte of theim were punysshed by death or by imprysonment for thesame offence. For the kyng heryng of this tumulteous busynes, sent forth Thomas erle of Surrey, whome not lōg afore he had deliuered out of the Toure, and receaned to his grace and especiall fauour (as he was both for his wit and fidelite wel worthy) with a competent crewe of men into the Northy partes, which skyrmished with a certayne company & discomfited them, & toke a lyue Jhon a chambre the fyrst beginner of this rebellion. The kyng hym selfroade after the erle into Yorkeshire, of whose cōming the slaues & sturdy rebelles were so abashed & afrayed, that they fled more & lesse, which afterwarde were apprehended & greuously punished, accordyng to their demerites and deseruyng. Yet the kyng of his magnyficent mynde, perdoned the innocent & rurall people, & plaged & executed the inuenters of the mischief, & the furtherers of thesame. For Jhon a chambre was hanged at Yorke, vpon a gybbet set vpon a square paire of gallowes, lyke an archetraytoure, & his complyces & lewde disciples were hāged on the lower gallowes roūde about theyr mayster, to the terrible exemple of all other. But syr Jhon Egremōd, whome these seditious persons preferred to be their Capitayn, fled into Flaūders to the lady Margaret duches of Burgoyne, whiche euer enuied the prosperite of kynge Henry.

When this folysshe enterprice was thus quenched, the kyng gaue cōmission & charge to syr Rychard Tunstall knyght, a man of great wyt, pollecie & discretion, to gather and receaue the subsidie to hym dewe of the people, and he hym selfe returned shortely to London, leauynge the erle of Surrey to rule the Northpartes, perceauynge well the Englishmen, not so muche to grudge at the paymente of the taxe or tribute, as they did grone at the excessyue and importable some vpon them assessed,

remembrynyg the olde prouerbe, loue me litle and loue me longe. And thys was the yere of our Lorde. M.cccc.xc.and the fourth yere of thys kynges reigne.

Before this tyme, Maximilian kynge of Romanes, whiche as you haue heard in the tyme of kynge Edwarde the.iiii. had contrary to the mynde and will of the French kyng espoused lady Marie, daughter & heyre to Lewes the Frenche kynge, and by her had issue, a sonne called Philip, and Margaret whiche was affied to Charles the.viii. Frenche kyng, and by hym repudiate and forsaken, was sore offended & greatly greued with the Flemynges, but moost of all with the Gauntoys and Brugians, for kepyng from hym perforce hys sonne & heyre duke Philip, whiche neither by gentle request nor cruell manace wouldc delyuer the sonne to hys naturall father and lawful parent. Wherfore the kyng Maximilian assembled a company of Almanyes & Duerlanders (for he dyd not greatly put hys confidence in the Brabanders nor Hollanders) and made sharpe warre on the Flemynges, in the whiche he lytle preuayled. For the Flemynges sent to the Frenche kynge for aide & succour, whiche beyng glad of that request, sent Philip de creuecure lorde Desquerdes, commonly called the lorde Cordes into the confines of Flaunders with a great army of men, to aide and succour the Flemynges, trustinge by that meanes to obteyne bothe the possession of ỹ yong enfaunt duke Philip, and the whole countrey of Flaunders. Wherfore Maximilian entending to allure the Flemynges from the Frenchmen, beganne fyrst to practise with them of Bruges, of whiche toune the grauous men, sone condiscended and agreed to reason, requiringe hym to come to their toune, and sent to hym with their request, the Scult called Peter Longoll with diuers other, to aduertise hym that at hys comynge thether, he should fynde hym conformable to hys wyll, pleasure and request. Upon trust wherof he entred into the toune smally accompanied, & came before the toune house, thinkyng that the lordes & senate wouldc ioyously haue receaued and welcõmed hym. But the whole turned cleane contrary, for the lyght witted persons, to whome peace was treason, and concord venemous poyson, takyng this occasion to them offred, cryed to harneys. When they whiche had brought the kyng into the toune, sawe the tumult of the people, and that no man came to their relyef, they left their lord post alone, and fled into corners. The warden of the smythes was the chief of the route, which bad the kyng to take pacience a whyle, and he should haue a gentle enprisonement, and so conueighed hym to the house of Jhon Grosse, iudge of the audience. Then the Almaines were all banished, the toune, and the lordes of Gaũt were sent for, which taried not longe. When they had the praye that they expected, fyrst diuers citizens whiche they thought fauourable to Maximilian they beheaded. Mathew Spert one of hys chiefe counsaylours and trusty frendes, was sent to Gaunt, and there put to death. James Dudenezell, & James of here, ii. wyse burgeses, notwithstandynge that all the

all the pzieſtes and religious of the toune made interceſſion foz theim, were at Buges executed. Then Jhon Capenoll a buſy merchaunt, woulde in all haſte haue rydden to induct the French kyng as their ſouereigne lozde, to whome the mooſt parte woulde in nowyſe agree noz conſent, noz yet entended to diſinheryte the yonge duke Philippe of his graundfathers inheritaunce.

When execucion was done of the wyſe and ſad counſaylers, ỹ newe made rulers cauſed their pzynce kynge Maximilian to be bzoughte to the toune houſe, and there they layed to hys charge, that he had not obſerued the treatie, which they of Graunt and Bzuges had concluded wt the French kyng. Secondarely, they alledged that he put high Almaynes in offices and great authozite, whiche without their aſſent woulde haue chaunged and inhaunced their coyne and money to their greate pzeiudice and detriment. Many other ridiculous articles they layde to hym, whiche the eares of euery honeſt creature knowinge the ductie of the ſubiecte to hys pzince, woulde hate and abhozre, to the whiche he ſo wyſely and coldely aunſwered, that in parte he aſſwaged their malice, and mitigated their rage. In ſo much that he was moze gentler entreated then he was befoze. Foz if hys aunſwer had been to thē diſpleaſaunt, oz if he had manaced them but one woozde, I thinke in their fury they woulde haue diſpatched him out of hys lyfe and lande. The Gauſoys woulde haue deliuered hym to the Frenche kyng, but the Bzugiās woulde not aſſent. They of Gaunt deſyzed to haue him in their cuſtody in Gaunt, but ỹ citezens of Bzuges vtterly denied hys deliuery. Wherfoze the Gauntoyes in great diſpleaſure departed. After whoſe departure the Bzugians were content to ſet hym at libertie, ſo that he and diuers of hys nobilitie ſhould ſweare on the holy Sacrament, not onely to remit, pardon and fozgeue all offences perpetrated and committed by them of Flaunders, but alſo ſhoulde ſweare and pzomes, neither to remembze noz reuēge theſame. Thys othe he ſware in the great Church of Bzuges, and the lozd of Raueſton called Philip Mounſeur, and the lozd of Beuers and diuers other ſware theſame, addyng therunto, that if he did attempt any thynge cōtrary to hys othe and pzomes, then they ſwate to take parte with the good tounes of Flaunders agaynſte hym and his adherentes. And vpon this pzomes he was deliuered, and frākly ſet at libertie.

But Frederick the Emperour coulde not fozget the repzoche & deſpite that was ſhewed to hym in hys ſonne, and the great inſury & wzong that was done to his ſonne partely to hys diſhonour, ſcourged Flaunders with ſharpe warre and moztall afflictions (Maximilian lyng in quyet and nothyng attemptinge) but Philip Mounſeur, lozde of Rauеſton, the whiche toke hys othe with kyng Maximilian, to ſhewe that the warre was renouate without hys knowledge and aſſente, forſooke Maximilian hys lozde, and toke the toune of Ypere, and Sluſe, wyth both the Caſtels of theſame hauen, which he manned and victeyled, and kept two yeres agaynst the power of Maximilian, till he rendred theim to syr Edward Pownynges sent thether by the kynge of Englande, as yow shall hereafter well perceaue. Beside this, the forsayde Philip not onely exacted and stirred the Gauntoys, Brugians and other tounes of Flaunders, to rebell agaynst their souereygne lorde, but also sent to the lorde Cordes, to ayde hym to conquere suche tounes of Flaunders, as were not of their opinion and confederacy. This lord Cordes, which vntruly reuolted from duke Charles of Burgoyne, beyng hys bringer vp and chief preferrer to Lewes the Frēch kyng (as you haue heard be-x fore) was glad of thys, and so sent to the ayde of the Fleminges. viii. M Frenchmen, willyng them to take and conquere such tounes, as were in the waye betwene Fraunce and Bruges, or Caleys and Bruges. The Capitaynes folowynge hys deuice, beseged a litle walled toune, called Dipenew, to whome came. iiii. M. Flemynges with vitayle and artil-lary, sent from Philip Mounseur. They layed siege on the Northside of the toune in a marishe groūde then beyng drye, and so depely dyched their campe, and so highly trenched it, on which trenche they layed their ordinaunce, that it was in maner impossible to entre into their campe, or to do them any displeasure or dammage. The kynge of Englande was xx dayly aduertised of these doynges, whiche nothing lesse desyred then to haue the English pale and territory enuyroned with French fortresses. For he perceaued well that if the Frēchemē gate Dipenewe, they would afterward assaile Newport and Grauelynge, and cōsequently, what w force and what with corruption of rewardes, their purpose was to haue the possession of duke Philip and all Flaunders, whiche shoulde not be to the profite of hym nor hys subiectes. Wherfore this yere, sodeynly with great expedicion he sent ouer to the lord Dawbeney to Caleys, the lord Morley with a Crewe of valyaunt archers and souldiours, to the number of a. M. men, with preuy instruccions what they shoulde do. xx When they were lāded, they published and sayed that they came to defende the English pale yf the Frenchemen or Flemynges would attēpt any mastryes there: But their enterprice was all otherwise. For on a Tuesdaye at the shuttyng of the gates at nyghte, the lorde Dawbeney chefetayne of the army, the lorde Morley, Syr James Tyrrell, Cappy-tayne of Guysnes, Syr Henry Willoughby, Syr Gylbert Talbot, syr Homfrey Talbot, Marshall of Caleys, and diuers other knightes and Esquyers, and other of the garrison of Hammes, Guysnes and Ca-leys, to the numbre of two. M. men or there aboute, issued preuely oute of Caleys, and passed the water of Grauelynge in the mornynge be ty-xl mes, and left there for a stale and to kepe the passage, syr Homfrey Tal-bot with. vi. score archers, and came to Newporte, where they founde the souerayne of Flaūders with. vi. C. Almaynes, and there they commo-ned and paused that nyght,

On the next day as they came secretly toward Dipinew (se ꝑ chaūce) at a place of execucion, nere the high waye was, a Gauntoys (which was

come out of the army for a spye, and apprehended by them of Dipenew) led to hangyng, which emongest the Englishmē knew syr James Tyrrell, and called to hym for comfort and succoure, promisynge hym that if he woulde saue hys lyfe, he woulde guyde theim where they shoulde entre on the Gauntoys to their honour and aduauntage, and he would be the first assaylaunt of all the company. When hys promes was regarded, after request made to the Borough masters and capitaynes of the toune, he was perdoned but not deliuered. The next daye in the mornyng, after they had ordred their army, their guyde conueyghed theim out at the Southgate of the toune by a high banke set with willowes, x so that the Gauntoyses coulde not wel espie theim, and so secretly came to the ende of the campe of their enemyes, and there paused. The lorde Daubeney commaunded all men to sende their horses & wagons backe, but the lord Morley sayde he woulde ryde tyll he came to handstrokes (but he was deceaued) so they passed on tyll they came to a lowe bancke and no depe dyche, where their ordinaunce laye, and there the archers shote altogether euery man an arrowe, and so fell prostrate to ỹ ground, their enemyes discharged their ordinaunce all atones, and ouershot thē The archers roase and shot agayn, and bet them from their ordinaūce. The Almaynes lept ouer the dyche, with their morishe pykes, the Englishmen in the forefront waded the dyche, and were holpen vp by the Almanyes, and set on their enemies, and slew and toke many prisoners. The other Englishmen hasted by the cawsey to entre in at the Northgate of the campe, where the lord Morley being on horsbacke in a riche coate was slayne with a gonne. When his death was knowen, euery man kylled hys prisoner, and slew all such as did withstand theim to the numbre of .viii. M. men, in somuch that of .xi. M. that came out of Bruges (as the Flemysh chronicle reporteth) there came not home an hundred. There were slayne in the sayd place two chief Capitaynes, George Peccanet, and Anthony Newnhome. On the English parte was slayn xxx the lord Morley, and not an hundred moo. The Englishmen toke their ordinaunce and sent it to Newport with al their spoyle and great horsses. And by the waye, hearyng certeyne Frenchmē to be at Ostend, they made thetherward, but the Frenchmen fled, and so they burned parte of the toune, and came agayne to Newport, where the lord Dawbeney left all the Englishmen that were hurt or wounded, and caryed with hym the dead corps of the lorde Morley, and buryed it honorably at Caleys. Thys felde was profitable to the Englishmen, for they that went forth in clothe, came home in sylke, and they that wēt out on foote, came home on great horsses, suche is the chaunce of victory. xl

The lorde Cordes, beyng at Yper with .xx. M. men, was sore discontent with this ouerthrowe, wherfore he thynkyng to be reuenged, came and beseged the toune of Newport strōgely (the which capitayne, Monseur de Merwede, before capitayne of Dipenew, and all the gentelmen of Westflaunders, and the thre principall cities of Flaunders, victoyled

the Frenche hooſt ſo well that all thinges was to good chepe)they without ſhot at the walles,and brake them in many places, and they within ſore greued them without with their artyllary.But the Engliſhmē that were hurt at Dirmewe felde before,and might eyther ſtande or drawe a bowe, neuer came from the walles. One daye the Frenchemen gaue a greate aſſaute to a Towre, and perforce entred it, and ſet vp the banner of the lorde Cordes:but as God woulde,duryng the tyme of the aſſaute there arryued from Caleys,a Barke with. lxxx. freſh Englyſhe archers, which came ſtraight to the Towre.The women of the toune,perceiuing the Engliſhmen come, cryed with lamentable and loude voyces, helpe Engliſhmen, helpe Engliſhmen, ſhote Engliſhmen, ſhote Engliſhmen, ſo that,what with the helpe of ſuche as before were wounded and hurte men, and of the couragious hartes of the new come Archers, and the ſtoute ſtomackes and dylygency of the women,which as faſt as the Engliſhmen ſtrake doune the enemies, the women were redy to cut their throtes,they wanne agayne the Towre,and ſlewe the Frenchmen,& rent the banner of the lorde Cordes, and ſet vp the penon of ſaynct George. Then the Frenchmen,ſuppoſing a great ayde of Englyſhmen, to haue bene come to the toune by ſea,left the aſſaulte. And the nyght folowyng the coueteous lord Cordes(which ſo ſore longed for Caleys,ỹ he would commonly ſaye that he woulde gladly lye.vii.yeres in hell, ſo ỹ Caleys were in the poſſeſſion of the Frenchmen)brake vp hys ſiege and ſhamefully returned to Heſdyng. And the Engliſhmē glad of this victory returned agayne to Caleys.

This yere alſo, the realme of Scotlande ſuffred an infectious & mortall plage, becauſe the name of James the third kyng of Scottes was ſo odyous, ſo hated and diſdayned of the whole nobylitie of the realme of Scotlande, chyefly becauſe they perceaued that he ſet more by vyle borne byleyns and lyght perſones, then by the Princes and Nobles of hys realme, as I haue declared to you in the hiſtory of kyng Edwarde the.iiii.which miſchiefe and vngrate diſcommoditie,after they had tollerated and paciently ſuffred no ſmall tyme to their great grudge & diſpleaſour. They now thought it moſt expedient for their purpoſe & welfare, euen by force of armes to recouer their priſtinate libertie and auncient fredome. Therfore makyng preuely a conturacion and conſpiracy together agaynſt their prince and ſouereigne lorde,compaſſed his death and deſtruccion. Yet that it myghte not bee thoughte that they dyd intende the deſtruccion of their natyue countrey, they made the kynges ſonne named after his father James, prince of Rothſay (a chylde borne to goodnes and vertue) their Capitayne, in maner againſt hys wyll, openly proteſting,that they purpoſed the confuſion,affliccion and depoſyng of an euell kyng and wretched prynce, and not the ſubuerſion and deſtruccion of their countrey: By whiche craftie ymagined inuencion they might either cloke or propulſe from them al ſuſpicion of their purpoſed vntruthe and ſhamefull diſloyaltie. Wherof the kyng beyng credibly informed, was pensyfe, sorie, carefull, vexed and sore tormented in his mynd, for this cause in especiall, that he should haue cyuile dissencion with his awne subiectes and natyue countrymen, ye and agaynst his awne sonne being made Capiteyne of that vntrewe and peruerse cõpany, whome next to him selfe he loued, fauoured and honoured, ymagenyng with hym selfe that this commocyon sounded to none other effect but that the hed should fyght and stryue with the other mẽbres and partes of the natural body: And yet on the other syde, not to resyst shortly their newe incepted entrepryce might easely encourage and inflame the malicious heartes of his domesticall enemies with more boldenes & audacite to attempt farther mischiefe and inconuenience. Therfore to thentent to make a plaster for both these sores to be healed: Fyrst to appease and assuage the fury and rumour of the people, being this in a rage, he prepared an army of men. After that he sent Ambassadours to his sonne & the nobilitie assẽbled with him, for a loue, peace, cõcorde, quietnes and vnite to be concluded emongest them. Also he sent letters to the king of Englande and the Frenche kynge, requyryng them that they would vouchesafe with their good and Godly counsayll, helpe and assaye to mitigate and asswage this furious enormitie of his rude & sauage people, whiche was incepted and begonne through the perswasion and procurement of certaine pernicious and seditious persones. And besides this, he wrote to the byshop of Rome Innocẽt for thesame matter, in the whiche he earnestly obtested, desyred and prayed him that he would of his goodnes, faith and charite sende some one legate to these rebelles of his nobilitie to charge and commaunde, that they settyng aside al warre and hostilite, embrace quietnes, rest and vnite.

This miserable decrepite and aged kyng, thynkyng that bothe delayng and continuaunce of tyme, and also the entreating and hartie prayers of his frendes and alies would quenche and mollefie their inordinate wyldenes and furious rage, and perswade them to sobriete & good conformite, had rather with these, and other sembleable medecynes remedie this younge spryngyng sore, then he woulde haue it experimented and tried with ciuyle battayle and intestine destruccion, whiche he thought to be a thyng bothe vngodly, vnnaturall and execrable. For all this, no medicyne, no cõsaull, no wholsome preceptes could appease or pacefie the angry myndes and ragynge wittes of the Scottyshe nobilitie, so muche were they addicted and bent too this folye and vnreasonable madnes. In so muche, as to the messengers sent from him to the kyng their soueraygne lorde, they made this vnreasonable and vnhoneste aunswer, that is: yf he would resigne the title of his croune & realme & and depose him selfe of his royall dignitie, then they would cõmen with hym of a peace, or els their eares were stopped from heryng of any entreatie or perswasion. Thesame aunswer broughte the Ambassadour of Englande and Fraunce to their princes, whiche sore lamented and deplored the peruerse fortune and mischaunce of their frende the Scottish kyng, kyng, as though they had bene partakers of his affliccion: But Adrian the byshop of Romes legate, of whom we will speake more hereafter came to late, and as who should saye, a daye after the faire.

When nothynge coulde moue or perce these stony hartes or frosty mynides of the nobilitie of Scotland: In conclusion they mett together in a pitched feelde, where after great slaughter of many men, the poore sely kynge fled into a Mylll for succoure, whether he was folowed and prosecuted, and there shamefully murthered, and vnreuerently, (not lyke a prynce or a crouned kynge) left starke naked lyke a stynx kyng caryon. Then the prynces of Scotland beyng, saciat and fylled with the bloud and slaughter of theyr souereygne Lorde and kyng (thynkyng that they had well reuenged the olde displeasures to theim done and committed by kyng James the thirde) set vp in the trone and estate royall, the prynce hys sonne, and named him James the fourth of that name.

Before this tyme as you haue heard, Innocent byshop of Rome had sent in legacie Adryan of Castella, a man of hetoria, borne in the toune of Corncte, called in the olde tyme Newcastell, whiche should haue gone to Scotlande, too haue pacefied by hys authoritie and commaundexx ment thys troublesome busynes, moued and sturred betwene the kynge and his subiectes. Yet this man, although he made many great tourneys, when he came to Englande, was enformed of the kyng, to whome he hadde certayne commaundementes and messages to saye frome the Romyshe Byshop, that he came to late for too accomplyshe the commission of his legacy, assertaynynge hym that the Scottyshe kynge was dead, gentely aduysyng hym, that he should not moue one foote further but tarry styll in Englande, where he was not past two dayes, but that he was playnly certefied by the Byshoppes of Scotland of the kynges death. This Adrian taryed certayne monethes after this in England xxi and was made muche of, and hyghly commended and lawded too the kyng by Jhon Morton Byshop of Caunterbury, whiche for the good learnyng, vertue, and humanite, that he sawe and perceaued to be in him shewed to hym all poyntes of humanite and frendshyppe, that a frende might do to a frende. And vpon his commendacion, the kynge thynkyng thys man wourthy to be looked vpon, and mete to do the kynge pleasure, muche phantasied and more fauoured this legate Adryan, in somuche as he was Oratour and solicited his cause bothe to Innocent and also to Alexander the syxt Byshops of Rome. And after this, for his diligent seruice, he so loued and fauoured him that he made him Bi-xi shop of Herford, and shortely after that resigned and geuen ouer, he promoted hym to the Byshoprykc of Welles and Bathe. And not long after this Adryan was returned with these honoures to Rome, where he was promoted successeiuely by all the degrees of spirituall dignitees into the College and societee of Cardinalles. For Innocent fyrste made him his Collectour in Englande, and also one of the. vii. Protho-notaries . After this Alexander the. vi. had hym as one of his priuye counsaill, and promoted hym to the degree of a Cardynall: But who is that I praye you that will merueyle at this, which aswell may be geuen to fooles and dyzerdes as to wyse and well learned men? There is another prayse of this Adryan, and thesame in maner eternall : The man was of profounde learnyng and knowlege, not vulgare, but straunge, newe and difficile, and in especiall he was a man of a rype iudgement in electyng and cholyng concinnate termes, and apte and eloquente woordes, whiche fyrste of our tyme, after that golden worde of Tully, moued men with his writyng to imitate and loue the most approbate, and allowed authours that were of eloquencie, and taught the trade & phrase to speake fyne, pure, freshe and cleane latyn, so that by his example & document, eloquence flourysheth at this houre in al places of Chrystendome, wherfore after my iudgement he is not worthie to be put in oblyuion: but nowe to my purpose.

THe Britische affaires in the meane season, because that all discorde was not pacefied and appeased, beganne againe nowe to flowe out and to trouble, and set all thynges in a newe broyle and busynes. For Maximilian kyng of Romaynes beyng without a wyfe, before thys tyme, made suite to Fraunces duke of Britayne, to haue in mariage the lady Anne hys daughter, to the whiche requeste the duke gently condiscended. And one, whyche by proxie wooed for hym : too the entent that the lady shoulde perfourme that she promised on her faith and honour, he vsed a new inuencion and tricke, after this maner: When the lady did take her chambre, the night after the affiaunce, she was layed naked in the bride bed, in the presence of dyuerse noble matrones and Prynces, called thether as witnesses . The procuratour or Deputie for the husbande whiche representeth his persone, was layde in the place of her husbande, and put one of his legges into the bed vp to the harde knee, in the syght and compaygny of many noble personages, as who said that the virgin had bene carnally knowen, and so the matrymony perfyght and consummate, and they two as man and wyfe . But this fonde newe founde ceremony was litle regarded and lesse estemed, of hym that onely studyed and watched, howe to surrept and steale this turtle oute of her newe and lodgynge . For Charles the Frenche kynge (as no man can blame hym) was desyrous and gredy too be coupled in mariage, wyth so great an inheritoure, and reputyng the mariage made with Maximilian, to be of no validite and effect, the more busely and incessantly he made sharpe warre, and skurged the Britonnes, to thentent he might bothe haue the lady and her dominions also at his wyll and pleasure. But he imagined that the kynge of Englande woulde caste a trumpe in his in his waye, and be an impediment to his purpose by sendyng into Bri-tayne a newe army of Englyshemen, for he had intellygence by his pre-uy fautours.

Kyng Henry and Ferdinando kyng of Spaygne, were fully decreed to aide, assist and defende the duches and duchie of Briteyn, in all ieopardies and aduentures, to thentent that they agaynst their will and affeccion should not be by force compelled, to submit them selfes to the subieccion and ponderous yoke of the Frenche kynge. For the whiche cause, these two prynces were ioyned in a league and confederacy to re-xsist and propulse this manifest wronge and apparant iniurie. Wherefore he sent in all post hast the lorde Fraunces of Luxenborough, Charles Marignane, and Robert Gagine, ministre of the bone homes of the Trinitee, to kyng Henry for a peace to be confirmed & had, which when they came before the kynges presence, were excepted and entreteyned after the best maner. And when they were demaunded of theffect of their legacion, their request was that kyng Charles, as chiefe and supreme lord ouer the seignorie and duchie of Briteyne, myght without any spot of ingratitude to be ymagined or conceaued by kyng Henry, lawfully ordre and dispose at his will and pleasure the mariage of lady Anne of xx Briteyne, as his ward and orphan, without any let and disturbaunce of the kyng of England, or any of his alies and confederates. Kyng Henry thereto would not condiscende, but styll harped on this stryng, that the virgyn, whiche was lawfully combyned in matrymony with Maximilian kyng of Romanes, shoulde not be compelled agaynst her wyll and promes (beyng contrary to all lawe, ryght and equitie) too take any other persone then hym to her spouse and husband, for that it was clerely repugnaunt to all veritie and lawe, bothe of God and man. So when they had lyngred the tyme, and consumed many dayes in vayne argu-mentes and superfluous reasons, without any of their requestes obteyxxx ned: after longe debatyng and consultacion, they were resolued on thys poynte, least it shoulde be thoughte that all their legacion had bene in vayne and brought to no efficacie or purpose, a forme of a league and amitie shoulde be drawen with condicions, clauses and couenauntes.
And for the farther furtheraunce of that purpose, it was thoughte necessary and expedient that the kynge of Englande shoulde sende Ambassadours to the Frenche kynge, whiche in hys name and by his authoritee myght breuely conclude and finysche the league and treatie that was in communicacion incepted and begonne. Whereupon kynge Henry dismissed the Frenche Ambassadours laden with ample & large xl rewardes into their countrey, and dispatched and sent streyghte after them by hys commission and aucthorite. Thomas erle of Ormond, and Thomas Goldeston, prior of Chrystes churche in Cauntourbury hys Orators and Ambassadours, to Charles the Frenche kyng, instructing them fully of all thinges that he would haue eyther moued or determined.

In this meane space, Alexander byshop of Rome the.vi.of that name whiche succeded after Innocent,a man full of diligence and of wit pregnant,sent Lyonell byshop of Concorde legate,to the Frenche kyng for certainne matters,and emong other thinges,gaue hym in charge to conclude a peace and vnitie betwene kyng Charles and kyng Henry.Whē he had declared his message to the Frenche kyng fully , and had easely obteyned all thynges that he required, then he began to moue vnto the Frenche kyng and his nobles , with a longe and prolixe exhortation too make and conclude a perpetual peace, betwene him and the king of En-glande . And when he perceaued the Frenchemen to make no greate de- x. nyall to his request,he determyned to attempt and moue kyng Henry to consent and agree to thesame desire and petition : and toke his iourney towardes Englande, and at Caleys he encountred the Ambassadours, both of England and of Fraunce, which receaued him into the toune of Caleys,with many ceremonies and great reuerence . Where after they had communed the matter a certayn space, as concerning their affaires and busynes,they departed toward the Frenche kyng, and the byshop was transported into England . The kyng honorably receaued & gen-tely entreteyned this Orator Lyonel,and gaue good eare to his luculēt and eloquent oration, wherein he persuaded hym with many flatteryng xx and glosyng wordes,to entre into a league and amitie with kyng Charles of Fraunce,and the Frenche nacion.To the whiche request the kyng made answer that he would be glad and ioyous,if it might be compassed and brought aboute, after longe trouble and pernicious dissencion to lyue in peace and mutual amitie with all christen men.Byshop Lyonell,perceauing the kynges minde and intent, reculed again to Frau-ce with al spede and diligence(and as it was mete and decent for the by-shop of Concord) he determined to extirpate and dryue out of the kynges memory all olde reconynges and iniuries done to hym heretofore, and plant if it might be,in his harte and mynde, the very goodly & gra- xxx cious greine of concorde and vnitie.

The Englyshe Ambassadours, then being with the Frenche kynge purposed and set forth articles and conclusions of peace.The Frenchemen prudently made answere,so that on bothe parties the matter was pollitiquely and artificially proponed and oppugned . The Englyshe Ambassadours , to thentent that they might assente and obtayue a fewe thynges,whiche they muche desyred,required & demaunded many great and diuerse thinges.The Frenchemen on the othersyde,myndyng to assent to no one demaund at thend , did denye & repudiate all Thenglish-mens desyres , and condicions , and were sore angry and moued with al their great requestes and high demaundes . And in the meane season, trustyng more to their coffers then to their cheualry , as the maner of their countrey is for to obteyn their purpose,they spared not to disburse and launche out treasure,gyftes and rewardes innumerable, whiche is the very cause that they conquere more with crounes of gold,then with speare and shylde, or dynt of swerde in battaile. So that shortely after the Frenche kyng, sent to the noble men of Bryteyn great & many rewardes, solicityng, exhortyng and prayeng them all to be come his subiectes and vassais. And in especiall he allured and enticed with moost flatterying wordes and trappyng termes, the lady Anne by suche honorable matrones and ladies, as had the gouernaunce and educacion of her to confirme her selfe true to him in due obedience and loue, and not disdeine to be coupled in suche a noble mariage, with so high and mightie a prynce, as kyng Charles was. And leait peraventure the Damosell x fearyng the rigour of the Ecclesiasticall lawes woulde not consent too hym for offendyng her conscience and infryngyng her promes: To aduoyde that scruple, he caused diuerse to inculcate and put in her hed and tittle in her care, that the mariage made with Maximilian was of no strength and lesse efficacy, considerying that it was concluded and made without the consent, agrement and will of him, whiche is the chiefe lorde and ought to haue the gouernaunce ouer her as his warde, & the whole duchy of Bryteyne, assurying her that she was deluded, and that the mariage with Maximilian was neuer consummate nor perfyght. And this was the very cause that no sure concorde or peace could be concluded & xx agreed betwene these two Prynces. And where as the French kyng had long kept with hym the lady Margaret, daughter to Maximilian and her solemply espoused at Amboys, he sayde that that mariage myght be lawfully dissolued agayne, because the lady was of that age, that she coulde neither be geuen nor yet taken in mariage, for whiche cause he might lawfully repudiate and honestly put her from hym.

By this crafte and perswasion they led and entised the fayre maiden, suspectyng none euell, and brought her to this poynt, that in conclusion, she beyng proclaimed by diuers, Prynces of Bryteyne, suborned and corrupted with mede contrary to their duitie and allegeaunce, was conxxx tent to condissende and agree to that the Frenchemen demaunded, and not onely to submit her selfe to the French kyng, but also to take him to her make and husbande, by the reason whereof the warre might ceasse, whiche with violencie and impression of thesame, had infested and afflicted all her whole countrey. To this mariage agreed all the nobilitie of Bryteyne, whiche helde of the Frenche parte, thynkyng it verily for the auauncement of the common weale and their ease, because to trust to the power of Maximilian, which was of no puissaunce, they thought it veyne and of no efficacy. And when the French kyng had compoled and ordred hys matters of this fassion, preuely with the lady Anne, he accelexl rated the mariage with all the expedicion and diligence that was possible: So that the Englih Ambassadours returned agayn to their countrey, and nothyng doen or agreed vpon their matter.

Kyng Henry, still pacientlp forbearyng and suffryng till suche tyme that he perceaued more playnly what way the worlde went: and vnderstandyng before the returne of his Ambassadours, that the Frenchmen meaned none other but playne guyle, fraude and deceypte, determined no moze with peaceable legaciõs, but with open warre to finish and determyn all controuersies and displeasures betwene him and the French kyng. Wherfoze he sommoned his courte of Parliament, and there declared first the cause why he was iustly pzouoked to make warre against the Frenche kyng: And after desyzed them of their beneuolent aide of men and money foz the maintenaunce of thesame. The cause of this battaill euery man did allowe and appzobate, and to the settynge foozth of thesame, pzompted their industrie, labour and all that they could make. The kynge commendyng them foz ther true and louynge hartes, toox thentent he myght not aggrauate the common people, with patyng of great taxes and sommes of money, whome his minde was euer to kepe in fauour, woulde first exacte money by a litle & litle of that beneuolent mynde of the ryche sozte, and this kynde of exaccion was first excogita-

A beneuolence ted by kyng Edwarde the fourth, as it apereth befoze in his stozy. Therfoze he consulted with his frendes, to inuent howe to gather together a great summe of money, and publyshed abzode that by their open giftes he would measure and searche their beneuolent hartes and louing mindes towarde hym, so that he that gaue moost shoulde be iudged to bee moost louyng frende, and he that gaue litle, to be esteemed accozdyng xx to his gifte: By this a man maye apparauntly perceaue as it were foz a great common wealth, that, that thynge that is once pzactysed foz the vtilitee of a pzince, and bzoughte too a pzesydent by matter of recozde, maye be turned to the great pzeiudice of the people, if rulers in authozitie wyll so adiudge and determyne it. So by thys meanes the kyng gathered innumerable summes of money, with some grudge of the people foz the extremitee shewed by the commissioners in dyuerse places.

You haue heard befoze how Philip Mounsure, lozd of Raueston by the aide of Bzuges & Gaunt had taken the toune & .ii. castels of Sluys xxx and was become aduersarie to Maximilian, by reason of the. iii. chiefe cyties of Flaunders: Now ye shall vnderstande that he did not onely so foztefie as well with municions as men, both the toune and. ii. Castels, but also gat into ỹ hauen diuerse shyppes and barkes, and by this meanes he spoyled and toke pzysoners all nacions, passyng eyther by sea oz by land to the mart at Antwarpe, oz into Bzabant, Zeland oz Frislande and was euer plentifully vityeyled out of Fraunce and Pycardy, to the great dammage of the Englishmen, which were spoyled dayly and taxi ken pzysoners: Which thinge Maximilian kynge of Romanes coulde not wel remedy, noz the kyng of England without great coste and losse of men. Foz to it behoued an army, bothe by sea and lande, foz when he was set foz by lande, he fled to the sea: And when he was chaced on the sea, he soughte refuge in hys twoo stronge Towers, and euer he had succours from Bzuges and Gaunt. Now was there a lytle toune twoo

myle from Bruges, toward the sea called Damme, whiche was a Bulwerke to Bruges, and a hedspryng to Sluys. The kyng of Romanes did oftentyme attempt the apprehendyng of this toune, to the entent that the Brugians should haue no recourse to the hauen of Sluis, nor the Sluysians should haue no succour out of the toune of Bruges. But there were slayne a great number of Gentlemen of Germany, for they within made no sygne of defence, tyll all their enemies were in their daunger, and so slewe and confuted theim. There was a greate duke in Almayne, called duke Albert of the vpper Saxony, a greate frende x to the kyng of Romanes, whiche made himselfe Neuter, and neuer intermitted with the affaires of Flaunders, a man of no lesse pollecy then valyaunt hardynes. This duke requred of the lordes of Bruges, that he myght entre peaceably into their toune, accordyng to his estate with a certayne nombre of menne of armes to communicate with them dyuerse matters of great weyght and no small importaunce; and sent before his cariages and herbyngers to make prouision. The estates of Bruges little doubted to admit so small a nombre into so populous a company, ye though the numbre were duplicate, and especially, because they harde saye that he woulde lodge in the toune all nyght, wherefore xi no man thought of that craftie stratageme that he had inuented. His elected and warlike company entred into the cytie in good ordre, and he folowed, they that went before inquyred after ynnes and lodgynges as though they woulde repose themselfes there all nyghte, and so went forth still in ordre askyng for lodgyng, tyll they came to the gate that goeth directly towarde theforsayde toune of Dam, distant from Bruges a Flemysh myle, whiche is called the bulwerke of Bruges. The Capitaynes and inhabitauntes of the toune of Damme, suspectyng no harme to come out of Bruges, thynkyng that their frendes knowyng some sodeyn chaunce comming to haue sent to them aide and succours, xii and so nothyng mistrustyng, did let them entre, and take the toune of Damme, and so that toune, whiche could not be wonne by force of armes, was by a sleight & pollecy attrapped and surprised to the great detriment and displeasure of the toune of Bruges, for now had thei no recourse to the sea, whiche stop so continuing, no doubte, but the toune of Bruges must nedes fall in ruyne and vtter exterminion.

When duke Albert of Saxony had gotte Dam, he certefied ỹ king of England ỹ he would besege Sluyse by land, if it pleased his maistie to ministre any aide by the sea. Kyng Hẽry whiche was wise, & forcasting in all his affaires, remẽbring ỹ Sluyse was the denne of theues to them ỹ

Which sir Edward sailed into the hauẽ, & kept Philip moũseur frõ sterting by ỹ sea. The duke of Saxõ beseged ỹ one castel, lyng in a church ouer against it, & the Englishmẽ assauted the lesse castel daily, & issued out of ỹ shippes at ỹ ebbe, and although they stode in the water to the knees, yet they neuer gaue their enemies one daye to repose or playe by the space of .xx. dayes, and euery day slewe some of their aduersaries, and on the Englyshe part were slayne. Were brother to the Erle of Oxforde and fyfty moo.

The lorde Philip of Rauestone, had made a bridge of boates betwene bothe the Castels, by the whiche one might succoure the other, whiche bridge the Englyshmen in a night set on fyer. Then, he perceauing that he must nedes lese his Castels by force, & that the Flemynges could not aide hym, yelded the Castels to sir Edward Pownynges, and the toune to the duke of Saxony, vpon certayne condicions. When the duke and the Englyshe capitayne met in the toune, there was betwene them great salutacions, & sir Edward kept the Castels a while, of whom the Almaynes demaunded stipent and salary, because that the duke had nothyng to paye. Then these two Capitaines so handled them of Bruges that they were content not onely, to submit them selues to the lorde Maximilian, but also to pay and dispatche the Almaines. And so sir Edward Pownynges taryed there a long space, and returned to the kyng before Boleyne. And so they, whiche by reasonable ordre, would not bee gouerned: By vnreasonable condicions were brought to confomyte and ordre.

The. vi. daye of Apryll this present yere, the kyng commauuded all the nobilite of his realme, to assemble at the Cathedral churche of sainct Paule in London, where after Te deum solemply songe, the Cardynall of Caunterbury, standyng on the steppes before the queer dore, declared to the people, how the famous Citie of Granado, which many yeres had bene possessed of the Moores or Mawrytane nacion, beyng infydeles and vnchristened people, and now of late beseeged by a great tyme by Donfernando and Elyzabeth his wyfe, kyng and quene of Spayne, Arragon and Castell. And thesayed infydeles, by reason of this siege brought to great penurye and miserie, for lacke of vitaile and necessary viand, perceauyng that all succours were clerely estopped and prepulsed from them, and so brought into vtter despaire of aide or comfort: after longe consultacion had emongest them, determyned to rendre them selues and their cytie, to thesayed kyng, vpon diuerse couenauntes and condicions, and thereupon sent to hym dyuerse Senatours of the cytie, fully instructed of their mynde and purpose. The kyng of Spayne and his counsaill, considering and sagely pondering that wynter approched and was at hande, and that the Christen hoost had long lyen in the feldes in sore tempestes and greuous stormes (whiche they gladly suffred for Christes sake, in whose cause and quarel they made that present warre) remembryng also that the Cytie was of suche ryches, fame and estimacion, that it conteyned an hundred and fyfty thousand houses of name, beside other small houses and cotages, and that it was replenysshed with people innumerable, and furnysshed with .lxx. thousand good fyghtyng men. And fynally, perceauyng that he myght enioye nowe the possession possession of thelame, without assaute or effusion of Christen bloud, by the aduyse of his counsayll, be accepted, accorded and agreed to theyr offres the. xxv. of Nouember, in the yere of Christes incarnacion M. cccc. xci. then beyng the daye of saunct Katheryn. By the whiche composicion, the royall citie of Granado; with all the holdes and fortresses of the realme, and the Towres and Castels of Alpuxarare was rendred into the handes of thesayed kyng of Speygne, & that the kyng of Granado should become subiect and vassail to the kyng of Speygne, and to relynquishe and forsake the vsurped name of a kyng for euer: And & that all men of warre should franckly depart out of the cytie, and none there to remayne, but artificers and merchauntes, and all these thynges to be done before the. xxv. daie of January, but the tyme was anticipate, for the Moores on the first daye of January, sent. vi. C. notable personages out of the citie with their chyldren for hostages into the campe of the kyng of Speygne, to thentent that he should put no diffidence nor mistrust in the cytezens, but that he myght peaceably and quietly with his people entre into the cytie, and take possession of thelame. The which hostages were destributed and lodged in the tentes and pauylions of the Spanyshe armye.

& The thyrd daye of January, the lorde of Gutteryns Cardenes, greate Master and gouernour of Lyon, of the ordre of sayncte James, departed frome the armye, nobly and triumphantly accompanied with fyue hundred horsemen, and three thousande footemen, towarde the citie. And as he approched nere to the suburbes, there issued out dyuerse noble and valiaunt Capitaynes of the Moores, makyng to hym humble obeysaunce, and conductyng hym to a palace, adioynyng to the citie, called the palace of Alpaxaras, and from thence conueyghed hym to the palace royall of thelame cytie called Alhābra, whereof he toke quiet and peace able possession, to the behoue of the kyng of Speyne, whome & the Moores promysed and confessed to take and obey, as to their kyng and souereigne. And in sygne and token that they thought in their hartes, that whiche they promised by mouth, they prostrate and humbled them selues before thesayed great Master, and with dolorous lamentacion and salt teares, deliuered to hym the keyes of thesaid palace. When he had the keyes, and was also possessed of that strong and magnificent place, he first of all dispatched the house of all the Moores and pagaries, and appoynted a garrison of valiaunt and noble christians to kepe and defende thelame. And thelame daye caused a masse solemply to bee celebrate in a place of thelame palace called Melchita, whiche done and & finished, he toke possession of all the fortresses, Towres and holdes to thesayed cytie and toune of Granado, belonging or apperteining. And then he caused to be eleuated and exalted vpon the highest Towre of the palace (where it might best be sene) the signe & token of the crosse, whereon Christe for vs synners suffred his bitter passion. At the reysing whereof, were present an Archebyshop, and thre Byshops and other prelates, whiche deuoutely sange this antheme: O crux, aue spes vnica. The sayed crosse was .iii. tymes deuoutly eleuate, and at euery exaltacion, the Moores beyng within the cytie, roared, howled, and cryed, prosternyng them selfes grouelyng on the grounde, makyng doloyours noyes and piteful outcrycs. The army encamped without the cytie, seyng these thynges, humbled them selfes mekely before the Crosse, renderyng to almyghtie God their moost humble and hartie thankes. The kyng of Spayne, beyng mounted on horsbacke, perceauyng the erection of the Crosse, discended from his Genet, and kneled doune on the bare grounde, and rendred to God, laude, honoure and prayesyng for that noble and triumphant victory. And after that the Crosse was thus set vppon the high Towre, the banner of sayncte James and the kynges banners were pytched and fyred vpon the turrets and pynacles of the cytie: A Herault standyng in the top of the high Towre, proclaimed and publyshed these woordes folowyng.

„ Sayncte James, sayncte James, sayncte James, Castill, Castil, Castill, „ Granado, Granado, Granado: By hygh and mighty power, loyde Fer-

When the Herault had finished, the artillary sounded, the mynstrelles blewe, the people applauded and clapped their handes for gladnes, that the yearth semed to trimble and quake vndyreneth them. After this ioye ended, there issued out of the cytie in maner of procession. viii. hundred and mo Christians, aswell men as women and chyldren, whyche had bene there prysoners and lyued in bondes, seruitude and miserable captiuitie, whereof the moost parte were naked, wounded and in maner exstamyshed for hungre. To whome the kyng of his great lyberalite gaue bothe appatell, vyand and money. The poore prysoners comyng oute of the Cytie sange this Psalme. Benedictus dominus deus Israell, Quia visitauit & fecit redemptionem plebis sue. Blessed be the lorde God of Israell, whiche hath visited and redemed his people, and so syngyng forth the whole Psalme, went to the churche of sayncte Feith, whiche the kyng Ferdinando had caused to be moost sumptuously edefied duryng the tyme of the siege, beyng distant from Granado two or three myle. And as thys poore procession passed by the hoost, one espied his sonne, and another sawe his brother, and the sonne perceaued the father, and the father founde the daughter, whiche were nowe delyuered out of myserable seruitude and bondage. But they coulde not refrayne nor bridle them selues from distillyng of teares and sobbynge, seynge theyr parentes and kinsfolke restored to libertie and fredome. And when these people had sayd their Mysons in the churche of sayncte Feith, and were come to the army, they kneiyng before the kyng kyssed his fote, cryinge with one voice, God graunt to the kyng of Spaygne euerlastyng lyfe.

The next daye after the lord Eueras de Mendosa, Erle of Tēdiglie was by the kyng made Capitayn of the houle royal, & principal Towre of the citie of Granado, called Alhambra, hauynge to hym appoynted and assigned one thousand men of armes, and twoo thousand fotemen. Unto the whiche Erle, the great Master deliuered the keyes of thesayd palace and Towre, and other portes and fortresses. On Saturdaye the.viii.daye of January, in the yeare of our Lorde.M.cccc.xcii. Ferdinand kyng of Spaygne, & Granado, the quene & their eldest sonne done Jhon prince of Speyne, the lord Peter of Mēdosa, archebishop of Toleth, the patriarche of Alexandry, the Cardinall of Speyne, the lord Peter Prynce of Lyon, duke of Gaditane, the Marques of Villena and Moya. The erle of Capre, the erle of Uinenna of Cifnentes, and many other Erles, Barones and nobles, whereof some were Englyshemen, whose names I haue not, with.x.thousand horsemen, and fifty thousand footemen, with greate tryumphe and royaltie entred into the cytye of Granado, and thereof tooke real possession and season, and caused masse to be songe in a great place called Meschita, where he caused a solempne churche to be buylded in the honoure of God and hys mother. When Masse was ended, the kyng and the quene repayred to the palace royall of Alhambra, the whiche was wonderfull, bothe in quantite and sumptuous buyldynge, whyche house was adourned with ryche Arras and Tapestry in euery chambre. The Erle of Tendiglie Capitayne of the palace, feasted the kynge and Quene, and all the nobilitie at hys awne costes and charges. So the kyng of Spaygne there remayned tyll the countrey was reduced too a good conformytye and order, and dyuerse Castelles, and fortresses, were made for the sauegarde and tuycion of the realme. And because thys victory obteyned, was to the glory of God, and to the publique wealth of all Chrystianite, thesayde Cardynall of Caunterbury declared to the people that the kyng had sent hym and the other nobles thether that daye, not onely to notefye and declare to them the veryte of the fact, but also to exhorte thē to geue laudes and prayslinges to almighty God, for deliuering so goodly a cytye, so plentifull a countrey, & so notable a regiō out of the handes of his enemies & persecutours of his faith & religiō. Which declaracion ended the Archebishop with ỹ clergie, & the nobles with ỹ cōminaltye in mooste deuout maner went in general processiō, rendring to God for this great acheued enterprice, glory, honour & mooste reuerent and harty thankes.

Aboute this season, Maximilian kyng of Romanes hauyng the vpper hand of the Flemynges, by aide of the kyng of Englāde (as you haue harde before) entended to reuēge hym self of the Frēch king, for ỹ he had repudiate his daughter lady Margaret, & sent her home to hym, entēdig as he thought to take to hys wife ỹ lady Anne of Bryteyn. But because he was not of sufficiēt habilite of hym self to susteyne & furnish ỹ warre, he determi-

he determined to desyre kyng Henry to take parte with hym. Whereupon he sent Jaines Contiba ld Ambassadoure, a man of great grauytie to exhorte and requyre the kynge of Englande, to entre hys company and societee in armes, kaythfully promising on his honoure ỹ he would in sembleable matters of hys, take parte wyth .x. M. men at the least, for the space of iiii. yeres whensoeuer he should requyre hym. And because yt is hys chaunce to trye the fortune of battaile and to intimate the warre, he promised to certefie kynge Henry .viii. monethes before that he would inuade or occupie the territory of hys enemyes. And by thys message, Maximilian greatly inflamed and set a fyer kynge Henryes hart to beare with hym. And as he was mynded before this tyme as you haue hard before, to ayde and assist the Britones in the extremetye of theyr perill, he now reconed ỹ tyme to be come, that he must collect an army to helpe them nowe at a pynche in their mooste perell and daungier, to thentent to restore agayne the Britische nacion to their auncient libertie, and to expulse the Frenche nacion, which thyrsted for the blood, death & destrucció of the poore Brytones, clerely out of that duchy and country. And he was ỹ more ardently therunto encouraged, because he perceaued Maximilian hym selfe so earnestly set and bent toward that enterprice, and therfore he made this aunswere to James the Ambassadour, ỹ he would be ashamed to be found slacke or vnprouided at any tyme of Maximilian hys felow and compaignion in armes. And so these matters well brought to effect on bothe parties, the kyng dimissed the Ambassadoure from hys presence.

The.viii. yere.

IN this very ceason, Charles the Frēche king, receaued lady Anne as his pupill into his hādes, & with great solempnite her espoused, hauing with her for her dower ỹ whole countrey of Britayne. And so by this meane ỹ Brytones became subiect to the French kyng. Maximilian beyng certefied of this, fell into a great rage & agony, for ỹ he was not cōtent with the forsaking & refusing of his daughter lady Margaret, but also had taken & rauished away frō him hys assured wife lady Anne duches of Britayne. And calling vpō God for vengeaunce & ponishmēt for such an heynous and execrable facte, cryed out & rayled on him, wishyng him a thousand deathes. Yet after that he was pacefied, and came to hym selfe agayne, and had gathered hys wyttes together, he thought it was mooste expedient to vindicate and reuenge hys honour and dignitee so manifestly touched, with the dynt of swoorde. And beyng in this mynde, sent certain Ambassadours to kyng Henry wyth hys lettres, desyrynge hym with all diligence to prepare an army, and he hym selfe woulde do likewise, to inuade the Frenche kynges realmes with fyer, swoord and blood.

Kynge Henry hearyng of this, and puttyng no diffidence in the promes of Maximilian, whome he knew to haue a deadly hatred and longe grudge agaynst the French kynge, caused a muster to be made in all the

partes of his realme, and put hys men of warre in a redynes armed & weaponed accordyng to their feates: beside thys he rygged, mãned and byteiled his nauy ready to set forward euery houre, and sent curryers into euery shyre to accelerate, and hast the souldiours to the sea side, After the message was declared, there came without am delai an houge army of men, aswell of the lowe sorte and commonaltie as other noble men, harnysshed and armed to battaile, partely glad to helpe their prince and to do him seruice, and partely to buckle with the Frenchmen, wyth whome the Englishmen very willingli desyred to cope and fight in opẽ battaill. And immediatly, as monicion was geuen, euery man with hys bande of souldiours repayred to London.

After that al this army was arrayed and euen readie to set forward wherof were cheuetaynes and leaders, Jasper duke of Bedford, & Jhõ erle of Oxforde beside other, the kynge sent Christopher Urswike hys aulmoner, and syr Jhon Ryseley knyght to Maximiliã, to certefie hym that the kynge was all in a redines, and woulde shortely arryue in the continent land, assone as he were aduertised that Maximilian, and hys men, were ready and prepared to ioyne with hym. The Ambassadours sayled into Flaunders, and after their message done, they sent .ii. letters in all hast to kyng Henry, the whiche not onely sore vnquyeted & vexed hym, but also caused him to take more thought, care and study on hym then he did before: for they declared that no prince coulde be more vnprouyded or more destitute of men and armure, no more lackynge all thynges, apperteignynge to warre, then was Maximilian, and that he laye lurkyng in a corner, sore sicke of the fluxe of ỹ purse, so that he had neyther men, horses, municions, armure nor money, neuerthelesse hys mynd & will was good, if his power and habilitee had been correspõdẽt & therfore there was no trust to be put in hys aide or puissaunce. Their letters bothe appalled, and made sorowfull the kyng of Englãd, which like a prudent prince did well consider & ponder, ỹ it were both ieopardous and costly, for him alone to enterprice so great a warre. And on ỹ other parte, if he should desist and leaue of his pretensed purpose, al mẽ might call hym cowarde and recreant prynce. Beside this, he thoughte that his awne nacion woulde not take his tarying at home in good nor fauourable part, cõsideryng ỹ syth they had geuen so large money for the preparaciõ of all thynges necessary and conueniẽt for the same, they might conceaue in their heddes & ymagen, that vnder coloure & pretẽce of a dissimuled warre, he had exacted of thẽ notable summes of money, & now the treasure was once paied, then ỹ warre was done, & his cofers well enryched, & the commõs enpouerisshed. So that at thys tyme he doubted & cast perels on euery side & parte, & besyde thys, he was not a litle sory ỹ Maximiliã authour of thys warre did absent him selfe, & defraude him of his societe & assistẽce. And while he studied & mused what counsaill he shoulde best take in suche a doubtfull and sodeine case, he like a graue prince, remembring the saiyng of the wiseman, woorke by counsayll & thou shalt not repēt the, assembled together all hys lordes, and other of his pryuate counsayll, by whose myndes it was concluded and determyned, that he shoulde manfully and couragiously perceauer and procede in thys brocched and begonne enterprice, recordynge well with them selfes, and affirming playnely that al cheualry and martial prowesses, the more difficile and heard that it is to attayne to, the more renoumed is the glory, and the faime more immortal of the banquisher and obteynet. Therfore by this counsayl of his frendes and senate, he made Proclamacion that euery man should set forward into Fraunce, and yet not openynge howe Judasly Maximilian, had deceaued hym, & least that they knowynge the whole fact, shoulde not be so courageous to go towarde that battayle and procede forward on their iorney. And therfore to prouyde and forese al perels and daungiers that might accidently ensue, he so strengthened, multiplied and augmented his army in such numbre before he toke ship, that he with his awne powre might discourage and ouercome the whole puissaunce of his aduersaries.

When he had thus gathered and assembled his armye, he sayled to Caleyes the.vi.daye of October, & there encāped him selfe, tarying there a certaine space to se his men harnessed & appareled, that neither weapō nor any engyne necessary for his iourney should be neglected. At which place all the army had knowlege by the Ambassadoure, whiche were newly returned out of Flaunders (for they did not knowe of it before) ỹ Maximilian coulde make no preparatiō for lacke of money, & therfore there was no succour to be exspected at his hand. And the which report, the Englishmen were nothing abashed nor dismaied, trusting so muche to their awne puissaūce & cōpany: but yet they merualled and wondered greatly, ỹ heard it related, ỹ Maximilian receauyng such great bilany not lōge before at the hand of kyng Charles, was not present to pricke them forward, to crye & call, to moue and excite the Englishmen, ye and if he had had.vi.hundred bodyes to put them all in hasard, rather then to leaue the Englishmē, now setting vpon his dayly enemyes & deadly aduersaries. Albeit Maximiliā lacked no hart and good will to be reuēged, yet he lacked substaūce to cōtinew warre, for he could neither haue money nor men of the dronken Fleminges, nor yet of the craking Brabanders, so vngrate people were they to their souereigne lorde.

In the meane season, although the Frenche kynge was as well with courage replenished as with men furnished mete to trye a battaile, yet al this notwithstāding he made semblaūce, as though he desired nothīg more then peace, beyng not ignorāt that peace to be obteined was of no smal valure & price, & yet he determined to make more expēce in getting of peace, then in settinge foorth of warre and hostilitee, and regarded so muche thee lesse thee treasure too be dispensed for the acquyrynge of vnitee and concord, for asmuche as he was afrayed that he beyng diligent to resist the inuasion of the Englishmen, that the Britones wherof the mooste parte bare the yoke of his subiection contrary to their hartes

and myndes, woulde sodeynly rebell and set them selfes at libertie, and plucke out their heddes out of his colour, and set vp another duke and gouernour. And at thesame very tyme he was inuited and desired of Lewes Skoycia duke of Millayn, to warre agaynst Ferdinand kynge of Napels, at whole desyre he was pyest and ioyous, thinkynge that he had that occasion sent to hym from God, for the whiche he long before thyrsted & sore wished. The whiche kyngdome he pretended to be dewe to hym by succession, and entended long before to acquyre and cõquere it by force of armes, as hys very right and inheritaũce. For when Rene x duke of Angeou last kyng of Scicile, departed without any heire male of hys wyfe lawfully begotten, he did adopt to his heires of all his realmes & dominiõs, Lewes the.xi. father to the.iii. king Charles, to thentẽt that he should deliuer quene Margaret his daughter, out of the hãdes of kyng Edward the.iiii. as you haue well before perceaued, wrõgfully and without cause disheneriting his cosyn, Godsonne, and heyre, Rene duke of Lorayne & Barre. For the whiche cause he did the more busily procure & labour for ỹ amitie, fauor & frẽdship of his neighbours roũd about hym, ỹ when al thiges were appeased & set in good state at home he might the better employe his whole force & puissaũce on his warre in xx Italy. Wherfore beyng muche desirous to haue all thynges pacefied & set in a perfite cõcorde and securite, he sent Philip Creueceur lord Cordes his chiefe coũsailer and diligent officier to entreate, moue and persuade the kyng of Englande to be reconciled & made agayne as a newe frend to the French kyng. He not forgetting his message, sent letters to kyng Henry before he passed the sea, & arriued in the ferme land, by the which he notefied to hym, ỹ he of his boũden duetie & obseruaũce, which he ought to the kyng his master, & to the profite of his realme, woulde take paine to inuent & excogitate some mean and waye, that his hignes and kyng Charles his master being disseuered in amitie, and made ex-xxx treme enemies, onely for the cause of Maximilian newly elected king of Romanes, should be reducted & brought again into their pristine estate & consuete familiaritee, doubting not to bryng his shyp to the porte desired, if it might stand with his pleasure to sende some of his cnũsaylers to the confynes & borders of the Englishe pale, adioyning to Fraunce, there to here what reasonable offres should be demonstrated and profered: whiche condicions of peace should be so reasonable and so ample that he doubted not, but that he might with his great honoure breake vp hys campe, and retire hys army backe agayne into hys owne seignory and dominion.

xl The kynge of Englande, maturely consideryng that Britayne was clerely lost, and in maner irrecuperable, beynge nowe adioyned too the croune of Fraunce by mariage, whiche duchy hys whole mynde was to defende, protect and conferme, and that Maximilian what for lacke of money, and what for mystrust that he had in hys awne subiectes, laye styll lyke a dormouse nothynge doynge, perceauynge also that it shoulde be bothe to his people profitable, and to hym greate honour to determine this great warre without losse or bloudshed, appoynted for commissioners the bishop of Exceter, & Gyles lorde Dawbeney to passe the seas to Caleys, to cõmen with the lorde Cordes, of articles of peace to be agreed vpon and concluded.

When the commissioners were once met, they so ingeniously and effectiously proceded in the r great affaires, that they agreed that an amytie and peace shoulde be assented to and concluded, so that the conditions of the league shoulde be egall, indifferent and acceptable to bothe parties as after shalbe declared.

While the commissioners were thus consultinge on the marches of Fraunce, the kynge of Englande as you haue heard, was arryued at Caleys, where he prepared all thinges necessary for such a iorney. And from thence he remoued in.iiii.battayles, nere to the toune of Boleyne, and there pytched his tentes before the toune, in a place propice and cõueniẽt and determined to geue a great assaute to the toune. In ỹ which fortresse was suche a garrison of warlike souldiours, that valiauntly defended the toune, and thesame so replenyshed with artillary and municious of warre, that the losse of the Englishmen assautyng the toune, shoulde be greater dammage to the realme of Englaud, then the cõquerynge and gaynyng of thesame shoulde be emolument or proffite. Howbeit the kynges daily shot, rased & defaced the walles of thesaied toune: but when euery man was prest and ready to geue the assaute, a sodeyne rumoure roase in the army, that a peace was by the commissioners taken and concluded, whiche brute as it was pleasaunt and mellifluous to the Frẽchemẽ, so it was to the Englisshe naciõ bitter, sowre & doloroous because they were prest and ready at all tymes to set on their enemyes, and refused neuer to attempt any enterprice, whiche might seme either to be for their laude or profyt: thei were in great fumes, angry and euel content, rayling and murmuringe emongest them selfes, that the occasion of so glorious a victory to them manifestly offered, was by certain conditions to no man, nor yet to the kyng commodious or profitable, refused, putte by and shamefully slacked: But aboute all other, dyuerse lordes and capitaynes, encoraged with desyre of fame & honoure, trustyng in this iourney to haue wonne their spurres, whiche for to set them selfes and their band the more gorgeously forward had mutuate, and borowed dyuerse and sondry summes of money, and for the repayment of thesame, had morgaged and impignorate their landes and possessions, sore grudged and lamented this sodeyne peace, and returne of them vnthought of, and spake largely agaynste the kynges doynges, saiynge and affirmyng, that he as a man fearyng and dreading ỹ force and puissaunce of his enemyes, had concluded an inconuenient peace without cause or reason: But the kynge as a wyse man and moost prudent prince, to assuage the indignacion and pacefie the murmour of the people, declared what dammage and detriment, what losse and perdiciõ of many noble Capitaynes, and stronge souldiours must of necessitee happen and ensue at the assaute of a toune, and especially when it is soo well fortefied with men and municions, as the toune of Boleyne at that present tyme was: protestyng farther, that he might be iustly accused & condempned of iniquite & vntruthe, except he did preferre the sauegard of their lyues, before hys awne wealth, health and aduauntage.

When he had thus prudently cõsidered and appeased the myndes of hys men of warre, he returned backe again with his whole army, to the toune of Caleys, where he beganne to smell certain secret smoke, whiche was like to turne to a great flame, without it were wel watched & polletiquely sene to. For by the craftie inuencion and deuelishe ymagination of that pestiferus serpent lady Margaret, duches of Burgoyne, a newe ydol was set vp in Flaunders, and called Richard Plantagenet, second sonne to kyng Edward the.iiii. as though he had bene resuscitate from death to lyfe, whiche sodeyne newes more stacke and fretted in hys stomacke, then the battaile which now was set late forwarde & more paine he had (not without greate ieopardie of him selfe) to appease & quenche this newe spronge conspiracy, then in makynge peace with the Frenche kyng his enemy. And so he was content to accept and receaue (and not to offre and geue) the honest condicions of peace of his enemy proffred and oblated, except he woulde at one tyme make warre, bothe at home in his awne countrey, and also in foreyne and externe nacions. Wherefore kynge Henry forseynge all these thinges before (and not without great counsayll) concluded with the French kyng, to thentẽt that he beyng deliuered of al outwarde enmytie might the more quickly prouide for the ciuyle and domestical cõmocions, which he perceaued well to be budding out. The conclusion of the peace was thus, ỹ the peace should continue bothe their lyues, and that the Frenche kynge shoulde paie to kynge Henry a certayne summe of money in hand, accordyng as the cõmissioners shoulde appoynte for his charges susteyned in hys iourney:

Whiche (as the kynge certefied the Mayre of London, by hys letters the.ix. daye of Nouembre) amounted to the summe of.vii.C.xlv. M. ducates, whiche is in sterlynge money.i.C.lxxvi.M.ii.C.l.£. and also should yerely for a certayne space paye or cause to be payde for the money that the kyng of England had spent and expended in the tuyciõ & aide of the Britones.xxv.M. crounes, which yerely tribute, ỹ Frenche kynge afterwarde vexed and troubled with thee warres of Italy, yerely satisfiede contented and payde, euen to the tyme of hys sonne kynge Henry the.viii. to thentent to pay the whole duetie and tribute, and for the further cõseruacion and stablishyng of the league & amitie betwene bothe the realmes.

Shortely after that kyng Henry had taryed a conuenient space, he transfreted and arryued at Douer, and so came to his maner of Greenewiche. And this was the yere of our lord a.M.CCCC.xciii. and the.viii. yere of his troubleous reigne. Also in this sotournynge and besegynge of Boleyne (whiche we spake of before) there was fewe or none kylled, sauyng onely Jhon Sauage knyght, which goyng preuely out of hys pauylion with syr Jhon Ratcley, roade about the walles to viewe and se their strength, was sodeynly intercepted and taken of hys enemyes. And he beyng inflamed with yre, although he were captyue, of his high courage disdeyned to be taken of suche vileynes, defended his lyfe to ꝑ vttermost, and was manfully (I will not saye wylfully) slayne and oppressed, albeit syr Jhon Ratcley fled frō theim & escaped their daunger.

When kynge Henry was returned into England, he first of all thinges elected into the societe of sainct George, vulgarely called the order of the garter, Alphōse duke of Calabres sonne, accordyng to hys desire whiche Alphonse was sonne and heyre to Ferdinand kyng of Napels, & after kyng of thesame realme, til he was ouercome by kyng Charles. And after, the kyng sent Christopher Urswike, Ambassadour with the gartier, coller, mantell, and other habiliamentes appertenynge too the companyons of thesaied noble ordre. Which Ambassadoure arryuing at Napels, deliuered to the duke the whole habite, with all the ceremonies and dewe circumstaunces thereunto belonging. Whiche duke very reuerently receaued it, & with more reuerence reuested hym selfe with thesame in a solempne presence, thinkyng that by this appatell and inuestiture, he was made a frende and compaygnion in ordre with ꝑ kyng of Englande, whose frendship obteyned, he feared nothing the assautes or inuasions of hys enemyes. And this was the cause that he desyred so much to be compaygnion of that noble ordre, fermely beleuyng that the kyng of England louereygne of that ordre, shoulde be aider and mainteyner of hym agaynst the Frenche kyng, whome he knew woulde passe the moūtaynes and make warre on hym. But this custome of assistēce in ordres was, eyther neuer begonne, or before clerely abholyshed: For in oure tyme there haue bene many noble men of Italy, compaignions as well of the golden Flese in Burgoyne, as of the ordre of sainct Myghel in Fraunce, that haue bene banyshed and profligate from their naturall countrey, and yet haue not bene aided by the louereygne nor cōpanyons of thesame order. For surely the statutes and ordinaunces of all thesayed ordres doth not oblige and bynde them to that case, but in certayne poyntes. After this the duke dimissed the Ambassadour, rewardyng hym moost princely.

Shortely afther this Charles, the Frenche king concluded a league with Ferdinand kyng of Spayne, and also beyng entreated and solicited with the Oratoures of diuerse princes, which persuaded and mollefied the stony hart of a frosen prince, caused him to come to communicacion and treatie with Maximilian kyng of Romanes, and to cōclude a peace with hym for a season, to the entēt that he might without disturbaunce of hys neighboures adioynynge, prosperously and safely make warre on Ferdynand kyng of Napels, and on all Italy, as he before mynded and excogitated.

And so Charles, beyng furnished with men of armes, horsemen, fote men, naupe, and aide of some Italians, passed throughe Italy by Rome and without any great laboure wanne the citie of Napels. When he had obteyned this victory: in hys retourne beynge assailed with the Venicians at the toune of Fornouoe, he had a great daungerous victory. And so lyke a conquerour, with great triūphe returned into his realme and countrey. After hym Lewes the.xii. beynge kynge, when he founde opportunitee and sawe the gappe open, inuaded the Italians agayne, & recouered again the realme of Naples, whiche Frederyck the sonne of x kyng Alphonse, not longe before had gotten from the French nacion: & after that he subdued and conquered the whole duchy of Millayn. Albeit not longe after (fortune turnynge her whele) he lost bothe the kyngdome of Napels, and the fayre citie and duchy of Millayne bothe together. And so the Frenchmen warryng vpon the Italians had no better successe in their cōquestes, then their parentes and predecessours heretofore haue ben accustomed. For vndoubtedly, as many places as they vexed and sacked with murder and spoylinge, so many or more in conclusion they did enoble and decorate with their bloude and slaughter. Which smal recompēce little profited and lesse releued, suche as before cx were robbed and spoyled of all their goodes, substaunce and ryches.
After this the Spanyardes arryued in Italy, and their puttynge too slighte the Frenchemen, obteyned the possession of the realmes of Napels and Scicile, the which they possesse and enioye at this houre. And at length a certayne nacion of Germany, called the Swytsers, called to be partakers of the spoyle of Italy, wāne certaine tounes there, whiche they possesse and enioye at this present tyme.

In this warre and tumulteous busynes in Italy, which was ỹ most terrible and sorest plague, that any man can remembre of that nacion, there was no person, no place, no priuate house, no noble familye, no x capitayne or prince, but he was oppressed either with the heapes of the dead carcasses, or with the bloud of his frendes or subiectes, or els suffred some affliccion Iniurie or detryment. And in any wise at one tyme or another, euery man did tast and suffre all the mischeues that appertayned to the victory gotten by their enemyes. The which defacing and blottyng of the beutye of that countrey, sometyme called the quene of ỹ earth, and floure of the worlde, chaunced not of her awne selfe or her awne cause or desert, but the Italians, her awne suckyng chyldren opened the gappe, and made the waye of her destruccion. For at that tyme thus it chaunced, that when the potētates and seignories of Italy per xi ceaued, that all thinge vnder them succeded, euen as they woulde desire and wisshe, to their great exultacion and reioysyng: by reason whereof thei sate still at home like sloggardes (as women be accustomed to do) skoldynge and brawlyng, exercisyng and practisyng preuy displeasure and malice, not againe their enemyes as they were accustomed, but emong them selfes one agaynst another, castinge out of memory & drow

nynge their aun cient renoune, glozy and honoure with desyze of rule and appetite to be reuenged, and so destroyed the common weale, and subuerted the olde monumentes and actes of their fozfathers and pze=decessozs. And because some of them, thinkyng theim selfes, not of fozce and puissaunce sufficient nough to bzing their purpose to effect, and to reuenge their quarell, they entysed, stirred and pzocured with giftes, rewardes and pzomyses, straungers and fozeine nacions to their aide and assistence. The other seynge them so desirous to haue their helpe, partely moued with their giftes, partely with desyze of rule, spoyles & pzayes, gathered tozgether a great company and entred into Italy, and pz there distroyed, spoyled and possessed the better parte of it. And so the Italians, as men out of their wit, where as they thought one to noye & hurte another with hatefull warryng, they destroyed their natyue coū=trey, beynge of nature enclosed and munyte with hygh hilles, and the mayne sea rounde aboute, and opened the waye to straungiers to their vttre ignominy and finall destruccion, which thei might haue kept out of all daunger, if they had bene their awne frēdes, and loued their awne wealth and commodite. Therfoze I maie saye: O pzogeny, aswell wic=ked as vngodly, hath discozde and dissencion pleased the so muche that thou wouldest vtterly extinguishe and confoūde the glozy and honour pp of thy natyue countrey? And in conclusion, thou thy selfe art come to the depest pyt of wzetchednes, because that thou perceauing the ruyne that thou hast caused and pzocured, thou artte moze repentaunte foz the be=gynninge of it, then glad to resist and leaue it, and so accozdynge to thy desert, thou hast thy penaunce and guardon. The grand capitaine and beginner of thys mischief was Sfozcia, whiche at that tyme ruled at his wil the duchy of millaine vnder the duke Jhon Galeas his nephew but foz a truthe this Lewes ruled al, and the duke did nothing. Wher=foze Alphons duke of Calabze, and after kyng of Napels, grudgynge that this duke Jhon his sonne in lawe, should be defrauded of hys su= pp periozite and dominiō, thzeatened soze thys Lewes Sfozcia. Where he fearyng to be put from his authozitee, solicited and by greate entreatie pzocured Charles the French kyng, to inuade the realme of Napels. By reason of whiche pzocurement, Alphonse duke of Calabze, whiche succeded his father Ferdinand in the kyngdome of Napels (which also as you haue heard, was made knight of the garter) was first deprued of his kingdome by thesaied kyng Charles, and shoztely after of hys lyfe. But Lewes Sfozce had no longe ioye after the deathe of hys enemy, foz he was betrayed and taken by the Swytzers, whiche war= pp red vnder kynge Lewes the twelfth, then beynge Frenche kynge, and pl caryed into Fraunce where he in the Castell of Lothes miserably fy=nished hys lyfe, accozdynge to the saiynge of the Gospell, woo be too hym by whome a slaundze begynneth. Thys mischiefe began=ne at that tyme when Charles came thether, and contynueth yet, whiche whyche is the yere of oure Lorde. M.D.xliii. for an example to other, straungers inuited to a prosperous countrey be lothe to departe from the swete sauoure once therof tasted.

This yere was borne at Grenewiche lorde Henry, seconde sonne to ỹ kyng, whiche was created duke of Yorke, and after prynce of Wales, and in conclusion succeded his father in croune and dignitee. Nowe let vs returne to the newe founde sonne of kynge Edward, conjured by inennes policies from death to lyfe.

And first to declare hys lignage and beginnyng, you must vnderstād x that the duches of Burgoyne so norished and broughte vp in the sedycious and sceleratе faccions of false contryuers & founders of discorde coulde neuer cease nor be in quyet (lyke a vyper that is ready to burste with superfluyte of poyson) except she should infest and vnquyet ỹ kyng of England, for no desert or displeasure by hym to her committed, but onely because he was propagate and descended of the house of Lācastre, euer beyng aduerse & enemy to her lyne & lynage. For whiche only cause she compassed, ymagened and inuented howe to cast a scorpiō in his bo-some, and to infect hys whole realme wyth a pestiferous discorde. To thentent that he beyng vanquyshed and brought to confusion, both the xx boylynge heate of her malicious harte myghte be fully saciated wyth hys innocent blonde, and also auañce and preferre some darlyng of her faccion to hys Empire, rule and dignitee. And principally remembryng that the erle of Lyncoln, which was by her set foorthe and al his cōpany had small fortune & worsse successe in their progression and enterpryce, contrary to her hope and expectacion, she lyke a dogge reuertyng to her olde vomyte, beganne to deuyse and spynne a newe webbe, lyke a spy-der that dayly weueth when hys calle is torne. And as the deuell prouydeth venemous sauce to corrupt banckettes, so for her purpose she espyed a certayne younge man, of visage beutifull, of countenaunce de-xx mure, of wit subtile, crafty and pregnaūt, called Peter Warbecke. And for hys dastard cowardnes of the Englishmen, in derision called Perkyn Warbecke, accordyng to the duche phrase, whiche chaūge the name of Peter to Perkyn, to pōgelinges of no strength nor courage for their timerous hartes and pusillanimitee: Whiche younge man traueylyng many countreys, coulde speake English and many other languages, & for his baseues of stocke and birthe was knowen of none almoost, and only for the gayne of hys kyuynge from his childeoode was of necessitee, compelled to seke and frequent dyuerse realmes and regions. Therfore the duches thinkyng to haue gotten God by the foote, when she had xl the deuell by the tayle & adiudgyng this yoūg man to be a mete organe to conuey her purpose, and one not vnlike to be ỹ duke of Yorke, sonne to her brother kyng Edward, whiche was called Richard, kept hym a certayne space wyth her preuely, and him with such diligēce instructed, bothe of the secretes and common affaires of the realme of Englande, & of the lignage, dissent and order of the house of Yorke, that he lyke a good scholer not forgettyng his lesson coulde tell all that was taught hym promptly without any difficultie or signe of any suborneacion: and besides, he kept suche a princely countenaunce and so countrefeate a maiestie royall, that all men in maner did fermely beleue that he was extracted of the noble house and familie of the Dukes of Yorke. For surely it was a gift geuen to that noble progeny as of nature in the roote planted that all the sequele of that lyne and stock did study and deuyse howe to be equyualent in honoure and fame with theyr forefathers and noble predecessors.

When this diabolical duches had framed her cloth mete for the market, and ymagened that all thinges was ready and prepared for the confusion of kyng Henry, sodeynly she was enformed that thesayde kynge of Englande prepared a puissant army agaynste Charles the Frenche kyng. Then she consideryng the opportunitie of the tyme, as who would saye, a tyme wished and a daye desyred to acheue and bryng too passe her olde malicious and cancarde inuencyons, whiche alwayes nothinge lesse mynded then peace and tranquilite, and nothing more desired then dissencion, ciuile warre and destruccion of kyng Henry. Wherefore she sent Perkyn Werbeck, her newe inuented Mawmet, fyrst into Portyngall, and so craftely into the realm of Irelande, to thentent that he beynge bothe witty and wilye might moue, inuegle and prouoke the rude and rusticall Irishenacyon (beyng more of nature enclyned to rebellion then to reasonable order) to a newe conflict and a sedicious commocion.
This worshipfull Perkyn, arriuyng in Irelande, whether it were more by hys crafty witte, or by the malycyous and beastly exortacion of the saluage Iryshe gouernours, within short space entred so farre into their fauours, and so seriously perswaded and allured theim to hys purpose, that the greatest lordes and princes of the cõtrey, adhibited suche faith and credite to hys woordes, as that thing had bene true in dede, whiche he vntruly with false demonstracions setforth and diuulged. And as though he had bene the very sonne of kynge Edwarde, they honoured, exalted and applauded hym with all reuerence and dewe honoure, pro-mysyng to hym ayde, comforte and assistence of all thinges to the feat of warre, necessary and apperteynyng.

In the meane season these newes were related to Charles the French kyng, then beyng in displeasure with kyng Henry, which without delay sent for Perkyn into Irelande, to the entent to sende hym agaynste the kynge of Englande, whiche was inuadyng Fraũce (as you before haue heard) This Flemyng Perkyn was not a litle ioyfull of thys message, thynkynge by this onely request to be exalted into heauen, when he was called to the familiarite and acquayntaunce of kynges and princes: & so with all diligence sayled into Fraunce, with a very small nauy, not so small as smally furnyshed. And commynge to the kynges presence was of hym royally accepted, and after a princely fassion entreteyned, & had a garde to him assigned, wherof was gouernour ỹ lord Cõgresshall.

And

And to hym at Parys resorted syr George Neuell bastard, Syr Jhon Tayler, Rouland Robynson and an hundred Englishe rebelles. But after that a peace, as before is sayde was appointed and concluded betwixt him and the kynge of England, thesayde kynge Charles dismissed the younge man, and woulde no lenger kepe hym. But some men saye whiche were there attendynge on hym, that he fearynge that kyng Charles, woulde delyuer hym to the kynge of Englande, beguyled the lorde Congreshall, and fledde away from Parys by nyght. But whether he departed without the Frenche kynges consent or disassent, he deceaued in his expectacion, and in maner in despayre, returned agayn to the lady Margaret his first foolishe foundacion.

The duches thinkynge euery houre from his departure a whole yere, vntill suche tyme she heard from hym, and effecteously desiring to knowe whiche waye lady Fortune turned her whele, herynge hym to be repudiate and abiected out of the Frenche courte, was in a greate agony and muche amased and more appalled: But when she was asserteyned of hys arryuall in Flaunders, she no lesse reuiued, then he that hathe in steade of the sworde of execucion, a perdon and restauracion of hys lyfe and degree to hym delyuered and shewed. And at hys commynge to her presence, she receaued hym with suche gladnes, with suche reioysyng and suche comforte (as in dede she coulde dissemble alone aboue all other) as though she had neuer sene nor knowē hym before, or as he were newly cropen oute of hys mothers lappe agayne, that what in trust to preferre hym to the prehemynence by her ymagened, and what for the hope that she had to destroye kynge Henry, she fell into suche an vnmeasurable ioye, that she had almost lost her wytte and senses. And that thys her gladnes myght be notified and made apparaunt to euery man, she first reioyced of her nephewes health and welfare: And secondarely she much thrusted and sore longed, not once, but dyuerse and sundry tymes in open audience, and in solempne presence to here hym declare and shewe by what meanes he was preserued from deathe and destruccion, and in what countreys he had wandered and soughte frendshippe: And fynally, by what chaunce of fortune he came to her courte and presence. To the entent that by the open declaracion of these feyned phantasyes, the people myghte be perswaded to geue credite and beleke, that he was the true begotten sonne of her brother kynge Edwarde. And after thys she assigned hym a garde of thirty persones in Surrey and blewe, and highly honoured hym as a great estate and called hym the whyte Rose, prynce of Englande.

By reason whereof, the nobilite of Flaunders were to hym diligent, & with dewe reuerence dyd him all the pleasure that laye in theyr powre or offices. And to be shorte, the more that thys poeticall and feyned inuencion was shadowed with the pretence of sincere veritie, the more faythe and vndubitate credence, was adhibited to it. In so muche that many one thought hym to be preserued, onely by the wyll and mightie powre of almightie God, and to be conueyghed at the fyrste daungier by some faithfull frende of kyng Edward his father into some straunge country, and so escaped the violent tyranny of his vncle kyng Rychard, whiche vndoubitately hereafter should recouer his fathers possessions & kingdome. The fame & bruyte of this ruggled myracle was almoost in one moment blowē ouer all the coūtrey of Flaūders, & the territories therabouts. But in England it was blased in euery place sonet then a man could thinke or deuise it: In which coūtrey more then in other places it was receaued for an infallible veritie & moost sure truthe, & that not onely of the common people, but also of diuerse noble & worshipfull men of no small estimacion, which swate & affirmed it to be true, and no coment or fable phantastically ymagened. After this deuulgacion that Rychard sonne to kyng Edward was yet liuyng, & had in great honour emongest the Flēminges, there began sedicion to spринge on euery syde, none otherwyse then in the pleasaunt tyme of vere, trees are wonte to budde or blosome. For not onely they that were in sanctuaries, for great and heynous offences by them cōmitted, but also many other that were fallen in debte, and doubtyng to be brought to captiuitie and bondage, assembled together in a company, and were passed ouer the sea into Flaunders to their countrefeate Richard sonne to kynge Edwarde, otherwise named Perkyn Warbeke. After this many of the noble men conspired together, some through rashnes and temerite induced therunto, some beyng so earnestly perswaded in their awn conceipt, as though they knew perfightly that this Perkyn was the vndubitate sonne of kyng Edward the.iiii. solicited, sturred and allured to their opinion all suche as were frēdes & fautoures of the house of Yorke. Other through indignacio, enuye and auarice, euer grudginge and thinkinge they were not condignly rewarded for their paynes and partes taken in the kynges behalfe and quarell. Other whome it greued and vexed to see the worlde stande still in one staye, and all men to lyue in peace and trāquilitie, desyrous of some chaunge, ranne hedlinge into that fury, madnes and sedicious comuracion.

This rumour and vayne fable of this twyse borne duke Richard, deuyded all England and drewe the realme into Partakynges & seuerall factions, so that the myndes of all men were vexed either with hope of gayne and preferment, or with feare of losse and confusion. For no man was quyet in his awne mynde, but his braynes & senses daily laboured & bet about this great & weightie matter, euery man according to their intelligēce, pōdering & weiyng in egal balaūce, the incōmoditie & daungier that might hercof enlue, and the gayne & commoditte that by the same might be obteyned & gottē. Albeit the kyng, & hys coūsayll & other hys faythfull frendes, not a litle meruayled that any person (beynge in hys ryght wyt) coulde induce in hys mynde or fynde in hys hart falcely to thynke and fraudulentlye to ymagen, suche a pernycious fable

and fiction, beyng not onely straunge and marueylous, but also prodigious and vnnaturall, to feyne a dead man to be renated and newely borne agayne. By the whiche open fallax and vntrue surmyse setfoorth and palliated with the vesture and garment of a professed veritee. Many of the noble men (as he well then perceued) toke and reputed it, whiche was folishely and maliciously setfoorth to vnquyet & perturbe hym and his realme, to be a thinge true, iust and vnfeyned. So that he then sawe as farre as lynxe with his bright eyes, that this newe inuented coment and poeticall peynted fable, woulde make some broyle and discorde in his realme. Except it were manifestly published and openly declared to be a feyned fable, a sedicious fraude and a craftye imagened mischiefe. Other persones, to whome warre, sedicion, and stryfe, were as pleasaunt as delicate vyand or Epicures liuynge, were very ioyous of these newes, and beleued no fraude nor deceate to be hid or cloked vndre this golden tale. But whatsoeuer the fame was and the voice that ranne abrode, that they reputed, syncere, true, and as an open playne thing, thinking that to redounde both to their aduauntage, commoditee and hygh preferment and honoure, whiche thinge did greatly animate and encourage them to set vp the sayles, and lanchefoorth the owner of their pernicious and detestable enterprice. And because the matter was weighty and requyred great ayde and assistence. Therfore they determined to sende messengers to the lady Margaret, to knowe when Rychard duke of Yorke might come conuenently into England to thentent that they beyng thereof certefied might be in a redynes to helpe and succoure hym at his first arryuall.

SO by the common consent and agrement of the constituted confederates, syr Robert Clifford knight, & William Barley were sent into Flaunders, whiche declared to the duches all the secrete ententes and preuy counsailes of ỹ frẽdes and fautoures of the new founde duke. The duches thys message did gladly accept and louyngly embrace, and of their tydinges was not a litle ioyous, easely by her persuasion inducynge to their heddes, that all thinges that were spoken of duke Rychard were true & vnfeyned. And afterwarde brought them to the sight of Perkyn, the which countrefeated the coũtenaunce and the maner and fassion of Rychard duke of Yorke, prailing his vertues & qualitees, with ỹ which he was endued aboue the mone. Thesayde syr Robert Clifford, when he had sene & wel aduised the yoũg man, beleued surely that he was extracted of the blood royall, and the very sonne of kyng Edward the.iiii. and therof he wrote a lettre of credite & confidence into England to his coinpany & felowes of his conspiracy, & to put them out of all doubte he affirmed ỹ he knew hym to be kynge Edwardes sonne by his face & other lyniamentes of his body. And when these lettres came to England, the theuetaynes of this busynes, to the entent to styrze the people to some newe commocion and tumult, and to set foozth some cause of mattre apparaunt, caused it openly to be dtuulged and published, that it was true and not feigned that was spoken & sayde abzoade of the duke of Yozke: but it was done by such a secret crafte, that no man coulde tell who was the authoure and founder of that rumoure.

When the kyng perceaued that this vayne fable was not vanyshed oute of the mad bzeynes of the commen people, he thought it expedient bothe foz the sauegarde of hym selfe and also of hys countrey, whose hurtes were ioyned and mixed together, to pzouyde some remedy to repzesse this Jmmynent mischaunce, not a litie suspectynge, that some conspiracy had bene concluded and agreed, because that syz Robert Clyffozde had late fled pzeuely into Flaunders. Wherfoze he sent certayne kayghtes that were chosen and picked men of warre, with a bonde of souldioures into euery parte to kepe the shozes and the sea costes surely, that no man might passe ouer into any fozeyn lãde beyond the sea noz repasse into this realme without serche, oz paspozte oz saue conduyte by hym geuen, and all streytes, passages and by pathes were kept and searched, so that no man vnappzehended coulde passe to the sea coaste, noz make any cõuenticle oz assemble without he were espyed and taken. And to thentent that many men, beyng both of Englãd and other places foz very malyce by this new inuencion enflamed and indurate, shoulde no farther ronne in their frenetical madnes, he secretly sent wise espialles to al the cyties of the Gaule Belgique oz lowe countrey within he Archedukes dominion, and the confynes of thesame, to searche & pzye oute of what pzogeny thys misnamed Rychарde was dissended and pzopagate, pzomysinge highly too rewarde and thanke suche persones, whiche woulde manyfest and open the secrete doubtes and deuyses of thesame matter: and besyde thys he wzote to hys trusty frendes to do thesame. So they saylinge into Fraunce, deuyded and seuered themselfes euery man into a lyuyte and pzouynce. And when certayne of them repayzed to the toune of Turnay, they were there certefyed by the testimony of many honest persons, that thys feigned duke came but of a lowe stocke, and of a base parentage, and was named there Peter Warbecke. And so shoztely after the kynges inquysitoures returned into Englande, repoztynge to the kynge what they had knowen and heарde: Of whiche thynge the kynge was also moze playnly certefyed by hys trusty and faythefull frendes, both by letters and trusty messengers.

Wherupon seyng that nowe the fraude was openly and apparaũtly manifested & espied, he determined to haue it publyshed & declared with all diligent celerite, both in the realme of Englande & also in all partes beyonde the sea, in the pzouynces of Fozeyn pzinces and straunge potẽtates. And foz thesame cause he sent to Philip archeduke of Burgoyn and to hys counsaylers (because that he was not yet of mature age, apte and conuenient to take the regimēt of hys countreys and seigniories) Syr Edward Pownynges a valiaunt knight, and syr William Warram doctour of the lawes, a man of great modestie, learnyng and grauite, that they should opēly to thē declare, that the ponge man beyng with the lady Margaret was discended of a basse & obscure parentage, and that he had fallely and vntruly vsurped the name of Richard duke of Yorke, whiche long before was murthered with hys brother Edwarde in the Towre of London, by the commaundement of kynge Rychard their vncle as many men lyuynge can testifye. And to thinke x and saye otherwyse then thys that apertly is knowen, it were the hyghest poynte and degree of madnes, forasmuche as it is probable by an inuincible reason and an argument infallyble, that kyng Rychard their naturall vncle in dispatchyng and destroiyng prince Edward the eldest sonne of kyng Edward his brother, was in no suertie of hys realme or vsurped dominion, yf he had permitted Richard the yoūger sonne to lyue and continew: For then myght he as next heyre to hys brother haue lawfully and by iust title claymed the sceptre and diademe royall, whiche was hys fathers and after diuoluted to hys eldet brother. And therfore they shoulde desyre the Archeduke and the prynces of his coun-xx sayll, that it woulde please them to geue no credite, nor themselfes suffre any more to be blynded or seduced with suche mere impostures and craftie illusions beyng full of vntruthe and apparaunte falsehed, nor yet to ayde or assist suche a craftye merchaūt, whiche had falsely feigned hys name and stocke, and in especially against hym, which in few yeres passed, had succoured and releued Maximilian their lorde beynge sore oppressed, and almost ouercome bothe with the extort powre and puyssaunce of the Frenche kyng, also with the cyuyle discorde and intestine rebellion of his awne subiectes and vassals. With these commaunde-xxx mentes the Ambassadoures sayled into Flaunders, and there gētely receaued and louingely enterteyned of the Archeduke Philip and his coūsayll, And after that they were commaunded to declare the entent of their legacion, docter William Warram priest, made before theym a pleasaunt and a luculent oracion, shewyng therin discretely the mynde entent and desyre of the kynge hys master: And in the latter ende of hys oracion, he a litle rebuked the lady Margaret and hyt her of the thombes, saiynge that she nowe in her olde age within fewe yeres had produced and brought forth two detestable monsters, that is to saye Lambert (of whome rehersall was made before) and the other Perking Warbeck, And beynge conceyued of these two greate babes was not of xl them delyuered in eight or nyne monethes as nature dothe requyre and as all other women commonly do, but in the hundreth and .lxxx. monethes she brought them forth out of her wombe: for bothe these at the least were fiftene yeres of age before that she woulde be broughte in bedde of them, and shewe them openly.

And when they were newly crept out of her wombe, they were no infantes, nor suckyng chyldren, but lusty yongelinges, and of age sufficient to byd battaile to kinges. Although these tauntes and Jestes did angre and trouble the lady Margaret, yet Perkyn was more vexed and en-combered with the thinges declared in thys oracion, and especiall because his fraude and false feygned iuggelinge was brought to lyght & opened: yet the duches beynge therwith more incensed then quenched, nothyng refreignynge her olde malyce and cancard hatred, but enten-dyng to caste whote Sulpher to the newe kyndled fyre, determyned clerely to arme and setforward prety Perkyn agaynst the kynge of Eng- E land with speare and shilde, might and mayne.

When the Ambassadours had done their message, and the Archedukes counsayll had longe debated whether Perkyn were the true sonne of kynge Edwarde the fourthe, they aunswered the Ambassadours, That to the entent to haue the loue and fauoure of the kynge of Eng-lande assuredly after that tyme, the Archeduke nor they woulde neither aide nor assist Perkyn nor hys complyces in any cause or querell.
Yet notwythstandynge, yf the lady Margaret persistynge and conty-nuynge in her roted malyce towardes the kynge, woulde be to hym ay-dynge and helpynge, it was not in their power to let or withstande it, FF for because she in the landes assigned to her for her dower, might frankely and freely do and ordre all thynges at her awne wyll and pleasure without contradiccion of any other gouernour.

When thys aunswer was geuen to theim, they returned a-gayne into Englande. After that, kyng Henry lokyng circumspectly to hys matters, purposed to pacefye the stor-mes and blastes that he perceaued to be growyng, rather GGG by pollecy and counsayl, then by dubious warre and manslaughter, if his nobilite woulde therunto condiscende. For he well con-sidred that of one busynes riseth another, and of one small sparcle commeth a great flame. And therefore straight he sent foorth certayne espialles into Flaunders, whiche shoulde feigne theim selfes to haue fledde vnto the duke of Yorke, and by that meanes searche foorth and inue-stigate, the whole intent of their coniuracion, and after what waye they entended to procede in thesame. Other were sent also to allect and entice syr Robert Clyfford, and William Barly to retorne into En- H glande, promisinge to theim franke and free pardone of all offences, and commes promitted and promocions and rewardes, for obeynge to the kynges request. These explorators so traueyled in their affayres and busynes that they brought to passe all thinges to their masters desyre. For first they had perfight knowlege of the names of certayne conspiratours

conſpiratours agaynſt the kyng. After they perſwaded ſyr Robett Clifford to leaue of that fooliſhe opinion, whyche had no ſure grounde nor foundacion to ſtaye it ſelfe vpon. Albeit William Barley coulde not be deduced from his begonne enterprice, but that he woulde go forwarde hedlynge with theſame, which taried not longe in that deueliſh opinion.

For within two yeres after this, he repentinge hym of his foly, being reclayned, and hauinge perdone geuen hym of the kyng, repaired home to hys natiue countrey, deteſting him and hys fooliſhe blindnes.

When the eſpialles had ſped their purpoſe, one after another ſtale away preuely from the feyned duke, and returned into Englande, bring-ginge with them the names of certayne, which were chiefe of that conſpiracy. Other taried ſtill behind to accõpany ſyr Robert Clifford, when he returned agayne into England, whoſe taryinge meruelouſly debilitated and appalled the courages, & hartes, of the coniuratours. For they perceaued dayly that their enterprice more and more feynted, and that they were by a litle and litle dampnified and hurted. And yet thei ſaw no man whome they might perfightly put diffidẽce in, or yet once miſtruſt.

When the kyng had knowledge of the chief Capitaynes of thys tumulte by the ouerture of hys eſpilles, which were returned, he cauſed thẽ all to be apprehended and brought to London before hys preſence. Of the which the chief were Jhon Ratclyffe lord Fitzwater, ſyr Symonde Mouñforde, ſyr Thomas Twhaytz knightes, Williã Dawbeney, Robert Ratclyffe, Thomas Creſſenor, and Thomas aſtwood. Alſo certain prieſtes and religious men, as ſyr William Richeforde doctor of deui-nitee, and ſyr Thomas Poynes, bothe freers of ſainct Dominikes order, doctor William Sutton, ſyr William Worſely deane of Paules, and Robert layborne and ſyr Richard Leſſey. Other that were giltye of theſame cryme, hearyng that many of their company were taken, fled and toke ſanctuary. And the other that were taken were condempned al of treaſon, of the which there was hedded ſyr Symond Mounforde, ſyr Robert Ratcliffe, & William Dawbeney, as aucthoures and chief Capitaynes of this buſynes. The other were perdoned, and the Prieſtes alſo for their order ſake that they had taken, but fewe of them liued lõg after. Alſo ſyr Jhon Ratclyffe, lord Fitzwater was pardoned of his life, but after that he came to Caleys, and there laide in holde, he was behed-ded, becauſe he corrupted the kepers with many promyſes to haue eſcaped out of theſame, entending as was thought to haue gone to Perkyn.

Kyng Henry of England, partely greued with the kyng of Romanes for breakyng his promes, when he ſhoulde haue aſſociated hym in hys iorney agaynſt the French kyng, and partely diſpleaſed, with the Flemmynges, but principally with the lady Margaret, for kepyng and settyng forward Perkyn Warbeck, not onely baniſhed all Flẽmyſhe wares, and marchaundiſes, out of hys realme and dominions, but alſo reſtreyned all Engliſh merchaũtes, from their repaire and traffique, into any of the landes & territories, of the kynge of Romanes, or the Arche-duke hys sonne, causynge the marte of merchaundises and commoditees of this realme to be kept at hys toune of Caleys. Wherfore the The Marte kept at Caleis sayde kynge and hys sonne banysshed oute of their landes and seignio-ries all Englysshe clothes, yarne, tynne, leade and other commodities vpon great forfeytures and penalities. The restreynt made by the kyng sore greued and hyndred the merchauntes, beynge aduenturers: For they by force of thys cõmaundement had no occupiynge to beare their charges and suppoꝛte their contynuaunce and credyte. And yet one thinge sore nypped their hartes, for the Easterlynges whiche were at libertie, brought into the realme such wares as they were wont and accustomed to do, and so serued their customers throughe oute the whole realme: By reason whereof the masters beynge destytute of sale and commutacion, neyther reteyned so many couenaunt seruauntes and appꝛentices as they before were accustomed, and in especial, Mercers, Haberdasshers and Clothewoorkers, nor yet gaue to their seruauntes so great stipende and salarie, as before that restrente they vsed to do.

For whiche cause thesayde seruauntes entendyng too woorke their malice on the Easterlynges, the Tuesdaye before saynct Edwardes daye came to the Styliard in London, and beganne to rifle and spoyle suche chambres and warehouses as they could get into: So that the Easter-A riot made vpon the Easterlinges. lynges had muche a do to withstande and repulse theim oute of their gates. And when their gates were fermed and closed, the multitude rus-shed and bete at the gates with clubbes and leuers to haue entred, but the Easterlynges by the helpe of Carpenters and Smythes, whiche came to their ayde by water oute of the borough of Southwarke had so strongly shored and fortefied them selfes that they coulde not pre-uayle. The Mayre of London hearinge of this ryot, assembled the Magestrates and officiers of the cytie together, and so beynge furnysshed bothe with men and weapon, set forward to warde the Styliard. Assone as the cõminge of the Mayre was intymate and knowen to the ryotous persones, they fledde awaye lyke a flocke of shepe howebeit he apprehended diuerse of the malefactours and commytted theim too seuerall prysons. And vpon the inquyry before the kynges commissioners, there were founde gyltie aboue. lxxx. seruauntes and appꝛentices (and not one housholder) whiche were confederate together to make thys attẽpt and swoꝛne in no wyse to discouer or reuele thesame: Whereof, some that were the cheuytcynes and begynners of thys mischeuous riot, were sent to the Towꝛe, and there longe continued. But in conclusion because none of their Masters were inuented culpable of thys naugh-tye acte, the kynge of hys goodnes remitted their offence, and restoꝛed them to their libertie.

SHortely after, syr Robert Clyffoꝛd, pārtely trusting on the kynges pꝛomes, & partely mistrustyng the thing, because he knewe that diuerse that were accused to be pattakers of that faccion and conspiracy were put in execucion: & therfoꝛe perceauing that their could not be a moꝛe pernicious noꝛ moꝛe desperate begonne thinge then that deuelishe enterpꝛice, returned sodeynly agayn into England. The kynge beynge certefyed befoꝛe of his cōming, went streyght to the Towꝛe of London the moꝛow after the daye of Epiphany, and there taryed till suche tyme that syꝛ Robert Clyffoꝛd was there pꝛesented to hys person, which thinge he vsed vnder this pꝛetence, that if syꝛ Robert Cliffoꝛde had accused any of the nobilitie to be partakers of this vngracious fraternitie & diabolicall coniuracyō, that then euery suche person might be called thether without suspection of any euell, and there streight to be attached and cast in holde.

But befoꝛe I go any farther I will shew the opinion that at that tyme ranne in many mens heddes of thys kuyghtes goynge into Flaunders. Some men helde this opintou, that kyng Henry foꝛ a polecy dyd sende hym as a spye to Flaunders, oꝛ els he woulde not haue so sone receaued hym into his grace and fauour agayn: Neuertheless this is not like to be true by diuerse reasons and apparaunt argumentes, fiꝛste after that attempt begonne by syꝛ Robert, he was in no smal daūget hym selfe, and by that was not a litle noted, & hys fame blemyshed, but also hys frendes were suspected and had in a gealosy. Secondately he was not after that in so great fauour, noꝛ so estemed with the kynge as he had been in tymes past, because he was blotted and marked with that cryme and offence. And therfoꝛe he bearing his fauoure to the house of Yoꝛke entendynge in the beginning to administer displeasure to kyng Henry, sayled to the lady Margaret, beyng seduced & brought in beleke that Perkyn was the very sonne of kynge Edward. But to my purpose, when syꝛ Robert came to the pꝛesence of the kynge, he knelyng on hys knees most humblye, beseched him of grace & pardone, which he shoꝛtley obteyned. And after that beynge requyꝛed of the maner and oꝛdꝛe of the coniuracion, and what was done in Flaunders, he opened euery poynte to his knowlege, and after disclosed the names, aswell of the aiders and fautoures as of the inceptoꝛs and begynners. Emongest whome he accused syꝛ William Stanley, whome the kynge made hys chiefe chamberleyn, and one of his pꝛeuy counsayll. When he had so sayde, the kyng was greatly dismayed and greued, that he shoulde be pattaker in that greuedous offence, considerynge fiꝛst that he had the gouernaunce of his chambꝛe, and the charge and comptrolment of all suche as were next to hys bodye, and also callynge to remembꝛaunce the manyfolde gratuytes, whiche he had receaued at hys hande, but in especiall not foꝛgetynge that benefite aboue all other that onely by hys ayde and succouꝛe, he had vanquyshed and ouerthꝛowen hys moꝛtall enemy kynge Richarde. Wherefoꝛe, at the begynnynge he coulde in no wyse be induced nor perswaded to beleue that he was such a preuy conspiratoure or malicious offender, but when the cryme was openly proued and probably affirmed, then the king caused hym to be restrayned from his libertie in his awne chambre within the quadrate towre. And there appoynted hym by his preuy counsayll to be examined. In whiche examinacion he nothinge denyed, but wysely and seriously did consent and agree to all thinge layed to hys charge, yf he were in any of them culpable or blame worthy.

The reporte is, that this was his offence. When communicaciō was had betwene hym, and this syr Robert Cliffordе, as concerning Perkyn whiche falsely vsurped the name of kyng Edwardes sonne, syr Williā Stanley sayde and affirmed there, that he would neuer fight nor beare armure agaynst the young man, yf he knew of a truthe that he was the indubitate sonne of kyng Edward the.iui. Thys poynte argueth and proueth hym at that tyme, beynge moued with melancholy, to beare no great good wyll to kyng Henry, whereof suspicion first grewe; and after this ensued the accusation of syr Robert Clyfford.

Then the kyng doubtinge what to do with hym, did cōsulte & breath with hym selfe of this sodeyne chaunce. For he feared least that his brother lorde Thomas Stanley, in whome he had founde great frendship, would take this mattre greuously. And if he should remit that fault or abusynge hys lenyte & mercy, he would be the more bolder to offende and trespace more highly. Albeit at the last, seueritee tooke place, and mercy was put backe, and sō he was arreigned at Westmynster, and adiudged to dye, and accordinge to that iudgemente was broughte to the towre hill the.xvi. daye of Februarу, and there had hys head stryke of. What was the occasion and cause why the syncere and faythfull mynde that syr William allways before bare to kyng Henry, was turned into cancarde hatred and dispite, and why the especiall fauoure that the kynge bare towardes hym was transmuted into disdeyne and displeasure, dyuerse men alledge dyuerse causes, affirmynge that when kynge Henry (what other mutuall benefites the one had receaued of the other, I wyll nowe pretermyt and ouerpasse) in that battaile, in the whiche he bereft kynge Rychard bothe of hys lyfe and hys kyngdom, beynge associate and accompanyed but with a small numbre, and circūuented by kynge Richardes army, & in great ieopardy of hys lyfe, thys syr William beynge sent from the lorde Stanley hys brother with a good company of stronge and hardy men (whiche lorde Stanley was nere the felde with a great army) came sodeynly and fortunately to the succours of kynge Henry, and saued hym from destruccion, and ouerthrewe kynge Rychard as before you haue heard. Surely thys was a benefite aboue all benefites to be remembred, by the which kyng Hēry was not onely preserued alyue, but also obteyned the croune & kyngdome, which great benefite, after the kyngdome once obteyned, he did neyther forget nor yet left vnrewarded. For the lord Thomas Stanley he

inuested with the swoorde of the countie of Darby & besyde other great giftes & officies geuen to Willia Stanley, he made him his chiefe chā-berleyn. This syr William although he were in great fauoure with the kyng, & had in great and high estimacion, more remēbring the benefite done to the kyng, then the rewardes and gratuitees of hys liberalite receaued, thinking that the vessel of oyle, (according to the Gospel) would ouerflowe the brymmes, & as some saye, desiryng to be erle of Chestre, & one thing encoraged him much, which was the ryches & treasure of king Richard which he onely possessed at the cōflict of Bosworth: By reason x of which habundaunce of ryches & greate powre of people, he set naught by the kyng his souereygn lorde and Mastre. When the kyng perceaued that his stomack began to canker & ware rusty, he was with him not a litle displeased, and so whē bothe their hartes were enflamed with melancoly, bothe loste the fruite of their longe continued amitie & fauoure. And so it often chaūceth, that when men do not consider nor yet regard the great benefites to them exhibited, they rendre agayne hatred for liberalitee, and for breade geuen, they yelde agayne a scorpion. Nowe to returne to the matter.

At this tyme the kyng thought it best, ye and very necessary, not onely xx to take hede about him, but also to vse some sharpe punyshmēt and correccio of the offences of his subiectes, to thentent that the late begō sedicion might the soner be repressed, and for this cause specially that some persons voyde of all honest feare & reuerent dread, had taken such courage and audacitie to them, that they feared not to speake euell of their kyng and souereygn lord, with mooste spiteful and cōtumelious wordes, as though they neyther feared nor woulde obey hym, or hys preceptes and commaundementes, expecting dayly and houreley the arriuall and landing of the keyned Richard duke of Yorke, now lately ryssen from death to lyfe. But when knowlege of the slaunderous and oppробrious xx wordes were brought to the kynges eares, he caused dyuerse persones to suffre condigne punyshment for their heynous offences, wherby their cōplices well perceayuing that their enterprice had no prosperous succesfe nor toke any good effect, & specially such as temerarpoully begā to make mastries, and farther seyng what preparacion was made & prouyded agaynst their tumulteous commocion and frantique enterprice, they of theyr awne swynge pacefied them selfes, and beganne to turne to their kynge and naturall liege lorde.

The.xl.yere.

After the death of syr William Stanley, Gyles lord Dabeney, a man of Great fidelitie and circumspection was elected and made the kynges chiefe chamberleyne. When the kynge had thus politiquely weded out the euel & corrupt hartes of his English subiectes, and had pacefied & brought brought all his realme to a monacorde and a quyet lyfe. Then he perceaued that it was necessary also to purge & cleuse his realme of Irelād to thentent that the venemous sede sowen & planted.ii.yeres past emongest the wilde and sauage Irish persons by Perkyn Warbeck might be cleane eradicated & plucked vp. Wherfore he sent syr Hēry Deane late Abbot of Langtonye a man of great wyt and diligēce(whome he made chauncelour of the Isle) and syr Edward Pownynges knyght,with an army of mēn into Ireland, to searche & purge all such tounes & places where Perkyn was receaued,reueled or fauoured. And yf they espied any of hys affinitee or faccion, then he would they should be punished with all extremitie to the terrible example of all other that woulde enclyne too that vnfortunate parte. And first, after their arryuall into Irelande, they called in the kynges name the nobilitee of that countrey to a counsayll, where they beyng assembled all together, the Chauncelour with a gentle exhortacion requyred them first to persist in due obedience and fidelitie towardes their kynge,and to aide hys capitayne syr Edwarde Pownynges with their might, powre and strength agaynst such rebelles whiche eyther through blyndnes & folye or elles through desyre and appetide to do euell,susteyned and aided Perkyn with harneys,menne or money. Euery man promysed openly to helpe with all their powre and might: But they promysed not so quickly, but they performed it as slowely, for fewe or none either aided or assisted him, as who woulde saye, that they loued the English nacion more with their outward countenaunce,then their inwarde hartes & myndes.But when they heard that syr Edward Powninges was come to persecute al such as were fautoures and frēdes to Perkyn Warbeck,there was no man, although he were but a litle contamynate with that seditious infeccion, but he fled oute of hand into woodes and marises for the defence and sauegarde of them selfes,there consultyng together, after the maner of their countrey, in what places they might best lye in wayte to infest and skyrmishe with the Englishmen,or els if nede should so requyre to fighte with them hand to hande.

In Ireland there be two kynd of men,one softe,gētle,ciuile and curteous: And to these people, as to the mooste rychest and best nurtured persons dothe many merchaunt men of the countreys adioyning, daily resorte.frequent contract, bergayne,and make marchaundise. But because the mooste resorte thether is of the English nacion, the Irishmen folow & coūtrefeate their ciuile maners & honest condicōs. And by reason of the cōmon trade & the entrecourse betwene thē, they haue learned the English toūg,& can both speake & vnderstād it.And al this kynde of people is vnder ỹ subiecciō & dominiō of ỹ kyng of Englād. The other kynde is cleane cōtrary frō this,for they be wylde,rustical,folish, fierce, & for their vnmanerly behauior & rude fassions,are called wilde & sauage Irishmen. And these men haue many gouernours & seuerall rulers, whiche kepe continuall battaile,and dayly warre emongest them selfes.

for ỹ which cause they be more fierce, more bolde & hardy then theother Irishmē, and thei be very desirous of newe thinges & straunge sightes and gasinges, & after robbery, theft & rapine, in nothing so muche delyting as with tumulteous sedicion & continual strife. And to these wilde coaltes Perkyn shewed hym selfe first, easely perswading theim to beleue that he was thesame very person whome he falsely fayned and counterfeated.

Wherefore Sir Edwarde pownynges accordinge to his commission, entending to punishe suche as haue ben aiders and auauncers of Perkyns foolish enterprice, with his whole army, marched forward against these wilde Irishmen, because ỹ al other beinge culpable of that offence fled and resorted to theim for succoure and defence, to thentent that thei bothe together mighte be able to resist & defye their enemies. But when he sawe that his purpose succeded not as he wished it, both because the Irish lordes sent him no succour accordynge to their promises, and also considerynge that his nombre was not sufficiente to set on the wylde people being dispersed emongest woodes, mountaynes and marisches was of necessitie compelled to recule and returne, fretting and vexed in his stomacke, because he suspected ỹ Geralde erle of Kildare being then the kinges deputy, was the cause & occasiō that he had no succours nor ayde sent to him, and so he was enformed of such as bare to the erle no good will. And therefore sodenly he caused the erle to be apprehended, and as a prisoner brought him in his company into England: Where, when he was examined and certayne matters of treason layed to his charge, he auoyded theim all, and clerely (suche was his wytt and innocency) quyt him selfe and layed the burden in other mens neckes: Whome the kyng dimissed and sent hym into Ireland agayne, there to be his deputie and Liettenaunt as he was before. The kyng like a politique prince had many greate and weightie considerations whiche restreyned him from vsynge of any seueritie or extremitie agaynste this earle, contrary to the mindes, and willes of his malicious aduersaries. One was the great authoritie and swinge that he bare emōgest the Irysh nacion: also the condicion and state of the tyme wherein he sauoured some sedicion to be in brewing: And chiefly of all the assured hope & affiaunce that he conceiued in him.

So that now the kyng being out of all feare of battayle, dyd take his progresse into Lancashire the. xxv. daye of Juyn, there to recreate his spirites and solace him selfe with his mother the Lady Margarete wyfe to the Earle of Derby, whiche then laye at Lathome in that countrey. While these thinges were thus don in England Perkin Warbeck then beinge in Flaundres, although he had taken great care and sorow for that his crafftie conueighaunce was espied and openly knowen, and also that kyng Henry had afflicted and punished diuerse of his confederates and aiders, and therby in dispaire of al the aide and succour that was to hym promised and appoynted: Yet he determined not to leaue the hope and truſt that he had conceaued in his madde heade to obteine the Crowne and Realme of Englande, and ſo gatheryng a greate Armye of valyaunt Capteynes of all nacions, ſome Banqueroutes, ſome falſe Englyſhe ſanctuary men, ſome Theues, Robbers and Vacabundes, whyche leauinge their bodily laboure deſyrynge onely to lyue of Robery and rapine, came to be his ſeruauntes and ſouldioures. And ſo being furniſhed with this rablemente of knaues, tooke ſuche ſhippes as his frendes had prouided for hym, and departed oute of Flaundres, entendyng to arryue in England whereſoeuer the winde brought hym. And by chaunce of fortune he was driuen vpon the Kentyſhe coaſte where becauſe ẏ ſee was calmed, he caſt his anchors and ther made his abode, and ſent certeine of his retinewe to the lande to ſignifie to all the countrey that he was ſo furniſhed of al thynges mete and cõuenient for his entrepryce, that there was no doubt but the victorye woulde encline to his parte. And by this meanes to make exploration and enquiſicion whether the Kentyſhmen would take his parte and folowe hym as theire capteyne, whiche before tymes was not timerous nor afrayed of their awne mynde in troubleous ſeaſons to moue warre againſte their princes. The Kentiſhemen hearinge that this feyned duke was come, and had hard that he was but a peinted ymage, doubtyng a ſpace what to do, whether to help him or to reſiſt his power, at the laſt remembring what euell chaunces their forefathers had, and how ſmal a profyt ſuch as haue rebelled haue gained, thought it neither expedient nor profitable for theim to ayde & aſſyſt hym that came rather to ſpoyle, deſtroye & waſt the countzy, then to conquere it for their wealth & commodity. And this thei firmely coniectured becauſe he had none other with him but Alienes and ſtraunge people, which would take & accompte euery church toune, chapell, houſe & euery priuate man as a pray and a lucre, and not as their native countrey. Wherfore they feazing the ſequele, determyned ſtill to abyde trewe to their kyng and prince, & to fall vpon ſuche as were new come to land out of their ſhippes. And while thei weze aſſemblyng of theim ſelues together, other ſhould by fayre promiſes & frẽdly woordes allure & calle vnto theim the great nombze out of the ſhippes, and ſo geue them battaill. And ſo vſing this guyle and impoſture, they, promiſed all to folowe him and to fight vnder his banner: Howbeit the prolonging of time draue Perkin into a ſuſpicion, which wel remẽbred ẏ a comminalty is not accuſtomed ſagely to conſult, but ſodeinly & temerariouſly to ronne hedlyng euer into rebellion & newe ſtirred commocio. Wherefore Perkyn determined not once to ſet foote oute of his ſhip till he ſawe al thing ſure without any ſcruple or ambiguity. And although he minded not to take land him ſelfe, yet he permitted certeine of his ſoldiours to go on land, which perſones being a prety waye frõ their ſhippes, were ſodenly circũuented & compaſſed by the Kentyſhmen, & at one ſtroke vanquiſhed and dryuen backe to their ſhippes, & ther were takẽ priſoners an hundred and .lx. perſons, whereof .v. were named capteins

Mountfoꝛde, Coꝛbet, white belt, quyntine oꝛ otherwise Genyn. Whiche rebelles were bꝛought by sir Jhon Pechy shꝛeue of kēt, to Londō tailed in ropes like hoꝛses dꝛāwyng in a carte. And after vpon their arrayne= ment, confessed their offence, and were executed, some at London & other in the tounes adioynynge to the see coaste. Wherfoꝛe Perkyn failyng of his purpose fled back into Flaundꝛes, and there taried, cōsultyng with his frendes vntill suche tyme as he had better pꝛepared foꝛ thynges to come moꝛe pꝛudently then he had done befoꝛe tyme.

In this very ceason departed to God Cicile Duches of Yoꝛke, mo= ther to kyng Edward ỹ fourth and kyng Richard at her Castel of Bar= kamsted, a woman of small stature, but of muche honour and high pa= rentage, and was buried by her husband in the colledge of Fodꝛingey.

The kyng beyng aduertised ỹ his enemies had made entreaunce into his realme, left of his pꝛogꝛesse & purposed to returne to London again but being certified ỹ next daie after of ỹ lucky spede & foꝛtunate chaūce continued and wēt fooꝛth of his pꝛogresse, sendyng to theim sir Richard Gylforde, bothe to pꝛaise the fidelite & manhoode of the peopꝛe, and also to tendꝛe to theim his most hartie thankes foꝛ their good seruice to him done, with faithful pꝛomes not to foꝛget them hereafter in their sutes, re= questes & peticions. Also that thei might not haue any succesſe hereafter into those partes, the king cōmaunded the watches to be kept all a lōge the see coastes, and bekons to be erected accoꝛding to the auncіēt vsage and custome of the countrey.

Peter and his capiteins takyng coūcel together in Flaundꝛes, were of one assent telolued to this poinct, ỹ there was nothyng moꝛe surer to them then to pꝛocede quickly with al celerite in their incepted enterpꝛice And when they perceiued ỹ there was neither people towne noꝛ coūtrey in England ỹ would associate them in their phantastical frensey which nothyng was mitigated, least ỹ by pꝛotracting of tyme and longe space kyng Henry might foꝛtefie & defend all daungerous places, and passa= ges with soldiours & men of waꝛre, which thinge they hard say ỹ he nei= ther foꝛgat noꝛ foꝛslowed, and beside ỹ he was not a litle aferd ỹ his lōg taryeng should appalle and discōfoꝛt his pꝛeuy frēdes within ỹ realme of England. Wherefoꝛe he gathered together his vngracious cōpany, & determined first to saile into Irelād, there to augmēt his nōbꝛe. And frō thence if yt were possible to saile into ỹ west partes of England. And yf there were any let oꝛ obstacle in that place, then he determined to saile streyght into Scotlād, knowyng ỹ seldome oꝛ neuer is perfight cōcoꝛd and amitie betwene ỹ Scottes and ỹ ēglish naciō. Whē this gentle coū= cel was dissolued, and wind and wether serued, he set vp his sailes, and hauing a pꝛosperous gale after his phātasy, sailed into Irelād, where he repосed him selfe a space. And remēbꝛing ỹ the hope of victoꝛy consisted not whole in ỹ Irish nacion, which beinge naked men without harneis oꝛ armure were not hable to cōbate with the Englishmē, wherfoꝛe when ỹ winde serued hym he departed from Coꝛffe and arrыued in Scptland.

I thinke yt is not vnknowen to you, moost noble kyng and puissaũt prince, into what ruine the stock, house and familie of Edward ỹ fourth of that name kyng of England, is now of late brought to and fallen in, eyther by Goddes permission or by deuine punishment, whose vndubitate sonne (yf you knowe not al ready) I am, & by the power of almighty God preserued alyue to this houre from the mighty hãd of a tyraũt. For my father kyng Edward when he died appointed his brother Richard duke of Gloucester to be our gouernour, protectour & defendor, whome the more ỹ he loued & studied to auaunce and promote, ỹ better he thought ỹ he would loue, fauoure, and tendre his children, But alas my infortunate chaunce I may say, how hath his trust bee turned into treason, and his hope turned to hindreaunce? All men know and I feele. Oure vncle was not the tutoure and preseruer of our stocke and lynage, but the confounder and destroyer of our bloude and progeny. For that tyraunt blinded and glutted with the cupiditie of ruling and souerintie commaunded Edward my brother and me to be slayne and dispatched out of this mortall lyfe. Wherupon that person, to whome the weighty and cruell charge was committed and geuen to oppresse & destroy vs poore innocente enfantes and giltles babes, the more that he abhorred this heinous and bocherly offence the more he feared to cõmyt hit. And so wauering in minde & dubious what to doo, at the lẽgth willyng in parte to saciate the bloudy thrust of the vnnaturall tyraunt, and in parte to absteyne from so facinorous and detestable homicide, destroyed my brother and preserued me, like the good Priest Iosada which saued litle Ioas when all the children of the bloude royall were commaunded by Athalia the quene to be slayne and vtterly destroyed. And farther to thentent that my lyfe might be in a surety, he appointed one to conuey me into some straunge countrey, where when I was furthest of and had moost nede of comfort he forsooke me sodeinly (I think he was so appointed to do) and left me desolate alone without frend or knowledge of any relefe or refuge. And so kynge Richard dyd obteyne the crowne as a pray mischeuously gotten by the dispatching awaye of my brother and me. So that I thus escapinge, by reason of my tendre infancy, forgat almost my self and knewe not wel what I was, but after long wanderyng from countrey to countrey, and frõ citie to citee, I perceaued and learned a litle & litle what was my estate and degree, and so in conclusion came to mine owne aunte the lady Margaret lieng in Flaundres, whiche was somtime maried to Charles duke of Bourgoyne, whiche as ioyfully receaued and welcommed me as yf I had come out of hel into heauen, as the onely type and garland of her noble stirpe and linage but forasmuche as she being onely dowager of the duchy of Burgoine, and hauing nothyng but her dowre propre vnto her self, was not of powre to helpe me wt men & munimẽtes of warre as she woulde gladly haue done for ỹ recouery of my fathers realme & right-full inheritaunce, I therefore am dryuen to seke farther ayde and suc-coure. And therefore by her councel and aduertisement, with this small handfull of men of warre and souldiours, I am repayred to your presence for succours, of whome (as the publike fame is spred ouer ỹ whole worlde) there was neuer man by wrong or iniurie profligated or dryuen out of his countrey, region or inherytaunce, or by extorte powre and ty-canny kept oute of the same as (I my selfe from myne infancy haue ben) whose request was frustrate and repulsed at your hand. Therefore by x the maiestie of youre realme and countreye I desyre, and heartely wyth prayer as I can, I beseche and exhorte you to helpe and releue me now in my extreme necessitie. And yf yt chaunce me by your ayd and succour to recouer and possede my fathers realme & dignitie, not onely I but all the kynges of our lynage which herafter shal obteyne the same, shalbe so muche obliged and bound vnto you, that they muste nedes thynke that doynge to you al the pleasure and benefites that they can, yet with al the thankes ỹ can be geuen, your great kyndnes can neuer be equiualently recompensed.

When he had thus saide, the kyng bad hym be of good comfort, and xx promised hym that whatsoeuer he ware, yt should neuer repent hym of his commynge to hym. And after this the kynge assembled his councell together and demaunded of euerye man seuerallye, what they sayde, of these thinges which perkyn had both enucleated and requyred, or whether they woulde take any farther deliberacion to aduyse theim selues what to do in so great and weyghtie a matter. They that were of greatest experience and of the wisest sorte did proue by many apparaunt ar-gumentes that his sayinges were but dreames and phantesis and of no force or truthe, and therefore they thought it not conuenient to encombre theim selues with any lengre consultacion. Another sort, which was xx not very great neither of wyt nor experiẽce, but greater in nombre, este-med this matter very profitable to the common wealth, considering yt ministred to theim occason to make warre in England. And althoughe thei had knowledge what good successe Perkin had ẽioied in al his former attemptes, yet they ẽstemed that nowe all thinges shoulde succede accordynge to their expectacion, yf his cause (although yt were as lyght as a fether) were assumed and taken in hand to be defended, considering that when the warre was once intimate and begonne, and yf perkyn did preuaile, he would deny nothyng conueniente to his frendes & helpers.
Or elles at ỹ least thei doubted not but kyng Henry would make to thẽ xl large and ample offers & condicions of peace, rather then kynge James shoulde take patte with his aduersary and mortall enemye.

When this councel was geuen by the more nombre, it was wel accepted, and the Scottishe kynge, whether he were blinded by errour, or els dyd dissimule the matter, begaune to haue Perkyn in great honour, and caused hym openly to be called duke of yorke Also, that this mighte be more apparaũt to the people ẏ he was so in dede, he caused lady Katherin daughter to Alexandre erle of Hũtlei, his nigh kinsman & of a high lignage in Scotland, to be espoused to him. And this affinite he caused to be made for this ende & purpose, partly ẏ he might extenuate ẏ euell will & malice which was lyketo succede of this matter, for that it myght be notoryously blasted & knowen abrode ẏ he had peace & ampty with ẏ king of Englãd, & partly least he might be accused of to much light credẽce if Perki were foũd & proued to be another mã thẽ he was reported

When al thynges were prepared, ordred and appoynted for ẏ warre. This Perkyn swellyng with ioye that he after his awne phantasy had made the Scottes to be his partakers. And to thentẽt that they should put no diffidence in the sequele of his enterprice, & to encourage theim ẏ more, he pronounced surely ẏ he should haue great succour & aide of his frendes in England sent euen from ẏ farthest part therof assone as euer the trumpet of warr was blowen. The Scottes although thei had but litle confidence & lesse trust in his wordes yet puttyng their hope more in ẏ gayne of spoyle then in ẏ gaynyng of the victory by bataile, armed them selues in all ẏ hast & matched toward the confines and bordres of England. Albeit ẏ Scottish kynge myndynge not to be rashe, mystrusted ẏ the Englishmen knowing Perkyn to be arryued in Scotlãd had layed some army for ẏ defence of ẏ frontiers, sent out certaine light horsmen to espy & searche if the husbandmen of the country were assembled in armure to defend their enemies. The horsmẽ rangyng ouer ẏ fieldes & playnes belongyng to their enemies, seing all thinges quiet, returned to their kyng and certified him that now was the tyme moost apte & cõuenient to inuade the realme & set on the English nation. Then ẏ Scottysh kyng marching toward England with all his puissaũce, first proclaymed openly, that al such should onely be pardoned that would take part and submit them selfes to Richard duke of yorke, and fight in his cause and quarrell. And to thentent to appalle and daunte the hartes of the poore commons, so that for very feare they shoulde be enforced and cõpelled to submitt them selfes to this new found Mawmet they made so cruell & deadly warre, that not lyke men, whose nature is to be satisfied with ẏ slaughter of men, & to be mercifull to the impotent and sycke persons, brent townes, spoyled houses and killed men and children, and allected with the swetnes of spoyle & prayes, wasted al the countrey of Northumberland, and had gone foorth farther, but that they perceaued no aide or succoure come out of England to attende vpon this new duke. And the souldiers beinge fully laden with blood and spoyle, refused to go one foote farther at that time, & the countrey toase on euery parte which made the kyng suspecte some army to approche. wherfore he determined rather to retourne with his assured gaine, then to tary ẏ nuncupatiue dukes vnsure and vncerteyne victory, and so he reculed againe into Scotland.

culous mercye & foolyshe compassion, by the which Perkyn was so sore moued ỹ it semed hym to regarde nothyng more then the commodite of another man. For whyle ỹ Scottish kyng thus vexed & haryed ỹ poore inhabitauntes on the bordres of Northũbrelãd, so ỹ nothing was hard but toating, weping, and lamentyng. This newe inuented duke beyng returned into Scotland, euen like hym selfe, whiche wrought all thynge with fraud and deceyte, perceauing that no concurse nor resorte of Englishmen shewed them selfes in opẽ apparaunce to ministre to him aide or succour, and fearing not a lytle that the boxe of his crafty dealyng, & bagge of his secrete cõtrefeating should be elucidate & set in an open glasse by reason wherof he should be floccipended and had in cõtempt & disdeigne of the Scottish people, as though he had bene therũto prouoked by a natural inclination and paternal pitie (to thentent to hide and palliate his subtyl subornacion) cried out openly, Oh, my stony & harde frosen harte which arte not once moued nor yet afflicted with ỹ losse and slaughter of so many of thyne awne naturall subiectes & vassales. And at that glorious sighinge, he beseched the Scottysh kyng that frõ thẽce forth, he woulde not afflicte and plage his people, nor deforme and deface his naturall realme and countrey with such terrible fyer flam and hauocke. As who woulde saye, that he beinge ouercome with ỹ perfight loue of his natiue region, beganne nowe to haue compassion and to lament the cruell destruccion of thesame. The Scottysh kynge which began to perceaue whiche way the winde blewe answered him agayne, Sir me thinketh you take much peyne, and very much imagen howe to preserue the realme of another prince which is not youres (but I think you would gladly haue it) but my mind geueth me that you be as farre from the obteynynge the same, as you be nere the soyle and aspect of the countrey, considerynge that you cal England your land and realme and thinhabitauntes thetof your people and subiectes, and yet not one mã, neither gentleman nor yoman will once shewe hym selfe to ayde or assist you in ỹ warr begonne for your cause & in your name within your realme to which you be both (as you say) inheritoure, and by youre people accercited and called vnto. And so the kynge reproued ỹ lightnes of this young foundelyng, & euery day more & more neglected and lesse phãtesied & gaue credite to him, ỹ neither his woordes, with his dedes, nor the sequele of hys factes with his promises were agreable nor consonant.

The nobles inhabitinge in the northe partes herynge the clamour of the common people, and perceauing that they fled to auoyde ỹ crueltye of ỹ Scottes were sodeynly abashed, fortified their holds and manned their fortresses ready to defend their enemies, laying enbushmentes in ỹ wales, where they imagened ỹ thyr enemyes would resort. And without delay certified the kyng of Scottes of the inuasion and enterprice. The kyng was not a lytle abashed at this sodeyne chaũce, & pricked also with his awn domestical busines, not alõli fearig his outward enemies but also his awne nobles & naturall subiectes least any of theim woulde steppe from him to the other parte, and put him to farther trouble & vexacion. Wherfore assone as he heard these newes, considering the matter to be of no smal importaunce and mete to be vigilantly forsene, with all diligence prepared opportune remedies to resist and withstand ỹ firste brunt of so greate a sourge newely begonne. But the sodeine retreyte of the Scottes agayne asswaged all the Englishe mennes swift acceleracions and spedy prouisions: For when thei were once laden with praies and spoyles, they returned home agayne or thenglishmen coulde assemble together.

When the king was truly certified ỹ the Scottishe kynge was returned, he geuing preise to his capteines and other inhabiting on the bordures of his realme, which had duly & truly serued him at ỹ time, did desist & leaue of for to occurre & repugne ỹ malicious inuasiõs of ỹ Scottishe king. And yet fearing least his enemies should be écouraged & inflated with this great gaine of spoiles & praies, he determined by dent of sworde and mortall warre to reuenge and reforme the manyfest iniurie and apparaunt wrong to him by kyng James and his peoplé done and committed. Wherefore he assemblinge his court of parliament, declared the cause of the instant warre, and what remedy he hym selfe had inuented and deuised, perswading with many strong argumẽtes and reasons inuincible, that it should be for the profit and vtilite of the publique and common wealth to prosecute and folow the warre by his mortall enemies begonne and attempted. To this opinion all his nobilitee (which were no lesse offended wt this proud brag of the Scottish nacion then he him selfe) dyd willingly agree and gladly assent, And to the maintenaunce of the warre and toward the charges of thesame, a certaine subsedy and taxe of money was with one assẽt by the whole parliament liberally and frely geuen and graunted: Which payment although it was but calye and small yet manye of thee common people whiche euer abhorre suche taxes and exaccions, grudged sore to paye the same.

At this parliament also and conuocatiõ ther was certeine lawes, acts and statutes confirmed and made, as were thought moost necessary and expedient for the publique weale of the realme. And thus the kynge dissoluing his court of parliament, prepared for warre out of hãd. In this meane season the kynge of Scottes not sleping hys matters because he perceaued well that the Englyshemen woulde shortely reuenge theyr losse and harme, with no lesse diligence gathered an hoost and puyssante army, that either he might withstand and resist the English powre inuadyng his realme and countrey, or els of freshe entre vppon the bordres: and goyng forth, spoyle robbe and make hauoke agayne. And so these

twoo valiaunt pzinces mynded nothing lesse the one to hurt and pzeiudice the other. But the kyng of England sozе pzicked and woũded with the iniurie to him committed, was so sozе moued against the Scottysh kyng, that he would not pzocrastinate noz deferre one houre tyl he were reuenged, And so pzepared a puissaunt and bigozious army to inuade Scotland, and thereof ozdeyned foz cheuetaine Giles lozd Dawbeney hys chiefe chamberleyne, a man of no lesse wytt then pollecy & of no lesse pollecy then hardines.

When the lozd Dawbeney had his army assembled together and was in his iourney fozward into Scotlande, he sodeinly was stayed and reuoked agayne, by reason of a new sedicion and tumult begonne within the realme of England foz the subsedy whiche was graunted at the last parliament foz the defence of the Scottes with all diligence and celeritee, whiche of the mooste parte was truly satisfied and payde. But the Cozнishmen inhabityng the leaste parte of the realme, and the same sterile and without all fecunditee, compleyned and grudged greatly, affirmyng that they were not hable to paye suche a greate somme as was of theim demaunded. And so what with angre, and what with sozowe, forgettynge their due obeysaunce, beganne temeratiously to speake of the kyng him selfe. And after leuyng ỹ matter, lamentyng, yellyng & crieng malitiously, sayd that the kinges coũsaile was the cause of this polling and shauing And so being in this rage menaced to deathe the aucthoures (as thei imagined) of this mischiefe and sozowe, whome thei threatened shoztely to dispatche oute of this wozlde. And so beyng in aroaze. ij. of the same affinitee, the one called Thomas Flamock gentlemã, lerned in the lawes of the realme, and theother Wighell Joseph a smyth, mẽ of high courages & stoute stomackes, toke vpon theim to be capteines of this vngracious flocke and sedicious company. And although thei perceued their cõpany to be accẽsed & inflamed with fury & malice ynough, yet to augmẽt & encrease their madnes, thei cast oyle & pitche into a fyze & ceased not to prouoke & pzick them fozward like frantique persons to moze mischiefe cryenge out openly & pzonouncynge ỹ it was shame (foz a smal cõmocion made of ỹ Scottes, which was asswaged & ended in a moment, foz they thought pooze foliche and ignoraunt fooles, ỹ al thinges was ended and asswaged whẽ it was euẽ at the whotteste & moste ferуent) thei should be exacted and polled, and suche great exaccions laied vpon their necks, and especially on ỹ Cozнishmen, which they affirmed to bee but pooze men, and being in a sterile & vnfruitefull countrey gate their liuing hardly by mining and digging tynne and mettall out of the grounde bothe day and night labouring and turmoylyng. And therefoze they had rather dye and suffre extreme punyshment, then lyue in suche calamite and wzetchednes, And they layed the faulte and cause of this exaction to Jhon Moxton Archebyshop of Cauntourbury, and Sir Reignold Bzey, because they weze chiefe of the kinges pzuey coũsail. Such rewardes haue thei that be in gzeat aucthozite with kings & pzynces. Foz yf any thinge succede well accozdynge to ỹ mynd and pleasure of the comminalty, that is euer refezred and gratified to the king oz gouernour. But contrariwise, yf any thing be done, either by chaune oz by councell that soundeth not well in their eares, oz is contrary to their opinion oz fantesy they will laye it streyght to the councell sayenge that they haue perswaded him to do this and ỹ. Therefoze if all men woulde well remembze and diligently pondze in theiz myndes what is the reward and guerdon, fewe would labour and affecteously desire to moũte so high, oz aspire to that place of dygnite. But now to the matter.

These capiteines exhozted the commõ people to put on harneys, and not to be afeard to followe them in this quarrell, pzomising theim that they should do no damage to any creature, but onely to se ponyshement and cozrection done to suche persons which were ỹ aucthozs & causers that the people were molested and vexed with such vnreasonable exactions, and demaundes. And if thei perceaued any person (as they espied many in dede) which dyd impugne and repzoue their mad, vnreasonable and sedicious councell, affirming that it was the highest poinct of madnes foz a mã to put his life in hassard foz that thing, which he ought mekely and humbly to requyre and desyze of his pzince and souereigne lozde, then they called theim dastardes, fooles, & cowardes, & taunted & rebuked theim with most shamefull reproches, and cõtumelious inuections. So these vnhappy capiteynes nothyng moze desired then to bzing their flock and them selues to small perdicion and vttre cõfusion. With these bzagges and mociõs a great part of the people were eleuate and encouraged, and condiscended to do as the capiteines and ỹ moost multitude would agre and appoinct. Then the capiteines pzaysinge muche the hardines of the people, when al thinges were pzepared mete foz their vnfoztunate iourney, set fozward with their army, and came to Tawnton, where they slewe the pzouost of peryn which was one of the commissioners of the subsedy, and from thence came to welles, and so entending to go to London where the kyng then soiourned.

When the king was aduertised by his collectours, and officers, of all these doinges, and atemptes, he was meruelously astõned and especially because at that one time he was ẽuironed with double warre, both externe and intestine. And because perell dyd depende on bothe, he was in great doubte which of both he should moost regard. And as he was musing of this matter, he was asserteyned that James Twichet lozd Awdeley and diuers other of the nobilitie were associate with the Coznishemen, and were in great hast and no good spede marching towarde London. The kyng perceauing the cyuyle warze to appzoche and draw pl nerer and nerer, almost to his very gates, determined with al his whole powre to resist and repzesse the same. And after that tumult appesed and suppeditate, he would with al expediciõ set vpõ Scotlãd. Wherfoze he reuoked agayn the lozd Dawbeney which as you haue hard. was with a puyssaunt army goyng into Scotland, whose army he encreased and multiplimultiplied with many picked and freshe warriers, that he might ẏ better, and with lesse laboure ouercome these rebelles. Also mistrustinge that the Scottes myght nowe (hauyng good opportunitie seing hym troubled with this ciuile discorde) inuade the realme agayne, and so spoyle, robbe, violate, and distroy the borderers, he appoynted the lord Thomas Hawarde Earle of Surrey a puissaunt and polletyke capiteyne (whiche was taken prisoner at the ouerthrowe of kyng Richarde as you haue heard, and after set at liberte, and within two yeeres next after was made highe treasourer of Englande after the deathe of Jhon Lorde Dinham) to gather a bonde of men in the Countie Palantine of Durham, and they with the ayde and helpe of the enhabitauntes adioinynge and the borderers, to driue out and expell the Scottes from of ẏ borders yf they should fortune agayne to inuade, vntyl such time ẏt he Cornyshemen beyng subdued and pacefied (whiche he thought easy to be done) he might send to theim the forsayde lorde Dawbeney agaīn wᵗ all his powre & army. When the nobles of the Realme hard of this tumulteous busines & terrible cōmocion, they came to London euery mā with as many mē of warre as thei could put in aredynes to aide ẏ king yf nede should be: In the which company, there was the erle of Essex, the lord Mongey with diuerse other.

At this tyme and season, Charles the French kyng returnynge from ẏ warres ẏ he had at Naples, sent ambassadoures to enforme the king of the prosperous successe and victorye that he had obteyned in Italye, and gaue to theim in charge to desyre of the kyng of England nothing so much as the continuaunce of his amitie and fauoure toward theyr master and souereigne lord. For the Frenche kyng sore desyred to continue in perfight peace & amitī with the king of England. And not without a cause, for he had so vexed and combred him selfe & his people with suche Italian snares & crafty engines out of ẏ which at this day being the yere of our lord a thousand. v. C. xliii. hys successors cannot cleane be ryd, and deliuered

When the king was enformed ẏ king Charles orators were come to Calys, he sent certeine of his nobilitie, honorably to receaue theim, & so to cōueigh theim to Douer, & there for a pollecy to make their abode tyl the rebellion were extinct and suppressed, and not one worde thereof to be founded in the eares of the Ambassadours: which commaundement was circumspectely kepte and obserued.

And now the Cornishmen departyng frō Welles (where thei receaued their chiefe capiteine, James lord Audleigh) went to Salsburye, & from thence to Winchester, and so to Kent, where they loked for helpe, but thei were deceaued in their expectacion, For the erle of Kent, George lord of Burgeiny, Jhon brooke lord Cobham, Sir Edward pownynges, Sir Richard Guldeforde, Sir Thomas Burchier, Jhon Peche, Willyam Scott & a great nombre of people were not only prest and ready to defende the countrey from all mischiefe and destruction, but also bent and

determined to fight and combate with suche as would not be obedient to their natural souereigne lord, and to his lawes and preceptes. Also ỹ kentysh men them selues, partely remembryng that other commocions haue bene to their dammage and great hindrcaunce, and partely beyng vnder the defence of their nobilitie, as vnder the Ertle and other, would not so much as come nere to the rebeles, nor yet either make coũtenaũce or once speake to any of theim, to thintent that the kynge shoulde in no wise conceaue any poynct of vntruth or treason in the poorest of theim. Whiche thynge so appalled and dismayed the hartes and courages of many of the brute and rurall Cornishmen (whiche seinge theim selues deceaued and defrauded of their chiefe hope and succours, and fearing the euell chaunce that might happen to them) that thei to saue them selfes fled preuely in the night from their awne company and cõpaniõs. The captaynes of the rebelles perceauing they coulde haue no aide of ỹ Kentish people, putting their only hope to their awne powre and fortitude (for surely they were men of great strength, & of no lesse force then valiaunt courage) brought them to Black hethe. iiij. myles frõ Londõ, and there in a playne vppon the top of an hill they ordred their battailes eyther ready to fight with the kyng if he woulde assayle theim, or elles, to assaulte and beate the Citie of London: For they thought verely ỹ the king was so affraied of their puissaunce, ỹ he minded nothing lesse then to encountre with their armie. And therefore being enflamed with arrogancy, nothyng mistrustinge, but firmely beleuinge ỹ the victory was sure in their handes, they determined to entre into the citie of London and to assaute the towre wherin the king (as thei thought) had preuely enclosed hym selfe. But kynge Henry wrought cleane contrary to their mynde and expectacion, for he neuer thought to geue theim battayle tyll he had theim farre from their domesticall habitacions and natiue region, so that they should be out of all hope of ayde and comforte. And when they were with their long and tedious iourney wearied and tyred, and that their furye were sumwhat asswaged and fell to repentaunce of their mad commocion and frantike progressiõ, thẽ he woulde in some place cõuenient for his purpose, circumuent and enuyron them to his auauntage and their destruccion as he did in dede afterward. In the meane season there was great feare through the citiee & cryes were made, euery man to harneys, to harneis, some ranne to the gates, other mounted on the walles, so that no parte was vndefended, and cõtinual watche was kept by the magistrates of the citie least the rebelles being poore and nedy woulde dissend from theyre campe and inuade the cytee and spoyle, and robb the riches and substaunce of the marchaũtes. But ỹ the kyng deliuered and purged their hartes out of this feare, for after ỹ he perceiued that the Cornishmen were all the day ready to fyghte and that vpon the hill, he sent streight Jhon Ertle of Oxforde, Henry Burchier Ertle of Essex, Edmond de la Poole Earle of Suffolke, and sir Ryes app Thomas, and sir Homfrey Stanley noble warryers with a great company of archers and horsmen to enuyron the hill on the right syde & on the left, to thentent that all bywaies beyng stopped and forclosed, all hope of flight should be take from theim: And incontinent, he being as well encouraged with manly stomake and delire to fyght as furnished with a populous army and copie of artillery, set forward out of the cytie and encamped him selfe in Sainct Georges felde, where he the fryday at nyght then lodged.

On the saturday in the morning, he sent the Lord Dawbeney with a great compauye to set on theim earely in the morenyng, whiche fyrst x gate the brydge at Detforde Strande whiche was manfully defended by certeyne archers of the rebelles, whose arowes as is reported were in length a full yarde. Whyle the erles set on theim on euery syde, the lorde Dawbeney came into the fielde with his company, & without long fighting the Cornyshmen were ouercome, but first they toke the lord Dawbeney prisoner, and whether it were for feare or for hope of fauoure, thei let him go at libzety without any hurt or detriment. There were slayn of the rebelles which fought and resisted .ii. thousand men and mo and taken prisoners an infinite nombre, and emongest theim the black smith & chiefe capiteins whiche shortely after were put to death. This Myghell xx Joseph, surnamed the black smyth one of the capiteins of this donge hil and draffe sacked ruffians, was of such stoute stomake & haut courage, that at thesame tyme that he was drawen on ỹ herdle toward his death, he said (as men do reporte) that for this mischeuous & facinerous act, he should haue a name perpetuall and a faine permanent & immortal. So (you may perceaue) that desire and ambicious cupidite of vaine glory & fame, enflameth, and encourageth aswell poore & meane persones, as the hartes of great lordes and puisaunt princes to trauaile & aspire to the same. Some affirme that the kyng appointed to fight with the rebelles on the Monday, and anticipating the tyme by pollecy set on theim vpon xx the Saturday before, being vnprouided and in no arraye of battayle, & so by that pollecy obteyned the fielde and victory.

When this battayle was ended, the kyng wanted but .iii. C. of all his company that were slayne at that presente conflicte. Also the capiteines apprehended & taken he pardoned, sauing the chief capiteines and first aucthors of that mischiefe, to whome he would neyther shewe mercy nor lenity. For he caused the lord Audeleigh to be drawen from Newgate to the Towre hil in a cote of his awne armes peinted vpon paper, reuersed and al to torne, & there to be behedded ỹ .xxviii. day of Juyn. And Thomas Flamock and Myghell Joseph he commaunded after the fassiõ of xl treytours to be drawen, hãged and quartred, & their quarters to be pytched on stakes & set vp in diuerse places of Cornewale, ỹ their sore punishmentes and terryble executions for their treytorous attemptes and foolysh hardy entrepzices, might be a warning for other herafter to abstreyne from committing like crime & offence. But because he was certified that their countrey men beyng at home in Cornewale were by this skourge litle molefied or quieted, & were ready to moue againe and begynne newe commocions and conspiracies, yf any vngracious or euell mynded person would either moue or pricke theim forwarde, he turned his purpose and caused theim to be set vp in London and other places, least that by suche meanes he should wrappe him self in more trouble at that tyme when he went about with all his witt and councell to represse and assuage all domestical and ciuyle sedicion, to thentent that he might the more seriously and intentykely set forward a puissaunt army against the braggyng and vnfaithfull Scottes, being content at that time, that fortune had so smyled on his syde.

While this busines was thus handled in England, the kyng of Scottes beyng certefied of it by his espialles, and that there was none army reised in England either to withstād his powre or destroye his countrey, and hearyng also that kyng Henry and his nobles were vexed and sore troubled with the commocion of the Cornyshemen, and in a cyuile discorde and dissencion emongest them selfes: Wherfore he thought it necessary too anticipate the warre before hand. For wel he knewe that assone as kyng Henry had subdued and ouerturned his aduersaries, that he would with his whole puissaunce inuade his realme and dominions: And therfore he inuaded the frountiers of the realme of England wastyng the countrey, burnyng the tounes and murtheryng the people, sparing neyther place nor person. And while his light horsemen were rydyng to forrage and destroye the bysshoprike of Durham and there burned all about, he with an other company went about to expugne and assaute the castel of Norham standyng on the ryuer of Twede, whiche deuideth England & Scotland. The bysshop of Durham whiche at that tyme was Richard Fore, had well furnysshed it both with men and munitions, bigilantly forseyng and imagening that the Scottish kyng (assone as he knewe that there was cyuile discorde and vnnaturall warre moued within the realme of England) would with al his powre inuade and harry the borders and countreies adioinyng to his land. This Richard Fore was before called bysshop of Excetter, and for his synguler vertues and great grauitie was after that made bysshop of Bathe and Welles, and last of all promoted and exalted to the bysshoprick of Durham.

The bysshop from time to time aduertised the kyng of al thinges that there chaunced (which then was at Londō) and sent in al post hast to the Erle of Surrey to come to reskewe, whiche was then in Yorkeshire and had collected a great army and a warlyke compaigny. When the Erle heard of these newes, he perceauing that all thinges were not voide of ieopardy, made no long tarryng, but with al diligence marched forward and after him folowed other noble men out of al quarters of the North. euery one bryngyng as many as they coulde gather for the defence of their

with many other well proued and warlike men, whiche although in degree they were not peregall with these great lordes and knyghtes, yet in manhoode and policies of warre and valiaunt courage, they were to theim in all feactes equiualent. The nôbre was litle lesse then. xx. thousand men, besyde the naure, wherof the lord Brooke was Admyrall.

When the Scoctes had dyuerse dayes assauted and beaten the Castell of Norham to the no lytle detryment and dammage therof, and coulde make no battye to entre into thesame, they determyned of their awne mynde to reyse their siege and returne, and that somuche the sonet because they hearde saye that the Earle of Surrey was within. ii. daies iourney of theim with a great puisaũce. Wherfore king Jamy thought it to small purpose to tary any lenger in besegyng the castell, reysed his siege and returned into his awn realme: When the Earle knewe of the kynges retourne, he folowed after with all hast possible, trustyng surely to ouertake him and to geue him battayle.

When the Erle was entred Scotland, he prostrated and defaced the castell of Cawdrestenes. The towre of hetenhall, The towre of Edyngton, The towre of Fuloẽ: and he sent Norrey kyng at armes to the captayne of Hayton Castel, whiche was one of the strongest places betwene Barwyke and Edynborough to delyuer him the castell, which he denied to do, affirming that he was sure of spedy succours and swifte aide. The erle perceauing the deniall, layed his ordinaunce to the castell, and contynually bet it from two of the clocke till. v. at nyght, in suche wyse that they within rẽdred vp the fortresse, their liues only saued. And when the erle had receaued the Scottes he with his miners rased and ouerthrewe the castell to the playne grounde. The Scottyshe kynge was within a mile of the siege, and bothe knewe it and sawe the smoke and yet would not once set a foote forwarde to saue or reskewe his castel. And while the Erle laye at Hayton, the kyng of Scottes sent to hym Marchemount a nother herauld, desiring him at his election either to fight with whole puissaunce against puissaunce, or els they .ii. to fyght person to person & hand to hand, requiring that if the victory should falle to the Scottishe kyng, that then the erle should deliuer for his raũsome the toune of Berwyke, with the Fyshegarthes of thesame. The erle ioyously, like a courageous capteine receaued this message and made aunswere, that he was ready in the playne fielde to abide the battayle with his whole army, prayeng him to come forwarde with his puissaunce, & after that he thanked him hartely of the honoure that he offred him, for surely he thought him selfe muche honoured that so noble a Prince would vouchesaue to admit so poore an erle to fight with him body to body, assertaining hym ferther, that the toune of Berwike was the kyng his masters & not his ỹ which he neither ought nor would laye to pledge nor gage without the kinges assent, but he would put his body in pledge which was more precious to him then all ỹ tounes of ỹ world, promising on his honour that if he toke the kyng prysoner in the singuler cõbate, that he would release to him all his part of his fyne & raunsome, & if it chaunced the kyng to vanquisshe & apprehende him, he would pay gladly such a raunsome as was mete & conuenient for the degre of an erle. And when he had rewarded & dismissed the heraulides, he let his army in a redines abydyng the comming of the kyng of Scottes & so stode all daye. But the Scottysh kyng not regarding his offres, nor performing his crakes and boastes, being afrated to cope with the English nacion, shamefully and sodeynly fled in the night ceasõ with al his powre & cõpany. When the erle knew that the kyng was reculed, & had bene in Scotland. vi. or .vii. daies beyng daily & nightly vexed with continual winde & vnmeasurable reyne, coulde not cause his people to continue in that tempestious vnfertile & barayne region, with good aduyse retreated again with his whole army to the toune of Berwyke, & there dispersed his army euery man into his countrey tarryng there him selfe til he knewe the pleasure of the kyng in furthering or protractyng the warres of Scotlande: But in the meane ceason one Peter Hyalas, a man of no lesse learning then prudent wit & pregnãt pollecy, was sent Ambassadour frõ Ferdinand kyng of Speyne vnto the kyng of Scottes to moue and entreate a peace & an vnitie to be had betwene hym & the kyng of England. For of kyng Ferdinand and Elizabeth his wyfe (to whiche woman none other was comparable in her tyme) there was nothing more desyred nor wyshed then by the cõiunction of mariage betwene Arthure prynce of Wales heyre apparaũt to kyng Henry, and lady Katheryn the daughter of kyng Ferdinand & quene Elyzabeth a newe affinite and alliaunce might be knit and begõne betwene the realme of England and countrey of Speyne. And also he fauoured somewhat the kyng of Scottes, for which cause he offred him selfe as a meane and mediatour of a peace betwene bothe the prynces, their territoires and dominions.

This Peter Hyalas sollicited and moued by all honest meanes & deuyces kyng James to assent to a vnite & concorde, and when with long soliciting he conceaued some good hope to growe in his weighty busynes, he wrote vnto the kyng of Englãd, that it would please him to send one of his nobilitie or councell to be associate with him in concluding w the Scottish kyng. The kyng of England which euer (so it were not to his dishonour, hurte or detriment) was not onely a louer of peace, but also a notysher and a furtherer of amity and quietnes, & specially at thys time when he was vexed with the ciuile seditiõ of his awne proper shepe and flocke, committed the charge of the weighty matter to Rychard Fox byshop of Durham, whiche laye on Thenglysh borders in his Castell x of Norham. The byshop according to the kynges appointmẽt went honorably into Scotlãd, where he and Peter Hyalas at the toune of Jed-worth reasoned with the Scottish commissioners as concernyng thys peace to be had. Sixe hundred cõdicions were purposed on the one part and theother, but after long protracting of time & muche debating & arguing, not one was accepted nor allowed, And one thing aboue all other dashed the whole treatie : For kyng Henry instantly required to haue Perkyn Warbeck the fountayne & chiefe cause of all this tumult & vn-quietnes, the perturber of him and his whole realme : But the kyng of Scottes fermely denied to consent to any article that might sounde to xx his reproche or dishonoure. And also he now began to smell and sauour the iuggeling & false coũtrefeating of his new gest Perkyn Warbeck.

Yet because that Perkyn was alied to him by the holy sacramẽt of matrymony, he thought it both vnhonest, vnreasonable & vnnatural to betrey his alye & deliuer him to death & confusion. Wherfore when they had reasoned that matter & diuerse other vrgent & weighty causes by di uerse daies of meting & that for the cõtrarietie of opiniõs, no ferme peace could be concluded. In steade of peace, a truce was concluded for cer-teyne yeres vpon condicion that James kyng of Scottes should cõuey Perkyn Warbeck out of his realme, seignyories and dominions.

While these thinges were reasoned & at ỹ last cõcluded in the cõfines xxx of England & Scotlãd, kyng Henry caused ỹ ambassadours of ỹ frẽch kyng to be brought to his presẽce, & he them receaued with al benignite which as it is shewed before were stopped at Douer of their iourney vntyll such time ỹ the insurreccion of the Cornish men were suppressed and extinguished. And with like entreteinement he embraced at ỹ very ceasõ the lord of Camphire & other Orators of Philip archeduke of Austrich & duke of Burgoyne, cõming to him for the conclusion & cõtinuaunce of an amitie, & to haue the English marchaũtes to resorte to their countrey againe, which frõ thence before were prohibited & forbidden. Which xl request being verie agreable to the quietnes & tranquilite of his realme.
& especially at ỹ time, he did fauourably graunt & beningly assent vnto.
And so beyng confederate & alied by treatie & league with al his neighbours marching on euery side of his realme & regions, he gratefied with his most harty thãkes kyng Ferdinand and the quene his wife, for that they were the mediators, organes & instrumentes by the which the truce was concluded betwene the Scottish kyng and him, and rewarded Peter the Ambassadoure moost liberally and bountefully.

The Englysh marchauntes receaued into Andwarp wt generall procession.

So the Enshlishmen resorted again into the Archedukes dominions and were receaued into Andwarp with generall procession, so glad was the toune of their returnyng, whiche was by their absence sore hyndered and empouerysshed at the tyme that this vnitie and concorde was made, whiche was the yere of our lord a thousand. iiii. C. lxxxviii. and the. xii yere of kyng Henryes reigne.

James the kynge of Scottes seyng that he nowe perceaued howe he was by Perkyn manifestly deluded, accordyng as he had faithfully promised, so he nowe duly performed it. For he callyng to his presence the forsayed Perkyn Warbecke, declaryng to hym what benefites & cõmodities he had receaued of his princely liberalitie & gentlenes, gently requiring him to depart out of the realme into some other countrey where he might make his abode more surely and more quietly, vntil such tyme as fortune would prouide a more prosperous winde to set forwarde the sailes of his purpose & desire, declaring vnto him that he cõpelled in maner by necessite had cõcluded a league & cõcord with ẏ king of Englãd, and by ẏ treatie, the refuge that he should haue had of him & his coũtrey was not only to him prohibited and forbidden, but also it was agreed & condiscended that neyther the kyng of Scottes, nor any by his procurement or in his name should make warre on the kyng of England, which warre he gladly tooke in hand for Perkins sake, hauing sure confidence and perfight trust to haue bene aided & assisted with Perkins frendes in Englãd. But when he perceaued ẏ al was in vaine & ẏ al his wordes were but wynd, he exhorted him not to be displeased to departe, least hys tarying might be to him a detriment & a breaking of the treatie betwene hym & kyng Henry lately concluded, wherfore with many fayre wordes he desyred hym to departe. This Perkyn knowyng the kynges pleasure was very sore amased, seyng there was no helpe to be loked for hereafter in Scotland. Albeit remẽbryng the great benefites which he had receaued hertofore of the Scottish kyng, which he thought him self neuer hable to requite and deserue, that he might not seme to hym ingrate or not wyllyng to folowe his desyre, he was content at his intercession to departe. And shortly after sayled into Irelãd with his wife & family, there determining with him selfe either to sayle into Flaũders to ẏ duches of Burgoyne, or to ioyne and take parte with the Cornyshmen. But howe so euer it was, while he laye in Ireland doubtyng what to do, he had intelligence by certeyn messengers that the Cornyshmen for al their discomfiture and plague not to be appeased, but sore to grudge and murmoure against kynge Henry, and that they were prone and ready to renue the warre agayne the kynge and the prynce: Where he not entendyng to forsake so fayre an occasion so manifestly offred, he hauing with hym. iiii. small shippes & not aboue. vi. skore men, sayled into Cornewale and there landed in the moneth of September and came to a toune called led Bodman, and there dyd so sollicite, prouoke and stirre the mutable & wauerynge people, what with fayre wooꝛdes and large pꝛemises that he gathered to hym aboue thꝛe thousand persones whiche immediatly called hym their capiteyne, and sayed that they would take his part and folowe hym to the death, and in all thynges obey his pꝛeceptes and commaundementes.

Then Perkyn was well encouraged and made pꝛoclamacions in the name of kyng Richard the. iiii. as sonne to king Edward that last died. And by the aduise of his. iii. councellers, Jhon Heron mercer a banquerupt, Richard Scelton a tayler, and Jhon Asteley a Skreuener, men of moꝛe dishonestie then of honest estimacion, determined fyꝛst of all to assaulte and beate all walled and stronge townes and foꝛtresses, and theim to receaue into his possession and seignyoꝛie foꝛ his farther securite and defence: And that entrepꝛyce acheued, then he woulde augment his hoost and marche foꝛwarde against all persones that durst once ofꝛe theim selfes to withstand hym.

When he and his impꝛudent counsayll were fully resolued on this poincte and conclusion, they in good oꝛdꝛe went streyght to Excetter, whiche was the next cytie that he coulde appꝛoche to and beseged it, and because he lacked oꝛdinaũce to make a battry to rase & deface the walles he studied all the weyes possible howe to bꝛeake and infringe the gates, and what with casting of stones, heuyng with yꝛon barres & kyndelyng of fier vnder the gates, he omitted nothing that could be deuysed foꝛ the furtheraũce of his vngracious purpose. The cytezens perceauing their toune to be enuyꝛonned with enemies and lyke to be enflamed, began at the first to be soꝛe abashed, and let certeyne messengers by coꝛdes downe ouer the walle whiche should certefie the kyng of all their necessitie and trouble. But after that takyng to theim lusty hartes and manly courages they determined to repulse fier by fier, and caused faggottes to bee bꝛough to the inward part of the poꝛtes and posternes and set theim all on fier, to to thentent that the fyer being enflamed on bothe the sydes of the gates, might aswell exclude their enemies from enteryng, as include the cytezens from ronnyng oꝛ flyng out, and that they in the meane ceason myght make trenches and rampayꝛes to defende their enemies in stede of gates and Bulwerkes. Thus all the doinges and attemptes of the rebellious people had euell succesſe in their first entrepꝛice: And thus by fier the cytie was pꝛeserued from flame and burnyng. Then Perkyn beyng of very necessite compelled to leaue the gates, assaulted the toune in diuerse weake and vnfoꝛtefied places, and set vp ladders, attemptyng to clyme ouer the walles and to take the citie, thynkyng suerly to cõpell the cytezens either by feare oꝛ lacke of succoure to rendꝛe theim selfes & yelde the toune. But the cytezens nothyng so mynded, so courageously lyke valeaunt champions defended the walles, that they slewe aboue. ii C. of his seditious souldiours at this assaute.

Assone as the messengers of Excetter came to the kynges pꝛesence and shewed their instruccions, he hasted with his host toward Excetter with asmuch hast as the grauitie of the cause did require & expostulate. And sent the lord Dawbeney with light horsmen before to certefie all men of his comming at hand. But in the meane season lorde Edward Corteney erle of deuoushire & lord William his sonne, a man of great force & valiantnes, accompanied with Sir Edmond Carewe, sir Thomas Trenchard, sir William Courteney, sir Thomas Fulford, sir Jhon Halewel, sir Jhō Croker, Water Courteney, Peter Egecōbe, Williā Sētuaure, with all spede came into the cytie of Excetter and holpe the citezens, and at the last assaute the Erle was hurte in the arme with an arowe, and so ꝑ were many of his company, but very fewe slayne.

When Perkyn with his lewde capiteynes sawe ẏ the citie of Excetter was so well fortefied bothe with men and municiōs, and of theim in maner unpregnable, fearyng the sequele of this matter, departed frome Excetter with his lowsy army to the next great toune called Tawnton, and there the.xx. daye of September he mustered his men as though he were redy to fyght, but his nōber was sore minished. For when the poore and nedy people sawe the great defence whiche was made at Excetter, & that no men of honour nor yet of honestie drewe to hym, contrary to the promes and assuraunce made by hym and his coūcelers to theim at the ꝑ begynnyng, they with drewe theim selfes by sondry secret compaygnies from him, in prouiding their awne sauegarde. Which thinge when Perkyn perceaued, he put small trust and lesse confidence in the remnant of his army as afterward dyd appere, because the mooste parte of his souldioures were harnessed on the right arme and naked all the body, and neuer exercised in warre nor marcial feates but only with the spade and shouyll.

When the kyng hearde he was gone to Tawnton, he hastened after him with al spede. Thether came to the king, Edward duke of Buckyngham, a younge prynce of a great courage and of a synguler good witt, ꝑ and hym folowed a great compaignie of noble men, knyghtes & Esquyers, prepared and redy with all thynges necessary for the fielde and battayle. Emongest which nomber was sir Alexāder Baynam, Sir Mawrice Berkeley, Sir Robert Tame, Sir Jhon Guyse, Sir Robert Poyntz, sir Hēry Uernon, Sir Jhon Mortymer, Sir Thomas Tremayle, Sir Edward Sutton, Sir Amise Pawlett, Sir Jhon Byckenell, Sir Jhon Sapcotes, Sir Hugh Lutterell, Sir Fraunces Cheyney, and many other knyghtes, esquyers and valiaunte personages. When the kynge approched nere to the toune of Tawnton, whether he woulde not deferre and put of the battayle, or whether he doubtynge the turne ꝑ of fortunes whele, sent before hym Robert lorde Brooke lorde Stuarde of his house, Gyles lorde Dawbeney his chiefe Chambetlayn, and Sir Rice app Thomas, to set on his enemies and begynne the battayle, & he with his powre folowed, to thentent that when the armies couped & ioyned together, he either should with newe succours refresh his awn army or els or elles set on the backe of his enemies or they coulde espie hym. Albeyt the kyng had no great nede to vse suche pollecy yt he had knowen what sequele had ensued. For assone as Perkyn was enformed ỹ his enemies were ready to geue him battayle, he that nothynge lesse mynded then to fight in open feld with the kinges puissaunce, dissimuled al the day time with his cõpany, as though nothing could make him afeard, and about mydnyght being accompanied with .ix. horsmen departed frõ Tauntõ in poste to a sanctuary towne belyde Southhamton called Beaudeley, & there he & Jhon Heron & other registred them selues as persones pri- uileged. But whether Perkyn dyd this for feare, least his men shoulde forsake hym, or for the cowardnes of his awne tymorous courage, it is asmuch uncerteyne, as it is probable & sure that the kyng tooke by his flight greate commoditie & quietnes, by reason ỹ he was not enforced to fighte with the Cornishmen, whose hartes & courages were so encreased & enflamed by deadly desperacion that they ernestly determined & were stedfastly bent either to winne victory & ouercome their enemies or els not one of theim all to lyue any daye or houre lenger.

When kyng Henry knewe ỹ Perkyn was fled & departed, he sent after him ỹ lord Dawbeny with .v.C. horsemẽ toward the see side to intercept him before he should come there. But Perkin whom ỹ matter touched at ỹ quick, made such hast with ỹ swiftnes of his horse & sharpnes of his spurres that he was so far passed on his way before, ỹ no person could tell tydynges of him, before he regestred and disclosed hym selfe in the sanctuarye. But his chiefe Capiteines which fled, could not so craftely escape, for the mooste parte of theim were apprehended, and as captiues and wretches, miserably presented to the kynge. When the residewe of the common people could neyther see Perkyn nor yet the standards nor guydehoines of their capteynes, not knowynge where he was become doubting whether he were fraudulently slain or fearfully fled, wist not what councell to aske or what way was most surest to folow and take. But when thei were asserteined of his moste shameful flight, euery per- son oppressed with this common mischief, common feare, and common perrell, casting away their armure, submitted theim selues to the kyng, holdyng vp their handes in askyng mercy, offeryng & promising hym faythe, loyaltie and obeisaunce. To whome the kynge of mooste gentle hearte and lenitie, not onely graunted perdon but receaued theim to his fauouze. And so the kynge beinge a conquerour withoute manslaugh- ter or effusion of christen bloode road triumphantly into the cytee of Excetter, and there not only lauded & preised the cytezẽs of Excetter but also rendred to them his most harty thankes, aswel for their duety done as for their valiauntnes. And there also he afflicted and put in executiõ diuerse Cornishmen which were the auctboures and sturrers vp of this newe insurrection and false conspiracie.

The horsemen ỹ were sent, without any stop or obstacle in short space came to saint Wighelles mounte, & there (as chaunce was) founde lady

Katheryn Goyden wife to Perkyn and brought her streight lyke a bondewoman & captyue to the kyng. And the kyng wondering at her beautie and amyable countenaunce thought her a pyaye moze mete foz the chiefe capitaine then foz the meane souldioures, began then a litle to phantasie her person & sent her incontinently accompanied with a goodly sorte of sad matrones and gentlewomen (because she was but a yong woman) to London to the quene as a true and vndoubted token of hys triumphe & victozy. And while he reposed him selfe at Exceter, he iudged that he had nothyng wonne, noz yet plucked vp by the roote of this seditious rebellion, except he coulde get into his possession the chiefe hedz and type of this pestiferous faccion and busynes. Wherfoze he enuyzoned the sanctuary whiche Perkyn was in, round about with twoo companies of light hozsemen, well wytted and vigelant persones, to thentent to bereue and plucke from Perkyn all hope of flight and escapyng away. And after that, he attẽpted this young foundeling by trusty & politique messengers, if he hauing pardon and remission of al mischeuous and heynous offences by hym done agaynst the kyng and his realme, would gladly submyt hym selfe to the kyng and be to hym feithful true and obedient. Perkyn being nowe destitute of all hope, faylyng of hys dwellyng place, and lackyng comfoyte, aide and refuge, consyderyng that he was nowe brought to the very poincte and pzicke of extremitee that he wist not whether noz howe to flye into any countrey foz succour, and also he was in vttre dispaire to haue hereafter any pzosperous chaunce oz foztunate succesle in his enterpzice, because he had so often attẽpted and so many tymes had bene defoyled and vanquyshed, wherefoze he hauyng his pardon to him offred, and trustyng to the open pzomes of men, of his awne will franckly and freely departed out of sanctuary and committed hym selfe to the kynges pleasure, and so by this meanes this great heate was quenched and appeased.

Then was the kyng very glad that this warre was ended, and toke his iourney imediatly toward London, not without a great concourse of people metyng hym oute of euery quarter to see thys Perkyn as he were a Monstre, because he beyng an alyen of no abilitee by hys pooze parentes (although it was other wyse talked and dissimuled) durst once inuade so noble a realme, and it to infecte with suche lyes and lesynges, and chiefly of all that he by his crafty suboznactions had persuaded diuerse aswell noble as ignoble (not without the confusion and vndoing of many of theim) to beleue and saye that he was the same verey persone that he feigned and peinted hym selfe to bee. But when the kyng was come to London, he appoyncted certayne kepers to attende on him whiche shoulde not (the breadth of a nayle) go from his persone, to thentent that he might neither conueigh hym selfe oute of the lande, noz flye any whether, noz yet pzouoked and procured by other shoulde be hable too sowe agayne no newe sedicion noz seditious tumulte within his realme and countreys.

When

When these tidinges came to the lady Margarete in Flaunders that Perkin her dere darlyng had no good lucke but losse, bothe in his entrepryce and her great studious furtheraunce, and was brought into captiuitiee, she was not well pleased with theim, but wepte and lamented hys vnlucky spede, and cursed her infortunate chaunce.

When these thinges were brought to passe accordyng to the kynges mynde, he dyd not forget that there was no more a delectable and pleasaunt thinge, nor a larger reine of mischief geuen to the bulgare people, then to haue a sure hope & trust that they may offende without any punishment or correcciō: Wherfore to thentent hereafter to obserue hys people in a dewe obeysaunce & filiall subiection, he shortly caused inquiries to be made of diuerse offences. Wherupon diuerse persones aswell in somerset shire as deuonshire were accused & presented that they had aided both w̄ men & money ỹ cornish treitours, not only after their discōfiture in returnyng homeward, but also in their marchyng forward entending to make battaile against ỹ kyng beyng their souereigne & liege lord. All which offenders he determined to plague & skourge according to ỹ quātite of their crime & offence w̄ great fines & sore assesmētes. And therfore he cōmitted this charge to Thomas lord Darcy, to Anis paulet knight & and Robert Sherbone Deane of Paules after byshop of Chechester.

These commissioners like a whirlewynde tossed and perced the cofers and substaunce of all the in habytauntes of bothe the countreis, to thentent that no persone being embrued or spotted with the ynke of that abhominable crime, should escape the peine whiche he worthely had deserued: But they were gentle and remisse to a great nombre, and specially to suche as offended by coherciō and feare, rather then of malicious hart or enuious mynde. Yet were they to none so fauourable but they were thought for their defaultes worthy of some punishment, so that equite therein was very well and iustly executed.

In this yere a sodeyne chaunce, ye a thyng of no moment nor worthy to be regarded had almost so kindeled agayne the olde displeasure & grudge betwene king Henry & king Iames of Scotland, that they could scace kepe their handes & bridle their courages from warre & fighting. The first mociō of this displeasure was thus: Certein young men of ỹ Scottes came armed vnto Norhā castel and behelde it wonderous circūspectly, as though thei had bene desirous to know what was done there w̄in: But when ỹ kepers of ỹ castel could not perceaue any hostilite or damage towardes him or his, & seing theim departe of their awne accorde, determined it not cōuenīēt to moue any questiō to theim nor once to stirre out. But whē they came again ỹ next day & viewed it likewyse, the kepers of thesaid castell suspectyng some fraude to lurcke in their lokyng, demaunded of theim what was their entent, & why they vewed and aduised so the castel. The Scottes euen like theim selfes aunswered theim proudly proudly & rustically w many disdeinfull woordes. Insomuche that after their blustering and blowing aunswers made, Thenglishmen being vexed and moued there with al, replied to theim with hard & manly strokes, and after many a sore blowe geuen and taken on both partes, and diuerse Scottes wounded and some slayne, the Scottes oppressed with the multitude of Thenglische people, fled as fast as their horses would carye theim. When they came home and certified the kyng of thesame, h was therewith sore moued and an angry, and sware by swete sainct Ninian that there was nothing to him more inconstant and vnstedfast then the obseruing of the league by the kyng of England, and sent word x thereof to kyng Henry in all hast by Marchemount his herauld.

The kyng of England which nothing more embraced & desired then quiet tranquylytee and perfyght loue and amitie with all princes being his neighboures and borderers, to thentent that he might lyue in his later dayes in an honest and quiet lyfe after so many laboures and vexacions euen from his infancye drawen and exercysed in, made hym aunswere that it was not done through his defaulte, neither by his counsell nor knowlege, but rather by the temerarious folly of the kepers of the castell, requiring him for that cause not to thynke the league infringed, promising in the woorde of a kyng to enquier of the truth and who xx were the malefactures. And if the offence were founde to be begonne on the partie of the kepers of the castell, he assured hym that they should for no mede or fauoure eskape peyne and punishment. This aunswere although it were more then reasonable, could not mittigate or assuage the Scottes angre and outrageousnes, for the whiche cause, Rycharde byshop of Durham, which was more heauy then al other because that this discorde was renued agayne betwene these twoo prynces by occasion of Castell kepers, he therfore thought it best first to assuage and coole the furious rage of the Skottyshe kynge, and wrote many letters to hym, requiringe hym of peace and vnitie. The kyng perceauyng bothe xxx the good wyll and constant grauitie of the byshop, appeased his fury and aunswered gentely to the byshoppes letters by writinge agayne to hym, sayyng that because he had many secrete and preuy thynges in hys mynde whyche he woulde communicate onely with hym touchyng the cause nowe in variaunce, he therfore required hym to take peine to come into his countrey, trustyng that he should thynke his labour well bestowed. The byshop was very glad and sent worde to the kyng his master, of kyng James desyre, who estemed the requeste and cause both iust and reasonable, and therefore wylled hym to accomplyshe the Scottish xl kynges honest desyre.

When he came into Scotland, he was receaued with all humanite that coulde be thought of the kyng hym selfe at an Abbey called Mell-rose. And there, after that the kyng for a countenaunce had complayned muche of the crueltie and slaughter that was vsed towardes hys men late at Norham, he easely rempted the offence and perdoned it, and ſt,and began ſecretely to cõmen without any witneſſes oꝛ arbitrers nere hand with the biſhop alone. And firſt declared to him what olde & iuſte cauſes haue moued him beſoꝛe this to ſeke aliaunce & amitie with kyng Henry, whiche now he deſyred muche moꝛe to haue confirmed & coꝛro=boꝛate foꝛ the farther mayntenaunce of loue and encreaſe of frendſhyp, whiche thing he doubted not, but ſhoulde ſoꝛte to a foꝛtunate effect and good cõcluſion,if the kyng of Englãd would vouchſafe to geue to hym in matrimony his firſt begottẽ daughter the lady Margaret,vpõ which point he determined not lõg agone to ſende hys Ambaſſadoꝛs into En= x glãd,which thing he would the ſoner do yf he knew this byſhops mynd & entẽt ready to further his louing purpoſe. The byſhop aũſwered but fewe woꝛdes,ſauing that whẽ he were returned to the kyng his maſter, he would do the beſt in thatmatter that laye in his powꝛe. Which wooꝛ=des animated much the king, & put him in good hope to ſende hys oꝛa=tours to ỹ king of Englãd to ſue foꝛ theſaid matrimony to be cõcluded.

When the byſhop had taken his leaue,& was come to the king he de=clared to him in oꝛdꝛe all the cõmunication betwene king James & him. This requeſt pleaſed the kyng very much,to whome peace was euer a ſouereygne coꝛdial,and determined ſurely to miniſter occaſion of warre xx to no man,noꝛ woulde haue any pꝛince to pꝛouoke hym to theſame.

Now began the fatall daye of the death of Perkyn Warbeck, & Ed=ward erle of Warwicke to appꝛoche: Foꝛ after this facte done & cõmit=ted,one fierce & ſtrong waue deuoured & ſwalowed both their lyues not long aſonder,as yow ſhall heare by the cõtinuacio of this ſtoꝛy. Perkin, whether it greued hym to be kept in warde oꝛ els that he was inſtigated & entiſed by ſome of his olde frẽdes to ſturre moꝛe coles,and begin ſome new ſedicious faccion,oꝛ at the leaſt, becauſe he woulde wilfully waſt & caſt away hym ſelfe,ſtudied how to eſcape & flye away, hauing perfight hope that he ſhould fynd occaſiõ to bꝛing all thinges well to paſſe,yf he xx could cõueigh him ſelfe once out of ỹ Engliſhmẽs hãdes. And although he were not ignoꝛaunt,that he neither coulde do noꝛ ymagyn any thing but the kyng woulde bothe heare of it and knowe it: Yet he ſeduced with hope of euaſion and ſkapyng, whiche was the chiefe cõfoꝛte of his captiuitie,had leuer put all thinges in a pꝛofe and haſarde, rather then lenger to tollerate and ſuffre the pꝛeſent calamyte & dayly myſery. And ſo deceauing his kepers toke him to his heeles,by the which he bꝛought hym ſelfe into a ſtreighter cuſtodie and pꝛiſon , and wꝛapped hym ſelfe into toꝛtures and punyſhmentes. Foꝛ when he came to the Sea coaſtes, and had gone but a litle foꝛwarde on his iourney , when the tumoure of xl his flight was ſpꝛeade abꝛoade,euery bywaie and lane was ſet abꝛoade with the kynges garde,which had the cuſtody of his body. Wherfoꝛe he beyng ſoꝛe abaſhed with the clamoꝛ of theim that ſearched and made in=quirie foꝛ him,and being in maner deſtitute of wit & counſail, altered of neceſſitie frõ his pꝛetenſed iourney,and came to the houſe of Bethlẽ,cal=led the pꝛioꝛy of Shene beſide Richemond in Southꝛey & cõmitted him= selfe to the pryor of the monastery, requyring him for Gods sake to aske and desire his life and perdō of the kynges maiestie. The pryor, which for hys verteous qualities was had in great estimacion, moued with the calamytie and infortunate state of this man, came to the kynge and shewed him of this Perkyn, whose perdon he humbly craued, and franckely obteyned it. Incontinent after thys, Perkyn was brought to the court agayne to Westmynster with many a curse and reproche, and was one daye set fettered in a payre of stockes, before the doze of Westmynster hall, and there stoode an whole daye, not without innumetable reproches mockes and skornynges. And the next day was caryed thorough London, and set vpon a lyke skaffolde in Chepe by the standard, with lyke gynnes and stockes as he occupyed the daye before, and there stode all daye and red openly hys awne confession writen with hys awne hande, the very copy wherof hereafter ensueth.

First it is to be knowen, that I was borne in the toune of Turney in Flaunders, & my fathers name is Jhon Osbeck, which sayd Jhon Osbeck was comptroller of the saide toune of Turney, & my mothers name is Katheryn de Faro. And one of my grauntsires vpon my fathers syde was named Diryck Osbeck which dyed, after whose death my grauntmother was maryed vnto the withinnamed Peter flamme, that was receauer of the forsaid toune of Turney, & Deane of the botemen that rowe vpon the water or Ryuer, called Leschelde. And my grauntsire vpon my mothers side was Peter de Faro, whiche had in hys keping the keyes of the gate of sainct Jhons within thesame toune. Also I had an vncle called master Jhon Stalyn, dwelling in the parish of sainct Pyas within thesame toune, which had maried my fathers suster, whose name was Jone or Jane, with whome I dwelled a certain season. And afterward I was led by my mother to Andwerp for to learne Flemische, in a house of a cousyn of myne, an officier of the said toune, called Jhon Stiebeck, with whom I was the space of halfe a yere. And after that I returned agayn to Turney, by reason of the warres that were in Flaūders. And within a yere folowing I was sent with a merchaūt of the said toune of Turney named Berlo, and his Maisters name Alexāder, to the marte of Antwerpe where I fel sicke whiche sickenes contynued vpon fyue monethes. And the sayde Barlo set me to boorde in a skinners house that dwelled beside the house of the Englische nacion. And by him I was from thence caryed to Barowe marte, and I lodged at the signe of the olde man, where I a bode the space of two monethes. And after this the sayde Barlo set me with a merchaunt of Middelborough too seruice, for to learne the language, whose name was Jhon Strewe, with whom I dwelled frome Christmas tyll Easter, and then I went into Portyngale, in the companye of Syr Edwarde Bramptones wyfe, in a shyppe whyche was called the quenes shyppe. And when I was come thether, then I was put in seruyce to a knyghte that dwelled in Lushborne whiche was called Peter Vacz de cogna, with whome I

I dwelled an whole yere, whiche sayde knyght had but one eye. And because I delyred to see other countreys, I toke licence of him, and then I put my selfe in seruice with a Bryto, called Pregent Meno, the which brought me with him into Ireland, and when we were there arryued in the toune of Corke, they of the toune, because I was arayed with some clothes of sylke of my sayde maisters, came vnto me & threped vpon me that I should be the duke of Clarence sonne that was before tyme at Deuelyn. And forasmuch as I denied it, there was brought vnto me the holy euangelist & the Crosse by the Mayre of the toune, which was x called Jhon le Wellē, & there in the presence of him & other I toke myne othe as the truth was that I was not the foresaid dukes sonne, nor none of his blood. And after this came vnto me an Englishman, whose name was Stephen Poyntron, with one Jhō water, & sayde to me inswearyng great othes that they knew wel that I was kynge Richardes bastard sonne: To whom I aunswered with like othes that I was not. And thē they aduysed me not to be afearde, but that I should take it vpon me boldely, and yf I woulde so do they would aide & assist me with al their powre against the kyng of Englād, & not only they, but they were assured wel that the erles of Desmōd & kyldare should do thesame. For they xx forced not what party they toke, so that they might bereuenged vpō the kyng of England, & so against my will made me to learne English and taught me what I should do & saye. And after this they called me duke of Yorke, secōd sonne of kinge Edward the.iiii. because king Richardes bastard sonne was in the hādes of the king of England. And vpon this the said Jhon water, Stephin Poyntron, Jhō Tyler, Hughbert Burghe with many other, as the forsayd Erles, entred into this false quarell.
And within shorte tyme after, the French king sent an Imbassadour into Ireland, whose name was Ioyte Lucas, and master Stephin Fryam, to aduertise me to come into Fraunce. And thēce I wēt into Fraūce, & frō xxx thence into Flaūders, & frō Flaunders into Ireland, and from Ireland into Scotland, and so into England.

When night of thesame daye, whiche was the.xv. day of Juyne was come (partely because the king had pardoned him his lyfe, & partely because he should no more rōne away, & put the king in doubt of any mysturst or misfortune to come) he was cōmitted to ỹ Towr of Lōdō, where his wickednes boyling so hoate within his cancard stomacke would not suffre hym to escape the punishmēt & vēgeaūce of God but shortely after was moost iustly & worthely put to death, as hereafter shalbe shewed.

The xv. yere.

Dward Plantagenet erle of Warwike, of whome ye haue heard before, beyng kept in the Towre almost frō his tender age, that is to saye, frō his first yere of the kyng to this
xv. yere, out of all company of men & sight of beastes, in so much that he coulde not decerne a Goose frō a Capō. And where

where as he by comme treason & open apparaũce, could not by hys awne doynges seke his death & destrucciõ, yet by the dzyft & offẽce of another man, he was bzought to his ende & confusion. Foz a freer Augustyn on the border of Suffolke called Patricke, to thentẽt to bzing this erle into disdayn & hatred, had a certain skoler called Raufe Wilfozd, whome he greatly fauoured, & in whose hed he euer distilled & enfused this foliche & fantasticall cõceipte, that if he would folow his counsail and aduise, he would easely conuey him to the kingdom of England. The skoler like a good disciple, did not denye to folow his masters discipline & counsayll, but moze & moze desired & put his master remembzaunce to perfozme & accõplish with al spede that thing which of his awn liberalite, he befoze had to him both pzomised & assured, saiyng, what Wecocke oz bastard is so soze afearde of trãsgressing the law, oz tymerous of punishment, the which foz to obteine a kingdõ wil not attẽpt to do and suffre all thinges that be possible to be assayed & tasted? So that when they betwene them selfes secretly had takẽ a crafty deliberacion & coũsaile of their enterpzice, & had deuised in their folish wittes, how it should be bzought to passe they wẽt both together into Kent (which countrey in aunciẽt tyme hath not bene dul in settinge foozth of newe phantasticall fantasies) & there begãne this yoũge mawmet to tel pzeuely to many that he was the very erle of Warwike, & lately gotten oute of the Towze, by the helpe of this freer Patricke. To the whiche saiynges when the freer perceaued hope to be geuen, he declared it openly in the pulpet, & defyzed all mẽ of helpe.

But the head of thys sedicion was sommer topped, that it coulde haue no tyme to spzinge any hygher, the Master and the skoler beyng bothe appzehended and caste into pzyson, and attaynted. Of the whiche twoo, the skoler was hanged on Shzouetuesdaye, at sayncte Thomas waterynges, and the freer was condempned to perpetuall pzyson and captiuitie. Foz at that tyme here in Englande, so much reuerence was attributed to the holy ozders, that to a pziest, althoughe he had committed hygh treason agaynste hys souereigne lozde and to all other, offenders in murder, rape oz theft, which had receaued any of the .iij. higher holy ozders, the lyke was geuen, and the punyshmente of death released. The chief cause of thys fauoure was this because Byshoppes of a longe tyme and season dyd not take knowlege, noz intermit them selues with the serche and punyshment of suche heynous and detestable offences, by reason whereof they dyd not disgrade and depzyue from the holy ozders suche malefactours and wycked persones, whiche without that ceremony, by the canonycall lawe coulde not be put to deathe. Furthermoze, what shoulde a man saye, it was also vsed that he that coulde but onely reade (ye althoughe he vnderstode not what he redde) howe heynous oz detestable a cryme soo euer he had committed (treason onely except) shoulde likewise as affines and alyes to the holy ozders be saued, and committed to the Byshoppes pzyson.

And to thentēt that if they ſhould eſcape, and be agayne taken, committing lyke offence, that their lyues ſhould be no moze to them perdoned, it was ordeyned that murtherers ſhould be brent on the brawne of the left hande with an hote Iron ſigned with thys lettre M, and theues in theſame place with this lettre T, So that if they, which were once ſigned with any of theſe markes or tokens did reiterate like crime and offence agayn, ſhould ſuffre the paynes & puniſhmentes, which they had both merited and deſerued. Which deuyſe was enacted and eſtabliſhed in the Parliament kept in the.ii. yere of thys kynges reigne, and taken as I r coniecture of the Frenche nacion, which are wonte, yf they take any ſuch offender, to cut of one of his eares, as a ſure token and matke hereafter of hys euell doyng. And the charge of keppng ſuche offenders, that be onely impriſoned by their offences, becauſe it ſoundeth to ſpirituall religion is committed to the byſhops and rulers of the ſpiritualle, with a penalitee ſet vpon them yf any ſuche pryſoner do afterward eſcape. The whiche acte and priuilege did noziſh and encreace aboundantly the ſect and ſwarme of theues & murtherers, foz after that tyme there were an hundzed wayes practiſed and inuented how at one tyme oz another to deliuer oz conuey theim out of pryſon and captiuite, by making their rr purgacion (by what ſleight and meanes they care not) of ſuche offences as befoze they were conuinced and founde gilty yf no man be preſent to laye exceptions to theſame. Foz if the partye offended & hurte be abſent at the day of the purgacion making, the theſe oz murder truly founde gilty from the beginning, ſhall be both excuſed and ſet at libertie. And otentymes the ſoner becauſe the byſhop would not leſe ſo great a ſumme as an hundzed pounde, foz the eſcape of a pooze knaue, ſkant woozth a dandyprat: But nowe to returne to oure matter agayne.

Perkyn (of whome reherſall was made befoze) beyng nowe in holde, coulde not leaue with the deſtruccion of him ſelfe, and confuſiō of other rrr that had aſſociate thē ſelfes with him, but begā now to ſtudy which way to flye & eſcape. Foz he by falſe perſwaſions and liberall promyſes, coztupted Strangweyes, Blewet, Aſtwood and long Roger hys kepers, beynge ſeruauntes to syz Jhon Dygby lieutenaunt. In ſo muche that they (as it was at their araynement openly proued) entended to haue ſlayn theſayde Maſter, and to haue ſet Perkyn and the erle of Warwyke at large, whiche erle was by them made preuy of this enterprice, and therunto (as al natural creatures loue libertie) to his deſtruccion aſſented, But this craftie deuice and ſubtil imaginacion, beyng opened & diſcloſed, ſozted to none effect, and ſo he beyng repulſed and put backe from rl all hope and good lucke with all hys complices and confederates, and Jhon Awater, ſometyme Mayze of Cozke in Irelande, one of hys foū-ders, and hys ſonne, were the ſixten daye of Nouembze arreyned and condempned at Weſtmynſter. And on the thzee and twenty daye of theſame moneth, Perkyn and Jhon Awater were dzawen to Tybozne, and there Perkyn ſtandyng on a lytle ſkaffolde, redde hys confeſſion.

whiche before you haue heard, and toke it on hys death to be true, and so he and Jhon Awater asked the king forgeuenes and dyed pacientlye. This was the rewarde of the pernicius Alye and coment of Perkyn Warbeck, whiche as in his lyfe with falfe perfwafions and vntrew furmifes had brought/many/noble perfonages to death and vtter perdicion, fo at hys death he brought with him other of thefame fozte to their not vndeferued ponifhment. And emongeft other, Edward erle of Warwicke, whiche as thefame went, confented to breake prifon, and to departe out of the realme with Perkyn (which in prifoners is high treafon) was the.xxi.daye of thefaide moneth arreygned at Weftmynfter xx Perkyn put to death at Tybourne. before the erle of Orefoide, then high Conftable of England, of thefaide treafon, whiche whether it were by the enticemēt of other or of his awne frewyll, (many men doubte, becaufe of hys innocency) confeffed the fact and fubmitted hym felfe to the kynges mercy. And vpon hys confeffion he had his iudgement, and accoidyng therunto, the.xxviij.daye of Nouembre. M.cccc.xcix. was brought to the fkaffolde on the Towre hyll, and there be hedded. The fame after his death fprāge abroad, that Ferdinand kyng of Spayne woulde neuer make full concluſion of the matrimony to be had betwene prynce Arthur and the lady Katheryn hys daughter nor fende her into England affonge as this erle lyued. For xx he ymagened that as longe as any erle of Warwicke lyued, that England fhould neuer be clenfed or purged of Cyuyle warre and preuy fedicion, fo muche was the name of Warwyke in other regions, had in feare and gealoufy.

Agreat death The next yere after there was a great plague, whereof men dyed in many places very fore, but fpecially and mooft of all in the citie of London, where dyed in that yere thirty thoufand. Alfo in thys yere was burned a place of the kynges called the maner of Shene Situate, & lynge nygh the Thamys fide, whiche he after buylded agayne fumpteoufly & coftly, and chaunged the name of Shene, and called it Richemond, be- xxx cauſe hys father and he were erles of Richemonde. The kynge perceaupnge thys plague and contagyous diſeaſe, rather to encreaſe then diſcreaſe, whether it was to aduoyde the occaſion of the ſickneſs, or to allure the archeduke Philip of Burgoyne to commē with hym, he perſonally toke hys ſhip at Douer, in the begynninge of May, and ſayled to Caleys, to thentent to prouyde and ſee the watches whiche haue bene accuſtomed to be diligently kepte and maynteyntd agaynſt the incurſions of his aduerſaries, & there he made polletique ordinaūces & ſtreyte lawes. While the kyng laye thus at Caleys, the archeduke Philip ſent to him diuerſe notable perſonages, not alonely to gratefye and welcome xl hym into thoſe partes, but alſo to declare that thefayde Archeduke offred to repaire perſonally to hys preſence, with ſuche a numbre as the kynge ſhoulde appoynt, ſo that it were within no walled toune or fortreſſe. For he had before diuerſe tymes made denyall to the Frenche kyng to entre into any of hys walled tounes, & if he ſhould as he gladly woulde woulde come to the toune of Caleys, it might be a pzelident to the Frech kynge to desyze like meting, what chaunce therof might fall, euery man coulde not iudge. The kynge gentely entreteyned the Ambassadours, but moze thankefully accepted the Archedukes offre, and so appoynted the place at sainct Peters churche without Caleys. Upon the Tuesday in Pentecost weke, the Archeduke came thether with a conuenient company. The kyng and the quene with many a lusty lozde and lady rode thether to welcome hym. And when the kynge appzoched, the duke at hys lightynge offred to holde hys styzope, whiche the kyng in no wyse would suffre to be done. When the kyng was dissended from hys hozsse he and the Archeduke embzaced eache other with mooste pzincely familiaritie, and then the quene and all the nobles saluted hym. What banquettynge, what myzthe and what passe tyme there was I passe ouer. But to conclude, there was communication of mariages, treatinge of farther cozrobozacion of leagues, requestes of tolles in Flaunders to be mynished, with many other thinges touchynge thentrepzice and traffique of bothe their realmes. And when all thinges were set in an ozdze, the two pzinces louingly, toke their leaue and departed, the kyng to Caleys, and the Archeduke to saynct Omers.

After this departing, the Frenche kyng Lewes the.xii. sent to vysite the kynge, the lozde Gronthouse gouernoure of Picardy, and the lozde Mernelliers, bayly of Ampas, whiche declared to the kyng the getting of Millayn, and takyng of the duke, whiche lozdes were highly feasted and with great rewardes departed.

The.xvi.yeere.

One after when thys plague was slaked, the kyng returned agayn to England, about the ende of June: And beynge come into England, sone after there came to hym one Gaspar Pous a Spanyard (bothe foz learning and good behaueour very excellent) sent from Alexander byshop of Rome, whiche should shewe the Englishmen the right waye to heauen. Therfoze that yere was called the yere of Jubile, whiche was the yere of our Lozde a thousand fyue hundzed. And to thentent that the people of farre countreyes might be eased of their laboure and traueyle in commyng thether, the charitable father sent hys legates into euery countrey to destribute the heauenly grace (as he called it) to all Chzisten people, whiche either letted by warre, enimyes, infirmitie, weakenes oz tediousnes of the lõge iourney, were not hable to perfozme their iourney to the holy cytie of Rome. But thys beneuolent liberalitie was not francke & frely geuen: Foz the holy bishop Alexander, with helping and lokynge to the health of mennes soules, thought somewhat to do foz hys awne pziuate commoditie and singuler wealth, and therfoze he limitted and set a certaine pzice of this hys grace & pardon: & to thende that the king should not hyndze noz let hys purpose, he offred parte of this hys gayn

vnto the kyng. And that the people might the soner inynsche their purses, and enryche hys chestes, he promysed that he woulde in the begynnyng of the yere make warre in all the hast agaynst the great Turke. By thys meanes and pollecy, thys Alexander gat, accumulated & heaped vp a great summe of money, and yet no battayle begonne agayne the Turke, whiche in the meane season had taken, conquered and destroyed many regions, cities and tounes belongyng to Chzisten men, but God amend all that is amysse.

Aboute this time dyed.iiij. Bishops in England, Jhon Morton bysshop of Caunturbury, Thomas Langtō bishop of Wynchester, & Thomas Rotheram bishop of Yorke. After hym succeded Thomas sauage bishop of London in whose place succeded doctor Williā Warham of whome we made mencion before. And Hēry deane bishop of Salisbury was made archebishop of Canturbury. Also Richarde Fox bishop of Durham was prefected to the bishoprike of Winchestre. Also this yere two notable mariages were cōcluded & agreed vpon, but neither solēpnised now, nor consummate as you shal here afterward. For king Henry graunted hys daughter ladye Margaret to James the.iiij. kynge of Scottes. And Ferdinād kyng of Spayne gaue hys daughter lady Katheryn to Arthur prynce of Wales, sonne & heyre apparaūt to the kyng of England. And it is to be considred that kyng Hēry did not ioyne this affinitie with the kyng of Scottes without cause: For he desyringe nothing more then to passe ouer the remanant of his lyfe in peace, rest and tranquilitee, ymagened in him selfe that by this cōiunction and couplement of mattimony, no warren or hostilitee hereafter should be attempted either agaynst hym or his dominions by the Scottishe kyng or hys naciō, hauyng sure trust that none other of hys enemyes or of hys rebelles should hereafter be receaued or maynteyned in the dominions and territories of his sonne in lawe. And emongest all other articles thys was concluded and appoynted, that no Englishmen shoulde entre into Scotland, without letters cōmendatorie of their awne souereign lorde, or lauecondupte of his wardeyn of the marches, and that prohibicion was in lyke maner geuen to the Scottes.

The.xviii.yere.

YOu haue heard before, how that the matiage was agreed betwene prynce Arthur of England, & the lady Katheryne of Spayne, & how the kyng her father promysed to sende her with great honoure into England: He nowe this yere accordyng to hys promes conueyghed her with a puissaūt nauye toward England, where she arryued in the porte of Plymmoth the seconde daye of October, then beyng Saterday. When the kynge was certefied of her arrypual, incōtinēt he sent both for prince Arthur his sonne into Wales to repaire to London, & sent diuerse great lordes and knyghtes to cōuey her with triūphe toward her spouse & husband. And

vpon the.xij.daye of Nouembre, she was conueyed from Lambeth thorough London with all triūphe and honoure that coulde be deuised or ymagened, to the Bishops paleys, by the cathedrall churche of s. Paules. And because I wyll not be tedious to you, I passe ouer the wyse deuises, the prudent speches, the costly woorkes, the conninge portratures practised and set sooth in.vii. goodly beutifull pageauntes erected & set vp in diuerse places of the citie. I leaue also the goodly ballades, the swete armony, the Musicall instrumentes, which sounded with heauenly noyes on euery side of the strete. I omit farther the costly apparel both of goldsmythes woorke and embraudery, the ryche iewelles, the massy cheynes, the stirrynge horsses, the beautyfull bardes and the glytteryng trappers bothe with belles and spangles of golde. I pretermyt also the ryche apparell of the prynceesse, the straunge fasshion of the Spanyshe nacion, the beautie of the Englishe ladyes, the goodly demenoure of the young damoselles, the amorous countenaunce of the lusty bachelers. I passe ouer also the fyne engrayned clothes, the costly furres of the citezens, standynge on skaffoldes, rayled from Gracechurche to Paules. What should I speke of the oderiferous skarlettes, the fyne veluet, the plesaunt furres, the massye chaynes, which the Mayre of London with the senate, sitting on horsebacke at the litle conduyte in Chepe, ware on their bodyes, and about their neckes. I will not molest you with rehersyng the ryche arras, the costly tapestry, the fyne clothes bothe of gold & syluer, the curious veluettes, the beautiful sattens, nor the pleasaunte sylkes, which did hange in euery strete wher she passed, the wyne that ranne continually out of the conduytes, the grauelyng & rayling of the stretes needeth not to be remembred.

While this princes soiorned for her recreacio in the Bishops paleys of London, not without visitacion of the kynge, the quene & the kynges mother, there was erected in the body of saynct Paules church, a long brydge made of tymbre, extendynge from the West doore of the church to the steppe at the entrynge into the quere, whiche was sixe foote from the grounde. On thesayde bridge or staige, euen directly before the consistory of the churche was eleuate a place lyke a mounte, for eyghte persons to stande vpon, cōpassed rounde about with steppes to assende and dissende, whiche was couered with fyne redde worsted, and in likewyse were all the rayles of thesayde staige. On the Northside of thys mount was a place furnished for the kyng & quene, & such other as they apoynted. On the Southside of thesame mount stoode the Mayre and the Magistrates of London. When all preparacion was made, and all thinges set in an ordre. Upon the daye of saynt Erkenwalde, then beynge Sundaye thesayde lady was ledde to thesame mount, and there prynce Arthur openly espoused her, bothe beynge cladde in whyte, both lusty and amorous, he of the age of fiftene and more, and she of the age of.xviij. or there aboutes. The kynge and the Quene, standynge preuelye on their stayge. After the matrymonye celebrate the prince & his wyfe went vp into the quere, & there herde ā solempnē masse song by the Archebishop of Cauntourbury, associate with.xix. prelates mitred And after the masse fynished, the bryde was led homeward to the Bishops palace, by the duke of Yorke, beyng thē a goodly youge prince & the legate of Spayne. Next after folowed the lady Cicile suster to the quene, supporting the treyne of the spouse. After whome folowed aboue an.C. laydes & gentlewomē gorgeouly appareyled & richely adourned.

There was kept that day a sumpteous feast, and yet not so sumpteous as populous, nor yet so populous as delicate, nor so delicate as of all thinges aboūdaūt. For if I should reherse to yow the valew of.iiii. cupbroders that day shewed & set foorth beside the plate that was occupied, r or declare the ryches of the hanginges, canapies or clothe of estate, or set foorth the nombre of dishes serued at the.iiii. courses and banquettes the deliuer daunsinge & costly disguisinges, I assure you that I should soner fayle then coppe of mattre or habundaunce of honoure. But euery daye endeth, and night ensueth, so when night was come, thys lusty prince and his beautifull bryde were brought and ioyned together in one bed naked, and there dyd that acte, whiche to the perfourmaunce & full consummacion of matrimony was most requysite and expedyent.
In so muche that hys familiet seruitours, which had then neither cause rr nor rewarde to lye or fayne, declared openly that in the mornynge he called for drynke, whiche he before tyme was not accustomed to do.
At whiche thinge one of hys chamberlaynes meruaylynge, requyred the cause of his drouth. To whome he aunswered merely saiyng, I haue thys nyght bene in the middest of Spayne whiche is a hote region, and that iourney maketh me so dry, and yf thou haddest bene vnder that hote clymate, thou wouldest haue bene dryer then I. Then shortely after the kynge and the quene with the new wedded spouses went from Baynardes castel by water to Westmynster, on whome the Mayre and comminaltye of London in Barges garnished with standardes, stre- rrr mers and penons of their deuyce gaue their attendaunce. And there in the paleys were suche marcyall feates, suche baylyant iustes, suche bygorus turneys, suche fierce fight at the barreyers, as before that tyme was of no man had in remembraunce. Of thys royall triumphe lorde Edwarde duke of Buckyngham was chiefe chalengeour, and lorde Thomas Grey Marques dorcet was chief defendoure whiche wyth their aydes and companygnions, bare theim selfes so valyauntly that they obteyned great laude and honoure, bothe of the Spaniardes and of their countrymen.

Durynge the tyme of these iustes and triumphe, were receaued into rl London an Erle, a Byshop, and dyuerse noble personages, sent from the kynge of Scottes into England, for the conclusion of the mariage betwene the lady Margaret the kynges daughter and hym. Whiche Erle by proxie in the name of kynge James hys master, affied and contracted the said fayre lady. Whiche assuraūce was published at Paules crosse

Crosse, the daye of the conuersion of saynct Paule, in reioysynge whereof Te deum was songe, and great fyers made throughe the cytie of London. Whiche thinges as you haue hearde beyng fully fynyshed and accomplished the Ambassadours aswell of Spayne as of Scotlande tooke their leaue of the kyng, and not without great rewardes departed into their countryes and habitacions.

When the Ambassadours were departed, the kynge entendynge to auaunce the honour and reputacion of the prynce his sonne, furnisshed hym with men and money largely, and sent hym agayne into Wales, where he was before, to kepe lyberall hospitalytee, and to mynystre to the rude Welshemen indifferent iustice. And least by reason of lacke of experience he might erre, he appointed to hym wyse and expert counsaylers, as sir Rychard Poole his kynsman, which was his chief chamberlayne, with whome were associate Sir Henry Vernon, Sir Rychard Croftes, Sir Dauy Philip, Sir William Vdale, Sir Thomas Englefelde, Sir Peter Newton knyghtes, Jhon Walleston, Henry Watyon, and doctor William Smyth, was pryesydent of his counsaill, and docter Charles, bothe were with hym associate, the one was afterwarde Byshop of Lyncoln, and the other Byshop of Herforde. But as of one fountayne commeth often bothe ioye & sorowe, so I leaue here to speake more of ioye of this mariage, consyderyng the chaunce that shortely after succeded.

A fewe monethes before the mariage of pryncе Arthur, Edmonde Poole Erle of Southfolke, sonne to Jhon duke of Southfolke, and lady Elizabeth suster to kyng Edward the. iiii. beyng stoute and bolde of courage, and of wyt rashe and hedy, was endited of homicide & murther, for sleyng of a meane persone in his rage and fury. And although the kynge perdoned hym whome he might iustly haue condempned for that offence, yet because he was brought to the kynges Benche barre and arreyned (which facte he reputed to be a great mayme and blemish to his honoure) tooke it seryously, and shortely after for this displeasure fledde to Flaunders, without any lycence or saue conduite geuen hym of the kynge, to the lady Margaret his awnt on the mothers syde. Neuertheless, whether he was sturred by his pryuy frendes thereunto moued by the kyng, or whether he trustyng on his vnuiolated truthe feared no daungier nor penaltie, he returned agayne, and excused hym selfe so to the kyng that he was thoughte to be giltеles and inculpable in any cryme that could be obiected to hym, and therefore he was permitted to go frankely at his libertie and pleasure.

But when this mariage of prince Arthur was kept at London with great pompe and solempnitie, and that all the nobilitie were set on pleasure and solace, and the kynge hym selfe was pryncipally geuen to ioye and reioysynge. This Edmond, either for that he had bene at great and excessyue charges at thesame triumphe and solempnytie, and by reason therof sore charged with debte. Either sollicited, allured and prouoked by that olde venemous serpent the duches of Burgoyn, euer beyng the sower of Sedicion and begynner of rebellió agaynst the kyng of England, or els stimulate and pricked with enuy, which could not pacientlý with open eyes se and beholde kynge Henry, beinge of the aduerse lyne to his linage, so longe to reygne in wealthe and felicitie: in conclusion with hys brother Richarde fledde agayne into Flaunders. Thys sad chaunce (I thinke) happened emonge the great ioyes and solaces of kynge Henry least that he myghte not by ouermuche gladnes sodeynly forget him selfe: Whiche displeasure at another tyme before to haue chaunced, it is manifest and well knowen to you.

When the kynge vnderstode certaynly that this erle was departed and returned agayne, he was not a litle vexed and vnquyeted, mistrustynge that some newe tumulteous busynes shoulde be begonne agayn, and chiefly therfore blamed hym selfe of folishe folye that he had geuen hym hys pardon for hys offence lately committed. Although it was manifest enough that he dyd it for this purpose, that he might dissemble and wincke at the matter so longe vntyll suche tyme, he had some sure token and perfight knowlege of his coniuracion, the whiche he perceaued nows to be surely attempted and begonne, assone as Edmonde de la poole erle of Suffolke was fled agayne into Flaunders. Syr Robert Curson, whome the kynge had promoted to the ordre of knyghthod, & made capitayne of Hammes castel, a valyaunt and a circumspect man, dissimulyng him selfe to be one of that conspiracy went into Flaunders, doubtlesse to espie what was done there by the lady Margaret against kynge Henry. Thys opynion was setteled in euery mannes head at the fyrst brochynge of the matter, and so yet contynueth, groundyng vpon thys principle, that he neyther vexed nor molested with any poynte of displeasure or iniurie by hys prynce or any other fled to the kynges enemyes. And after al thynges were knowen, opened, pacefied and suppressed, he willyngly returned and was receaued into high fauoure with the kynge hys master and soueraygne lorde. Howebeit, the kynge lyke a wylye fore, knowynge the faithfull entent of thys syr Robert, and entendynge to put hym oute of all gealousy and suspició with the lady Margaret, and Edmond de la poole, caused thesayde erle and thesayde Syr Roberte Curson, & fyue persones more to be accursed at Paules crosse the fyrst Sondaye of Nouember, as enemyes and rebelles to hym and hys realme. But howsoeuer it chaunced, whether it were for the easing of hys hart, or for some preuey pollecie, the kynge after the mariage of hys sonne prynce Arthur, was so bigilant, so circumspect and so intentyue, that he espyed and tryed oute suche as he knewe, partely to be the inuenters of mischiefe agaynst hym, and partely to beare no good wyll or sincere affection towarde hys person, that he coulde redely name and reherse their names and surnames, wherof a great parte were with in fewe dayes after apprehended and taken. And emonge them, lorde

Willyam Courtney, sonne to Edwarde Erle of Deuonshyre, a man of great nobilite, estimacion and vertue, whiche maryed lady Katheryne, daughter to kyng Edward, lorde William brother to Edmond, Erle of Southfolke, Sir James Tyrrell, Syr Jhon Wyndham. Both these Willyams before rehersed were rather taken of suspicion & gelousy, because they were nere of blood to the coniurators, then for any proued offence or cryme. Wherfore the lorde Willyam sonne to the erle of Deuonshire, after the death of kynge Henry the. vii. was delyuered and set abroade at libertie, by the noble and famous Pryncekyng Henry the viii. sonne to thesaied kynge, with whome after he was in great fauoure and estimacion, but shortely after, when he beganne to exercyse him selfe in marciall feates and warlyke studie, he syckened of a dysease, called Pluresis, of whiche malady, because it was straung and rare to the Physicians of England, he at the kynges manoure of Grenewhiche deseased, leuynge one sonne behynde hym, to contynue his stirpe and familie.

The lorde William, brother to Edmonde the Erle of Southfolke had also greater fauoure shewed in pryson, then he had before. And Syr James Tyrrel, and Jhon Windham, because they were traitours, and so attaynted the fyrst daye of Maye, they were on the towre hyll behedded. But when the erle of Southfolke hearde that some of his frendes were put to execucion, and some other committed to perpetuall pryson and captiuitie, he was in a great agony and feare of hym selfe. And so being clerely desperate to haue any fortunate successe in his pretensed enterprice, wandred about all Germany and Fraunce for aide and succoure, prouyng if he could fynde any aide or succoure at their handes. But when he perceaued no stedfast ground to catche anchor holde vpon (to thentent that in conclusion he might vnderstande that a shamefull death dewe to a man for his offences and crymes cannot by mans helpe or mans reason, be either eschewed or diuerted from hym) he submitted him selfe vnder the obeysaunce and defence of Philip Archeduke of Austryke and Burgoyne, and erle of Flaunders. But Rychard his brother beyng an experte and poletique man, so craftely conueied, and so wysely ordred hym selfe in this stormy tempest, that he was not attrapped eyther with net or snare.

The kyng, not yet being out of doubte of all domestycal sedicion and ciuyle discorde, studied bulely howe to restreine and kepe in a streite closure dyuerse malefactoures, whiche beyng partakers of this conspyracy fled to sondry sanctuaries, tarryng there til a fayre day came to auaunce forthward their enterprice. Wherupon he deuised to kepe the gates of all sanctuaries and places priuileged, shut and well locked, so that none should issue out from thence to perturbe and vnquiet hym, hys realme or people. And for that entent he bothe wrote and sent Ambassadours to alexander, then byshop of Rome, desyryng hym by hys aucthoritie to adiudge and decerne all Englyshmen, beyng fled to sanctuary or other places for treason, as enemies to Christes fayth, and scismatyques too Chriſten religion, and as commen perturbers of the quiet people, and capitaynes and prouokers of trapterous rufflynges, intreditynge and prohibityng the refuge and priuilege of ſanctuary to all ſuche perſons as once had enioyed the immunitie and liberte of theſame, and after had fled out, and eftſones returned agayne. Whiche thynge after that the Byſhop had graunted, it was greatly to the quietnes and comforte of kyng Henry, and many through the feare of that reproche and ignomony, cõuerted them ſelues to goodnes and dewe ſubiection of their prince: Other alſo that were in ſecurite, and out of all perell and daunger, durſt not haſard them ſelues for feare of galtroppes or ſlipping into the fyer.

When the kyng by his hygh pollecy had compaſſed and framed hys affaires thus to his purpoſe, ſodeynly happened a lamentable chaunce and lachrymable loſſe to the kynge, quene and all the people. For that noble prince Arthur, the kynges fyrſt begotten ſonne, after that he had bene maryed to the lady Katheryne his wyfe, v. monethes, departed out of this tranſytory lyfe, in his caſtell of Ludlowe, and with a great funerall obſequy was buryed in the cathedrall churche of Worcettre. After whoſe death the name of prince belonged to his brother duke of Yorke, hys brother diſſeaſing without iſſue, and ſo without any creation ought to be called, except ſome cauſe apparaunt were the let and obſtacle of the ſame. Howbeit, theſayed duke vpon ſuſpicion of his brothers wyfe to be with chylde, and that doubtfully thought by the expert and ſage men of the princes counſaill, was by a moneth & more delayed from hys tytle, name and preheminence, in the whiche ſeaſon the truthe might to women eaſely apere. It is reported that this lady Katheryne thought and feared ſuche dolorous chaunce to come: For when ſhe had embraced her father, and taken her leaue of her noble and prudent mother, and ſayled towardes England, ſhe was continually ſo toſſed and tumbled hyther and thether with boſterous wyndes, that what for the rage of the water, and contrarite of the windes, her ſhip was prohibited dyuerſe tymes to approche the ſhore and take lande.

The next yere after quene Elizabeth, lyng within the Towre of London, was brought a bed of a feare daughter on Candelmas date, which was there chriſtened and named Katheryn, and the. xi. daye of theſame moneth, theſayed mooſt vertеous princes and gracious quene there deſeſſed, and was with all funerall pompe caryed thorough the cytye of London to Weſtminſter and there intimulate, whoſe daughter alſo taried but a ſmall ſeaſon after her mother.

After the death of this noble princes, which for her great vertue was commenly called good quene Elizabeth, departed fyr Reignold Breye knight of ỹ gartier, a very father of his coũtrey, a ſage & a graue perſon

and a feruent louer of iustice. In so muche that if any thynge had bene done against good lawe or equitie, he would after an hũble cõsaill plainly reprehende the kyng, & geue him good aduertisement how to reforme that offence, & to be more circũspect in an other like case. Of thesame vertue & honest playnes was Jhon Morton archebyshop of Caunterbury, whiche byshop died (as it is shewed aboue) ii. yeres before. So these.ii. persons were euer cohibitors & refreiners of the kynges wilfull scope & vnbrideled libertie, where as the rude & ignorant people saie & affirme, that their counsaill infected & corrupted the kynges clene & immaculate x conscience, contrary to his pryncely disposicion & naturall inclinacion. Suche is euer the errour of the common people: But surely as long as the kyng would here and obey such as warned him of his office royall & kyngely duetie, he coulde in no wyse erre or swarue aside. About this tyme also died Henry archebyshop of Caunterbury, whose rowme doctor William Warram byshop of London supplied. And to the byshoprick of London was elected Willyam Barnes, after whose death succeded Rychard Fitziames, a man of a good lignage & great learning & vertue. In which yere the.xviii. daye of Februarij, the kyng at his place at Westminster, with all solempnite created his onely sonne Henry pryncc of xx wales, erle of Chestre. &c. which noble yonglyng succeded his father, not only in the inheritaunce and regalite, but also was to hym equipolent in honour, faime, learnyng and pollecye.

Maximilian the Emperour, hearyng that quene Elizabeth was deceased, sent into England a solempne Ambassade, of the which lord Cazimire, Marques of Brandenburgh his cosyn, accompanied with a byshop, an erle & a great nũber of gentlemen well appareiled, was principal Ambassadour, which were triũphantly receaued into Londõ, & was lodged at Crosbyes place. This Ambassade was sent for.iii. causes, one to visite & comforte the kyng, beyng sorowful and sad for the death of so xxx good a quene & spouse. The.ii. for the renouacion of the olde league and amitie. The.iii. which was not apparaũt, was to moue the kyng to mary the Emperours daughter the lady Margarete, duches dowager of Sauoye. The first.ii. toke effect, for the kyng vpõ Passion sunday roade to Paules in great triumphe, thesaid Marques riding on his left hand. And there the byshop made to the kyng an excellent cõsolatory oracion, concerning the death of the quene. And there also the kyng openly sware to kepe the new renouate league & amitie, during their.ii. liues. But the third requeste, whether the let was on the mans part or womans syde, neuer sorted to any effect or conclusion. And so these thinges done, the Am-xl bassadours returned sumptuously and honorably rewarded.

All this wynter was preparacion made for the cõueiaunce of the lady Margaret, affied to the kyng of Scottes into Scotland. And when all thynges were ready and prest, the kyng remoued the last daye of Juyne from Rychemond, hauyng in his company his said daughter, and came to Colywestõ, where the countesse of Rychemond his mother then laye.

And after certayne dayes of solace ended, the kynge gaue her his blessynge with a fatherly exhoztacion, and committed the conueighaunce of her to the kynge her husbandes presence, to the erle of Surrey: And the erle of Northumberland was appointed as Wardein of the marches to delyuer her at the confines of bothe the marches. Thus this faire Lady was conueighed with a great company of lozdes, ladies, knyghtes, esquiers and gentlemen, till she came to Berwycke, and from thence to a byllage called Lambzeton kyzke in Scotland, where the kyng with the floure of Scotlād was ready to receaue her, to whom the erle of Northumberland, accozdynge to his commission deliuered her. The Scottes that daye, I assure you were not behynde, but fayre aboue, bothe in apparell and ryche Jewels and massy chaynes: But aboue other the Erle of Northumberland, what foz the ryches of his cote, beyng Goldsmythes wozke garnyshed with perle and stone, and what foz the costly appatell of his henzmen and galaunt trappers of their hozsses, besydes iii. hundred tall men, well hozsed and appareled in his coolozs, that he was esteemed bothe of the Scottes & Englyshmen, moze lyke a pzince then a subiect. Then was this lady conueyed to the toune of Edenboroughe, and there the daye after, kyng James the fourth, in the pzesence of all his nobylitie espoused thelated faire pzinces, and feasted the Englysh lozdes, and shewed to them Justes and other pastymes, very honourably after the fassion of his rude countrey. When all thynges were done and fynished, accozding to their commission, the erle of Surrey with all the Englishe lozdes and ladyes retourned into their countrey, geuyng moze pzayse to the manhoode, then to the good maner and nurture of Scotlande.

In this yere the kynge kepte his hygh courte of Parliament, in the whiche diuerse actes were concluded, whyche were thought necessary and expedient foz the pzeseruacion of the publique weale. And emonge other thynges, it was determined that theues and murderers duely cõuicted by the lawe to dye, should be burned in the hand, and committed to the Bisshoppes custody as I haue befoze declared. After this, certayne money was graunted to the kyng, by the whole Parliament, and the goodes of men outlawed were fozfeyted and confisqued. There was also called (as the maner is) a congregacion of the clergie, to thentent, that they with their treasure and money might auaunce and pzeferze the common wealth of the realme.

Hetherto we haue shewed you rough and sharpe battailes, pernicious and seditious, strike, tumulte, and the death of many noble & meane persons: Nowe therfoze let vs here rehearse, the contencion of familier thinges, the gnawyng at the hartes, and the freating of mindes and bowes, wes, promises and requestes made of diuerse persones.

Kyng Henry, now drawyng to age, and before this tyme, euer punched, stimulated and pricked with the scurpulous stynges of domestical sedicion and ciuile commocion, in so much that he more detested and abhorred intestine and priuate warre, then death or any thynge more terrible. Wherfore he determined so politiquely to prouide that all the causes of suche vnquietnes and mischiefe to come, shoulde be eradicate and extirped: whiche ymaginacion and purpose he doubted not to compasse and bryng to effect. ¶ He made lowe and abated the courage of his subiectes and vassalles, and especially of the richest sorte, remembryng the olde prouerbe, that men throughe aboundaunce of riches ware more insolent, hedstronge and robustius, and that nothyng is more to men acceptable or desyrous, then aboundaunce of treasure and plentye of money, whiche people either for feare of losynge, or hope of gaynynge of worldly riches, desyre euer eyther peace or warre. But to thentent that men myght not thynke nor reporte that he whiche is their kynge constituted of God to reuenge all iniuries to theym done and committed, should oppresse and wrongfully polle and exacte money of hys subiectes, he deuysed wyth hym selfe by what honest meane he myght performe it. And thus deuysyng with hym selfe, it came into hys hed that the Englyshmen did litle passe vpon the obseruacion and kepynge of penall lawes or pecuniall statutes, made and enacted for the preseruacion of the commen vtilytee and wealthe. And therefore, if inquisicion were had of suche penall statutes, there should be fewe noble men, merchauntes, fermers, husbandemen, graseers nor ocuppers, but they shoulde be founde transgressours and violatours of thesame statutes. After that he had taken thys counsayll, he soughte oute the penall lawes, and put them in execucion, and they that were founde offenders, were easely at the beginning fyned and scourged. After that he appointed.ii. masters and surueiers of his forfaites, the one sir Richard Empson, and the other Edmond Dudley, bothe learned in the lawes of the realme. And these twoo persons contented, whiche of them by moste bryngyng in myght most please and satisfye his masters desyre and appetide. Wherefore in the begynnynge, they armed with a companye of accusers (commonly called promoters) whyche brought to them the names of the offendours, esteined and regarded so muche the gayne of money, that they clerely forgate and banysshed oute of their remembraunce their duetie present, the peryll that might ensue, and the thanke and good wyll that they myght haue obteyned, and yet they had warnynge of greate and sage persones to close their handes from suche vncharitable doynges and cruell extremitie, accordyng to thee Adage, the extremitie of iustice, is extreme iniurie.

He kyng, after that he had gotten a large and ample ſumme of money, hauyng pitie of the people, whiche cried to God dayly for an ende of their pilfrynge, of his clemency and gracious goodnes towardes his ende thought it beſt, and thus determined, that theſe two extreme officiers ſhoulde be depryued of that offite, and the money from whome it was vniuſtly exacted and extorted, to be wholy reſtored and deliuered againe. Which beyng preuented with death, commaunded it by his laſt will and teſtament to be duely and truly performed, but in the meane ſeaſon many mens coffers were emptied.

In this very ſeaſon, and the yere of our lorde a M. D. xvi Elizabeth quene of Caſtell, wyfe to Ferdinande kyng of Arragon dyed without any iſſue male, by reaſon whereof the heritaunce of Caſtell (becauſe that kyngdomes be not partible) diſcended to lady Jane her eldeſt daughter by kyng Ferdinando, the whiche was maried to Philip archeduke of Auſtrich and Burgoyne, and erle of Flaundres. Which kyngdome he obteyned by his wyfe, and had the poſſeſſion of the ſame, and was named, reputed and taken as kynge of Caſtell and Lyon. Wherefore the yere folowynge, aboute the xxt daye of January, hauing a great nauy prepared, he ſayled out of Flaunders with his wyfe toward Spayne, but he had ſayled no great waye before that a vyolous tempeſt, by reaſon of contrarietie of wyndes ſodeynly aroſe, the whole nauy was toſſed and chaſed with the waues and ſodayne ſourges. In ſo myche the wynde hauynge the maiſtry diſperſed and ſeparated the ſhyppes aſondre into diuerſe places on the coaſte of Englande. The kynges ſhip with two other veſſelles were blowen by tempeſt on the Weſt parte of the realme to the port of Weymouth in Dorſet ſhyre. Then kynge Philip whiche xxi was not expert, and had not frequented the ſeas before, beynge fatygate and vnquieted bothe in mynde and body, entryng the ſhyp boate to refreſhe and repoſe hym ſelfe a litle, came a lande contrarye to the mynde of his counſayll and Capitaynes, whiche forſawe and knewe well that theſame landynge ſhoulde bee the occaſion of lenger tatynge there. When it was knowen that ſtraunge ſhyppes were arryued, there came thether a greate number aſwell of noble men as of vrall perſons that dwelled aboute that coaſte, to repulſe and beate awaye hym if he were their enemy. But when they perceaued he was theyr frende and louer and dryuen thether by force of wether, Syr Thomas Trenchard knyght, the chiefe of that company went to Philip kynge xl of Caſtell wyth all humanytie and lowlynes, inuytynge and deſyrynge hym (if he would ſo vouchelauſe) to vyſyte hys maner and mancion, whiche was euen nygh at hande, truſtyng therby to haue great thankes of the kyng hys maiſter, if he coulde protract and cauſe hym to tarye

there, vntyll suche tyme as kyng Henry were certefied of hys arryuall, to whome with all diligent celerite, he sent diuerse postes to notefie to his grace of kynge Philippes landinge. This rumour beyng farther blowen abroade of this straunge Prynces comming, in a short space there assembled together a great multitude of people all a longe the sea coast. And emong other there came first Sir Jhon Carew with a goodly band of picked men. Whiche Sir Jhon and Sir Thomas Trenchard entreated the kyng of Castell, not to depart vntill suche tymes as he had spoken with kyng Henry his louing and faithfull frende and alye, assuryng him that he woulde repayre thether within. ii. or. iii. dayes at the most. King Philip excused him selfe by the necessitie of his weighte enterprice & inportunate cause, affirmyng that long tarryng in matters of graultie and dubious, ought to be excluded: Wherfore he alledged that protractyng of tyme might turne him to great preiudice, denieng at the first to expect & tarie the comming of the kyng of England. But yet being perswaded by reason in him selfe, that he might be let and interrupted, if he would proffre once to go aborde to his shippes again, at their gentle desyre and louing contemplation, assented to their humble petition and request.

cx When kynge Henry was informed of hys landynge, he was replenyshed with an exceding gladnes, partely for to renewe the old familiaritie and acquaintaunce, whiche they vsed at their last meting, and partely for that he trusted that his landinge in Englande shoulde turne to his profite and commoditie. Therfore first he wrote many and dyuers letters to Sir Jhon Carew, and Sir Thomas Trenchard, willing and warnyng them with all kyndenes of humanitie to entertayne the kynge of Castell, tyl he in person approched in some place mete and conuenient for the enteruiewyng and entretenning of so noble a personage. Beside this he sent the Erle of Arundell with many lordes and knyghtes to accompany and attende vpon hym. Whiche erle, accordyng to the kynges cxi letters receaued him with. vi. hundred horsses all by torche light to the great admiracion of all the straungiers.

Kyng Philip seing no remedy, but that he must nedes tarie & abide, woulde no lenger gase after kyng Henries commynge, but tooke hys iourney towardes Wynsore Castell where the kynge laye. And fyue myle from Wynsore, the prynce of Wales accompanied with fyue erles and dyuerse lordes and knyghtes, and other to the numbre of fyue hundred persons, moost gorgeously appareled and rychely mounted, receaued him after the moost honorablest fassion of entretenment. And with-cxi in halfe a myle of Wyndsore, the kynge accompanied with the duke of Buckyngham, and a great parte of the nobilitie of his realme, saluted and welcommed hym, and so conueied hym to the Castell of Wynsore, where besyde many triumphs and pastymes shewed, he was made compaignion of the noble ordre of the Gartier. After hym came to Wynsore hys wyfe quene Jane, suster to the Prynces dowager, late wyfe to pzynce Arthur. And after they two had concluded and renouate their olde league, and made a perpetuall peace and continuall amitie together: kyng Henry delyzed hym to haue Edmõd de la poole erle of Suffolke hys rebell, to be delyuered into his handes and possession. To whome the kyng of Castell aunswered a whyle, that he was not within hys rule oz domunion, and therefoze it laye not in his powre to rendze oz deliuer him. Although he considzed it to be a heynous & great offence to be the occasion & authour of the death of his gest, which came to him foz succour, & was receaued vnder his pzotection and defence. yet when he perceaued that neither excuse, noz yet reasonable argumente coulde be accepted oz allowed of kyng Henry (whiche pzomysed faithfully of his awne offre to pardon, Edmond de la poole, of all peynes and executions of death) he pzomised and graunted to do and accomplysche all kynge Henries desire and request: And so incontinent caused the said Edmond secretly to be sent foz. After this kyng Henry entending to pzotract the tyme till he might possesse his pzaye, which he soze desired, conueyed the kyng of Castell vnto the citie of London, that he myght see the hed cytie of his realme, and there led him from Baynardes Castell by Chepe to Barkynge, and so returned by Watlynge strete againe, during whiche tyme there was shot a wonderfull peale of gunnes, oute of the Towze, vp into the whiche he woulde not entre, because (as you haue heard befoze) he had auowed not to entre the foztresse of any fozeyn pzynce, in the whiche a garison was mainteined: And there tarynge a litle space, returned backe with hym. Then from London the kyng bzought him to Richemond, where were many notable feates of armes pzoued both at the tilt and at the tourney and at the barriers.

In the meane season, Edmond de la poole which euer feared and mistrusted, that the arriuing in England of kyng Philip shoulde be his fatall ende and finall destruccion, perceauynge well that there was no farther hope to be had in fozeyn pzynces and potentates, and trustynge that after his life to hym once graunted, that kyng Henry would bziefly set hym at his libertie and fredome, was in maner content to returne againe into hys natiue countrey, castyng in his mynde farther, that if his hope and truste were defrauded and refelled, yet at the last he was sure to ende his lyfe, and be buried in the countrey where he first entred into this variable wozlde.

When all pactes and couenauntes betwene the kynges of Englande and Castell were appoynted, conuenaunted and agreed: kynge Philip toke his leaue of kyng Henry, rendzyng to hym mooste hartie thankes foz his high chere and princely entreteynment. And beyng accompanied with diuerse lozdes of England, came to the cytie of Excettre, and so to Fulmouth in Cozne wale, and there tooke his shyppe and sayled into Spayne, where he shoztly beynge taken with a sodeyn disease, departed oute of this transitozy lyfe, beynge then but thyzty yeres of age. He had by his wife and quene Jane. vi. childzen, two men childzen Charles and and Ferdinando, and foure daughters, Eleanor, Isabel, Mary and Katherin. He was a man of stature conuenient, of countenaunce amiable and louely, of body somwhat crasse and corpulent, quycke wytted, bolde and hardy stomaked. This tempest that the kyng of Castell hade, was wonderfull straunge to many men, because the violencie of the wynde had blowen doune an Egle of brasse, beyng set to shewe and manifest on whiche part the wind blewe, from a pynnacle or spire of Paules church. And in the fallyng, thesame Egle brake, and batered another Egle that was set vp for a sygne at a tauerne doze in Chepesyde. And here vpon, men that were studious of straunge tokens and monstreous wonders, did take an opinion that the Emperour Maximilian, whiche at that tyme gaue an Egle in his armes, should haue a great losse, whiche so happened in dede: For he lost his onely begotten sonne Philip, newly called to the kyngdome of Castell.

The discrypcion of kyng Philip.

Also, shortely after the departynge of kyng Philip, the kyng of Englande beganne to suspect Syr George Neuell lorde of Burgeyny, and Sir Thomas Grene, of Grenes Norton knyght, that they were considered fautours and partakers, in the begynnyng with Edmond de la poole, and so vpon this suspicion, they were cõmaunded to the Towre.

xx But shortly after when they had ben tryed and purged of that suspicion and cryme, he commaunded theim bothe to be set at lybertie. But Syr Thomas Grene fell sycke before, and continued in the Towre in hope to be restored aswell to his healthe as he was to hys lybertie, and there dyed. The lorde of Burgeyny for hys modestie, wyt and probitte (because the kyng founde hym lyke hym selfe) always true, faythfull and constant, was of hys souereigne lorde more esteemed, fauoured and regarded then he was before.

xxi After this, the kyng hauing peace aswell with foreyne princes, for the terme of. iii. yere, as disburdened & purified of all domesticall sedicion, began to be diseased with a certaine infirmitie and wekenes of body, whiche thryse in the yere, but especially in the spryng tyme sore vexed & tormented hym. And because for the most part, the harme & cuell that chaunceth to the prince, is parted & communicated to his subiectes & people, the olde sweating wherof you heard before emongest the cõmons of the realme, came again. Howbeit by the reason of the remedy that was inuẽted by the death of many a creature in the beginning, it dyd lesse hurte and displeasure to the peoxl ple at this tyme then it did before. But nowe the thirde plague egall with the pestylence ensued by the woorkyng of the masters of the forfaitures by the kyng appoynted as I shewed you before.

By whose meanes many a ryche and welthy persone, by the extrempte of the lawes of the realme, were condempned and brought to myserye. The mattre is as wonderfull to be hearde, as pitefull and miserable to be done, and yet it is called the law, wher as it is rather aperuerse abuse and disorder of a lawe, polletiquely at the beginning inuented to cause the people, the soner to conforme them selues to such as demaunde their right of them, but craftely practysed to the vtter confusion of many by vntrue officers. For if a man put his aduersary in suite before the Judges, of which complaint or accio he neither thinketh nor hath knowlege if he appere not at the last callyng of the exigent, whiche is called in a p shyre where he neuer came (for how can he appere, if he be ignorant of the prosecucion of the cause, and dwell.ii.C. myles from that place) then dothe he forfet all his substaunce and mouables, and his body to captiuitie as an enemy, and rebell to the lawes of his countrey. And yet the pryncc shall enioye the goodes so confiscate, and the party cōplaynaunt or plaintife that is wronged recouereth not one myte, and yet loseth bothe his payne and costes. And all suche persons that be so condempned and adiudged, be called outlawes, that is depriued of all lawes of the lande, to the whiche he was by the custome of the countrey inheritable. These outlaries, olde recognisances of the peace and good abering, xp escapes, ryottes and innumerable statutes penall, were put in execucion and called vpon by Empson and Dudley, so that euery man, both of the spiritualtie and temporaltie, hauyng either lande or substaunce, was called to this pluckyng banket, accordinge to the Psalmist saiyng, all declyned and fell together, and no man although he were neuer so clere and gyltles, in conclusion durst auenture a tryall, seynge the experience of them that passed before. For these two rauenynge wolues had suche a garde of false periured persones apperteignynge to them, whiche were by their commaundemēt empanyled on euery quest, that the kyng was sure to wynne whosoeuer lost. Learned men in the lawe, when they were rrr requyred of their aduice, would saye, to agree is the best counsayll that I can geue you. By this vndewe meanes, these couetous persones fylled the kynges cofers, and entyched thē selues. And at this vnreasonable and extorte doynge, noble men grudged, meane men kycked, poore men lamented, preachers openly at Paules crosse and other places exclamed, rebuked and detested, but yet they would neuer amende. Howebeit the good kynge in his last daies conserued and pardoned his poore subiectes of suche vncharitable yokes and ponderous burdens as they were laden withall.

In this season Alexāder byshop of Rome departed out of this world, rl and for hym was elected Fraunces borne Senes, nephiewe to Pius the second, and was called Pius the third, whome kyng Henry had made a litle before, proctoure for his realme in the courte of Rome. The kyng beyng glad of his high promocion and dignitie, sent syr Gylbert Talbot knyght, Rycharde Bere Abbot of Glascenbury, and doctor Robert Sherborne deane of Paules, to declare to hym what gladnes entred into the kynges hart, when he hearde tell of his hygh preferment and honour. But this bishop Pius did not expect and tary the gratulacions of these Ambassadours, for within a moneth after that he was installed he rendred his debt to nature, hauyng small pleasure of his promocion. At this same tyme also dyed Gyles, lorde Dawbency, the kynges chiefe chamberleyn, whose office Charles bastard sonne of Henry last duke of Somerset occupied and enioyed, a man of a good wyt and great experience.

Done after, the kyng caused Guy Ubald duke of Urbyne to be elected, knyght of the ordre of the gartier, a noble warriour, in the Greke and Latyn tounges excellently learned. And this honour and hygh dignitie, this duke desyred instantly to haue, that he might be equyualent in all degrees of honour and nobilitie with his father, duke Frederick a prince in his tyme of high renoune and estimacion, which was receaued and chosen into that ordre by kyng Edward the fourth. And because it was noised that July the second, a Januway borne, was after the death of Pius, elected to be byshop of Rome, the kyng entending to stop all gappes with one bushe, sent syr Gylbert Talbot and the other two Ambassadours, principally to byshop July, and by them sent also to the duke of Urbyne, the whole habite and coller of the noble ordre of the gartier. When duke of Guy was reuested with the habit, and had taken his othe according to the statutes of the ordre: He sent syr Balthaser de Castello knyght a Mantuane borne, his Oratour to kynge Henry, whiche was for hym enstalled, according to the ordinaunces of that famous ordre.

While these thinges were in doinge, Lewes the Frenche kynge mistrustyng that he should neuer haue manchylde, maried his eldest daughter lady Claude to Fraunces de Valoys, dolphyn of Uyen and duke of Angulesme: Whiche lady was promysed a litle before to Charles the kyng of Castell. When kynge Henry knew of this, he thought best to mary his daughter lady Mary to this Charles kyng of Castell, beyng almost bothe of one age; and therefore Ambassadours were sent to and fro, and at the last, the mariage was concluded and confirmed by the meanes of the byshop of Wynchester, chiefe Ambassadour for the kyng at Caleys, and so the lady Mary beyng of the age of. x. yeres, was promysed to kyng Charles. For conclusion of which mariage, the lorde of Barow, and diuerse great Ambassadours were sent into England from the Emperour Maximilian, whiche had great rewardes and returned

NOwe approched the ende & terme of the. iii yeres of peace that I spake of before, at whiche tyme kyng Henry thought his fatal daye to be at hande: For his sickenes encreased daily more and more, so that he might easely perceaue that death was not farre of tarying, his praye: Therfore like a good prynce, desiring to exhibite some gratuitie to his people that he might be had in memory after his disease, graunted of his great liberalite a generall pardon to all men, for all offences done & perpetrate against his lawes and statutes. But because murtherers and theues were not onely offenders to him, but also to other, he excepted them & some other out of his pardō. He paide also the fees of al prisoners in the gayles in & about London, abyding their only for that duety. He payde also the debtes of al such persons as laye in the counters of Londō, or Ludgate for xl.s & vnder, & some he releued that were condempned in. x. l. For this his goodnes and pitie shewed to his people, beyng sore vexed with inquysitors, pollers & promoters, general processiō was had daily in euery citie and paryshe to pray to almighty God, for the restoryng of his healthe, with long continuaunce of the same. Neuertheles, he was so consumed with his longe malady, that nature coulde no lenger sustayne his lyfe, and so he departed out of this world, the two and twenty day of Aprill in his palace of Rychemond, the which was the yere of our lorde. M. D. ix. his corps was conueyed with a funerall pompe to Westmynster, and there buryed by the good quene his wyfe in a sumpteous and solempne Chapell, whiche he not long before had caused to be buylded: He reigned. xxiii. yeres and more then. viii. monethes, and lyued. lii yeres. He had by his quene Elizabeth. viii chyldren. iiii. men and. iiii women chyldren of the whiche. iii. remayned alyue behynde hym. Henry prynce of Wales, whiche after him succeded, and was kyng, lady Margaret quene of Scottes, and lady Mary promysed to Charles kyng of Castell. He was a man of body but leane and spare, albeit mighty and stronge therewith, of personage and stature, somewhat hygher then the meane sorte of men be, of a wonderfull beutye and fayre complexion, of countenaunce mery and smylyng, especially in his communication, hys eyes graye, his teethe syngle, and heare thynne, of wyt in all thynges quycke and prompt, of a princely stomake and haute courage. In great perels, doubtfull affayres, and matters of weyghty importaunce, supernaturall and in maner deuyne, for suche thynges as he went aboute, he dyd them aduysedly, and not without great deliberacion and breathing, to thentent that emongest all men his wyt and prudence myght be noted and regarded and spoken of. For he was not ignorant that his actes and doynges were specially noted and marked with the eyes of many a person, and therefore a Prynce oughte as farre to excell and surmounte all meane personages in wysedome and polecy, as he precelleth other in estate and dignitie.

The discryp-
cion of kynge
Henry the. viii

For

For what man will geue credite or regard to him, whom he hath proued to be light, wilde and lasciuious of condicions? Besides this, he was sobre, moderate, honest, affable, courteous, bounteous, so much abhorring pride and arrogancy, that he was euer sharpe and quicke to them which were noted or spotted with the cryme. And there was no man with hym, beyng neuer so muche in his fauoure, or hauing neuer so muche authorite, that either durst or coulde do any thyng as his awne phantasye did serue him, without the consent & agreement of other. What shall I saye more? Although his mother were neuer so wyse (as she was both witty & wise) yet her will was bridled, and her doynges restrayned. And this regiment he lated he kepte, to thentent that he worthely might be called a kyng, whose office is to rule & not to be ruled of other. He was also an indifferent & sure Justicier, by the whiche one thing he allured to him the hartes of many people, because they lyued quietly & in rest out of al oppression & molestacion of the nobilite & riche persones. Also to this seuerite of his was ioyned & annexed a certayn mercifull pitie, whiche he did often shewe to such as had offended, & by his lawes were hindred & mersed: for such of his subiectes as were fined or amerced by his Justices to their great empouerishing. he at one tyme or another did helpe, releue & set forward: wherby it apered ỹ he would haue thesame penalties for other offences & crimes reuiued & stirred vp again, which was a plain argument ỹ he did vse his rigour only (as he said him selfe) to bring low & abate the high hartes & stoute stomakes of the wylde people, norished & brought vp in sedicious faccions & cyuile rebellions, & not for the gredy desire of ryches or hunger of money, althoughe suche as were afflicted would crye out, and say that it was done more for the loue and desire of gaine and profite, then for any prudent, pollecy or pollitique prouision.

Surely this good and modest prince did not deuoure and consume the substaunce and ryches of his realme, for he by his high pollecy, meruelously enriched his realme and him selfe, and yet left his subiectes in high wealth and prosperitie. The proofe wherof is manifestly apparaũt by the great aboundaunce of golde and syluer, yerely brought into this realme, both in plate, money and bullion by merchaũtes passing and repassyng out and into this realme with merchaundise. To whom he hym selfe of his awne goodes lent money largely without any gaine or profite, to thentent that merchauudise being of all craftes the chefe arte, and to all men, bothe moste profitable and necessary, might be the more plentifuller vsed, haunted and employed in his realmes and dominions. And so this kyng liuing all his tyme in the fauour of fortune, in high honor, riches and glory, and for his noble actes and prudent pollecies, worthy to be registred in the boke of fame, gaue vp his ghoost at the last, whiche vndoubtedly is assended into the celestial mãcion, where he hath the sure fruicion of the Godhead, & the ioye that is prepared for such as shall sit on the right hande of our sauiour, euer worlde without ende.

The triumphant reigne of Kyng Henry the. VIII.

OVV, after the death of this noble Prince, Henry the. VIII. sonne to Kyng Henry the. VII. beganne his reigne the.xxii. daye of Aprill, in the yere of our Lorde. 1509. and in the. xviij. yere of his bodily age: Maximilian then beeyng Emperoure, and Lewes the.xii. reignyng in Fraunce. And Fernando beeyng the Kyng of Arragon and Castell, and Kyng James the fourthe then rulyng ouer the Scottes: Whose stile was Proclaimed by the blast of a Trumpet, in the citie of London, the.xxiij. daye of the said monethe, with muche gladnes and reioysyng of the people. The.i.yere

And the same day, he departed from his manour of Richemond to the tower of London, where he remayned, closly and secrete, with his counsayll, till the funeralles of his father, were finished and ended. The same daie also, sir Richard Empson knight, and Edmonde Dudley Esquier, greate counsaylers to the late kyng, were attached and brought to the Tower, not to the litle reioysyng of many persones, whiche by them wer greued, whiche, attachement was thought to bee procured by malice of theim, that with their auctoritie, in the late kynges daies wer offended, or els to shifte the noyse, of the straight execucion of penall statutes in the late kynges daies, by punishement of those persones, and other promoters, for to satisfie and appease the people. The same daie also was attached, the lorde Henry Stafford, brother to the duke of Buckyngh̄ and sent to the Tower, the cause was not thought to begreat, because he was so sone deliuered, & the same yere was created erle of Wilshire. And the same daie also Doctor Ruthal was named Bushoppe of Duresme. Empson and Dudley attached.

Sone after were apprehended diuerse, called promoters, belongyng to Empson and Dudley, as Camby, Page, Smith, and diuerse other, as Derbie, Wright, Sympson, and Stocton, of the whiche, the moste part ware papers, and stoode on the Pillorie. How bee it, the moste craftiest knaue of all, called Jhon Baptist Bytnald, escaped and came to Westminster, and there toke Sanctuarie.

The.xxv. daie of Aprill was Proclaimed, that the kynges grace, ratefied all the Pardones, graunted by his father, and also pardoned all suche persones, as was then in suite, for any offence, what soeuer it was, Treason, Murder and Felonie onely excepte. A generall Pardon.

After that all thynges necessary, for the enterment and funeral pōpe of the late kyng, were sumpteously prepared and done: the corps of the said defunct was brought out of his priuie chambre, into the great chāber, where he rested thre daies, and euery daie had there Dirige & Masse song by a Prelate mitered: and from thence he was conueighed into the halle, where he was also thre daies, and had a like seruice there, and so thre daies in the Chapel, and in euery of these thre places, was a hearce of wax, garnished with banners, and .ix. mourners geuyng there attendance, all the seruice tyme: and euery daye they offered, and euery place hanged with blacke clothe. Upon Wednisdaie, the .ix. daie of Maye, the corps was putte into a Chariot, couered with blacke clothe of golde drawen with .v. greate Corsers, couered with blacke Ueluet, garnished with cusshions of fine gold: and ouer the corps, was an Image or a representacion of the late kyng, laied on Cusshions of golde, and the saied image was appareled, in the kynges riche robes of estate with a croune on the hed, and ball and scepter in the handes: and the chariot was garnished with banners, and Pēcelles of tharmes of his dominions, titles and genealogies. When the chariot was thus ordered, the kinges chapell, and a gret nombre of Prelates, set forward praiyng: then folowed all the kynges seruauntes, in blacke, then folowed the Chariot: and after the Chariot .ix. mourners, and on euery side wer caried long torches and shorte, to the nombre of .vi.C. and in this ordre they came to saincte Georges felde, from Richemond. There met with theim all the Priestes and Clearkes, and religious men, within the citee, and without (whiche went formoste, before the kynges Chapell) the Maior and his brethren, with many commoners, all clothed in blacke, met with the corps at Lō- don Bridge, and so gaue their attendaūce on thesame, through the citee: and in good ordre, the compaignie passed thorough the citie, wherof the stretes on euery side, wer set with long Torches, and on the stalles stode young children, holdyng tapers, and so with greate reuerence, the Chariot was brought to the Cathedral Churche of sainct Paule, where the body was taken out, and caried into the Quire, and set vnder a goodly Herce of waxe, garnished with Banners, Pencelles, & Cusshions, where was soung a solempne Dirige, and a Masse, with a Sermon, made by the Busshoppe of Rochester: duryng whiche tyme, the kynges housholde and the mourners, reposed theim in the Busshoppes Paleis. The nexte date, the corps in like ordre was remoued, toward Westminster, sir Edward Haward, beatyng the kynges banner, on a courser trapped, in the armes of the defunct. In Westminster was a curious herse, made of .ix. principalles, full of lightes, whiche, were lighted at the comming of the corps, whiche, was taken out of the Chariot, by sixe Lordes, and set vnder the Herse, the Image or the representacion, lyng vpon the Cusshyn on a large palle of golde. The herse was double railed: within the firste railes, latte the mourners, and within the seconde raile, stoode knightes bearyng banners of sainctes, and without the same, stoode officers of armes, mes. When the mourners were set, Gartier king at Armes, cried, for the soule of the noble prince kyng Henry the.VII., late kyng of this realmes then the quire beganne Placebo, and so song Dirige, whiche beyng finished, the mourners departed into the Palaice, where they had a voyde, and so reposed for that night.

The next daie, wer three Masses solemply song by Bushoppes, and at the last Masse was offered, the kynges banner and courser, his coate of armes, his swoorde, his target, and his helme, and at thende of Masse the mourners offered vp, riche Paulles of cloth of gold and Baudekin. and when the quire sang, Libera me, the body was put into the yearthe, and then the loorde Treasorer, loorde Stewarde, loorde Chamberlein, the Treasorer, and Comptroller of the kynges houshold, brake their staues and caste theim into the graue. Then Gartier cried with a loude voyce, Viue le Roy Hēry le huitiesme, Roy Dangliter, & de Fraunce, sire Dirland. Then all the mourners, and all other that had geuen their attendance, on this funerall Obsequie, departed to the Palaice, where they had a greate and a sumptuous feast.

Wonder it were to write, of the lamentacion that was made, for this Prince emongest his seruauntes, and other of the wisest sort, and the ioy that was made for his death, by suche as were troubled, by rigor of his lawe: yet the towarde hope whiche, in all poyntes appered in the young kyng did bothe repaire and comforte, the heuie hartes of theim, whiche, had lost so wise and sage a prince: and also did put out of the myndes of suche, as were releued by thesayed kynges deathe, all their olde grudge and rancor, and confirmed their newe ioye, by the newe graunte of his pardon.

When the funeralles of this late kyng, wer thus honorably finished, greate preparacion was made, for the coronaciō of this newe kyng, whiche was appoynted on Midsomer daye nexte ensuyng: dutyng whiche preparacion, the kyng was moued, by some of his coūsail, that it should be honorable, and profitable to his realme, to take to wyfe the lady Katherin, late wyfe to Prince Arthur his brother disseased, least she hauing so greate a dowrie, might mary out of the realme, whiche, should be vnprofitable to hym: by reason of whiche motion, the kyng beyng young, and not vnderstandyng the lawe of God, espoused thesayed lady Katherine, the third daye of June, the whiche mariage, was dispensed with by Pope July, at the request of her father, kyng Farnando, contrary to the opinion of all the Cardinals of Rome, beyng diuines. This mariage of the brothers wyfe, was muche murmured agaynst, in the beginnyng, and euer more and more, searched out by learning and scripture, so that at the laste, by the determinacion, of the best vniuersities of Christendō it was adiudged detestable, and plain contrary to Goddes lawe, as you shall here, after. xx. yeres.

The kynges mariage doubtefull at the beginnyng.

If I should declare, what payn, labour, and diligence, the Taylers, Embrouderers, and Golde Smithes tooke, bothe to make and deuise garmentes, for Lordes, Ladies, knightes, and Esquiers, and also for deckyng, trappyng, and adornyng of Coursers, Jenetes, and Palfreis, it wer to long to reherse, but for a suretie, more riche, nor more straunge nor more curious worckes, hath not ben seen, then wer prepared agyanst this coronacion.

On the .xxi. daie of this moneth of June the kyng came from Grenewiche to the Tower, ouer London Bridge, and so by Grace Churche, with whome, came many a wel appareled gentelman, but in especial the Duke of Buckyngham, whiche had a goune all of goldsmithes worke, very costly, and there the kyng rested, till Saterdaie next ensuyng.

Fridaie the twentie and twoo daie of June, euery thyng beeyng in a readines, for his Coronacion: his grace with the Quene, beeyng in the Tower of London, made there Knightes of the Bathe, to the nombre of twentie and foure, with all the obseruaunces and Ceremonies, to the same belongyng. x

And the morowe folowyng beyng Saterdaie, the .xxiii. day of the said monethe, his grace, with the Quene, departed from the Tower, through the citie of Lodon, agaynst whose cõming, the streates where his grace should passe, where hanged with Tapistrie, and clothe of Arras. And the greate parte, of the Southe side of Chepe, with clothe of gold, and some parte of Cornehill also. And the streates railed and barred, on the one side, from ouer agaynst Grace Churche, vnto Bredstreate, in Chepeside, where euery occupacion stode, in their liueries in order, beginnyng with base and meane occupacions, and so assendyng to the worshipfull crafftes: highest and lastly stode the Maior, with the Aldermen. The Goldsmithes stalles, vnto the ende of the Olde Chaunge, beeing replenished with Virgins in white, with braunches of white Ware: the prieستes and clerkes, in riche Copes with Crosses and censers of siluer, with censyng his grace, and the Quene also as they passed. The features of his body, his goodly personage, his amiable visage, princely countenaunce, with the noble qualities of his royall estate, to euery man knowen, needeth no reherssall, considerying, that for lacke of cunnyng, I cannot expresse the giftes of grace and of nature, that God hath endowed hym with all: yet partly, to discriue his apparell, it is to bee noted, his grace ware in his vpperst apparell, a robe of Crimosyn Veluet, furred with Armyns, his iacket or cote of raised gold, the placard embrowdered with Diamõdes Rubies, Emeraudes, greate Pearles, and other riche Stones, a greate Baudrike aboute his necke, of greate Balasses. The Trapper of his Horse, Damaske gold, with a depe purfell of Armyns, his knightes and Esquires for his body, in Crimosyn Veluet, and all the gentelmen, with all other of his chappell, and all his officers, and houshold seruauntes, wer appareled in Skarlet. The Barons of the fiue Portes, bare the Canaby, or clothe of estate: For to resite vnto you, the greate estates by name, the order of their goyng, the nombre of the lordes Spirituall and temporall, Knightes, Esquires, and gentelmen, and of their costly and rich xx xxx xl

apparell, of seuerall deuises and fashions, who tooke vp his horse best, or who was richest besene, it would aske long tyme, and yet I should omitte many thynges, and faile of the nombre, for they were verie many: wherefore I passe ouer, but this I dare well saie, there was no lacke or scarsitie of clothe of Tissue, clothe of Golde, clothe of Siluer, Broderie, or of Golde smithes workes: but in more plentie and abundaunce, then hath been seen, or redde of at any tyme before, and thereto many and a greate nombre of chaines of Golde, and Bauderikes, bothe massy and greate. Also before the kynges highnes, rode twoo gentle mẽne, richely appareled, and aboute their bodies trauers, they did beare twoo Robes the one of the Duchie of Guyon, and the other for the Duchie of Normandie, with Hattes on their heddes, poudered with Armyns, for the estate of thesame. Nexte followed twoo persones of good estate, the one bearyng his cloke, the other his hatte, appareled bothe in Golde Smithes woorke, and Broudery, their horses Trapped, in burned Siluer, drawen ouer with Cordes of Grene silke and Gold, the edges and borders of their apparell, beyng fretted with Gold of Damaske. After them came sir Thomas Brandon, Master of the kynges Horse, clothed in tissue, Broudered with Roses of fine Gold, and trauerse his body, a greate Bauderike of Gold, greate and massy, his Horse trapped in Golde, leadyng by a rayne of Silke, the kynges spare Horse trapped barde wyse, with harneis Broudered with Bullion Golde, curiously wroughte by Golde Smithes. Then nexte followed, the nyne chyldren of honor, vpon greate courlers, appareled on their bodies, in Blewe Veluet, poudered with Floure Delices of Gold, and chaines of Golde Smithes woorke, euery one of their horses, trapped with a trappet of the kynges stile, as of Englande, and Fraunce, Gascoyne, Guyan, Normandy, Angeow, Cornewall, Wales, Irelande, &c. wrought vpon Veluettes, with Embrouderie, and Gold Smithes worke.

xx Then next folowyng in ordre, came the Quenes retinew, as Lordes, Knyghtes, Esquires, and gentle menne in their degrees, well mounted, and richely appareled in Tissues, clothe of Golde, of Siluer, Tynsels, and Veluettes Embroudered, freshe and goodly to behold. The Quene then by name Katheryne, sittyng in her Litter, borne by twoo White Palferies, the Litter couered, and richely appareled, and the Palferies Trapped in White clothe of gold, her persone appareled in white Satyn Embroudered, her heeire hãging doune to her backe, of a very great length, bewtefull and goodly to behold, and on her hedde a Coronall, set with many riche orient stones. Next after, sixe honorable personages on xl White Palfreis, all appareled in Clothe of Golde, and then a Chariot couered, and the Ladies therein, all appareled in Clothe of Golde. And another sort of Ladies, and then another Chariot, then the Ladies next the Chariot, also in ordre, euery one after their degrees, in clothe of Gold, Clothe of Siluer, Tynselles, and Veluet, with Embrouderies, euery couplement of thesaied Chariotes, and the draught harnesses, wer poudered with Armins, mixt with clothe of Gold: and with muche ioye and honor, came to Westminster, where was high preparacion made, aswell for thesaied Coronacion, as also for the solempne feast and iustes, therupon to be had and doen.

The morowe folowyng beyng sondate, and also Midsomer daie, this noble prince with his Quene, at time conuenient, vnder their Canabies borne by the Barons of the fiue Portes, went from thesaied Palaice, to Westminster Abbey vpon clothe, called vulgarly cloth of Ray, the whiche clothe was cut and spoyled, by the rude and common people, immediatly after their repaire into the Abbey, where, accordyng to the sacred obseruaunce, and auncient custome his grace with the Quene, were annoynted and crouned, by the Archebusshop of Cantorbury, with other prelates of the realme there present, and the nobilitie, with a greate multitude of Commons of thesame. It was demaunded of the people, whether they would receiue, obey, and take thesame moste noble Prince, for their kyng, who with greate reuerence, loue, and desire, saied and cried, ye ye. After the whiche solempnitie, and Coronacion finished, the lordes spirituall and tẽporall, did to hym homage, and returned to Westminster hall, with the Quenes grace euery one vnder their canabies, where by the lorde Marshall, and his tipped staues, was made rome, and euery lord, and other noble men, accordyng to their tenures, before claimed and bewed, seen, and allowed by the lordes, and other of his graces cõsayll, entred into suche rome and office that daie, to execute their seruices accordyngly. The kynges estate on the right hand, and the Quenes on the left hand, the cobard of .ix. stages, their noble personages beyng set: first, at the bryngyng of the first course, the trumpettes blew vp. And in came the Duke of Buckyngham, mounted vpon a greate courser, richely trapped, and enbroudered, and the lorde Stewarde, in likewise on an horse, trapped in clothe of Golde, ridyng before the seruice, whiche was sumpteous, with many subtleties, straunge deuyses, with seuerall poses and many deintie dishes. At the kynges fete, vnder the table, wer certain gentelmen. And in likewise with the quene, who there continued, during that long & royal feast. What should I speake or write, of the sũpteous fine, and delicate meates, prepared for this high and honorable coronaciõ, prouided for aswel in the parties beyond the sea, as in many and sũdery places, within this realme, where God so abũdãtly hath sent suche plentie and foyson? Or of the honorable order of the seruices, the cleane handelyng & breaking of meates, the ordryng of the dishes, with the plẽtifull abundaunce. So that none of any estate beeyng there; did lacke, nor no honorable or worshipfull persone, went vnfeasted. The seconde course beyng serued: in at the haule doore entered a knight, armed at al poyntes, his bases rich tissue enbroudered, a great plume & a sũpteous of Distriche fethers on his helmet, sittyng on a great courser, trapped in tissue, and enbroudered with tharmes of England, and of Fraunce, and an herauld of armes before hym. And passyng through the halle, presẽted ted hymself with humble reuerence, before the kynges mateste, to whō, Garter kyng of herauldes, cried and said with a loude voyce, sir knight from whēce come you, and what is your pretence? This knightes name was sir Robert Dimmocke, Champion to the kyng, by tenure of his enheritaunce, who answered the said kyng of Armes, in effects after this maner: Sir, the place that I come from, is not materiall, nor the cause of my repaire hether, is not concernyng any matter, of any place or cōtrey, but onely this. And there with all, commaunded his Herauld to make an Oyes: then said the knight, to the kyng of armes, now shal ye x here, the cause of my commyng and pretence. Then he commaunded his awne Herauld, by Proclamation to saie: if there be any persone, of what estate or degree soeuer he be, that wil saie or proue, that king Henry the eight, is not the rightfull enheritor, & kyng of this realme, I sir Robert Dimmoke here his Champion, offre my gloue, to fight in his quetell, with any persone to thutteraunce, whiche Proclamacion was made in sundery places of the halle: And at euery tyme, his gauntlette caste doune, in the maintenaunce therof. After whiche seuerall proclamaciōs doen, and offers made, the said knight or champion, ettsones repaired to the kynges presence, demaundyng drinke, to whō the kynges grace sent xx a cup of gold, with wine, wherof after this knight had drōke, he demaūded the couer of the said cuppe, whiche to hym was also deliuered: that doen, he departed out of the halle, with the said cup & couer, as his awne

The maner of his tenure is this, that at the Coronacion of the kyng, he shall go to the armarie, and there take the kynges best herneis, saue one, the best and rich bases sauyng one, then of the plumes, or other thynges for the garnishyng of his creast or helme, and so to the stable, there taking the next courser or horse, to the best, with like trapper, and so furnished, to enter vt supra, and his office dooen, to haue all these thynges, with the Cuppe of Gold and couer to his awne vse.

xx After the departure of the said Champion, the kyng of Armes, with all the Herauldes, and other officers of Armes, made Proclamacions in seuerall places of the halle, cryng largesse. Briefly to passe ouer, this high and long solempnitie, of this honorable Coronaciō and feast, more honorable then of the great Cesar, whō, many Historiographers, so high set out and magnified, if the Latins of England, were not promoted or auaunsed, to dignities and promocions, onelesse they firste should (as other poore clerkes, in the parties beyond the sea, exalte and set furthe the iestes & Chronicles, of their natiue countreys, with high laude & prayse and in some parte more then truth, for small mede or reward doo) put in xl writyng, either in Englishe or Latin tongue, the noble triūphes, chiualrous feates, valiant actes, victorious battailes, & other noble Jestes of this reame, & in especiall of, our tyme & knowlege, of this moste valiant and goodly prince, it should appere muche more honorable, then any other stories: But promocion and benefices, putte awaie laboure and payne, albeit the grate parte of theim will saie, that the high Cure and charge is to edifie the people, with the word of God, taking cure of the soules: ther against I will not replie, but no displeasure, I perceiue that thei take as great cure, for the profite of their purses, wyth pleasure of huntyng and haukyng, besides other their pastymes, after they com to the best of their promotion, with smal kepyng of hospitalitie, as other whiche were their predecessors, and muche worse, so that parte of their pastymes spent in writyng, and settyng furth the testes, actes and deedes, of the nobilitie of Englande, with the manyfold commodities of thesame, should muche ennoble the princes thereof, seeyng by dayly experience, Bisshoppes, Archebisshoppes, Abbottes, and other clarkes, in the parties beyonde the sea, aswell learned, as of high knowlege, and better linage, and as vertеous as they, daily enforce theimselfes, to auaunce their Princes, their Realmes, and natyue Countreis, aswell in Latin, as in their vulgare toungue. But to returne to thende of this honorable feast, the tables auoyded, the wafers were brought. Then Syr Stephen Jenyns, that tyme Maior of London, whom, the kyng before he satte doune to dynner, had dubbed knight, which, beganne the Erles Table that date, arose from the place where he satte, to serue the kyng with Jpocras, in a Cuppe of Golde, whiche Cuppe, after his grace had dronken therof, was with the couer, geuē vnto thesaid sir Stephen, like as other his predecessors, Maiors of thesaied citie, wer wont to haue at the Coronacion of the kyng. Then after the Surnap laied, and that the kynges grace, & the Quene had washed, euery of thē vnder their Clothes of estate, the tables beyng auoyded, went vnto their chambers.

For the more honor, and ennobling of this triumphaunt Coronaciō, there wer prepared bothe Justes and Turnies, to be dooen in the Palaice of Westminster, where, for the kynges grace, and the Quene, was frained a faire house, couered with Tapisstrie, and hanged wyth riche clothes of Arras, and in thesaied Palaice, was made a curious Fountain, and ouer it a Castle: on the toppe thereof, a greate Croune Emperiall, all the imbatellyng with Roses, and Pomegranetes gilded: and vnder and aboute thesaied Castle, a curious Vine, the leaues and grapes thereof, gilded with fine Golde, the walles of thesame Castle coloured, White and Grene losengis. And in euery losenge, either a Rose or a Pomegranet, or a Sheffe of Arrowes, or els. H. and. K. gilded with fine Gold, with certain Arches or Turrettes gilded, to support thesame Castle. And the targettes of the armes, of the defēdauntes, appoynted for thesaied Justes there vpon sumptеously set. And out at seuerall places, of thesame Castle, aswell the date of the coronaciō as at thesaid daies of the Justes & Turney, out of the mouthes of certain beastes, or gargels did runne red white, & claret wine. Thenterprisers of these Justes, was Thomas lorde Haward, heire apparaunt to the erle of Surrey, sir Edward Haward Admirall, his brother, the lorde Richarde, brother to the Marques Dorset, sir Edmōd Haward, sir Thomas Kneuet, & Charles Brandō esquire. The trōpettes blew to the feld, the fresh yōg galātes & noble noble menne gorgeously appareled, with curious deuises, of cuttes and of embrouderies. aswell in their coates, as in trappers for their horses, some of gold, some in siluer, some in Tynsels, and diuerse other in goldesmithes worke, goodly to behold, first entered the feld in takyng vp and turnyng their horses, netly & freshly. Then folowed a deuise, (caried by strength of menne, and other prouision) framed like a Castle, or a Turret, wrought with fine clothe of Gold: the toppe wherof was spred with Roses and Pomegranates, hangyng doune on euery side, of thesaied deuise, wherein was a Lady, bearyng a shilde of Christall named Pallas. After whom, thesaied Lorde Haward, with his compaignions folowed, armed at al poyntes, their Bailes, and Bardes, or Trappers, were of Grene Veluet, beaten with Roses, and Pomegranates of Golde, brodered with fringes of Damaske Golde. Thesaied deuise or Turret, beyng brought before the kyng, the Lady Pallas, presented thesaied persones, whom she named her scholers, to the kynges highnes, beseechyng thesame, to accept them as her scholers, who wer desirous to serue hym to the encrease of their honors, whiche saied scholers, had about them on foote, to the nombre of an hundred persones, freshely appareled, in Veluettes of sundrey coloures, with Hose and Bonettes, accordyng to thesame. And further, thesaied Ladye desired the kyng, that it might please his grace, that her saied scholers, might be defendauntes to al commers whiche request was graunted.

Then came in an other bende of horse men, freshly and well appareled in clothe of gold, in siluer, in Goldsmithes worke, and brouderie, to the nombre of three score, with trappers accordingly to their garmentes, with greate Bauderikes, Collers, and Cheines of Golde, aboute their neckes, and trauerse their bodies, euery man with a coyfe of golde on his hedde, and a greate plume of fethers therevpon, some of one coloure, and some of an other, enteryng before into the felde, with Drõmes and Fifes a greate nombre, euery man takyng vp his horse, in his best maner, aswell for their Ladies, as also for laude or prayse to bee geuen theim. After whom, folowed a good nombre of footemen, in Veluettes, & other silkes, cutte and embroudered, with hose to thesame accordingly, & bonettes and other furniture, after a freshe and lustie fashion. Nexte to theim came on horse backe, eight persones, whose names were, sir Jhon Pechy, Sir Edwarde Neuell, Sir Edwarde Guldeforde, Sir Jhon Carre, Sir Wyllyam Parre, Sir Gyles Capell, Sir Griffith Dun, and Sir Roulande, Armed also at all poyntes, with shyldes of their awne armes, with riche Plumes, and other diuises on their hedde peces their Bases and Trappers of Tissew, clothe of Golde, Siluer and veluet, and nexte before theim, a gentle manne on horseback, in a coate of Blewe Veluet, embroudered with golde, and his horse Trapped in the same suite, with a spere of Golde on his thigh, and thesame presented to the Quene: saiyng, that it was enformed those knightes of his compaignie, how that Dame Pallas, had presented sixe of her scholers to the

Kyng; but whether they came to learne, or to teache feactes of Armes, they knewe not. And further declared, that his knightes were come, to doo feactes of armes, for the loue of Ladies, wherefore he besought her grace, to license those knightes to proue theim selfes, agaynst Dame Pallas Scholers: and that in case her Scholers brake more speres, on thesayed knightes, by the viewe of the Iudges, and the report of the Heraudes, then thesame knightes should doue on theim, then thesaied Scholers of Pallas knightes, to haue the spere of Gold for their prise. And if the knightes brake more speres, then Dame Pallas Scholers, thesaied knightes to haue the Christall Shilde. The whiche request to theim graunted, the Iustes beganne, where euery manne dyd acquite hym self, well and valiauntly, but who had the pryce of other, I knowe not, the night commyng on, the Iustes ended. r

The next daie approched, the foresaied defenders, Scholers to Pallas on Horsebacke, armed Cape a pie, the one side of their Bases, and Bardes of their Horses white Veluet, embroudered with Roses of gold and other embrouderies, the other side Grene Veluet, embroudered with Pome granetes of Golde, euery one of theim on his hedde pece, had an heare of flatte Golde of Damaske, presented them selfes, before the kyng ready to Tourney. rr

The whiche Parke or diuyse, beyng brought before rrr the Quene had certayn gates thereof opened, the Dere ranne out thereof into the Palaice, the greye houndes were lette slippe and killed the Dere: the whiche Dere so killed, were presented to the Quene and the Ladies, by the foresayed knightes. Crocheman, whiche the daye before brought in the spere of Golde, there declared, that thesame knightes were seruauntes to Diana, and beeyng in their pastyme of huntyng, newes were brought vnto theim, that Dame Pallas knightes, were come into these partes, to doo deedes of armes: wherefore, they had lefte their huntyng and chase, and repaired also thether, to encounter with the knightes of Pallas, and so to fight with thē, for the loue of ladyes to thut- tl terāce: saiyng that yf Pallas knightes vanquyshed the other, or made them to leue the feld, then thei to haue the dere killed, and the greye houndes that slewe them. And incase Dianas knightes, ouercame the other, they to haue their swordes, and none other thyng more. Wherupon the Quene and Ladies, sent to the kyng to haue his aduyse and pleasure in this this behalfe,his grace conceyuyng,that there was some grudge,and displeasure betwene theim,thynkyng if suche requeste wer to theim graunted,some inconuenience might ensue,would not there vnto agree,so that for the appeasyng thereof, it was awarded that bothe parties, should tourney togethers,geuyng but a certayn strokes, whiche dooen thei departed: And so these Justes brake vp,and the prices geuen to euery mã after his dysertes.

This yere the kyng pardoned the lorde Henry, brother to the Duke of Buckyngham, beeyng committed to the Tower vpon suspicion of treason laied vnto hym,but not proued, and sone after at the Parliament, created hym Erle of Wylshire.

Also this yere, the kyng ordeined fiftie Gentle menne to bee speres, euery of theim to haue an Archer,a Dimilaunce,and a Cuttell, and euery Spere to haue three greate Horses,to bee attendaunt on his persone,of the whiche bende, the Erle of Exsex was Lieuetenaunt, and sir Jhon Pechie Capitain, who endured but a while, the apparell and charges were so greate,for there were none of theim, but they and their Horses, were appareled and trapped in Clothe of Golde, Siluer, and Golde Smithes woorke,and their seruauntes richely appareled also.

This yere also, was a greate Pestilence in the toune of Caleys, and muche people died,in so muche that the kyng,at the request of his counsaill of Caleis,considering the weakenes of the toune, sent thether Sir Jhon Pechie, with three hundred menne to tary there, who continued there vnto suche time,that the plague was ceassed,and newe souldiours admitted,to suche roumes as then were vacant, and then returned into Englande.Furthermore, this yere the kyng somoned his Parliament, in the monethe of Nouembre,whiche began in the moneth of Januarie ensuyng, whereof sir Thomas Jnglefelde was chosen Speaker, in the whiche session emonges other thynges there enacted,it was ordeined by aucthoritie of Parliament,that sir Thomas Empson knighte,and Edmund Dudeley Esquire,late Counsailers to kyng Henry the seuenth, should and wer attainted of hault treason.

Thesame yere the plague was greate, and reigned in diuerse pattes of the realme,the kyng kept his Christemas at Richemond. And the.xij. daie of Januarie,diuerse gentelmen freshely appareled,prepared theimselfes to Juste,vnknowē to the kinges grace,whereof,he being secretely informed,causeb hymself,and one of his priuie chambre,called Willia Compton to bee secretly armed,in the litle Parke of Richemond:and so came into the Justes,vnknowen to all persones,and vnloked for: The kyng ranne neuer openly before,and there wer broken many staues,and greate praise geuen to the twoo straungers,but specially to one,whiche was the kyng: howbeit, at a courtse by misfortune,sir Edward Neuell Esquire brother to the Lorde of Burgayne, did tume against Master Cumpton,and hurte hym sore,and was likely to dye. One persone there was,that knew the kyng,and cried, God saue the kyng,with that,all the people wer astonied, and then the kyng discouered himself to the greate comforte of all the people.

The kyng sone after, came to Westminster with the Quene, and all their train: And on a tyme beyng there, his grace, therles of Essex, Wiltshire, and other noble menne, to the numbre of twelue, came sodainly in a mornyng, into the Quenes Chambre, all appareled in shorte cotes, of Kentishe kēdal, with hodes on their heddes, and hosen of thesame, euery one of theim, his bowe and arrowes, and a sworde and a bucklar, like out lawes, or Robyn Hodes men, wherof the Quene, the Ladies, and al other, there were abashed, aswell for the straunge light, as also for their sodain commyng, and after certayn daunces, and pastime made, thei departed. On Shroue Sunday thesame yere, the kyng prepared a goodly banket, in the Parliament Chambre at Westminster, for all the Ambassadours, whiche, then wer here, out of diuerse realmes and countreis The banket beyng ready, the kyng leadyng the Quene, entred into the Chambre, then the Ladies, Ambassadours, and other noble menne, folowed in ordre. The kyng caused the Quene, to kepe the estate, and then satte the Ambassadours and Ladyes as they were Marshalled by the kyng, who would not sit, but walked from place to place, makyng chere to the Quene, and the straungers: Sodaynly the kyng was gone. And shortly after, his grace with the Erle of Essex, came in appareled after Turkey fashiō, in long robes of Bawdkin, powdered with gold, hattes on their heddes of Crimosyn Veluet, with greate rolles of Gold, girded with two swordes, called Cimiteries, hanging by greate bawderikes of gold. After that the Quene, the lordes and, ladyes, such as would had played, the sayd mommers departed, and put of the same apparel, & sone after entred into the Chamber, in their vsuell apparell. This yere also came Ambassadours from the kyng of Arragon and Castell into this Realme, who were hyghly entertayned and royally receyued, and repayred muche to the Courte. It happened on a daye, that there were certayne noble men made a wager to runne at the tynge, and parties were taken, and whiche partye attayned or toke awaye the tynge oftneſt with a certayne courſes, ſhould wynne the wager. Whereof, the kynges grace hearyng, offered to be on the one partie with. vi. compa-nions: The Ambaſſadours hearyng therof, were muche deſirous to ſee thys wager tried, and ſpecially the Ambaſſadours of Spaigne, who had neuer ſene the kyng in harneis. At the day appointed, the kyng was mounted on a goodly Courſer, trapped in purpul veluet cutte, the inner ſyde whereof was wrought with flatte golde of Damaſke in the ſtoole, and the veluet on the otherſyde cut in letters: So that the gold appered as though it had bene enbroudered with certayne reaſons or poyſes. And on the Veluet betwene the letters were faſtened, caſtels and ſhe- x

Euery man did runne twelue courſes, the kyng did beare away thre ring v. tymes, and atteyned it thre: and theſe courſes thus fynished, the Spa-niſh Ambaſſadours deſyred to haue ſome of the badges or deuiſes, whi-che were on the kynges trapper: his grace therof knowing, commaūded, Euery of them to take therof what it pleaſed them, who in effect toke all or the more parte: for in the beginning they thought they had bene coū-terfait, and not of golde.

In this yere from diuers Realmes and Countreys came many Am- xxi

ON May daye, then next folowyng in the. ii. yere of his reygne, hys grace beyng yonge, and wyllyng not to be idell, roſe in the morнynge very early to fetche May or grene bows, hym ſelfe freche and rychely appareyled, & clothed all his Knyghtes, Squiers and Gentelmen in whyte Satyn, and all hys Garde and Yomen of the Croune in white ſarcenet: and ſo went euery man with his bowe and arrowes ſhotyng to the wood, and ſo repaired againe too xl the Courte, euery man with a grene bough in his cappe, and at hys re-turnyng, many hearynge of his goynge a Maiyng, were deſyrous to ſee hym ſhote, for at that tyme his grace ſhotte as ſtronge and as greate a length length as any of his garde. There came to his grace a certain man with bowe and arrowes, and desyred his grace to take the muster of hym, and to se hym shote: and at that tyme hys grace was contented, the man put his one fote in his bosome, and so did shote, and shot a very good shote, and well towardes his matke, wherof not onely his grace but all other greatly mervey led. So the kyng gaue hym a rewarde for his so doyng, whiche persone afterwardes of the people and of them in the courte was called fote in bosome.

The same yere in the feaste of Pentecoste, holden at Grenewyche, that is to saye the Thursday in the same weke, hys grace with two other with hym chalenged all commers, to fyghte with theim at the barriers with targot & casting the spere of. viii. fote long, and that done his grace with the sayed two aides to fight euery of them. xii. strokes with two handed swordes, with and against all commers, none except being a gentelman, where the kyng behaued hym selfe so wel, and deliuered hym selfe so valiauntly by his hardy prowes and greate strengthe that the prayse and laude was geuen to his grace, and his aides: Notwithstanding that diuers valiaunt and strong persons had assailed hym and his aides.

From thence the whole Courte remoued to Wyndesore, then begyn-xx ning his progresse, exercisyng hym selfe daily in shotyng, singing, daunsyng, wrastelyng, casting of the barre, playyng at the recorders, flute, virginals, and in settyng of songes, makyng of ballettes, & did set. iii. goodly masses, euery of them fyue partes, whiche were song oftentimes in hys chapel, and afterwardes in diuerse other places. And whan he came to Okyng, there were kept bothe Justes and Turneys: the rest of thys progresse was spent in huntyng, hawkyng, and shotyng.

The kyng beyng thus in hys progresse harde euery daye more and more complaintes of Empson and Dudley, wherfore he sent wrytes to the Shyrifes of London, to put them in execucion, and so the. xviii. day xxx of August, they were both behedded at the Towre hyll, and their bodies buried and their heades.

Empson and Dudley behedded.

The sated progresse finished, his grace, the Quene, with all their whole trayne, in the moneth of October folowyng, remoued to Grenewyche. The kyng not mynded to se young Gentelmen, vnexpert in marcial feates, caused a place to be prepared within the parke of Grenewych for the Quene and the ladies to stande and se the fyght with battaill axes that should be done there, where the kyng hym selfe armed, fought with one Gyot a Gentelman of Almayne, a talle man, and a good man of armes. And than after they had done, they marched alwaye two and twoo togexl thers, and so dyd their feates and enterprices euery man very well: All beit, it happened the sayed Gyot to fyght with Sir Edward Haward, whiche Gyot was by hym stryken to the grounde.

The morow after this enterprise done, the kyng with the Quene came to the Towre of London. And to thentent that there shoulde no displeasure nor malice be borne by any of those Gentelmen, whiche fought with the axe agaynst other. The kyng gaue vnto them a certain summe in golde, valewed at. cc. marke, to make a banket amongest them selfes with all: The whiche banket was made at the Fishewongers Halle in Teames strete where they all met to the number of foure and twenty, al apareiled in one sute or liuery, after Almain fashion, that is to say, their vtter garmentes all of yealow Satyne, yealow hosen, yealow shoes girdels scaberdes, and bonettes with yealow fethers, their garmentes and hosen al cutte and lyned with white Satyn, and their scaberdes wound a bought with Satyne: After their banket ended, they went by torche light to the towre, presēting them selfes before the kyng, who took pleasure to beholde them.

From thence the. viii. day of Nouember, his grace remoued to Rychemond, and willed to be declared to al noble men and gentelmen, that his grace with two aides, that is to wit master Charles Brandon, and master Compton, duryng two dayes would aunswere all cōmers with spere at the Tilt one daye, and at turney with swordes, the other.

And to accomplyshe this enterprice the. xiii. daye of Nouember, hys grace armed at all peces with his twoo aydes entred the fielde, their bases and trappers were of clothe of golde, set with redde Roses, ingrepled with golde of broudery: The counter parte came in freshly, apparepled euery man after his deuise. At these Justes the kyng brake more staues then any other, and therfore had the pryce: At the Turney in lykewyse, the honour was his. The second night were diuers straūgers of Maximilian the Emperours court, and Ambassadours of Spaygne with the kyng at supper: when they had supped, the kyng willed them to go into the Quenes chamber, who so dyd. And in the meane season, the kynge with. xv. other, apareled in Almayne Jackettes of Crymosyn, and purple Satyn, with long quartered sleues, with hosen of thesame sute. their bonettes of whyte Ueluet, wrapped in flat golde of Damaske, with bysers and whyte plumes, came in with a momery, and after a certayne tyme that they had played with the Quene and the straungers, they departed. Then sodenly entred syx mynstrels, rychely appareled, playyng on their instrumentes, and then folowed. xiiii. persones Gentelmen, all appareyled in pealowe Satyne, cut lyke Almaynes, bearyng torches. After them came. vi disguised in whyte Satyne and grene, enbroudered and set with letters and castels of fyne golde in bullion, the garmentes were of straunge faction, with also straunge cuttes, euery cutte knytte with poyntes of fyne golde, and tassels of thesame, their hosen cutt and tyed in lykewyse. their bonettes of clothe of syluer, wounde wyth golde. Fyrst of these. vi. was the kyng, the erle of Esser, Charles Brandon, Sir Edward Hawarde, syr Thomas Kneuet, & syr Henry Guylforde. Then part of the Gentlemen bearyng torches departed, and shortly returned. after whome came in. vi. ladies, apareled in garmentes of Crymosyne Satyn enbroudered and trauessed with clothe of gold, cut in Pomegranettes and yokes, strynged after the faction of Spaygne. Then the saied.vi.men daunced with these.vi.ladies:and after that they had danced a season the ladies toke of the mens visars, whereby they were knowen:Whereof the Quene and the straungers muche praysed the kynge, and ended the pastyme.

It is to be noted that at this tyme the Quene was great with chylde, and shortly after this pastyme, she toke her chamber at Rychemond,for the whiche cause the kynge kept his Christmas there. And on Newyeres day,the fyrst day of January,the Quene was deliuered of a Prince to the great gladnes of the Realme,for the honour of whom,fyers were x made,and diuerse vessels with wyne, set for suche as woulde take therof in certaine streates in London, and generall processions thereupon too laude God. As touchyng the preparacion of the Princes Christenyng, I ouerpasse,which was honourably done,whose godfathers at the font were the Archebishop of Caunterbury,and the erle of Surrey,Godmother the lady Katherine Countesse of Deuonshyre, Daughter to kynge Edward the fourth.

Agaynst the.xii. daye or the daie of the Epiphanie at nyghte, before the banket in the Hall at Rychemond, was a pageaunt deuised lyke a mountayne,glisteryng by nyght, as though it had bene all of golde and xx set with stones,on the top of the whiche mountayne was a tree of golde the braunches & bowes frysed with gold,spreding on euery side ouer the mountayne,with roses and Pomegranettes, the whiche mountayn was with vices brought vp towardes the kyng, and out of thesame came a ladye,appareiled in clothe of golde,and the children of honour called the Henchemen, whiche were freshly disguysed, and daunced a Morice before the kyng. And that done, reentred the mountayne,and then it was drawen backe, and then was the wassaill or banket brought in, and so brake vp Christmas.

Shortly after,and before the Quenes churchynge, the kyng rode too xxx Walsingham.The Quene being churched or purified,the kyng and she remoued from Rychemond to Westminster,where was preparacion for a solempne Justes in the honour of the Quene,the kyng being one, and with hym thre aydes:his grace being called Cure loial, the lorde Willia erle of Deuonshire, called Bon voloire, Sir Thomas Kneuet named Bonespoir, Sir Edwarde Neuile,called Valiaunt desire, whose names were set vpon a goodly table, and the table hanged in a tree, curiously wrought,and they were called Les quater Chiualers de la forrest saluigne, these foure to runne at the tilte against all commers, with other certayn Articles comprised in the said table.

xl A place in the Pallayce was prepared for the kynge, and also the Quene, rychely hanged,the inner parte with cloth of golde, and the vt-ter with ryche clothe of Arras. These Justes beganne the. xiii. daye of Februarye. After that,that the Quene with her trayne of ladyes had taken their places, into the Palays was conueyed a pageaunt of a greate quantitie, made like a forest with rockes, hylles and dales, with diuers sundrie trees, floures, hathornes, ferne and grasse, with six forsters, standynge within thesame forrest, garnished in cotes and hodes of grene Veluet, by whome lay a greate number of speres, all the trees, herbes, and floures, of thesame forrest were made of grene Veluet, grene Damaske, and Silke of diuers colours, Satyn and Sercenet. In the middes of this forrest was a castell standing, made of golde, and before the Castell gate sat a gentelman freshly apparelled, makyng a garlande of Roses for the pryce. This forrest, was drawen, as it were by strength of twoo great beastes, a Lyon and an Antelop, the Lyon florished all ouer with Damaske golde. The Antelop was wrought all ouer with syluer of Damaske, his beames and hornes and tuskes of golde: these beastes were led with certayne men appareiled like wildemen, or woodhouses, their bodies, heddes, faces, handes and legges, couered with grene Silke flosshed: On either of thesaid Antelop and Lyon, sate a ladye rychely appareiled, the beastes were tied to the pageaunt with great chaynes of golde, as horses be in the carte. When the pageaunt retted before the Quene, the forenamed forsters blew their hornes, then the deuise or pageant opened on all sydes, and out issued the forsaied foure knyghtes, armed at all peces, euery of them a spere in his hande on horsebacke with great plumes on their heddes, their basses and trappers of clothe of golde, euery of them his name enbroudered on his basse and trapper: on the other parte with great noyse, aswell of Trompettes as of Drommes entred into the fielde. The erle of Essex, the lord Thomas Hawarde with many other cleane armed, their trappers and basses all of Crymosyn Satyn enbroudered with braunches of Pomegarnettes of golde, and postes with many a freshe Gentelman, rydyng before them, their fotemen also well appareiled: And so the Justes beganne, and endured all that daye.

The morow beyng the. xiii. daye of February after dynner, at tyme conuenient, the Quene with the ladyes repaired to see the Justes, the trompettes blew vp, and in came many a Noble man and Gentelman, rychely appareiled, takynge vp their horses, after whome folowed certayne lordes appareiled, thei and their horses in clothe of golde and russet tynsell: knyghtes in clothe of golde and russet Veluet. And a greate number of Gentelmen on fote, in russet satyn and pealow, and yomen in russet Damaske and pealow, all the nether parte of euery mans hosen Skarlet, and pealow cappes. Then came the kyng vnder a Pauilion of clothe of golde, and purpull Veluet enbroudered, and poudered with H. and. K. of fyne golde, the compas of the Pauilion aboue, enbroudered rychely, and valenced with flat golde, beten in wyre, with an Imperiall croune in the top of fyne golde, his bases and trapper of clothe of gold, fretted with Damaske gold, the trapper pendant to the tail. A crane and chafron of stele, in the frount of the chafron was a goodly plume set full of muscrons or trimblyng spangles of golde. After folowed his three aydes, euery of them vnder a Pauilion of Crymosyn damaske, a purple

poudred with H. and K. of fyne golde, valenced and frynged with golde of damaske: on the top of euery Pauilion a greate K. of golde fmythes worke, the number of the Gentelmen and yomen attendant a fote, appareiled in ruffet and yealow was. C. lxviii. Then next these Pauilions came twelue children of honor, fitting euery of them on a greate courfer, rychely trapped and enbroudered in feuerall deuifes and factions, where lacked neither brouderie nor goldfmythes worke, fo that euery child and horfe in deuice and faction was contrary to other, whiche was goodly to beholde.

Then on the countet part, entred Sir Charles Brandon, fitfte on horfebacke in a long robe of ruffet Satyn, lyke a reclufe or a religious perfon and his horfe trapped in thefame feafte, without dromme or noyfe of mynftrelfye, puttynge a byl of petition to the Quene, the effect wherof was, that if it would pleafe her to licence hym to runne in her preference, he woulde do it gladly, and if not, then he woulde departe as he came. After that his requeft was graunted, then he put of hys fayed habyte, and was armed at all peces, with rych bafes & horfe, alfo rychely trapped, and fo did runne his horfe to the tylte ende, where diuers men on fote appareiled in ruffet fatyn awaited on hym: next after came in alone yr young Henry Guylford Efquier, hym felfe and his horfe in ruffet clothe of golde and clothe of fyluer, clofed in a deuice, or a pageant made lyke a Caftell or a Turret, wrought of Ruffet cercenet flozence, wrought, and fet out in golde with hys worde or pofye, and all his men in Ruffet fatyn and white, with hofen to thefame, and their bonettes of lyke colours, demaunding alfo licence of the Quene to runne, whiche to hym graunted toke place at thende of the tylte. Then came next the Marques Dorfet and fyr Thomas Bulleyn, lyke two pilgrems from faint James, in taberdes of blacke Ueluet, with palmers hattes on their helmettes, wyth long Jacobs ftaues in their handes, their horfe trappers of blacke Uelyr uet, their taberdes, hattes, and trappers fet with fcaloppe fchelles of fine golde, and ftrippes of blacke Uelvet, euery ftrip fet with a fcalop fhell, their feruauntes al in blacke Satyn, with fcalop fhelles of golo in their breaftes. Sone after came in the lorde Henry of Buckyngham Erle of Wylfhire, hym felfe and his horfe appareiled in clothe of fyluer, enbroudered with a pofye, or his worde, and arrowes of golde in a pofye, called La maifon du refuge, made of Crymofyn damafke, broudered with Rofes and arrowes of golde, on the tope a greyhonde of fyluer, bearynge a tree of Pomegarnettes of golde, the braunches therof were fo large that it ouer fpredde the pagent in all partes. Then entred Syr Gyles Capel, yl Syr Rouland with many other knightes, rychely armed and appareiled. And thus beganne the Juftes, whiche was valiauntly atcheued by the kyng and his aides, emonges whome his grace attcyned the pryce. The Juftes kynyfhed, euery man with drew, the kynge was difarmed, and at time cõuenient he and the Quene heard euenfong, & that night all the Ambaffadours fupped with the kyng, and had a great banket. After fuppes supper, his grace with the Quene, Lordes and Ladies came into the white Hall, within the sayed Pallays, whiche was hanged ryghely, the Hall was scaffolded and rayled on al partes. There was an interlude of the Gentelmen of his Chapell before his grace, and diuers fresh songes: That done, his grace called to hym a greate man, or a lorde of Ireland called Odonell, whome in the presence of the Ambassadours, he made kuyght: Then mynstrels beganne to playe, the Lordes and Ladies beganne to daunce.

And in the mooste of this pastime, when all persones were moste attentyue to behold the daunsyng, the kyng was sodenly gone vnknowen to the mooste parte of the people there, oneles it were of the Quene and of certayne other. Within a littell whyle after his departing, the trompettes at thende of the Hall began to blowe. Then was there a deuice or a pageaunt vpon wheles brought in, out of the whiche pageaunt issued out a gentelman rychely appareiled, that shewed, how in a garden of pleasure there was an arber of golde, wherein were lordes and ladies, muche desirous to shew pleasure and pastime to the Quene and ladies, if they might be licenced so to do, who was answered by the Quene, how she and all other there were very desirous to se theim and their pastime: then a greate clothe of Arras that did hange before thesame pageaunt was taken a waye, and the pageaunt brought more nere, it was curiously made and plesaunt to beholde, it was solempne and ryche, for euery post or piller therof, was couered with fryse golde, therein were trees of Hawthorne, Eglantines, Rosiers, Vines and other plesaunt floures of diuers colours, with Gylofers and other herbes all made of Satyn, damaske, silke syluer and gold, accordingly as the natural trees, herbes, or floures ought to be. In whiche arber were. vi. ladies, all apparailed in white sattyn and grene, set & enbroudered full of H. & K. of golde, knitte together with laces of golde, of damaske, and al their garmentes were replenished with glitteryng spangles gylt ouer, on their heddes were bonettes al opened at the. iiii. quarters, ouerfryled with flat gold of damaske, the ortellettes were of rolles, wrethed on lampas douck holow, so ỹ the golde shewed thorow the lãpas douck. ỹ fassis of their head set full of new deuised facions: in this garden, also was the kyng & .v. with him apparelled in garmentes of purpul satyn, al of cuttes w H. & K. euery edge garnished with fryled golde, & euery garment ful of poysees, made of letters of fine golde in bullion as thicke as they might be, & euery persone had his name in like letters of massy gold. The fyrst Cuer loyall. The second Bone voloyre, in the. iii. Bone espoier, The. iiii. Valyaunt desyre, The fyft Bone foy, The. vi. Amoure loyall, their hoten cappes & cotes, were ful of poises & H. & K. of fine gold in bullió, so that the groũd could scace apere & yet was in euery voyde place spangels of gold. Whẽ time was come, ỹ said pageaũt was brought forth into presence, & then discẽded a lorde & a lady by coples, & then the mynstrels, which were disguised also daunced, and the lorde and ladies daunced, that it was a pleasure to beholde.

In

In the meane season the pagiaunt was conueyed to the ende of the place, there to tary tyll the daunces were fynyshed, and so to haue receyued the Lordes and Ladies agayne, but sodainly the rude people ranne to the pagent, and rent, tare, and spoyled the pagent, so that the Lorde Stuard nor the head officers could not cause them to abstaine, excepte they shoulde haue foughten and drawen bloud, and so was this pagent broken.

After the kyng and his compaignions had daunced, he apointed the ladies, gentelwomen and the Ambassadours to take the letters of their garmentes, in token of liberalitie, whiche thing the common people perceyuyng, ranne to the kyng, and striped hym into his hosen and doublet, and all his compaignions in likewyse. Sir Thomas Knyuet stode on a stage, and for all his defence he lost his apparell. The ladies likewyse were spoyled, wherfore the kynges garde came sodenly, and put the people backe, or els as it was supposed more in cõuenience had ensued. So the kyng with the Quene & the ladyes returned into his chamber, where they had a great banket, and all these hurtes were turned to laughyng and game, and thought that, all that was taken away was but for honoure, and larges: and so this triumphe ended with myrth and gladnes.

At this banket, a shypman of London caught certayne letters which he sould to a goldsmyth for. iii. l. xiii. s. viii. d, by reason wherof, it appeared that the garmentes were of a great value.

After this great ioye came sorowfull chaunce, for the young Pryncs, whiche was borne vpon newyeres daye last past, vpon the two & twenty daye of February, beyng then the euen of Saint Mathy, departed this worlde at Rychemond, and from thense was caried to Westmynster, and buryed.

The kyng lyke a wyse Pryncs, toke this dolorous chaunce wonderous wysely, and the more to comfort the Quene, he dissimuled the matter, and made no great mourning outwardely: but the Quene lyke a naturall woman, made muche lamentacion, how be it, by the kynges good persuasion and behauiour, her sorow was mytigated, but not shortlye. This yere also in the moneth of Februarie, came from kyng Ferdinãdo, the kynges father in lawe, and kynge of Arragon and Castell certayne Ambassadours, whiche made request to the kyng, on the behalfe of the kyng their master, to haue ayde of the kyng of fyften hundred Archers, with valiaunt Capitaynes to gouerne and conduyte them: For his entent was to make warre on the Moores, beyng Infideles and enemies to Gods law. The kyng and his counsayll hearyng this request, thought it muche honourable to ayde a Christian Pryncs, and in especiall his frende and father in lawe, agaynst the infideles enemies to Christes lawe, wherfore the kyng gently graunted them their request. When tydinges were spread in the courte of this iourney against the infideles, the lorde Thomas Darcye, knyght of the order of the gartier, made humble suyte to the kynge, to be capitayne generall of that Crewe or armye.

The

The kyng and hys counsaill for his greate valiaunthes and approued wysedome graunted his request: many lordes and knyghtes made suite to be in thesame iorney, but the kyng aunswered them, that he retained them still for other greater considerations and purposes. There were appointed to go with thesaied lorde Darcie, lorde Antony Grey, brother to the Marques Dorset, Henry Guyldeford, Weston, Broune, Willyã Sydney, Esquiers of the kynges house, syr Robert Constable, syr Roger Haystynges, and syr Raufe Elderkare, and diuers other gentelmen to be capitaines. The lorde Darcie and all the other Capitaynes toke their leue of the kyng, and went into their countreis to prouide for all thynges mete and necessary for the voiage.

The kyng this tyme was muche entysed to playe at tennys and at dice, which appetite, certain craftie persons about hym perceiuing, brought in Frenchemen and Lombardes, to make wagers with hym, and so he lost much money, but when he perceiued their craft, he excheuyd their cõpaigny, and let them go. The kyng beyng lusty, young and couragious, greatly delited in feates of chyualrie, in so much that he made a chaleng of Justes, againste all commers to be proclaimed at his mannoure of Grenewyche, to be holden there the. iii. first daies of May then next ensuyng, whiche noble courage, all younge persones highly praysed, but the auncient fathers muche doubted, considering the tender youth of the kyng, and diuers chaunces of horses and armure: in so much that it was openly spoken, that stele was not so strong, but it might be broken, nor no horse coulde be so sure of fote, but he may fall: Yet for all these doubtes, the lusty prince proceded in his chalenge.

The first daye of May the kynge accompaignied with many lusty Batchelers, on greate and well doyng horses rode to the woode to fetche May, where a man might haue sene many a horse raysed on highe, with galope, turne and stoppe, marueylous to behold: where he and thre other as syr Edward Haward, Charles Brandon, and Edward Neuel, which were chalengers with the kyng, shyfted themselfels into cotes of grene Satyn, garded with Crymosyn Veluet. On the other parte the Earles of Essex, of Deuenshyre, the Marques Dorset, the lorde Haward, were all in Crymosyn Satyn, garded with a pounced garde of grene Veluet: and as they were returning on the Hyll, met with them a shippe vnder sayle: The master hayled the kyng and that noble compaignie, and sated that he was a Maryner, and was come from many a straunge porte, and came hither to se if any dedes of armes were to be done in the countrey. of the whiche he might make report therof in other countreis. An Heraulde demaunded the name of his shyppe, he aunswered she is called Fame, and is laden with good Renoune: Then sayed the Heraulde, if you wil bring your shippe into the bay of Hardines, you must double the poynt of Gentilnes, and there you shall se a compaignie that wyll medle with your marchaundise. Then sayed the kyng, sythen Renowne is their marchaundyse, let vs bye it and we can: Then the shippe shotte a pele of

Ennys,and sayled forth before the kynges compaignie, ful of flagges & banners,till it came to the tilte yearde. At after none,the kyng & his thre felowes entred into the fielde, their bardes & bases of Crymosyn & blew veluet,cut in quadrant cuttes,embroudered full of Pomgranettes,& all the wayters,in lyke of thesame colourr. The other partie were in Crymosyn Satyn and grene veluet. Then began the trompettes to sounde, and the horses to rumme that many a spere was brast, and many a great stripe gēuen:and for truthe the kyng exceded in number of staues all other,euery day of the.iii.daies. Wherfore on the.iii.day,the quene made x a great banket to the kyng and all them that had Justed: And after the banket done, she gaue the chefe price to the kyng, the.i.to the erle of Essex,the.ii.to the erle of Deuonshyre, and the.iii.to the Lorde Marques Dorset. Then the Heraultes cried,my lordes, for your noble feates in armes,God sende you the loue of your ladies that you moste delire.

The thyrd yere.

THe kyng euer desirous to serue Mars,begā an other Justes ỹ xv.day of ỹ saied moneth: ỹ kyng & his bend were all in grene sylke,& the erle of Essex & his bende in blew,garded with gold, & all the speres were paynted of thesame colours. There was xx good running & many a spere brast,but for al the sport euery mā feared, lest some yll chaūce might happē to the kyng,& fayne would haue had him a loker on, rather then a doer,& spake therof as much as they durst: but his courage was so noble that he would euer be at the one ende

In this passe tyme,the lord Darcy & other appoynted to the vyage agaynst the Moores of Barbaria (at the instaunce of Donpefernando father to the Quene)made suche diligence,that they and all their people were ready at Plymmouth by the myddes of May, and there mustered their souldiers before the lorde Broke,and other the kynges commissioners. The sayed lorde Darcie,as Capitayne generall ordeined for hys xxx Prouost Marshall, Henry Guylford Esquier, a lusty youngman, and well beloued of the kyng. Then,when the winde serued to their purpose, and all the armie were set aborde in their shippes, whiche were vytailed and prest at all pointes,the Capitayn and other departed out of Plymmouth hauen,the monday in the Rogation weke with.iii. shippes Royall and the wind was so fauourable to them,that the first day of June, beynge the euen of the feaste of Pentecost,he arriued at the porte of Caleys in Southspayne, and immediatly by the aduice of his counsayll, dispatched to the kyng of Arragon two Gentelmen, called Jhon Bartelmew,and Willyam Symonde, with letters to certefie the kyng and xl his counsaill of their arriuall, and what payne they had taken to come to his countrey, in fulfyllyng the kyng their masters commaundement. The messengers did so muche that they came to the kyng, beside the citte of Cyuill, where he then laye, and declared to hym how the lorde Darcie by the kyng their masters appointement, was come thither with. xvi. C. archers mo, accordyng to the saied kyng of Arragons request, and laye ſtill at Caleys to know his pleaſure. The kyng of Arragon aunſwered them gentelly, that the lord Darcie and all other that were come from hys moſte beſt beloued ſonne were welcome, and hartely thanked theim of theyr paynes, and prayed the meſſengers to returne to their capitayne ſhewyng hym that the kyng in all haſte would ſende his counſail to him, and ſo they departed from the kyng, and made repoꝛte to the lorde Darcie, whiche kept his ſhippe in great eſtate, and would not lande, but only ſuffered ſuche as were ſicke and feble, and few other to go a lande.

The Englyſhmen whiche went a lande, fell to drinking of hote wines and were ſcace maſters of theim ſelfes, ſome ranne to the ſtewes, ſome x brake hedges, and ſpoyled oꝛchardes and vyneyardes, and oꝛynges beſoꝛe they were tꝛype, and did many other outragious dedes: whetfoꝛe the cheſe of the toune of Caleys, came to complaine to the loꝛde Darcie in hys ſhippe, whiche ſent foꝛth his Pꝛouoſt Marſhall, which ſcacelie with peyne reſtrayned the yomen archers, they were ſo hote and wyllfull, yet by commaundement and policie, they were al bꝛought on boꝛde on their ſhippes.

Saterdaye the eight daye of June, the Byſhop of A other of the kynges counſaill, arryued at Caleys, and there abode tyll wed- xx nyſdaye, beyng the euen of Coꝛpus Chꝛiſty, at whiche daye the loꝛd Capitayne toke lande, and was honourably receiued of the kynge of Arragons counſayll, and on the moꝛow highly feſted at dynner and ſupper. And after ſupper, the Byſhop declared the kyng of Arragons pleaſure ſaiyng: my loꝛde Capitayne, the kyng my maſter in mooſte humble wyſe geueth you thankes foꝛ your greate paynes and trauell, as muche as though he pꝛoceded in this pꝛetenſed enterpꝛyce, but he with the aduice of his counſayll circumſpectly, conſideryng the ſuertie of his awne realmes and dominions hathe perfectie knowlege, that his aduerſarye of xx Fraunce, pꝛepareth to inuade hys countreis in hys abſence: wherfoꝛe he entendyng not to leue his Realmes, voyde of men and ſhyppes (whiche myght be a great comfoꝛt to his enemies to inuade) & therfoꝛe he hathe taken an abſtinence of warre with the Moozes tyll another tyme. Well ſayed the loꝛde Darcie, ſythe it is fully concluded that we ſhall do no ſeruice to yout Maſter, we maye not saye agaynſt his determinacion, conſideryng we were ſent to hym, but ſurely it is agaynſte my hart, whiche euer hath deſiꝛed to fyght agaynſt Goddes enemies, but with your conclu- xxj cion, I and all myne muſte be content. You do as you ſhould do, ſaied the Byſhop, and the kynge my maſter geueth lyke thankes to the kynge hys ſonne, and to you all, as though he had pꝛoceded in his iourney. And you ſhall haue wages foꝛ all your ſouldiers: And if it ſhall pleaſe you xxj to come to the court, you ſhall receyue hygh thankes of the kyng, & ſuche chere as there can be made you. That is not my deſyre ſayed the Loꝛde Darcie, foꝛ my men ſhall not saye that I bꝛought them out of their coũtrey, and nowe to do my ſelfe pleaſure, leaue theim without an hedde, as men of men foꝛſaken: Nay nay my loꝛde, the kynges banket is not my deſyre.

desire. So the lordes departed for ỹ night, & the next dai in the morning was sent wages, to conduict tharmie into England, with diuerse giftes geuen to the lord Darcie, & other gentle men: Yet ỹ notwithstanding, he was highly displeased, how beit like a wise man he dissimuled ỹ matter.

Thesame daie, beyng the xiiii. daie of June and Fridaie, an Englishe man desired of a maide, that had been at the Bakers to bye bread for her maistres store and not to sell, to haue a lofe for his money, she aunswered, that she had none to sell, he said he would haue one, and folowed her, and whē she perceiued that, she cried, a force a force, the tounes men of Caleis, or Caleis males, sodainly rong their common bell, and al the toune went to harneis, and the fewe Englishemen that wer on land wēt to their bowes. The Spaniardes cast dartes, and sore anoyed and hurt the Englishmen: and thei likewise hurt and slew diuerse Spanyardes. Then the Captaines of Englande for their part, and the lordes of the Counsaill for their parte, toke suche pain, that the fraie was seased, and but one Englishemen slain, and of the Spanyardes diuerse slain.

Then all Englishe men were commaunded to go aborde wyth theyr shippes. The lordes of Spayne came to the lorde Darcie, saiyng: Sir, we praie you, sithe you knowe the kynges pleasure and haue your wages, that you with all your people will go with your shippes awaie, for we perceiue you owe vs some displeasure. Then he boldly answered saiyng, that he woulde al the worlde knew, that he was as able to conduit his menne homewarde, as he was to bryng theim out of their countrey, without the kyng of Arragōs wages, (sauyng his honor) and as for the fraie, it was agaynst his will and without his knowlege: and so that night he and all his men, went aborde with theyr shippes.

When this iorney was come to this poynt, Henry Guilforde, Westō, Browen, and Willyan Sidney, young and lusite Esquires, delired license to see the Courte of Spayne, whiche was to theim graunted: and then thei departed from Caleis, and came to the Courte of the kyng of Arragon, wher thei wer highly entertained, & he dubbed Henry Guilford, Weston, and Browne, knightes, and gaue to sir Henry Guilford a Canton of Granado, & to sir Westō, and Browne, an Egle of Scicile on a cheffe to the augmentacion of their armes: William Sidney, so excused himself, that he was not made knigh, and when thei had soiorned ther a while, they tooke their leaue of the kyng and quene, & so returned through Fraunce into England, wher they demained thēselfes so, ỹ thei had the kynges fauoure, notwithstanding it was thought contrary.

Duryng whiche season the lorde Darcie, the.xvii. daie of June made saile towarde England, and arriued at Plimmouthe, & came to the kyng at Wyndsore, and in August thus ended this voyage.

Duryng the time that the Lorde Darcie was in Spayne, the Ladie Margaret Duches of Sauoy, & daughter to Maximilian themperor, and gouernor of the countreis of Flaunders, Brabant, Holland, Zelāde and other the lowe countres apperteinyng to Charles the yong prince of Castell, then beyng of tendre age, sent in thend of Maii to the kynge of Englãd to haue .xv.c. archers, to aide her against ỹ duke of Geldres which sore trobled the coũtreis aforsaid. The kyng tenderly regarding the request of so noble a lady, & also because there was a communicatiõ hangyng at their time of mariage, to be had betwene the young Prince Charles, and the lady Marie his sister, moste tently graũted her request and appoynted sir Edward Pownynges knight of the garter, and cõptroller of his house, a valiant capitain & a noble warrior, to be the lieuetenaunt & conductor of the saied .xv.c. archers, whiche accõpanied with the lord Clintõ his sonne in lawe, sir Mathew Brown, sir Jhon Digby, Jhon Norton, Richard Whethill, Sherley Esquires & diuerse tall gentelmen and yomen, wel knowen men and tried, to the said nombre of xv.c. toke their shipping a mile beside Sãdwiche, the .xviii. daie of July & landed at Arnew the .xix. daie, not without some troble by reason of a litle storme, & sent Lancaster Herauld to aduertise the lady of their arriuall, which sent to thẽ lord Bresley knight of the Toyson, and diuerse other to welcome thẽ, and so conduited thẽ to Barow, where the lorde of the toune made theim great chere. And the same daie at after none, came the lady Margaret to Barow, where ỹ capitain with al his vnder capitaines receiued her at the gate, she welcomed thẽ hartely, & so she did all the souldiers whiche stode along reinged in the strete. And on saterdaie beyng the .xx vi. daie of July, she sawe al the company shote, & thee same night the capitayn and other toke his leaue of her, & the morowe beeyng sondaie departed to Rossindale, and so on thursday the last day of July came to Buldike, & that daie the ladie Margaret came thether. And the next daie, the whole army of Almaines, Fleminges, and other aperteignyng to the saied lady, met with thenglishmen without Buldike, where thei set furth in ordre, the lady Margaret being present: which toke her leue of all the capitaines and departed to Buldike, whom sir Edwarde Pownynges conduited to the toune gate, and after returned to tharmy Tharmie to the nombre of .x.M. of the ladies parte .xv.c. Englishmen passed through Brabant, & came the .x. dai of August beyng .s. Laurẽce daie, before a litle castle stadyng on the higher side of thee riuer of Wale called Brimuoyst strongly Bulwarked in the whiche wer .c. men belongyng to the bastard of Gelders, with a capitaine called Lankessell van Gelder, whiche robbed & spoyled al the parties of Brabant. Thei within shot fiersly at tharmy as it passed by, and did them litle hurte. The same night Thomas Hert chief gonner of thẽglish part, made his approch of his ordenaunce & in the morning bet doune as much as might be beaten doune for the bulwarkes, & the next daie beyng the .xi. of August the castle was assaulted valiantly, & takẽ by force, & the capitain and .lxxx. & od men were slain & .xix. taken, of the whiche .xi. wer hanged, Jhon Norẽ capitain of .c. Englishmẽ, & one Guiot an esquire of Burgoyn crieng Burgoyn. S. George: there was one Englishman slain and no more.

On thursdaie the .xiiii. daie, tharmie fetied ouer the riuer of Wale into

to the land Geldres, and their soiorned at a litle churche, of our ladye daie the Assumption that night, and the nexte daie thei came to a toune called Aiske, belongyng to the Bastarde Geldres: where all the people wer fled, and there was vndermined and caste doune, a litle castle standyng of thesayd riuer newly edified.

The.xx.of August thei brent the toune of Aiske, and brent al the coūtrey about, and came at last to a toune called Straulle, a strong toune double diked & walled, and within it.iii.C.lx. good men of warre beside the inhabitauntes, whiche at the firste commyng shot Gonnes fiercely and hurte many, and there they planted their siege.

Sir Edward Pounynges, whiche euer was in the forward with his archers, caused fagottes to be made, and trenches to be digged and cast and his men wer so diligent, that his trēche, in the mornyng approched so nye the toune gate, that thei within wer halfe dismaied: and desired to speake with the Lordes, & so thei did. And on. S. Barthelmewes euen, were sixe men sent out of the toune to treate, and sixe hostages deliuered for theim, and then it was agreed that all men of warre should departe with a white sticke in their handes, & to forfet all other thynges, and al the toune dwellers to bee prisoners at the will of the Prince of Castle. The next daie, after the men of warre wer departed, erly in the morning sir Jhon Dighby knight, and Jhon Norton Esquire, toke possession of the toune with.CC. English menne: and at after None the Admiral of Flaunders, sir Edward Pounynges, & the lorde Dilcilstain, chief captaines of tharmie, with all other noble men, with Trūpettes, & Arthois and Lancaster, and Ostriche, officers at armes in their coates of armes before theim gorgeously apareled, entered the toune, and in the toune hall, toke thothe of thinhabitantes, and ỹ night returned to their armie.

The.xxvi. daie of thesame month, sir Jhon Dighby, and Jhō Norton, came out of the touue with al their Englishmen, and for them entered a capitain called Youker Otes, with.CC.l. Almaines, to kepe there a garrison, the whiche daie the armie went before Uenlow & sent Artois with a trumpet to somon the toune: but thei would not here them spcke but shot gunnes at theim. The.xxviii.daie, the armye remoued vnto the Northside of Uenlow, and part went ouer the water and made trēches to the water. The capitain of the Englishemen made trenches euen to the toune diche, and the artiletie bet doune ỹ towers of the walles, and euery daie was some skirmishe. And the.xxix.daie as certain Englishemen went a foragyng, it happened.x. of sir Jhon Dighbes men to go.v. mile from the armie, and to mete with.xxiiii.horsmen of Geldres which set on thē, but they withdrew themselfes into a litle garden, and shot at their enemies, and slewe twoo horsmen and.v. horses, gauled and hurte many of thē, discomfited the remnant, and brought two great horses to tharmie, and euery man was sore hurte, but in no petel of death thāked be God. The siege thus continuyng, not without skirmishes.xxix.daies sir Edward Poūynges, & sir Jhō Dighby dined with monsire de Rony and all other Englishe capitaines, and petie Capitaines, dined with an Almain called Clene Anderline, except sir Mathew Broune, and Jhon Fogge, whiche kepte the felde, and Richard Wethill, whiche kepte thee trenche and was sore besette: and in the dinner tyme, thei of the toune issued out on thenglishemen, and hurte and toke, one Sheldwiche of Cãterbury prisonet and one Wiles: and thenglishemen hurt and slew many of theim, and compelled theim to returne by force of Arrowes, and so thei reculed with one prisoner. For Wiles, which was led betwene two of the Geldres, perceiuing rescue comming, after as he came to an hyll thrust the two Gelders doune the hill before him, and so ranne backe to his compaignie, whiche thyng the two Geldres that led him perceiuing ranne to Sheldwiche and slew him. The Burgonions perceiuing, that Sir Edwarde Pownynges was displeased with this chaunce, exhorted him with his menne to assault the toune, whiche, by thaduise of bastard Emery answered that thee cause was theirs, and not his Maysters: and if he gatte the toune by assaulte, the king his Master should not haue it but if they would geue the assault, he woulde ioyne with theim whiche thing thei would not do, because thei had kinsemen and frendes, within the toune: sauyng one daie a few Almaines assaulted a Bulwerke, and wer slain and take.

The Englishe capitaines perceiuing that thei laie there in vaine, cõsiderying the strength of the toune, and also how their armye was not in numbre to enuiron the toune, for euer thei had one Gate open, wrote to the kyng which willed them with all spede to returne, and so thei did.

Sir Edward Pownynges went to the Court of Burgoyn, where he was highly entertayned of the young prince, & the Lady Margaret his aunte, and receiued great thãkes and giftes for hys pain. And other capitaines, as syr Jhon, Norton, sir Jhon Fogge, sir Jhon Scot, and syr Thomas Lind, were made knightes of the Prince. And the lady Margaret, perceiuing the coates of the souldiers too be foule with lyng on the ground (for euery man lai not in a tent) gaue to euery yoman a cote of wolen clothe of yalowe, red, white and grene coloures, not to her litle laude and praise emong thenglishemen. After that sir Edward Ponynges had ben highly feasted, and more praised of all men for his valiantnes, and good ordre of his people, hee returned with his cõpaignie into England, and had lost by warre and sickenes, not fully an. C. persones.

When the Englishemen were departed, Geldres issued out daily, & made skirmishes and fraies with the Burgonions, and asked for theyr Archers, and Winter beganne sharpelye too approche, and by abounddaunce of raine, the riuer of the Masse roase so high, that the Trenches were drowned, and of force men were compelled to remoue And when the Capitaines considered the strengthe of the Towne, how it was fortified, victailed and manned, and how by the rising of the Riuer it was made stronger: thei determined to raise the Siege, and too burne and destroye all the Villages and Tounes aboute, of

of the which toune of Uẽlow, would haue succor in winter, and to mete again, at the Prime time of the yere. Thus was the siege raised, and the countrey wasted and spoyled, and then euery capitain returned home.

In June the kyng beyng at Leicester, tidynges wer brought to him, that Andrew Barton a Scottishe manne, and a pirate of the sea, saiyng that the kyng of Scottes, had warre with the Portingales, did rob euery nacion, & so stopped the kynges stremes, that no merchauntes almost could passe, and when he toke thenglishmenes goodes, he said they wer Portyngales goodes, and thus he haunted and robbed at euery haues mouthe. The kyng moued greately with this craftie pirate, sent sir Edmond Haward lord Anmiral of England, and lord Thomas Haward sonne and heire to therle of Surrey, in all the hast to the sea, whithe, hastely made redy two shippes, and without any more abode, toke the sea, and by chaunce of wether were seuered. The lorde Haward lying in the Downes, perceiued where Andrew was making toward Scotlãde, and so fast thesaied lorde chased him, that he ouer tooke hym, and there was a sore battaill: thenglishme wer fierce, nand the Scottes defended them manfully, and euer Andrew blewe his whistell to encorage his men, yet for al that, the lord Haward and his men, by cleane strength entred the mayne decke: then the Englishemen entred on all sides, and the Scottes foughte sore on the hatches, but in conclusion, Andrewe was taken, whiche was so sore wounded, that he died there: then all the remnaunte of the Scottes wer taken, with their shippe called the Lion.

All this while, was the lorde Admirall in chace of the Barke of Scotlande, called Jenny Pirwyn, whiche was wont to saile with the Lion in compaignie, and so muche did he with other, that he laied him on borde, and fiercely assailed him, and the Scottes as hardy and well stomaked men them defended, but the lorde Admirall so entoraged his men, that they entered the Barke and slewe many, and toke all the other.

Thus wer these two shippes taken, and brought to Blacke Wal, the seconde daie of August, and al the Scottes were sent to the Bishoppes place of Yorke, and there remained at the kynges charge, til other direccion was taken for theim.

After this, the kyng sent the bishop of Winchester, and certain of his counsaill, to tharchebishop of Yorkes place, wher the Scottes wer prisoners: & ther the bishop rehersed to thẽ, wher as peace was yet between England and Scotlãd, that thei contrary to that, as theues & pirates, had robbed the kynges subiectes within his stremes: wherfore, thei had deserued to die by the law, & to be hanged at the low water marke. Then said the Scottes, we knowlege our offence, & aske mercie & not the lawe. Then a priest, which was also prisoner said, my lordes we appele from the kinges iustice to his mercy. Then the bishop asked him if he wer authorised by thẽ to sai so, & thei cried al yea yea, thẽ said he, you shal find ỹ kinges merci, aboue his iustice. For wher you wer ded bi ỹ law, yet by his merci, he wil reuiue you, wherfor, you shal depart out of this realme within.xx.daies,vpon pain of death,if you be founde after the.xx.daie, and prai for the kyng,and so they passed into the Countrey.

The kyng of Scottes, hearyng of the death of Andrewe of Barton, and takyng of his twoo shippes, was wonderfull wrothe, and sent letters to the kyng,requiryng restitucion, accordyng to the league and amitie.The kyng wrote with brotherly salutaciõs,to the kyng of Scottes,of the robberies and euill doynges of Andrewe Barton, and that it became not one Prince,to laie a breache of a league, to another Prince in doyng Justice vpon a pirate or thiefe,and that al the other Scottes that were taken, had deserued to dye by Justice, if he had not extended his mercie:& with this answere, the Scottishe Herauld departed home. p

Duryng this season, there began greate warre,betwene Pope July, and the Frenche kyng. Loys the.xii.the occasion beganne by one Jhon Bentiuoyle,a greate lorde of Italie,whiche kepte the citee of Bologne le Grace,from the Pope,whiche,by the aide of the Frenche kyng, gatte thesaied citee,from the forenamed Jhon Bentiuoyle:but afterward because thesaied Pope July,tooke peace with the Venecians,the French kyng turned from the Pope,and made warre on hym, in the behalfe of Jhon Bentiuoyle,and toke from hym again,thesaid citee of Bologne.

The kyng of Englande,wrote often to kyng Loys of Fraunce to desist from the persecutyng of the Pope,which was his frende and confederate:to which writyng he gaue litle regard, wherefore,the kyng sent him woorde,to deliuer hym his lawfull enheritaunce,bothe of the Duchie of Normãdie and Guyan, and the countreis of Aniow and Mayne and also of his Croune of fraunce, els he would come with suche a power,that by fine force he would obtein his purpose. For al these writinges,the Frenche kyng still made warre in Italie,and the kyng could of him,haue no certain nor determinate answere. Wherefore, after greate deliberacion had,by the aduise of his counsaill, he determined to make warre on the Frenche kyng, and his countreis,and called to him Maximilian the Emperor,and Ferdinand kyng of Arragon,and diuerse other princes,and made preparacion, bothe by sea and by lande,and fortified his frontiers against Fraũce, and set furth shippes to the sea,for defence of his merchauntes,whiche wer daily in ieoperdy, vnder a pretensed peace of the Frenche kyng, Lewes the.xii.

The kyng this yere,kept the feast of Christmas at Grenewiche,wher was such abundaunce of viãdes serued,to all comers of any honest behauor,as hath been fewe times seen.And against Newieres night,was made in the halle a castle,gates,towers, and dungion,garnished wyth artilerie,and weapon after the most warlike fashion:and on the frount of the castle, was written le Fortresse dangerus,& within the castle were vi.ladies,clothed in Russet Satin, laide all ouer with leues of Golde, and euery owde,knit with laces of blewe silke and golde. On their hedes,coyfes,and cappes all of golde

After this castle had been caried about the hal,and the quene had beheld helde it,in came the kyng with fiue other, appareled in coates, the one halfe of russet satyn,spangled with spãgles of fine gold,the other halfe riche clothe of gold,on their heades cappes of russet satin, embroudered with worckes of fine gold bullió.These vi.assaulted the castle,the ladies seyng them so lusbie & coragious, were content to solace with them and vpon farther communicacion,to yeld the castle,and so thei came doune and daunced a long space.And after the ladies led the knightes intothe castle, and then the castle sodoinly vanished,out of their sightes.

On the date of the Epiphanie at night,the kyng with a.xi.other wer x disguised,after the maner of Italie, called a maske,a thyng not seen afore in Englande, thei were appareled in garmentes long and brode, wrought all with gold,with visers and cappes of gold, & after the banket doen,these Maskers came in,with sixe gentlemen disguised in silke bearyng staffe torches,and desired the ladies to daunce,some were content,and some that knewe the fashion of it refused, because it was not a thyng commonly seen.And after thei daunced,and commoned together as the fashion of the Maskes is,thei toke their leaue and departed,and so did the Quene,and all the ladies

The.xb.date of Januarij began the Parliament, where the Bisshop xx of Cantorburie,began his oracion with this verse,Iusticia & pax osculate sunt,vpon whiche,he declared how Justice should be ministered,and peace should bee nourished,and by what meanes, Justice was put by, and peace turned into warre.And there vpon he shewed,how the Frẽch kyng would do no Justice,in restorynge the kyng his right enheritaũce wherfore,for lacke of Justice,peace of necessitie must turne to warre.

In this Parliament was graunted,twoo fiftenes of the temporaltie, and of the clergie twoo disines:Duryng which Parliament, one Newbolt yoman of the kynges Garde,whõ, the kyng highly fauored, slewe wilfully a seruaunt of my lorde Willoughbies, in the palaice at Westminster,wherfore,the kyng abhorryng that deede,and settyng a side al xx affeccion,caused him to be hanged in the Palaice of Westminster,wher he hong twoo daies, in example of other.

In this season, one Jherome Bonuise, whiche was borne in Luke, and was a factor in London for Merchauntes of that nacion,and had plaied Bankroute,and was conueighed out of the realme for debt,was nowe in suche fauor with Pope July, that he made hym his Collector, and Proctor in England: and so he kept a greate porte,and resorted to the kyng and his coũsaill,for the Popes affaires,(which then wad sore troubled by the Frenche kyng)so that he knewe,bothe the Popes coun-xl saill,and the kynges,and falsly and vntruly, resorted by nighte, to the Frenche Ambassadors,lyng in London,and to theim discouered,what the kyng and the Pope entended, which was not so closly doen,but the king knewe it: and so he was laied for,and was taken cõmonyng,with one of thesaid Ambassadors,vpon Londõ wall at midnight,& brought to the Tower,where he remained,till by the suite of his frendes,he was deliuered,and shortly for shame,boyded the realme.

After that it was concluded, by the body of the Realme, in the high Courte of Parliament assembled, that warre should bee made on the Frenche kyng and his dominions, the kyng with all diligence caused newe shippes to be made and repaired,and rigged the old,caused Gonnes,Bowes,Arrowes,and al other artilery,and instrumentes of warre to be made,in suche nombre and quantitee, that it was wonderfull to se what thynges wer doen,bothe for sea and lande in so shorte space.

The kyng of Arragon,whiche also had warre with the French kyng. and hearyng that his sonne the kyng of Englād would make warre in Fraūce,did write to hym that the duchie of Guyan,was his true enheritaunce,whiche,adioyned to his coūtrey of Biskey:wherfore,if the kyng of Englande would entende to recouer his Duchy first,and send an armie of men to Biskaye,and so to begin at Bayon, whiche is the keye of Guyan,he would aide them with ordinaunce,horsemen,and beastes for cariages,with other necessaries apperteignyng to thesame. p

The kyng and his counsaill, puttyng their affiaunce in the promise of the kyng of Arragon,prepared a noble armie al of fotemen,and smal ordinaunce, trustyng to the kyng of Arragon for aide of horsemen and greate ordinaunce,and of thesame made capitain, the noble lorde Thomas Grey Marques of Dorset, to whom,he assigned many other gentlemen, as you shall here after in the next yere. pp

The.iiij.yere.

THE kyng greatly studiyng, to furnisshe furthe his warre, whiche he had begonne against the Frenche kyng, caused sir Edwarde Hawarde his Admirall, with all diligence to take the sea,whiche,with all spede possible made ready diuerse goodly and tal shippes, as the souereigne and other to the nombre of.xviii beside litle shippes: and in his compaignie were Capitaines,syr Weston Browne,Griffith Doune,Edwarde Cobham, Thomas Wyndam, Thomas Lucie, Willyam Pirton,Henry Shirborne, Stephen Bull, George Witwange, Jhon Hopton, Willyam Gimstone,Thomas Draper,Edmond Coke,Jhō Bordet,with diuerse other. When all these were shipped,they sailed to Douer,and skowred the seas,and so came before Portesmouthe,about the middes of Maye. xxx

The third daie of Maie,a gentlemen of Flaunders, called Guyot of Guy,came to the kynge, wyth.v.C. Almaines al in white, whyche was cutte so small,that it could scace hold together.After they had mustered at Blacke Hethe, the kyng made hym knight, and gaue hym a greate chayne,and a yerely pencion,and sent hym with his band to Southampton.About midde Maie, the lorde Marques and other noble men.appoynted by the kyng for the iorney of Bilkay,as the Lorde Hawarde, sonne and heire to the erle of Surrey,the Lorde Broke,the Lorde Willoughby,the Lorde Ferrers,the lorde Jhon,the lorde Anthony, and the xl

the lorde Leonard Grey, all three brethren to the Marques, sir Griffith Upp Riche, Woozeis Barkeley, sir Wylliam Sandes, the Baron of Burffozd, sir Richard Cornwalhis brother, William Huse, Jhō Welton, Willyam Kyngston Esquires, sir Henry Willoughby, and diuerse other with souldiours, to the nomber of.x.M. men, came to Southampton and there mustered. To se the lozdes and gentelmen, so well armed and so richely appareled in clothes of gold, and of siluer, and Velluettes of sundery coloures, pounsed and embroudered, and all pette capitaines in Satin and damaske, of white and grene, and yomen in clothe of the- x same coloures. The Baners, Penons, Standerdes, and Gittons, fresh and newly painted, with sundry beastes and deuises, it was a pleasure to behold. And when sir Willyam Sandes knight, appoynted Threasorer for the warres had paied all the wages, then euery man was commaunded to his shippe. Then you should haue sene byndyng of males, and fardelles, trussyng of coffers and trussers, that no manne was idle: and so on the.xvi. daie, al the armie were shipped in Spanische shippes, vitailed for that iorney, and passed the Medles of Wight all thesame daie, and so did the Lorde Admirall, whiche laie abidyng the wynde at Portesmouth, and toke his course to Britain, of whō I will speke after. xi The wynde serued the Marques and his compaigne so well, that he with his whole armie arriued in Biskay, at a porte called Passagh, Southe West of Fountrabie. The thirde daie of June, the lorde Marques and all his faire compaignie landed, and tooke the fielde, and him wisely embattailed for his sauegard. The Biskaynes that brought vitaile to the armie, saied to the souldiours: Sirs you bee arriued her, in trust that the kyng of Arragon will helpe you with ordinaunce and cariages we here no preparation that he maketh nor neuer sent vs worde to prepare for your comming, of the whiche wee maruell muche. These worzes ranne daily through the hoste, whiche made many men sad & to muse: and the Biskanes sore feared, least thenglishmen would destroye xv their countrey, because their kyng kepte not promise with theim, but the Marques made suche streight Proclamacion, that no souldiour durste do any iniurie to them. Within three daies after that the armie had lien in the feld, there came to him an erle, and another noble man, to welcome hym and his compaigne. Then the Lorde capitayn remoued his field, and toke another place nerer Fountraby, more plenteous of water and woode, and there pitched his fielde, euery daie lookyng for aide of the kyng of Arragon, but he harde of none. Then he called a Counsail, and deuised how thei might haue beastes to draw ordinaunce and cariages xvi then one sir Jhon Stile an Englishman, caused to be bought two.C. Mulettes an Asses, of suche price as the Spanyardes gayned greatly, and when they were put to cary, they would neither bere nor drawe, for they were beastes which were not exercised afore. Then the lorde Marques muche lamented that chaunce, for if he had had redy two hundred drawyng beastes, he might haue runne a great waie in Guian with his powèr, whiche then was not fortified, neither of men of warre, nor munitions, nor artilarie.

The Frenchemen of Bayon, hearyng of the Englishemennes campe, made a greate askry betwene the riuer of sainct Maria and Bayon: the Englishmen perceiuyng thesame, passed the riuer in good ordre of battail, al being on foote for lacke of the horsmen that the kyng of Arragó promised, and so with arrowes chased the Frenchemen on horsebackes that thei fled, and many horses foundered, and many a man was brosed or thei came to Bayon: at the whiche thenglishmen laughed & lamẽted. Firste, to se their cowardnes, second, to remembre what thei might haue doen, if thei had had horses mete for their purpose: yet all thys notwithstandyng, thei retired to their campe in suche ordre, that the Spanyardes wondered muche, bothe at their fierce corage and sobre ordre.

The kyng of Nauar hearyng of the puissaunt armie of the English men lyng in Biskey so nere to his countrey, was sore troubled, & wondered much what the matter should meane: wherfore, he sent to the lord Marques, a bisshop and diuerse other, to shewe to hym and all his coũsaill, that if it pleased them, his countrey should sende them victaill and al thynges necessarie for their money, and to do any other pleasure that thei could do, whiche might be to the pleasure of hym and all his armie, so ỹ his realme should be sure of any inuacións to be made by his people

The Marques beyng capitain generall, with the aduise of the other Lordes and counsaill, muche highly thanked the king of Nauar of his good wil, aide, and comfort, which thynges onely they required: and if it pleased hym, that his people will and maie victaill vs, we shall not onely paie theim for it, but also warraunt the passyng and repassing for vs and oures in sauetie, and that by vs no preiudice shalbee dooen to hys realme, nor by our consent. With whiche answere the kyng of Nauar was ioyous, and suffered his people to victaill, and resort to the hooste, with al thinges necessarie and belongyng to thesame, in greate windes and stormes, for that tyme happened muche wind and raine, whiche sore encombered the souldiours, that laye nightly on the bare grounde, for euery man had not a tent or pauilion, whereof some wer lame, and some deffe, with other diseases.

When the armie had lien there .xxx. daies, in the seconde moneth ther came from the kyng of Arragon, a bisshop and other nobles of his coũsail: but whẽ it was knowen that it was thesame bisshop that made the answere to the lorde Darcie at Cales Wales, as you haue hard the last yere, then many said, he came for no good but for delaies: but he requested the lorde Marques to take patience, for shortly suche preparacion should be made, that he should se & proue, that it should be to ỹ honor of his Master, and to his great renoune: to whõ the Marques answered, that vpon confidence of the king of Arragons promise that thei should lacke no beastes mete for drawyng, and horsemen the kyng of England had sent him and his compaignions thether, whereof we haue trusted

sithe our firste hether commyng, whiche thynges if we had had, we had doen other enterpyses then we haue doen: for now we haue lien here in campe, to the great charge of our Master, the kyng of England, and to no profite, and to our losse and great hurt. For at our arriuall the cõtrey of Guyan for the which we came, was vnprouided of men of warr, municions and ordinaunce, by reason whereof (if all thynges had been accomplished of the part of your Master as we trusted) we might haue had that whiche we came for, and if our commission had not been to folowe the kyng your Masters wil, as to whom we bee sent, I assure you we would haue dooen other wise or this: but now the Frenchmen haue fortefied, victailed, and manned their tounes, and wee haue spent tyme and dooen nothyng at all, lyngeryng for the kyng your Master, to the losse of vs and great blemishyng of our honours.

The bisshop perceiuyng that the Englishe capitaines wer couragious and discontent with their idle abode, flatteryngly desired theim to tary a while for the best, for a backe enemie sated he, is to bee regarded. Then saide the lorde Marques capitain general, if we knewe the kynges entent, it would suffice vs. Then sated the bisshop you shal knowe it shortly: and so he departed frome the armie.

Tharmie this lyngering, euer desirous to be at the busines that thei came for, their victaile was muche part Garlike, and the Englieshmen did eate of the Garlike with all meates, and dranke hote wynes in the hote wether, and did eate all the hote frutes that thei could gette, which caused their bloudde so to boyle in their belies, that there fell sicke three thousande of the flixe, and thereof died. xviii. hundred men.

The lorde Marques and other capitaines perceiuyng this mischief, sent to the kyng of Arragon certain Lordes of the hooste to know his pleasure. The whiche answered them with gentle fashion, that the cõsaill of Englande and his counsaill, had taken an order in all thyng of late, and how the duke Dalua a greate prince of Spain, should shortly with an armie royall ioyne with theim, and so to procede in their enterprise. With whiche answere and small chere, the lordes of Englande departed, and made report to their capitain accordyng, whiche thought it verie sleight, but euer he regarded his Masters commaundement, and counsailed all the lordes to be content with thesame.

The armie lyng thus still and the sickenes not slaked, the people beyng idle, some euill disposed persones saied, that euery capitain was alowed. viii. d. for a common souldier, whiche was vntrue, for thei had alowed onely. vi. d, and so began together compaignies, the lordes perceiuyng this, toke with them their trustie seruauntes, and toke the beginners of the mischief whiche wer of the retinue of my lorde Willoughby and put them in warde. When thei wer arrested, other of like euil disposicion began to crake and face, whiche thyng beyng perceiued, the lorde Marques by the aduice of other capitanes caused serche to bee made, and so founde out the beginner of the mischief, whiche was deliuered to

Willyam

Willyam Kyngston Esquire then Prouost Marshall, and so was put to death to the terror of all other.

During the tyme that the armie laie thus lyngering, the Frenchmen diuerse times came to behold the Englishemen, and when thei sawe any part of the armie remoue toward theim, incontenent thei fled, and so the English archers euery daie went a forragyng on the borders of Guian almoste to Bayon, and brent many prette vilages, but euer they desired to haue tidynges of the king of Arragon, and to know what thei should do, for they wer commaunded to be ruled by them.

The Englishemen thus liyng idely abidyng the aide of the kyng of Arragon, tidynges came daily into the host, how the Duke Dalua was commyng with a great puissaunce to joyne with the English army, and so to inuade Guyā: thenglishe capitaines wer joyful of these tidynges, not so muche for the aide of the Spanyardes which they litle regarded, but for the beastes for cariage of greate artilerie, whyche they brought not with theim, in hope of the kyng of Arragons promes: for if thei had beastes for their cariage, and greate ordinaunce accordyng to the appoyntement, they would haue doen otherwise, whiche thyng sore greued their hartes.

Now thei thus lokyng for the Duke Dalua, hard euery daie how he marched towarde theim, and was within a daies iorney or litle more of them, of ỹ which the Englishmen wer meruelous joyful, but the Duke which pretended another thyng, sodainly remoued his armie in a nyght with such diligence that he entred the realme of Nauer, and was before the citie of Pampilona the chief citie of Nauer before the kyng wist of it, whiche nothyng suspected of that pollicye.

Thus the kyng was sodainly trapped, supposyng tharmie of Spain to haue been reised to inuade Guyan, and hauyng nothyng defensable for the warre, in the nyght fled out at a posterne into Fraunce where he after died. The citie of Pampilona and all the coūtrey of Nauer, being vnprouided of artilarie & other defences, yelded thēselfes to the Spanyardes, and thus was the realme of Nauer wonne, which thyng made the lorde Marques and his compainie not a litle to maruell. So shortely after came to the lorde capitain and the Englishemen, diuerse Lordes sent from the kyng of Arragon, whiche sated: The kyng our souereigne lord, sendeth to you great gramercies, and highly thanketh you for your pain, and so it is that by Goddes grace and your good abode, he with his power hath taken and conquered the realme of Nauer, and if that countrey had not bee taken, thei might haue intercepted al suche ordinaunce and victail, as the king of Arragon our master might haue sent to you, but now you bee in suche a surctie and his puyssaunce with you and yours with his, that ye maie sauely joyne, whiche you shall see shortly, ye and he hymself in proper person to joyne with you. Well said the lorde Marques capitain generall, we haue soiourned long here abidyng his commyng, and if the commission and expresse commaundement ment of the king my souereigne lord wer not, that I should do nothing without the assent of the king your master, I assure you that the Frenchmenne should haue knowen that Englishmen had been heere, and not to haue lien so long in idelnes as we haue done: but if thee kyng your master doo as you reporte, it shalbe muche to his honor and to our greate comforte, and so the lordes of Spayne departed.

As the armie of Englishmen thus laie in campe, there was a village called Sancta Maria, in whiche diuerse of the Englishemen, and especially suche as haue ben sicke, resorted and reposed theim selfe, not to the litle aduantage of the toune, so it fortuned that a Spanyarde gaue euil language to an Englisheman, whiche gaue him a buffet on the face, the toune rose and sett on the Englisheman and gathered in suche a multitude, that the Englisheman whiche was the first beginner was slain, because onely thre Englishemen came to his rescue, whiche wer all hurte. The Almaynes that laie at the tounes ende, strake Alarum whiche hearyng the campe, cried to harnes euery man. The tidinges were brought to the campe, that thei of the toune had slain an Englishman, and would bid battaill: the souldiers hearyng this, in a rage ranne to the toune in suche maner, that the capitaines could not staie them, and slew and robbed the people without mercy. The people fled ouer the water into Guian. The capitaines seeyng this with their priuie seruauntes kepte thee straightes, by the which the souldiers returned with pillage and napetie, brasse, pewter, beddes, plate, and other houshold stuffe, and apparell which was commaunded to be layd doune by the lordes on a hepe. And after the lordes went to the toune to se what harme the Englishmē had doen, there thei found many Biskaynes slain, and the toune robbed, and the people fled. Then thei by sobre meanes & gentle exhortatiō, brought al the souldiers to the campe: then Proclamacion was made that euery man vpon payn of death should bring in his pillage. Now ther wer. xxi men of whom one was a gentelman whiche had taken awaie. x. thousād Duckates, who fled toward Gascoyne and were taken, and brought before the lord capitayn, and other, and adiudged to die: of the whiche. vii. wer put in execution, and the other. xiiii. should haue died the morow after, if the lordes of Spaine had not ben there at their iudgement which with greate diligence and labor gat their pardon: and so all the pillage almost was restored, and the countrey pacified.

Then one daie the Frenchemen whiche hard of this riot and trouble in the hoste, issued out of Baion toward the Englishemennes armie, the Englishmen hearing thereof, marched toward them & when the Frenchmen perceiued that thei were asskried, thei sodainly returned. Thenglish menne percetuing that the Frenchemen would not tarie, went to a good toune called sainct Jhon de Luce, and bret, robbed, and killed the inhabitauntes, and so from thence spoiled diuerse other villages, aboute ȳ borders of Guyan. Thus the armie laie til the moneth of October, and winter began sore to encrease, and the lord Marques capitain generall fell sore sicke, & then the lord Hayward had vnder hym the whole gouernaunce of tharmy, to whom wer sent diuers lordes of the pryuy counsail of Spain saying: the kyng our master sendeth you word, that he would gladly come to you but the ceason is spent, the ground is so moyst that cariage cannot be conueighed, the teldes so barrain that beastes cannot fede, and the wether so troubleous that people cannot wel lye abrode in campe: therfore he would desire you al these thinges considred, to breke vp your feld, and seuer your self to the tounes and villages of his coū-trey, tyll the spring of the yere, at whiche tyme there shall resorte to you freshe succors out Englande, and he hymselfe will be with you with al x ordenaunce necessary as becommeth to suche an armye, and then shall procede the first pretensed enterprice, to the honor of the kyng your mā-ster and ours, and not to your small fame and renoune. When this message was hard by the whole counsaill, no manne was contented, but the lorde Hayward which had the whole gouernaunce vnder the Marques saied: what report of honor can wee make of the kyng of Arragon your master, for at his desier we be come hether, and here haue lien in campe a long space, euer tarieng for performaunce of his promise, & yet nothing hath he performed, our people be dedde of the flixe in greate numbre: we gentelmen euerychone doth muche lament this long idelnes, by reason xx where of many a tall man hauing nothyng to do but abiding your masters pleasure hath falle to some mischief, or by sicknes, or els for misdo yng executed by Justice. What shall the kyng our master report of vs slothfulnes' whiche hath spent hym innumerable treasure and nothinge gained? And yet we would make Winter warre, and the king of Arra-gon your master vs denieth of suche thinges as hee promised, and willeth vs like cowardes to our dishonor, to reise our Campe without any notable act doen to the frenchemen, for which cause we came.

The Spaniardes perceiuing the grudge of the Englishemen, sayed that tyme passed could not be reuoked, and that they had not lien idely xxx for the frontiers of Guian had susteined such dammage, as in many yeres thei shall not recouer again, and all this while the Frenchmen durst not medle with you, so that you haue lost no honor, and if you tary here this Winter by your daily Skirmishyng, thei shall receiue greate damage: duryng whiche time, the kyng our master hath commaunded, ỹ thinges mete and necessary for you to be at your commaundement and in the spring of the yere, he shall ioyne with you, soo that your enemies and his shall well knowe your puissaunce, for he taketh all enemies too you to be his, so with faire wordes the counsaill of Spayn departed.

Then the lorde Hayward beyng chief, because the Marques was sick xl counsailed with all the other lordes and capitaines, and so in the end of October thei agreed to breake vp their campe, and so thei did, and thee lorde Marques and his people went to sainct Sebastian, thee lord Ha-ward and his retinew to Rendre, & the lord Willoughby to Gatschang sir William Sandes and many other capitaines to Fountrabie, and so

euery capitain with his retinew wer seuered in diuerse villages.

The Englishe souldiers, what for sickenes, & what for miserie of the countrey, euer desired to returne into England. The kyng of England aduertised by the kyng of Arragon of his entent, and how he would set forward the first spryng, sent Wynsore his Herauld of Armes to hys armie willyng them there to tary, & that he would sende them new aide, vnder the conduite of the lorde Harbert his Chamberlain: which lettet when it was redde, the souldiers began to murmure and grudge after such a sort, saiyng: that thei would not abide and dye of the flixe in such a wretched countrey, to be defrauded and mocked of the kyng of Arragon the next yere, as thei wer this yere, and spake such outragious wordes, that the capitain could not staie them, in so much that thei in a fury had slain the lorde Haward & diuerse other, if thei had not folowed theri myndes, and so thei hired shippes and putte the lorde Marques in one whiche was so weake that he asked where he was: and then euery man shipped, whiche was in Nouembre, and in the beginnyng of decembre thei landed in Englande. The kyng of Arragon was sore discontent with their departyng, for thei spent much money and substaunce in his countrey, & saied openly, that if thei had taried he would haue inuaded Guyan, and the Englishemen wer glad that thei were departed out of such a countrey, wher thei had litle health, lesse pleasure and much losse of tyme: but by their liyng there, the kyng of Arragon stale the realme of Nauer, and the Englishemen left as muche money there, as he sent into England with his daughter.

When the Marques sailed into Spayne in the moneth of May, the same tyme sir Edward Haward Lorde Admirall of Englande, as you haue hard before sailed toward Britain, and on Trinitie Sundaie arriued at Bertram Bay in Britain, with.xx. great shippes, and sodainly set his men on lande: then the Britaynes made an askrie, and sette their beacons on fire, & shot out of a bulwarke that they had fortified at the poynt of the Baye. but the Englishemen whiche wer in the ship of Willyam Gonstone Grocer of Londō, toke first land maugre them all, and al other after, and so manfully thei set on the bulwarke that thei wan it, and the Britans fled and many slain. Then the Admirall set his men in an ordre, and passed in the countrey seuē myles, burnyng and wastyng tounes and villages: and in his returne he skirmished with diuerse mē of armes and slewe diuerse of theim, and notwithstandyng the Britōs fought valiauntly for defence of their coūtrey, yet thei lost and nothyng wan: and so the lorde Admirall returned to his shippe.

Upon mondaie the.xxiii. day of May he landed in the mornyng, and cōmaunded to burne the lorde Piers Megans place, and the toune of Conket and diuerse other places, and chased the Britones to the Castle of Brest, and for all assembles and showes that the Britons made, yet thei suffered the Englishmen peaceably to returne with their praies & gaines. The Britons seyng the hurte that the nauie of England did to them, saide: alas the king of Englande hath euer before this time succoured vs, and now he entendeth to destroy vs, shame come to him that is the cause thereof,

The first daie of June the Englishemen toke lande in Crotton Bay: then the Lordes of Britain sent worde to the Lord Admirall, that if he would abide, thei would fight with him in plain felde. The Admirall rewarded the messenger, and said, go say to them that sent the, that al this daie thei shall finde me here, tarieng their comming. Then he to encourage diuerse gentelmen dubbed theim knightes, as sir Edward Broke brother to the lorde Cobham, sir Griffithe Doune, sir Thomas Windā, sir Thomas Lucie, sir William Pitton, sir Henry Shirborne, sir Stephen Bull, sir Jhon Burdett: Then the lorde Admirall highly incouraged his mē, when he saw the Britons come, whith was .x. thousand at the least, the Englishemen but onely .xxv. C. or fewe aboue, bidding thē remembre the honor and renoume that should come to them, if thei gained the iorney, and yet if thei wer slain, their valiauntnes was to be prained, & their true diligence to do their master seruice much to be allowed.

When the Britons sawe the ordre of the Englishmen and their bāners displaied, thei wer sodainly astonied, then a gentelman of Britain of muche experience, aduised the other capitaines not to fight, but to returne a litle & to take a strong grounde, and to watche the Englishemē, when thei returned to ther shippes, and then to take thauauntage. And so the captaines began to returne: and when the commons saw them returne, al thei raune awaie as faste as thei might, supposyng that their capitaines had seen or knowen some great perell toward them, because thei were not priuy of their Capitaines counsail. And when thei came home to their houses, some saied the battaill was greate, and some saied that the Englishemen wer .xl. thousande. The lord Admirall seing this chaunce, when nighte came departed to his shippes: but yet they knewe not why thei fled, till after he hard the truthe. The gentelmen of Britain called a greate counsaill, saying that the Englishemen daily wasted the countrey on the sea cost, and that there was no trust in the commonalty, and that the gentelmen alone could not defende the countrey, wherfore thei concluded to send a messenger to the lorde Admirall, desiring hym of a safe conduite for diuerse persones to speake with hym, the which he gently graunted. Then certain lordes of Britain toke a bote, and came to the ship of the lorde Admirall, where he was set withall the counsaill of the captaines about him. Then thei desired him humbly to surcest of his rigorous and cruel warre, and especially of burning of tounes whiche is to you no profite, and if you will haue thee castle of Brest, it shall be at your commaundement, so that you be able to defend it, and we desire nothing so muche as peace. Nay saied the Lorde Admirall, wee are sent hether to make warre and not peace. Then thei humblye required hym for Goddes sake to graunt theim peace for sixe daies, so that they might sende to the kyng their lorde, to aduertise him of their trouble & ca calamitie. Then the lorde Admirall answered, that gentelmen ought to defend their cõtrey by force, rather then to sue for peace: with the whiche saiyng the Britons wer ashamed: yet thei hartely thanked him, and so he made them a banket and thei departed: & thei sent a land for freshe water and other fresh victailes, and then hearing that there wer men of warre vpon the sea, he coasted frõ them alongest al the coastes of Normandy, stil skowring the seas, so that no enemie appered: and at the last came and late by the Isle of Wight, to see if any enemies would appere on thenglishe cost: duryng whiche time diuerse shippes kept the North seas vnder the cõduite of sir Edward Ichingam, Jhon Lewes, & Jhon Louedale, which dilygently skowred the seas.

This yere the king had a solempne Justes at Grenewich in June: firste came in ladies all in White and Red silke, set vpon coursers trapped in thesame sute, freated ouer with gold, after whom folowed a foũtain curiously made of Russet Satin, with eight Gargilles spoutyng Water, within the Fountain sat a knight armed at al peces. After thys Fountain folowed a lady all in blacke silk dropped with fine siluer, on a courser trapped in the same. After folowed a knight in a horslitter, the Coursers and litter appareled, blacke with Siluer droppes. When the Fountain came to the tilt, the Ladies rode rounde about and so did the Fountain and the knight within the litter. And after them wer brought twoo goodly coursers appareled for the Justes: and when they came to the Tiltes ende, the twoo knightes mounted on the twoo Coursers abidyng all commers. The king was in the fountain, and sir Charles Brã don was in the litter. Then sodainly with greate noyse of Trompettes, entered sir Thomas Kneuet in a Castle of Cole blacke, and ouer the castell was writtẽ, The dolorous Castle, and so he and therle of Essex, the lorde Haward and other ran their courses with the king and sir Charles Brandon, and euer the king brake moste speres.

The Kyng euer remembryng his warres, caused all his shippes and Galies to be rigged and prepared, with all manner of ordinaunce & artillery mete for shippes of ware. And emongest all other, he decked thee Regent a ship royal as chief ship of that nauie, and then caused souldiers mete for the same shippes, to muster on Blackeheth, and he appointed capitaines for that time, sir Anthony Oughtred, sir Edward Ichingham, William Sidney, and diuerse other Gentelmen, whiche shortlye shipped & came before the Isle of Wight, but in their passage a Galeye was lost by the negligence of the Master.

The king euer desiryng to see his nauie together, roade to Portesmouthe, and there he appoynted capitaines for the Regent, sir Thomas Kneuet master of his horse, and sir Jhon Carew of Deuonshire. And to another ship royal called the soueregne, he apponcted sir Charles Brãdon, and sir Henry Guildforde, and with theim in the Soueregne were put. lx. of the tallest yomen of the kinges Gard, and many other gentelmen wer made Capitaines. The king made a greate banquet to all the capitaines, and euery one sware to another euer to defend, aide, & cõfort one an other without failyng, and this they promised before the kyng, whiche commuted theim to God, and so with great noyse of minstrelsie thei toke their shippes, whiche wer in nombre 25 of greate burden, and well furnished of all thinges.

The Frenche kyng hearyng what dammage thenglishmen had don in Britaine, strongly furnished his Nauie in the hauen of Brest, to the nombre of xxxix. saile, and for chief ordeigned a Carick of Brest, appertaigning to the Quene his wife, which was Duches and heire of Britayne called Cordelier, whiche was a strong ship furnished in all poyntes, and so thei set forward out of Brest the. x. daie of August, & came to Britaine Bay, in which place the selfe same day, being the day of. s. Laurence the Englishe Nauie was arriued. x

When the Englishe menne perceiued the French Nauie to be out of Brest hauen, then the lorde Admirall was very ioyous, then euery man prepared accordyng to his duetie, the Archers to shote, the Gonners to lose, the men of Armes to fight, the Pages went to the toppe Castle with dartes: thus all thinges beyng prouided and set in ordre, the Englishe men approched toward the Frenchemen, whiche came fiersly forwarde, some leauing his Ancre, some with his foresaile onely to take the moost auauntage: and when thei wer in sight, thei shot ordenaunce so terribly together, that all the sea coast sounded of it. The Lorde Admirall made with the great ship of Depe, and chased her stil: sir Henry Guilford and sir Charles Brandon, made with the greate Caricke of Brest, beyng in the Souereigne, and lated stemme to stemme to thee Caricke, but by negligence of the Master, or els by smoke of the ordinaunce or other wise, the Souereigne was cast at the sterne of thee Carick, with which auãtage the Frenchemenne showted for ioy: but when sir Thomas Kneuet whiche was ready to haue borded the greate ship of Depe, saw that the Souereigne had missed the Caricke, which sir Anthony Oughtred chased hard at the starne, and bouged her in diuerse places, and set a fire her powder as some say, but sodainly the Regent crappeled with her a long boord and when thei of the Carick perceiued that thei could not depart, thei let slip and Ancre, and so with the streme the shippes turned, and ỹ Caricke was on the wetherside, and the Regent on the lye side, the fight was very cruell, for the archers of the Englishe parte, and the Crossebowes of the Frenche part did their vttermoste: but for al that the Englishmen entered the Caricke, whiche seing a varlet Gonner being desperate put fire in the Gonne powder as other saie, and set the whole ship of fire the flame whereof set fire in the Regent, and so these twoo noble shippes which wer so crappeled together that thei could not part wer consumed by fire. The French nauie perceiuing this fled in all hast, some to Brest, and some to the Iles adioynyng. The Englishmen in maner dismated, sent out boates to help them in ỹ Regent, but the fire was so greate that in maner no mon durst approche, sauing that by the Iames of Hul wer xx xxx xl

certein Frenchmen that could swimme saued. This burning of the Caricke was happy for the frenche nauie, or els thei had been better assailed of thenglishemen, whiche wer so amased with this chaunce, that thei folowed them not. The capitain of this Carick was sir Piers Morgan and with him ij.C. men slain and ded: and with sir Thomas Kneuet and sir Jhon Carow wer. vii. C. men drouned and brent, and that nighte all the Englishemen late in Bartrain Baye, for the frenche flete was sparcled as you haue hard.

The lorde admirall called al the capitaines together, desiryng theim not to be abasshed with this chaunce of warre, for he thought now that this was the worste fortune that could happen to theim, therfore to studie how to be reuenged, and so thei concluded all to go to the sea. whiche thei did, and on the coast of Britain toke many shippes, and such as thei could not cary away they set on fire, small and great to a greate nombre on al the coast of Britain, Normandy and Picardy, and thus thei kept the sea.

The king of England heryng of the losse of the Regent, caused a great shippe to be made, such another as was neuer seen before in England and called it, Henry grace de Dieu

The French kyng heryng that his flete was thus deuided, and of the losse of his greate Caricke, he sent to a knight of the Rhodes called Sir Jhon, whiche had three Galies of force, with diuerse Foystes & Rowgalies so well ordinãced and with suche peces as was not seen in shippes before his comming: for he late on the coast of Barbary, to defende certein of the Religion of the Rhodes comming to Tripoly, and at thee Frenche kinges request came into Britain and there taried.

In Nouembre the kyng called his high Courte of Parliament, and there was concluded that the kyng himself in person, with an army roiall would inuade his realme of Fraunce, with fire and Sworde, which thing beeyng knowen to his subiectes, and especiall to such as shoulde go with him, no man can doubt, but that preparacion mas made of harneis, weapon, artillery, banners and al other thinges necessary for such an enterprice.

The kyng after this Parliament ended, kept a solempne Christmas at Grenewiche to chere his nobles, and on the twelfe daie at night came into the hall a Mõut, called the riche Mount. The Mount was set full of riche flowers of silke, and especially ful of Brome slippes full of codes, the Braunches wet grene Satin, and the flowers flat Gold of Damaske, whiche signified Plantagenet. On the top stode a goodly Bekõ geuing light, round aboute the Bekon sat the king and fiue other, al in cotes and cappes of right Crimosin veluet, enbroudered with flatt gold of Dãmaske, their coates set ful of spangelles of gold, and foure woodhouses drewe the Mount till it came before the quene, and then the king and his compaignie discended and daunced: then sodainly the Mounte opened, and out came sixe ladies all in Crimosin satin and plunket, em-

broudered with Golde and perle, with French hoodes on their heddes and thei daunced alone. Then the lordes of the Mount toke the ladies and daunced together: and the ladies reentred, and the Mounte closed, and so was conueighed out of the hall. Then the kyng shifted him and came to the Quene, and sat at the banquet which was very sumpteous. And after the Purificacion of our Lady, the kyng created sir Charles, Brandon Viscount Lisle. In Marche folowing, was the kinges naue of shippes royall, and other mete for the war set furth to the numbre of xlii. Beside other Belengers, the lorde Admiral was chief, and with him sir Water Deuereux Lorde Ferreis, sir Wolstan Brownc, sir Edwarde Ischingham, sir Antony Poyntz, sir Jhon Wallop, sir Thomas Wyndam, sir Stephen Bull, Wilyam Fitz Wilyam, Arthur Plantagenet, William Sidnay Esquires, and diuerse other noble and valiaunt Capitaines: thei sailed to Portesmouth, and there laie abiding Wynde duryng whiche tyme, the kyng sent into Flaunders for such thinges as he neded, & caused them to be brought to Caleis against his comming

When the wynde serued, the Nauy royall of England waied anker and made saile into Britain, and came into Bertram Bay, and ther lay at Anker in sight of the Frenche Nauie. Now you muste vnderstande, that all the greate Nauie whiche the Frenche kyng had prepared late in the hauen of Brest, so well furnished in al thinges, that no doubt it was a wonder to se: but when thei wer ready to sette furthe, and sawe the Englisli fleete on the coast, thei determined clerely to saue thẽselfes in Brest hauen. Then the Englishemen determined clercly to sett on them in the hauen, and so in good ordre of battail sailed forward, but at the first entry one ship, whereof Arthur Plantagenet was capitain, fell on a blind rocke, & brast a sondre, by reason whereof, al the other staied to the gret displeasure of al the remnaunt, and not to the litle ioy of the Frenchmen whiche shott at them without any doing harme. So the Englishe captaines perceiuing that thee hauen was dangerous to enter without an expert lodesman, cast about and returned to their harboroughe at Bertram Baye again.

The Frenchemen perceiuing that the Englishmen intended to assaile them, moored their shippes as nye to the Castle of Brest as thei could, and set bulwarkes on the land on euery side to shote at thenglishemen. Also thei frapped together .xviii. greate Hulkes, that came to the Baye for salt, and set them on a rowe, to the intent that if the Englishe menne would haue assaulted them, thei would haue set them on a fire, and lett them driue with the streme emongest the Englishe Nauie, Prior Jhon also laie still in Blacke Sable or Whitesande Baye, and plucked hys Galies to the shore, and sett his Basiliskes and other ordenaunce in the mouthe of the Baye, which Bay was Bulwarked on euery side, that by water it was not possible to be wonne.

The lorde Admirall perceiuing the Nauie of Fraunce to lye thus in feare, and not willing nor daring to come abrode, but to ly as prisoners in in a dongeon, wzote to the kyng to come thether in person, and to haue the honoz of so high an entrepzice: whiche wziting the kynges counsail nothing allowed, foz putting the kyng in ieopetoy vpon the chaunce of the sea. Wherefoze the king wzote sharpely to hym, to accomplisshe that whiche apperteined to his duete: whiche caused hym too take courage and put thinges in aduenture as after you shall here.

AS you haue hard befoze the lozde Admiral of Englād lay stil on the coast of Bzitain in the Bay, called Bartrames Bay, so that foz feare of hym and the Englishe Nauie, neither the great shippes in Bzest hauen durst once moue to the lea ward, noz yet Pzioz Jhō foz al his strong Galeis would once set out a saile: sauing now & thē send furth his smal Foystes, to make a shew befoze thenglish nauy whiche chased them to their Bay, but because thengtilsh shippes were so greate thei could not entez the Bay, and so manned out boates and toke one of the best Foystes, and that, with greate daunger, foz the Galies and the bulwarkes shot all at one time, that it was a wōz der how the Englishemem escaped. The .v yere.

xx The Admyzall of Englaude perceuing the Fzenche mennes pollecy, called a counsaill, and there determined tirst to assaile Pzioz Jhon and his Galies, liyng in Whitsand Bay, and after to set on the remnaunt in the hauen of Bzest. Then first was appointed that Water lozd Ferreis sir Stephen Bul and other capitaines, should go a land with a conuenient compaignie, to assault the Bulwarkes of Whitsand Bay, while ỹ Lozde Admyzall entered with towe Barges and litle Galies into the Bay, so that the Frenchmen should be assailed bothe by water and land

This was it fully agreed by the whole counsail: but alas, this noble capitain counsailed by a spanishe knighte called sir Alphous, Charant, xxi whiche saied that he might entre the Bay with litle ieopatdy, called to hym William Fitz William, Willyam Cooke, Jhon Colley, and syz Wolstan Bzowne as the chief and his moste trusty frendes, and declared to them that the matter was litle, and the honoz greate, if they only tooke on them that enterpzice, and let none other know of it. Thei like men of haute courage and desiryng honour gladly assented: so on saint Markes day, the xvi. daie of Apzill, the said Admirall put him self in a small towe barge, with thzee other small rowing shippes, and his awne ship boate, and so towed sodainly into the Baye, where Pzioz Jhon had moozed his Galies iust to the gzound, whiche Galies with the bulwarxl kes on the lande, shot so terribly that thei that folowed wer afraid: but assone as he came to the Galies, he entered and dzaue out thee Frenchemen, William Fitz William within his shippe was soze hurte with a quarrel. The Bay was very shalow, and the other shippes could not entre, foz the tide was spent, whiche thyng the Frenchemen perceiuing, &

that there could come no succoure to the Admirall, wyth Worris pikes entered again the Galies, and fought with the Englishmen in the Galies. And the Admirall perceiuyng their approchyng, thought to haue entered again unto his rowe Barge, whiche by violence of the tide was dryuen doune the streme, & so with a pike was throwen ouer the borde and so drouned, and there the forenamed Alphous was slain, and al the other boates and vesselles scaped hardely, for if thei had taried, the tide had failed them and then all had been lost. The lord Ferreis and other capitaines muche were dolent of this chaunce, and some saied he dyd it without counsaill, and so he hath sped. And therfore although that they would haue sette on the Nauie in Brest hauen, yet hauyng no Admiral nor commission, thei determined to do nothing farther till thei knew the kynges pleasur, and so sailed into Englande. The Frenche Nauie perceiuyng that the Englishmen made toward England, came out of their hauens, and Prior Jhon set furthe his Galies and Foystes, and costed Briain and Normãdy, and coasted ouer to the coast of Sussex and al his compaignie, and landed on the sea coast, and set fire on the poore cotages. The gentlemen that dwelte nere, shortely reised the countrei, and came to the coast and droue Prior Jhõ to his Galeis. This was al the hurt that this stout capitain of so great fame did to England, sauyng he robbed certein poore Fisshermen of Whitynges. The kynge hearing the death of his Admiral was not a litle sory, consideryng both ẏ nobilitie of his birthe, and the valiauntnes of his persone, but all sorowe auaileth not whẽ the chaunce is past. Therfore the kyng hering that the Frenche Nauie was abrode, called to hym the lorde Thomas Haward, elder brother to sir Edward Haward late Admirall, and sõne and heire apparant to the Erle of Surrey, and made him Admirall, willyng him to reuenge his brothers death, which with great reuerence, thanked the kyng of the high truste ẏ he had put him in. And then immediatly went to the sea, and so nobly & valiauntly did skower the sea, that the French men had no lust to kepe the coast of England, for he fought with theim at their awen portes.

The kyng whiche had all thynges necessary and mete for the warre, entendyng to passe the sea in propre person, appoynted the valiaũt lord George Talbot Erle of Shrewesbury, and his Steward of his houshold to be capitain generall of his forward, and in his compaignie wer lorde Thomas Stanley Erle of Derby, lorde Decowrey Prior of. S. Jhons, sir Robert Radcliffe Lord Fitzwater, the Lorde Hastynges, the Lorde Cobham, sir Rice Ap Thomas, sir Thomas Blount, sir Richard Sachuerell, sir Jhon Dighby, sir Jhon Askewe, syr Lewes Bagot, sir Thomas Cornewall, and many Knightes and Esquiers & souldiers, to the nombre of. viii, M. menne, whiche all passed the sea, and to Caleis in the middle of May.

The lorde Herbert called sir Charles Somerset, chief Chamberlayn to the kyng, the ende of thesame moneth with. vi. M. men passed the sea

iii

in whose compaignie were these Erles, of Northumbèrlande Percie, of Kent Graye, of Wilshire Staffoꝛd, the loꝛde Fitzwater, the loꝛde Dudley, the loꝛde Delawar, sir Thomas West his sonne, sir Edward Huley sir Robert Dimmocke, sir Dauie Owen, with many other gentelmenne, some with speres on hoꝛsbacke, some with pikes on foote, some with dimilaunces, and this was the reereward. Such good diligẽce was made that these two capitaines with all their compaignie, furnished with artilerie, pouder, tentes, cariages, and all thinges necessary foꝛ the warres were landed at Caleis the last daie of Maij x After thei had soiouꝛned certain daies in Caleis, and that all thynges requisite wer ready, thei caused a trumpet to blowe and made Pꝛoclamacion that euery man should departe out of the toune, and so to begin the campe. The erle of Shꝛewesbury with his compaignie first toke the felde, after him folowed the loꝛde Harbert with his compaignie, in maner of a retereward. And after him folowed the valiaunt sir Rice ap Thomas with .v.C. light hoꝛse and Archers on hoꝛseback, and ioyned hym to the foꝛward. Then was ther oꝛdꝛe taken what persones should conduite the victailers that came from Caleis, and who should conduite ỹ victailers that came out of Flaunders, foꝛ without sufficiẽt conduite no xx creature durste bꝛyng any victaile to the armie. These two loꝛdes thus embattailed remoued the .xvii. daie of June to Sandilfelde, and on the xviii. daie thei came to Hargison, on ỹ farre side of the water, as though thei would haue passed streightly to Bulleyne, but thei thoughte otherwise, foꝛ the next daie thei tooke another waie, and coasted the countrey with suche diligence, that the xxii. daie of June thei with al their people oꝛdinaũce, and habilimentes of warre, wer come befoꝛe the strong citie of Tirwin, and pight their Tentes a myle from the toune, and foꝛ that night embattailed them self: ãd as certain captaines wer in counsaill in the loꝛde Herbertes tent, sodainly out of the toune was shot a gonne, the xx pellet wherof slewe a noble capitain called the Baron of Carew, sitting there in counsaill, whiche sodain aduenture dismaied muche thee assemble. But the loꝛde Herbert valiauntly cõfoꝛted them, saiyng: this is the chaunce of warre, if it had hit me you muste haue been content, a noble harte in warre is neuer a feard of death. All the countrey of Arthoys & Picardy, foꝛtified their holdes, and made shewes as the English army passed, but thei durst not once assaile them.

The citie of Tirwin was strongly foꝛtified with walles, rampaires, bulwarkes, with diuerse foꝛtresses in the diches, which were so bꝛode & so plum stepe ỹ was wondꝛe to beholde. The loꝛde Pountremy was capitain generall, and with him wer within the citie .vi.C. hoꝛsmen furnished, and twoo .M.v.C. Almaines beside the inhabitauntes of the citye. the walles & towers wer ful of oꝛdenaunce, which did oftentymes great displeasure to the Englishemen. The Erle of Shꝛewesbury laied siege to the toune, on the Noꝛth West side. and the loꝛde Herbert on the East side oꝛ end ward, the Frenchmen issued out of the toune and skirmished

with the Englischemen, but the Archers shot so fast that they draue the Frenchemen into the citie, and slewe and toke diuerse of them. The lord Herbert which laie in the open sight of the toune, hauing no hil or other thyng to succour or defende him, caused great trenches to be made, and so maugre his enemies he approched very nere ỹ cite: likewise therle of Shrewesbury with thee forward, gat into an holowe ground or valey nere to the citie. Daily the Frenchmen shot at thenglishmē, and diuerse tymes issued out and skirmished, and euer thei lost by skirmishyng, but by shotyng of ordinaunce thei hurte diuerse Englishmen. Wherfore the lordes commaunded the pioners to raise a great trenche in whiche they laied the great ordinaunce, and daily as thei might they approched: syr Rise ap Thomas with the horsmen daily skowered the countrey, & many tymes encountered with the Frenchmen, and slewe and toke diuerse prisoners, so that the Frēchmen drewe not toward the siege, but turned another waie. Upon the Wundaie beeyng the. xxvii. daie of June. xxiiii Cartes charged with victaill, wer by the Garrison of Calcis conduted to Guisnes, and ther the Crewe of the castle and toune of Guisnes with three. C. foote men, vnder the conduite of sir Edward Belknappe, al beeyng in nombre. iiii. C. lx. men, set furthe to conduite the saied victailes to tharmie lyng before Tirwyn, and so thei passed to Arde. And while the Carters passed the toune, the horsemen fel a drinkyng in the waie, and the foote men wer al out of ordre. The duke of Uandosme capitain generall of Picardie, which laie in a bushement in the forest side of Guysnes with. viii. C. light horsemen, toke his aduauntage and set on the victailers, the Carters perceiuyng that losed their horses and fledd to the toune, whiche was but a myle of and left their Cartes. Sir Nicholas Uaux capitain of Guysnes did al he could, to bryng the foote men in an ordre: but the Frenchmen set on so quickly that thei could not set theim in ordre, the horsmen of Guysnes whiche wer but onely. xxiiii. toke their speres and ioyned with the Frenchemen: the Archers of Englande why che passed not. lx. shot manfully, & a noble capitain called Baltier Dechien and diuerse other, but the Frenchemen wer so many in nombre and in good ordre, ỹ thei slew. viii. gentlemen of the Garrison of Guysnes, and. xxx. Archers slain and many hurte, and so thei distrussed the victailes, and caused sir Nicholas Uaux, and sir Edward Belknappe to flie taward Guisnes. This misauenture fell by tariyng of the horsmen and breaking of array, for if tharchers had taried together it had happened otherwise, for ỹ fewe Archers that held together, slewe and hurt diuerse Frenchemen: For on the felde laie. lxxvii. great horse which neuer wēt thence, by the which it appered that the Frenchemenne went not quite a waie without losse. Whē tidynges of this misauenture came to the lordes at the siege, thei wer not a litle displeased: and sir Rise ap Thomas caused his Trompet to blowe to the stirroppe. and he with his horsmen sought the Duke of Uandosme all the contrey, whiche hearyng of the commyng of sir Rise, with great hast retreted backe to Bangey Abbey, where where the French kynges greate army laie. Sir Rise heryng ẏ he was returned came the next day agayn to ẏ sege. The rumour of this skyrmish spyong all the English pale toward Flaunders, wherfore the tounes fiered ther bekons & range alarme; diuers honorable men ẏ had passed ẏ see wᵗ cõpanies of souldiours & were in Caleis, marched forward in order of battaile, but heryng of ẏ departing of Mounsir de uandosme, they rested. Then was new prouision made for vitaile & sent daily frõ Caleis to Turwyn by such cõduite, ẏ the Frenchmen would no more meddill, and the army also was wel vitaled out of Flaunders and Henawde.

The army of England thus lay before the strong toune of Turwin: ẏ noble kinge of Englãd not forgettyng his entrepryce prepared al thing redy to passe the see in proper persone, and caused sir Jhon Wilshire to puruey for.iij.C. hoyes to carry ouer his artillery and habilimentes of warre & all his shippes of warre were on the see skowering euery coste of his realme. And when all thinges were prest, he accompanied wyth many noble men &.vj.C. archers of his garde, al in white gabberdines & cappes, departed from his manour royall of grenewich the.xv. daye of June & so he & the quene with small iorneys came to Douer castell & there rested, & made the quene gouerner of the realme, & commaunded William Warram then bishop of Cantorbury and sir Thomas Louell a sage knyght & diuers other, to gyue there attendaunce on the quene. And cõmaunded therle of Surrey to drawe toward the north partes lest the Scottes woulde make any entrepryce in his absence. Then the kyng toke leue of the quene & of the ladies which made such sorow for the departyng of their lordes & husbandes, that it was greate dolor to beholde, and so he with al his army toke his shippe the last day of June beyng the daye of sainct Paule.

In the mornyng when the kyng was shipped & made saile, al ẏ army folowed, to the nomber of.iiij.C. shippes, and the winde was so, ẏ they were brought euen on the coste of picardy open vpõ S. Jhons Roade, & with the flud they haled a long the coste of Whitsand wᵗ trumpettes blowynge and gonnes shotynge, to the great feare of them of Bolleyn which plainly might beholde this passage, & so came to Caleys hauen.

The kyng was receiued into a bote couered with arras, & so was set on londe. He was appareilled in almaine ryuet crested & his vãbrace of the same, & on his hedde a chapeau mõtabyn with a rich coronal, ẏ folde of the chapeau was lined with crimsym satẽ, & on ẏ a riche brooch with ẏ image of sainct George, ouer his riuet he had a garmẽt of white cloth of gold with a redde crosse, & so he was receiued with processiõ & wᵗ his deputie of Caleys called sir Gylbert Talbot, and all other nobles and gentlemẽ of the towne & countrey, & so entred in at the lanternegate & passed the stretes tyll he came to Saincte Nycholas churche, & ther he alighted & offered, & frõ thens he went to ẏ stapleinne wher he supped.

When the kyng entred Caleys, al the banished men entred wᵗ him & were restored to ẏ liberty of ẏ toune. To tell of ẏ gonne shott of ẏ toune

& of the shippes at the kynges landing it was a great wonder, for men of good estimacio reported ỹ they harde it at Douer. The kyng lyenge thus in Caleys, all his armye except a few of his counsayll & other that gaue their attendaunce on hym laye encamped at Newnam bridge, in which campe about a.xj. of ỹ clock at night there rose an eskrye, so that the towne of Caleys began alarme, with that the kyng waked & came to the walles, & demaunded what the matter ment, the yoman of ỹ tētes, called Richard Gybson, shewed him howe that certayne horsmē & footmen of Fraunce, profered to come ouer the hauē, & the archers that laie next the see side entred into ỹ water & defended ỹ passage, wh which defence ỹ Frenchmē returned, & so ỹ kyng was satisfied. But after this a frēchmā of Whitlād bay & one of Bullain were takē, ỹ one called Charles de bone, ỹ other Peter vernowne, which confessed ỹ frō the toune of Whitland came.lx. horsmen &.ij.C. footmen of the garrison of Bullein & the countrey adioynyng entendyng to passe by Rice banke at the low water marke, ouer ỹ hauē of Caleis at a certayn foord shewed to thēby a spy which serued ỹ yomā of ỹ tentes of vitailes, & shewed thē that the tētes were pitched vnder Caleis walles betwene ỹ toune & the cāpe, so that thei might burne thē quykly or the toune could issue, or the campe remoue. But ỹ Englishmē kept so good watch as you haue heard that xx their entrepryce came to none effect. The morow after being ỹ first day of July, ỹ noble lord Hayward admirall of Englād landed at Whitland Bay, & entred, spoyled & brent ỹ toune, & returned to his ships for allỹ Bullonois, & so recōpensed the imaginacion that the bayly of Whitland & the Bullonoys had entrepryse for the burning of the kynges tētes.

On fryday at night blew such a storme ỹ seuered all the nauy, & some were drowned. Upon the.viij. day of July, the lord Marques Dorset, therle of Essex, ỹ lord Lisle rode into Flaūders & ther toke ỹ mousters of the lord Lynny, the lord Walō, sonne to the lord of Barow, & bastard Emery which wh ther retinue were thē admitted into ỹ kynges wages xxx & the lord Linny wh a.C. & .l. speres was appointed to go to the lorde Herbert: & the lord Walon & bastard Emery wh ther bondes were appointed to go to therle of Shrewsbury liēg before Tirwin: These strāgers were warlycke persons on light horses. While the siege laye thus before Tyrwyn as you haue harde, the Frenchmē diuerse times issued out on horseback and many a staffe was broken & manye a proper feat of armes done. Likewise the Almaynes on foot woulde diuerse tymes issue out wh handgonnes, and morish pycks & assaile the Englishmē, but by force of the archers thei were euer driuen home agayn, & euery day the Englishmen shott at the towne and dyd them muche displeasure. xl

The.xxj. day of July (when al thinges by counsaill had ben ordered concernyng the order of battayle) the kyng passed out of ỹ toune of Caleis in goodly array of battaile & toke the felde: And notwithstādyng ỹ the forward & the rerewarde of ỹ kyngs great army were before Tirwyn as you haue harde: Yet the kynge of his awne battayle made.iij.

battailles after the falchion of the warre, the lord Lisle marshall of the hoste was capitaine of the forward, & vnder him.iij.M.men. Sir Richard Carew w̄.iij.C.men was ẏ right hand wyng to the forward, & ẏ lord Darcy w̄.iij.C.mē, wyng on ẏ left hand, the skourers & forriders of this battaile were ẏ Northūberland mē on light geldynges. Therle of Essex was Lieutenant generall of the speres, & sir Jhon Pechy was vicegouernour of ẏ horsmen: before ẏ kyng went.viij.C.Almaynes all in a plūpe by thē selfs: after thē came the standard w̄ the redde Dragō, next the banner of our lady, & next after ẏ banner of ẏ trinitie, vnder ẏ x same were all the kings houshold seruauntes, thē went ẏ bāner of ẏ armes of Englād borne by sir Henry Guldford, vnder which bāner was the kyng him self, w̄ diuers noble men & other to ẏ nōber of.iij.M.men The duke of Buckynghā with.vj.C.mē.was on ẏ kyngs left hād egal w̄ ẏ Almaynes, in likewise on ẏ right hād was sir Edward Pounynges w̄ other.vj.C.men egall with ẏ Almaynes. The lord of Burgainie w̄ viij.C.men, was wyng on ẏ right hand, sir Williā Cōpton w̄ ẏ retinue of ẏ bishop of Winchester, & master Wolsey ẏ kings Almoner to ẏ nōber of.viij.C.was in maner of a rereward, sir Anthony oughtred & sir Jhō Neuell w̄ the kinges speres ẏ folowed, were.iiij.C.& so the hole army xx were.xj.M.& iij.C.men. The master of the ordinaunce set foorth the kynges artilary, as fawcons, slynges, bōbardes, cartes with powder, stones, bowes, arowes & such other thinges necessary for the felde, the hole nomber of the cariages were.xiij.C.the leders and driuers of the same were.xix.C.men and all these were rekened in the battaile, but of good fightynge men there were not full.ix.M.

Thus in order of battaile ẏ kyng rode to Seutreyca & ther lodeg ẏ first night, on friday ẏ garrison of Bulleyn mustered nye to Fines Hill & were askryed by ẏ Northūberland mē, which marched toward thē, but ẏ Frenchemen returned. On saterdaie the hoste remoued to Hābxxx well & ther rested. On sonday, & on mondaie he entered into ẏ Frenche groūde nye to Arde, & ther euery gentlemā had on his coate of armes, & these tydynges were brought to ẏ kyng ẏ the Frēch army approched whiche tidinges pleased him well, for he desyred nothyng but battaile. Tewsday the.xxvj.daye of July the kynge passed forward in order of battayle & euer ẏ Frenchmen costed a farre of to take the Englyshmen at some auantage, but thei kept them so close in order, ẏ they could not fynd them out of array. Hodwbeit, by negligence of the carters ẏ mystooke ẏ waye a greate Curtall called the Jhon euangelist, was ouerthrowen in a depe ponde of water, & coulde not quicklye be recouered.
xl The kyng heryng ẏ his enemies approched, leuyng ẏ gonne (because the master carpenter sayde ẏ he would shortely way it out of the water) set forward his hoste, and in good order came to Dornahan where is a fayre castell stādyng in a wodde countrey, the Frenchmē were euer lurkyng in the woddes viewing ẏ kyngs cōduite & order as he passed, and so he lefte the towne of Dornahan on his right hande, and came to a billage on a litle riuer where the ordinaūce pitched. And when the kyng came to the ryuer he perceyued that many gentlemen made daū-the courage of the kyng. ger to entre into the riuer: Wherfore he a lighted downe of his horle & without any more abode entred the riuer, then all other entred & came ouer. Then was tydynges brought to hym, that the Frenchmen were nere at hande and would fight that nyght: the kyng styll abode in order of battaile, euer lokynge for the commynge of the Frenchmen, and at night wooide was brought that they were reculed, and then he entred into hys tente.

Wednesday the.xxvj. daye of July the releffe of the speres brought x in alkry, wherfore the kynge commaunded to blow to the standarde, & auaunced his banner & toke a faire feld or banke abidyng the comming of the Frenchmen. The capitaines generall of the army of the Frenche kyng were the lord dela Palice and the lorde of Piens, accompaignyed with the duke of Longuyle, therle of sainct Polle, ỹ lorde of Florynges, the lorde Cleremounde, & Richard dela Pole traytour of England sonne to ỹ duke Jhon of Suffolke: with these capitaines were cōming. xj. M footmen & .iiij. M. horsmen, all prest in battayle & came w̄ in. ij. miles of the kyng of Englande, and there the footmen staled & came no farther: certaine horsmen to the nomber of. iij. M. and aboue marched forward xx and at the ende of a wodde shewed themselfes open in the sight of the Englishe army. The kyng perceiuyng there demeanure, commaunded al his footmē not to remoue, but to stand still. The Frenchmē remoued and came sumwhat nerer to a place of execuciō: then the master Gōner losed a pece of artilery or two. As the kyng lay thus styll abydyng his enemies, and that the horsemen stode still in sight, the greate armye of Fraunce approched, whiche the Englishmen could not descrye by cause of an hyll that was betwexte thē. The Northerne men ran to ỹ Frēchmen, which manly encontered with them & strake some of them downe and maugre all there powre brought certaine prisoners to the kyng of xxx England. Therle of Essex capitaine of ỹ kynges speres with. ij. C. speres lay in a stale, if the Frenchmen had come nerer. Then sodainly apered in sight a great company of horsmen and the kyng knewe not what thei were: but at ỹ last it was perceyued that it was the valiant knight sir Rice ap Thomas with his retinue whiche came to the kyng aboute none: which gentilly receyued him & sent hym to therle of Essex, which incontinentely departed and compassed the hill and came to therle, and when they were ioyned, they drewe thē about the hyll accompaignied with sir Thomas Gylforde capitayne of. ij. C. archers on horseback, to thentent to haue set on ỹ Frenchmē, which perceiuyng ỹ, & dowghting xl more nōber to come after, sodainly drewe back & ioyned them w̄ there great battaile. Then therle of Essex & thenglishe horsmen folowed thē tyll they came nere the great army of Fraunce and then staled, and sent light horsemen to knowe ỹ cōduite of ỹ French army. When ỹ Frenchmen of armes were retorned to ther battaile, both ỹ footmē & horsmen reculed in order of battell and went back a pace, the Englyshe styrrers perceyuyng this, folowed.iij. leages and returned to therle, makynge repoꝛte of that they had sene, & then he brake vp his stale & came to the kyng, declaryng to him how the Frenshemen were reculed. Thys daye was called the dꝛye wednesday, foꝛ the day was wonderfull hoat & the kyng and his army were in oꝛder of battaile from.vj. of the clock in the moꝛnyng tyll.iij. of the clock at after noone, & some died foꝛ lack of moysture & allmost in general euery man was burned about ẏ mouth with hete of the stomack, foꝛ dꝛynke lacked and water was not nere. After this, the kyng remoued towarde Tyꝛwyn hauyng his hoꝛsmen behind hym, lest the Frenshmen shoulde sodainly sett on hym behynde, & as the kyng was settyng foꝛward, the loꝛde Walowne of Flaunders came to the kyng with his hoꝛsmen which were in the kynges wages, and the kyng declared to him what had chaunced. As the army passed by negligence thesame day in a lane, was ouerthꝛowen one of the kinges great bombardes of Iron, called the redde gonne, and there left: When the night began to appꝛoche the kyng rested and toke his campe.ij. myles from sainct Omers on the noꝛthsyde.

the dꝛy Wednesday.

On the thursdaye beyng the.xxviij. day of July the master carpẽter with an hundꝛed carpenters & laboꝛers without knowledge of ẏ marshal went to waye vp ẏ great gonne that was in the ponde as you haue harde, & by foꝛce of engynes dꝛewe it vp and laied it on a carte redy to cary: But sodainly out of a wodde issued.viij.C. Frenchmen with speres, crosbowes & handgonnes, and assayled the pooꝛe labourers which valiantly defended themselfes: but oppꝛessed with multitude, the most parte was slayne and the remnant taken, & they & ẏ pece of oꝛdinaunce caried to bulleyne. This misauẽture fel, foꝛ the master carpẽter would woꝛke all of his awne hedde without counsayll, with which chaunce ẏ kyng was soꝛe displeased. The Frenchmẽ ioyous of this chaunce, assembled a great nomber, to take the other gonne ẏ lay still in the high way. Wherfoꝛe the loꝛde barnes beyng capiteyne of the pioners & laboꝛers heryng of the misauenture, & consideryng that ẏ other gonne was lyẽg behynd pꝛepared al maner of engines to recouer thesame. The moꝛow after, the kyng entended to reyse his camp, but whẽ he harde of ẏ great pece of oꝛdinaunce that was left behynde, & that ẏ Frenshmẽ assembled together, he was in a greate musynge and so taryed and commaunded the Almaynes to retrate backe and to succour them that went foꝛ the pece of oꝛdinaunce. The Almaynes went fooꝛth and staled within two mile, where the pece of oꝛdinaunce lay, and farther thei woulde not go.

The earle of Essex with his company of speres, sir Rice ap Thomas, w̃ his compaignie, sir Jhon Neuell with the Noꝛthũberland men set foꝛward to helpe the loꝛd Barnes foꝛ recouery of the gonne. And sodainly the noꝛthꝛen hoꝛsmen espied where al the great army of the Frenshmẽ were commyng foꝛward, & so repoꝛted to therle of Essex, ẏ to sir Jhon pechy Lieutenant of the hoꝛsemen & speres & other capitaines, whiche were were in the place where the said goune was left with a hundred horsme which hering therof sent worde to sir Rice, which hering therof desired the erle of Essex to come & to take grounde in that place where he was, which remoued in greate haste: In the meane season by ỹ diligent labor of the Lord Barnes, the pece of ordinaunce was rayled & carted, and further was it caried, by this tyme the French army apered in sight.

When therle of Essex saw the great nomber of the Frenchmen, in all hast he sent to the lord Walon, willyng him w̃ his company to come to there ayde, the lord Waloun sayd to ỹ messenger, go tel your capitayne ỹ I come hither to serue the kyng of England more then one daye, and therfore I would all thenglishmē would returne, for w̃ ỹ great power of Fraunce thei be not able to fight, for I esteme thē. ix. or. x. M. men at the lest: with this aunswer ỹ messenger departed & made relaciō to the erle of Essex & other capitaynes which there w̃ were sore discōtent: by this time ỹ scowrers of ỹ French parte were come harde to ỹ handes of the Englishmē: then began ỹ light horsmen to skyrmyshe, ther was folowyng & reskuinge on both parties, & in open sight some of both parties slayne. Then marched forward the hole battaile of the Frenchmē with stādardes, penons & banners wauerynge, and sumptuous bardes, & riche harnys glyteryng, the mē of armes in great nōber were in ranges a long redy to chace & charge. Sir Rice ap Thomas beyng a man of great experiēce, sagely perceyued in what case ỹ matter stode, sayd to therle of Essex, sir we be not. vij. C. horsmē, let vs not be to folysh hardy our cōmission was to fette ỹ gonne & none other, let vs folowe ỹ same, therle agreed therto & so softely & not in flyeng maner retreted & folowed ỹ gonne. The Frenhmē perceiuyn ỹ, cried al is ours let vs folowe, then pricked forward. ij. M. men of armes & came iuste to ỹ backes of ỹ Englishmen, then thenglishemen cried sainct George & cast them selfe about and made retorne to ỹ Frenchmen, sir William Tyler & sir Jhon sharpe were the first charged, and after all the other Englishmen, there was a dreadfull chase, for the men of armes of Fraunce flede so fast, that glad was he that might be formost, the hole hoost seynge ther horsmen returnyng in flight, sodainly in great hast returned without any more doyng. Then the erle of Essex staled to an hyll, & ther caused his trōpet to blowe to the standard for feare of subtyll dealynge: and when they were gathered together vnto array, he returned.

The. xxix. daye of July the kyng with his army came to Arkus, and there embattailed him selfe in a strong grounde, & to hym came the erle of Esser and the other capitaines with the gonne, and made reporte of ther aduenture, which thanked them hartely, & ther he lay till Mōday in whiche time came many noble men of Flaunders to visite him, and many of the common people came to se hym.

Mondaye the fyrste daye of Auguste, the kynge remoued his campe to a village myddell way betwene Saynct Omers and Tyrwyn, and ther fell suche a rayne that the ordynauuce coulde scace be remoued

the arable grounde was so softe.

Thursday the.iiij.day of August, the kyng in good order of battaile came before the citie of Tyrwyn & planted his sege in most warlikewise his campe was enuironed with artilerie, as Fawcones, serpentynes, caste hagbushes, and tryde harowes, spien trestyls, and other warlike defence for the sauegarde of the campe. The kynge for hym selfe had a howse of tymber with a chymney of yron, & for his other lodgynges he had great & goodly tentes of blewe water worke garnyshed w̄ gelow, & white, diuerse romes within the same for all offices necessary, on the & toppe of the paulions stode the kynges bestes holdynge fanes, as the Lion, the Dragon, the Greyhounde, the Antelope, the Donne kowe: within all the lodgynge was poynted ful of the sunnes risynge, the lodgynge was. C. xxb. foot in length. Tirwyn beseged.

The kyng lyeng before Tirwyn, his great ordinaūce sore bet ỹ toune walles, & thei within likewise shot out of the towne ordinaunce, & slewe diuers Englyshmen in the trenches, among which shottes thei had one gonne ỹ euery day & night was ordinarely shotte at certayne howres without fayle: this gonne was of Thenglishmen called the whystelyng gonne, but it neuer did harme in the kynges feld. The siege thus lyeng & before the citie of Tyrwyn, Sir Alexander Baynam a capitaine of the myners, caused a myne to be enterprised to enter into ỹ towne, but the Frenchmen perceyuyng that, made a countermyne & so destroyed the other myne, and diuers myners slayne within the same. The Frenche army houed euer a farre to take ỹ Englishmē at auantage as thei went a forragyng, & many a skirmish was done, and many good feates of armes acheued on bothe sydes, and diuers prisoners taken. Among the Frenchmen were certaine light horsmē called Stradiotes with shorte styroppes, beuer hatts, smal speres, & swerdes like Semiteries of Turkay: dyuers tymes the Northren light horsmen vnder the conduite of && sir Jhon Neuell skirmished with these stradiottes and toke diuerse of them prisoners, and brought them to the kyng.

While the kynge lay thus before Tyrwyn, the capitayne of Bullen knowynge by hys espialles that many of the garryson of Caleys were with the kyng at the siege, and also that daylye vitailles were brought out of Englande to Caleys to succour the campe, imagened a great entrepryce and sent for all the men of warre vnder his dominion aad rule, & declared to them what honour they shoulde obteyne yf they hurted or spoyled the out partes of Caleis, the kyng of England beyng on that syde the see. The men of warre perceiuyng the good courage of ỹ capi- && taine, assented to his purpose, & so wyth all diligence they to the mōber of a. M. men in the euenyng set forward, and came to Newnam bridge by. iij. of the clock in the morning, and founde the watchē that kepe the bridge a slepe, & so entred ỹ bulwerke & slewe the watchmen, & toke the ordinaunce of ỹ bridge & then let the bridge fall, so ỹ all entred ỹ would. The capitayn of Bulleyn kept. vj. C. men for a stale at ỹ bridge, & sent ỹ other into the marrisches and medowes where the Cattell fedde, and some of the Frenshmen came to Caleys gate, & were asspyed of ỹ watch and so range alarme, the Englishe souldiours ran to the walles, and sawe the Frenshemen without ỹ toune walles: then they knew that Newnā brydge was lost, and would haue issued out, but Sir Gylbert Talbott Deputie ther, would not suffer any gate to be opened. Now it happened ỹ without Caleys gates were Richard Hunnyng & Richard Brickes of the Caterie, and .iij. or .iiij. of the kyngs seruauntes whych lay there to sende prouisions to the hoost: whiche heryng of this alarme, called to them the kynges bakers, and cowpers, & a fewe shippemem, which lay in the hauen, and corragiously folowed the Frenchmen. Thenglishemen were not past .vj. skore persones, & set on ỹ Frenchemen as thei were a forragyng or they might assemble together, & slew them doune right & toke no prisoners in maner, & so thei came to Newnam brydge & toke it & put the Frenchmē backe: But or Thenglishmē had thus gathered them selfes together, the Frenchmen had forraged all with in the riuer vp to sainct Peters, and had driuen away the cattell & the ordinaunce of Newnam brydge and so passed till they came where the stale laye, & ther they taried lokyng for ther company that were gone a forragyng to Caleys walles. About .v. of the clock in the morenynge, the gate of Caleys called Bulleyn gate, was opened, & then issuyd out one Culpiper the vnder marshall with .ij. C. archers with the banner of Saincte George, & with great hast came to Newnam bridge, where thei found the kynges seruauntes & the other that had wonne the brydge & then they all together marched toward the Frenchemen, whiche kepte the stale. The Frenchmen thought it had ben there awne cōpany that had returned, till they saw the banner of S. George, then they knewe that their company were ouerthrowen, & that they must nedes fight or dy. Then thenglishmē though thei were the smaller nomber, baliantly set on the Frenchmen, which with great force thē defended, but at the last thei were all discomfited & .xxiiij. slayne and .xij. skore taken prisoners and ther ordinaunce and hole booty recouered. These prisoners were brought to Caleys, and there sold in open market: Amonge all other a Cowper of ỹ towne of Caleys bought a prisoner of this booty ỹ dwelt in Bulleyn, and had of the prisoner .C. crownes for his raunsome, and when the mony was paied, the Frenchmē praied the Cowper to se him saue deliuered and to conduite hym out of danger, the Cowper gently graunted and without any knowlege of hys frendes, all alone went wt the Frenchman till he came beyonde the Cawsey and ther would haue departed: but the Frenchmen perceiued, that the Cowper was aged & cl that no reskewes was ny, by force toke ỹ Cowper prisoner & caried him to Bulleyn, and made him paye .ij. C. crownes for his raunsome, thus thorowe foly was the poore Cowper deceaued.

The folye of a Cowper.

The .xj. day of August beyng thursday, the kyng lyeng at the siege of Tyrwyn, had knowlege that Maximilian thēperour was in ỹ toune

of

of Ayze. The kyng prepared all thinges necessarie to mete with thẽpe-rour in triumphe. The noble men of the kynges cãpe were gorgeously apparelled, ther courlers barded of cloth of gold, of damaske & broderie, theire apparelle all tissue cloth of gold and syluer, and gold smithes woorke, great cheynes of balderickes of gold, and belles of bullion, but in especial ỹ duke of Buckingham, he was in purple satten, his apparel and his barde full of Antelopes and swannes of fyne gold bullion and full of spangyls and littell belles of gold meruelous costly & pleasaunt to behold. The kyng was in a garment of greate riches in iuels as per-xl les and stone, he was armed in a light armure, the mayster of hys horse folowed him with a spare horse, the henxmẽ folowed beryng the kyngs peces of harnys, euery one mounted on a greate courser, the one bare ỹ helme, the seconde his graũgarde, ỹ thirde his spere, the fourth his axe and so euery one had some thyng belongyng to a man of armes: the ap-parell of the.ix. henxmen were white clothe of gold & crymsyn cloth of gold, richely embrawdered with goldesmythes woorke, the trappers of the corsers were mantell harneys coulpened, and in euery bent a long bel of fyne gold, and on euery pendaunt a depe tassel of fyne gold in bullion, whiche trappers were very ryche. The kyng & themperour mett xlx betwene ayze & the campe, in the fowlest wether that lightly hath bene sene. Themperour gentely enterteined the kyng, & the kyng likewyse hym, and after a littell communication had betwen them, by cause the wether was foule, departed for that tyme. The Emperour and all hys men were at that daie al in black cloth for the Empryce his wife was lately diseased. After that ỹ kyng was this retorned to his campe, with in a daye or twayne ther arryued in ỹ army a kynge of armes of Scotlãd called Lyon with his cote of armes on his back, & desyred to speke with the kynge, who with in shorte tyme was by Garter cheffe kyng of armes brought to the kynges presence, where he beyng almost dis maxxx yed seynge the kyng so nobly accompanied, with fewe woordes, & metely good reuerẽce, deliuered a letter to ỹ king, which receiued ỹ letter and redde it him selfe, & when he had redde it, without anye more delay he him selfe aunswered after this sorte. Nowe we perceyue the kyng of Scottes our brother in law & your master to be ỹ same person whome we euer toke hym to be, for we neuer estemed hym to be of any truthe & so now we haue founde it, for notwithstandynge his othe, his promise in the woord of kyng, & his awne hand & seale, yet nowe he hath brokẽ his faith and promise to his great dishonour and infamie for euer, and entendeth to inuade our realme in our absence which he dirst not ones xl attempte, our person beynge presente, but he sheweth him self not to be degenerate from the condicions of his forefathers, whose faythes for ỹ most parte hath euer ben violated and ther promises neuer obserued, farther then they liste. Therfore tell thy master, first that he shall neuer be comprised in any league where in I am a confederate, & also that I suspecting his treuth (as now the dede proueth) haue left an erle in my

realme at home whice shalbe able to defende him and all his powre, for we haue prouided so, that he shall not fynde our land destitute of people as he thynketh to do: but thus saye to thy master, that I am the very owner of Scotland, & yͭ he holdeth it of me by homage, & in so much as now contrary to his bounden duety he beinge my vassall, doth rebel against me, wͭ Gods help I shal at my returne expulse him his realme, & so tell him: sir sayd the kyng of Armes, I am his naturall subiecte, & he my naturall lord, & yͭ he commaundeth me to say, I may boldely saye wͭ fauor, but the commaundemētes of other I may not, nor dare not saye to my souereigne lorde, but your letters maye with your honour sent, & declare your pleasure, for I may not say suche wordes of reproche to him whome I owe only my allegeaunce & fayth. Then sayd the kynge, wherfore came you hyther, will you receyue no aunswere? yes sayde Lion, your answere requireth doyng and no writyng, that is, that immediatly you should returne home: well said the kynge I wyll returne to your domage at my pleasure, & not at thy masters somonyng. Then the kyng cōmaunded garter to take hym to his tente & make him good chere, which so dyd, and cherished him wel for he was sore appalled: after he was departed, the kyng sent for all the chefe capitaynes, and before them and all hys counsaill caused the letter to be redde, the trewe tenor whereof folowethe worde, by worde.

„ August.

When thys letter was written and sealed, the kynge sent for Lyon the Scottishe herauld,and declared to him that he had wel considered his maisters letter,and therto had made a reasonable answere, & gaue to him in reward a hundred angels,for which reward he humbly thanked the kyng and so taried with gartier alnight, and euer he sayd that he was sorye to thinke what domage shoulde be done in Englande by his mayster or the kinge returned, and so the next day he departed into Scotlande,but or he coulde haue shyppe and wynde hys mayster was slayne.

After the defiaunce declared by the king of Scottes herauld, ỹ king of Englaud wrote to the quene and other which he had left behynd of his counsayl, to prepare in al haste for the defence of thesayde kynge of Scottes,which so did w̄ great diligēce as you shal heare shortly after.

Whyle the king lay thus at siege before Tyrwyn,the frēchmē studied al the wayes possible how to vitayle ỹ towne of Tyrwyn, & imagined in a nyght by some waye to conuey vitayle to ỹ towne: wherfore euery day they sent stradiates to espie by whiche way they mighte take their most auantage,and many times the Englishe horsmen met w̄ the stradiates and of them slewe parte.

The French kynge woulde in any wyse that the kyng of Englande shoulde bee foughte wyth all,wherfore he sent the duke of Uandosme. The duke of Longuile with diuerse other valiant captains of Blāgoy. Then was there a conclusion taken that ỹ duke of Alanson should with xl v. M. men fyght with the erle of Shrewsbury, or els to kepe that nother he nother the lord Harbert should aide or come to the kynges battayle, & with the king should skyrmysh the duke of Uandosme & Longuyle,whyle in the meane season the cariages with vitayle myght entre the toune. For accomplishyng of this enterpryse, the Frenchmen made

greate purueaunce and al on horsebacke, this was not so secretly cõclu-ded but the kyng of England had an ynkelyng therof, and sent worde to the Emperour which lay at Ayze and knewe nothyng of this deuyse and desyred hym to come to the campe to haue his aduyse:which gladly aunswered that he woulde come the morowe after. The kyng continually sent forth his light horses to seke the countrey and to se yf anye apparaunce wer,and they euer brought tidinges of such things as thei saw,so that alwayes it was forsene that the kyng nor hys people shuld be taken vnpurueied,nor the Frenchmen shoulde not come on them so-xdainly vnaskried.

While these thinges were thus in commonynge and immagenyng.
Themperour Maximilian and all his seruauntes,whyche were reteined with the king of Englãd in wages by the day, euery person accordinge to his degre,and Themperour as the kinges souldioure ware a Crosse of saynte George wyth a Rose, and so he and al his traine came to the kinges campe the.xxiij.day of August beyng Fridaye,and there was receyued wyth greate magnificence and brought to a tente of cloth of golde all ready appareled accordynge to hys estate, for all the tente within was syled wyth clothe of golde and blewe veluet, and all xxthe blewe veluet was embrowdered with.H.K.of fyne golde,and hys cupboorde was rychely furnyshed and officers appoyncted to geue on hym attendaunce:and there he taried tyl Sonday,and from thence he went agayne to Ayze for his pleasure. The kyng and his coũsayl were informed by their espialles, and also it was confessed by certayne prisoners,howe the French army which lay at Blangoy,entended to vitail the cytie of Tyrwyn. Wherefore on Fridaye at nighte,the.xiij.daye of of Auguste the Duke of Buckyngham, the Earle of Essex, the Marques Dorset the Lorde of Burgaynye,the Lorde Willoughby,and di-uerse other gentlemen wyth.vi.thousand men on foote and the Lorde xxxWalon and the Lorde Ligny with ther horsemen were layed at Gin-gate on the south syde of Tyrwyn, where they were all nyghte in order of battayle,awaytynge the reskewe of the citie,but the Englyshmẽ were askryed,and so the Frenchmen brake their purpose for that time: and so the Duke of Buckyngham and hys compaygnions returned to the campe. Mondaye the.xiij.daye of Auguste by infortune, wythoute anye cause knowen, there fell a greate debate betwene the Almaynes of the kynges felde and Thenglyshmen, in so muche that they fell to fightinge and many men slayne, the Almaynes sodaynely ranne to the kynges ordinaunce and toke it, and embattayled them selfes,and bent xlthe ordinaunce agaynst the kinge and his campe. Thenglyshmen were greately fumed with this matter: in so muche the archers set forward to haue ioyned with the Almaynes, and they lykewyse prepared their pykes, but the capytaynes tooke suche payne that the fray was appe-sed and al things done for that time,but as this cõmocion was in trou-blen the Emperour came frõ Ayze and saw al the demener of both parties and was glad to se the discrete handelyng of the capitaynes. After Themperour was come to the kinges feld, the king called Thēperour and all the lordes of his counsayll together assertеyninge them that he was credibly enformed that the Frenchmen entended to reskew the citie of Tyrwyn, wherefore it was agreed that the mayster of the ordynaunce shoulde in haste make fyue bridges ouer the water for the armye to passe ouer, to thentent to besiege the citie on that syde: the carpenters dyd so there deuer that nyght, so that by daye al the brydges were made, so that all the horssemen passed ouer and askryed the countrey. On Tewsdaye the.xvi.day of August the kynge reysed his cam- xv pe, and wyth greate ordinaunce and all other artilerie and cariage he passed the Ryuer, and to him came Sir Jhon Neuel with hys lyghte horssemen and tolde hym that behynde the tower of Gingate was a great plumpe of horsemen. In the meane season, as sir Jhō Neuel told the kinge these tidinges, by another waye was the Erle of Essex, Sir Jhon Peche and the kings speres passed and skirmished with the plūp of speres that Sir Jhon spake of, and there were manye profers made on both sides, but in conclusion the Frenchmen wer compelled to leaue their stale, and one horseman taken and sente to the kynge whyche in hope of pardon of his raunsome shewed howe that the Frenche armye xv with their full power and strengche were comming from Blangoy the nomber of fyftene thousande horssemen of armes to ayde Tyrwyn on that side of the water. And to thentente that the armye of the Lorde Stuarde, and the Lorde Chamberlayne shoulde not ayde the kynge, there wer appoyncted fyue thousande of the fiftene thousande horssemen on the other side of the water. As these tidinges was tolde came one from Sir Ryce, and sayde that a prisoner that he had that day taken, confessed that the citie shoulde be reskowed thesame day, and that he had askryed a nomber of horssemen to hys iudgemente vppon the poyncte of six thousande. Then sodaynely came the Northren menne, xvi whyche affirmethe, that they had sene the Frenthe armye in order of battayle commynge forwarde, but they iudged them not paste twelfe thousande menne. Then the kynges felde was pytched and the ordynaunce set, but some counsayled the kynge to take doune hys tentes but the kinge sayde I will this daye that my felde be made and sette in as royall wise as maye bee, and all my ryche tentes sette vp, whyche was done. Then the kynge called the Lorde Darcy, and commaunded hym to kepe his felde, treasure ordynaunce and other stuffe, which was lothe to go from hys Mayster but by streyte commaundemente. Then euerye man prepared hym selfe to battayle resortynge to the xvi standarde, the horsemen marched before the footmen by the space of a myle, still came curroures berynge tydynges that the Frenche armye approched. The kynge bad sette forwarde and to auaunce hys banner in name of God and sainct George. The Almanies seyng this (to what purpose it was not knowen) sodaynelye embateled them selfes on the lefte hande of the kinge and lefte the byefte or fronte of the kynges bat-tayle bare. As the kynge was thus marchinge forwarde towarde the battayle, to hym came the Emperoure Maximilian wyth. xxx. men of armes, he and al his company armed in on fute with redde croffes: thē by the counfayll of the Emperour the kynge caufed certayne peces of fmall ordinaunce to bee layed on the toppe of a longe hyll or banke for the oute fkowerers: Thus the kynges horffemen and a fewe archers on horffebacke marched forwarde. The kynge woulde fayne haue bene afore wyth the horffemen, but hys counfayll perfwaded hym the x contrarye, and fo he taryed wyth the footmen accompanied wyth thēperour.

The Frenchmen came on in. iij. ranges. xxvj. mēs thickenes & wel they perceiued the kinges battayle of footmen marching forward: the erle of Effex capitayne of the horfemen, and fir Jhon Peche w the kinges horfmen and the Burgonions to the nomber of a. xi. C. ftode with banner diſplaied in a valey. The Lorde Walonne and the lord Ligny with baftarde Emery and there bend to the nomber of. iij. C. horfmē feuered themfelfes and ftode a fyde from the Englifhmē: fo then thenglifhmen were but. vij. C. yet they with banner diſplayed remoued vp xx to the toppe of the hill, and there they met with fir Jhon Gilford a. C. talle archers on horfebacke, which had aſkryed the Frenchmen. Now on the toppe of the hill was a fayre plaine of good grounde, on the lefte hand a lowe wodde, and on the right hand a falow felde. The lord Walonne and the burgoniōs kepte them a loofe, then appered in fight the Frenchmen with banners and ftandardes diſplaied. Then came to the capitaines of Thenglifhmen of armes, an Engliſh officer of armes called Clarenfeux and faide, in Gods name fet forward, for the victory is youres for I fe by them, they will not abyde, and I wyll go wyth you in my coate of armes. Then the horfemen fet forward, and the archers xxx alighted and were fet in order by an hedge all a long a village fide called Bomy: the Frenfchmen came on wyth. xxxiij. ftandardes diſplayed and the archers fhot a pace and galled their horfes, & the Engliſh fpeares fet on freſhly, crieng fainct George, & fought valyātly w the Frēchmen and threw done their ftandarde, the duft was greate and the crye more, but fodaynly the Frenchmen fhocked to their ftandarde and fled and threw awaye their fperes, fwerdes and mafes and cut of y bardes of their horfes to ronne the lighter, when the hinder part faw y former flye, they fled alfo, but the foner for one cauſe which was this. As y Englyfh horfemen mounted vp the hil, the ſtrdiates were cōmynge doune xl wardes on the one fyde of the hill before the French hoft, which fodainly faw the banners of the Englyfh horfemen, and the kinges battayl folowyng vpwarde, wening to them that all had bene horfmen, then thei caft them felf about and fledde, the Frenchmen wer fo faft in array that the ſtradiates could haue no entre, and fo they ran ſtil by thēdes of the rāges of the French army: and when they behinde faw the fall of their standardes and their stradiates in whome they had greate confidence retorne, they that were farthest of fledde firste, then vp pranced the Burgonions and folowed the chace: thys battayle was of horsmen to horsemen but not in egal nomber, for the Frenchmen wer tenne to one, whyche had not bene sene before tyme, that the Englyshe horssemen gatt the victorye of the men of armes of Fraunce. The Frenchemen call this battaylle the iourney of Spurres because they ranne awaye so faste on horssebacke. Thys battayll was the.xvj. daye of Auguste, in the whyche battayle was taken the Duke of Longuile, Loys brother to the Earle of Dunoys whyche had maryed the Marques of Rutilons heyre, the Lorde Cleremounde and manye other noble men to the nomber of twelue skore and all broughte to the kynges presence, and lykewise al the standardes and banners were brought to the king. The Burgonions kept their prisoners and brought them not to sight. The same wente that Mounsire de la palayce was by them taken and lett go Thenglyshemen folowed the chace thre mile longe, from the felde to a water in a valeye, and there a Frencheman sayde to Sir Gyles Capell, that one daye they woulde haue a daye, whyche answered hym agayne in Frenche that it was a bragge of Fraunce: and so the Englishmen returned to the kynge, whyche was commynge forwarde who gaue them thankes wyth great praysynges for the valyantnes, and there he made Sir Jhon Pech Banneret and made Jhon Car knight whyche was sore hurte, and Sir Jhon Peche had hys Guyd home taken and diuers of his men hurt, they folowed so farre. Then the kynge retreted to Gingate, to whom came sir Rise and shewed him how hoat the Frenchmen had skirmished with hym all daye on the other syde of the ryuer, and how therle of Shrewsbury with banner displayed was al day prest in ordre of battayle to haue fought with the duke Alanson and therle of sainct Polle and the lord of Floringes which with.v.M. men as you haue heard were appoincted to reskewe the toune on that syde, where the Lord of Shrewsbury lay, and to let him to come to aid the king, but howsoeuer that it happened, they stode stil and came not doune but onelye skirmished with sir Rice. The citie of Tyrwyn was this day in hope of ayde, and when they saw their helpers cõming nere they thesame day proudely issued out on the lord Harbert & skirmished with his people very valiantly, and thei within also shot out ordinaunce of al partes. The lorde Harbert and his captaines corragyously defended them, and so sore they set on the Frẽchmen, that they draue thẽ by force to their gates for al their succors, and many of them wer slaine: this night the kinge sent for the duke of Longeuile and the lorde Cleremound and diuerse other noble men, and the duke supped at the kinges borde that night.

The iourney of Spurres,

Then the Frenchmen after this discomfiture assembled together & returned the Blangoy.xii. myle frõ the coste, and there talked of their losses, and because they knewe not who were taken and who wer slain therfore, therefore they sent an heraulde to the kynge to knowe the nombet of ỹ prisoners, the kinges counsayll according to their desyre sente to them the names. The kyng beynge assertayned that the French kinges purpose was yet agayne to geue him battayll, commaunded the best of the prysoners shoulde be conueyed to the toune of Ayre in Flaunders: but when thenglishemen had brought them thyther, the capitayne denyed that thenglishmen shoulde entre the toune wyth prisoners of Fraunce with whome he and his countrey had peace: but yf the Frenche menne woulde desire lodginge for their ease, they shoulde be permitted to entre. But thenglishmen in a fury aunswered, that yf you wyll not suffer vs to kepe our prysoners, we wil slay thē: then the Frenchmen mekely prayed the capitayne to suffer the Englishemen to entre, and sware to their kepers to bee true prysoners, and so they entered and after were conueyed into England. The Lord Powntremy of the house of Cresquy capytayne generall of Tirwyn perceyued the dyscomfyture of the French partie, and perceyued how the Earle of Shrewsbury and the Lorde Harbert had brought thither great ordinaunce so nere ỹ toune that nerer it coulde not be broughte, and that in the walles was suche batterie that it was not lyke to continue, yet he manfully defended the citie, and shote gonnes euerye daye as he was accustomed and neuer was in despayre, tyll the .xviij. daye of thesayde monethe he sawe the kynge remoue his campe from Gyngate and layed hys campe on the southe syde of the toune betwene their reskewe and the toune: then when he sawe this and consydered that hys succoures were put backe and that the toune was sore febeled, and that the kinges greatest ordinaunce was bent againste the toune, he therfore by the aduyse of other capitaynes sent to therle of Shrewsburye and the Lorde Harberte a trumpet, desieryng abstinence of warre for a daye, they incontynente sent to the kynge to knowe hys pleasure, the kinge aunswered that he woulde not graunte till he knewe the consideracion: then the captayne sent woorde that with saufeconduyte he woulde come and speake with the kinges counsayll, which to him was graunted, then he sent certayn commissioners whiche offered to delyuer the toune wyth all the ordynaunce and municions withoute anye fraude, so that the townes men that woulde there dwell myght haue lyfe and goodes safe, and that ỹ men of warre might departe wyth horse and harneys, for goodes they sayde they had none, and there horse and harneys, was of litle valure to so great a prince. After that the kyng and his counsayll had debated this matter, it was aunswered the commissioners that althoughe the kynge knewe their penury of vitayle and the dayly mortalitie amonge them and that the towne by reason of greate batteries was not able longe to resiste, yet because they asked mercye he woulde not extende rygor, and graunted there requeste, so that they delyuered the towne wyth all the ordynaunce as they had promysed, to the whyche all they were sworne, and so returned. And thesame nyght therle of Shrewsbury entred the toune & had the walles and towers and the banner of saint George was set in the highest place in signe of victory, & the lord Powtremy with al the garrison departed with horse and harnes according to the appointment. Then the Lord George Talbot erle of Shrewsbury, with .iij. C. men serched the toune for feare of treason, or that any inconuenience might be vnto the king and his people: and after that he saw al thing sure, he called al the tounes mẽ together, and sware them, to be true to the king of England. When all this was done, the kynge on the .xxiiij. day of August entered into the citie of Tyrwyn, at. ix. of the clocke before none with great triumphe & honour, his persone was apparelled in armure gilt and grauen, his garment and barde purple beluet full of borders, and in al places trauersed with branches in ronnyng worke of fyne golde, the branches were of hawthorne wrought by goldsmithes craft wounde with a braunche of Roses, and euery flower, lefe and bury were enbossed: After whome folowed his henxmen w̃ the peces of armure accustomed: thus with great glory this goodly prince entered and toke possession of the towne of Tirwin and was receiued at the Cathedral church with procession, and they heard masse & dyned in the bishoppes palice, and at after none retorned to his campe, leuing in the towne the Earle of Shrewsbury with his retinue. The xxvi. daye of August the kyng remoued agayne to Gingate, and there it was agreed ỹ the walles, gates, bulwarckes and towers of Tirwin should be defaced, rased and cast doune: of whiche conclusion the Emperour sainct worde to sainct Omers, and to Ayre, which beyng ioyous of that tidinges (for Tyrwyn was for them a scorge) sent thither pioners with all maner of instrumentes, and so they & thenglish pyoners brake doune the walles, gates and towres of the foundaciõ & filled the dyche and fiered the towne, except the Cathedral church and the palaice, and al the ordinaũce was by the king sent to Ayre, to be kept to hys vse. After this, it was concluded that the king in person should ley his siege to the citie or Towne of Turney, wherfore he set forward thre goodlye battailes, the first was conduited by therle of Shrewsbury, the second battayle led the kyng hym selfe with whome was Themperoure. The rereward was conduyted by the lorde Harbert: & so the first night thei laye in campe beside Ayre, which night vitayle was skant, diuerse Englyshmen taryred in Tirwin when the kyng was past for pillage & fyered certayne houses, on whome came sodainly the French stradiates & some they slew and some they caste into the fier, thei that fledde, scaped narrowly.

Wednesday the .xiiij. day of September the king and his army came to Beatwyn, and there had plenty of all thinges, and on the morowe he with his army passed forward and came to a strayt where was a foord and al the carriages must nedes come doune a stepe hill to the foord & so to the streyt, where as one wagon scace alone might passe, and ỹ wether was hoat and the beastes had not droncke all day, wherfore at the foorde foorde the horses woulde drynke maugre ther leders, and so the cariages wēt not al hole together which was a doubtful case, but yet by wise ordre thei passed the streyt & so did the army & came to a place betwene Cauon and Cambline and there lodged that nighte in a plaine barren grounde, and the next day remoued his campe and the forwarde passed a bridge called pount Auandien into Flaunders side & ther lay, the king lay at the other ende of ỹ bridge on Arthoys syde, & the rereward lay in a fayre grounde behinde the king.

Saterday the.xvii.day of September tidings came to ỹ king how x the Frenchmen had assembled a great puissaūce & would fight with the king, wherefore the king caused his forward to remoue farther & sent the Almaynes to kepe the passage the pount dassaus. Then the greate ordinaunce passed the bridge of pount auandien and the king was remoued frō thence & his tentes were takinge vp, an askrye was made ỹ the enemies were in sight, which noise was sodainly ceased, and sir William Sādes with.vij.C.Englishmen & strangers was appointed to kepe the bridge and certayne ordinaunce was to him appointed.

When the king and al the carriages were passed, then the lord Harbert remoued ouer the bridge and encamped hym behinde the king by xi a fayre mille, when the kinge was encamped and all thinges in order, there came to him a noble man of Flaunders called the lord Rauensten which after his humble reuerence done, shewed ỹ king that the young prince of castel Charles and the lady Margaret gouernes of the sayde prince most hartely desired him for his pastime after hys long trauayle to come and repose in his toune of Lisle and to see hys brother ỹ prince and the ladies of the court of Burgoyne, saynge that it became not ladies to visite him in his marciall campe whyche to them was terrible. The king gētelly graunted his request, & then he sent his officers thether to make prouision and appoynted the Duke of Buckyngham the xii Marques Dorset therle of Essex and the lord Lisle and dyuerse other to geue ther attendaunce on him, and committed his campe to his coūsayll. Then he mounted on a courser, his apparel and barde were cloth of syluer of smal quadrant cuttes trauersed and edged wyth cutt cloth of golde, and the border set full of redde rooses, hys armore fresshe and set ful of iuels, the Maister of hys horse Sir Henry Guylforde, and the Henshmen folowed as you haue heard before, and ỹ coursers richly appareled and so were many capitaynes that wayted on the kinge: by the way met the king the lord Rauensten wyth many noble men and a myle without the toune ther mette with him the Bourgesses of Lysle xi and presented to him the keies of the toune, sayeng, that Themperour their souereygne lord had so cōmaunded them to do. The king praised their obediēs to their souereygne, & thāked thēperour & thē for so high a presente as the keyes of such a toune. Neuertheless he had suche cōfidence in them, that he trusted them no lesse then hys owne subiectes, and so delyuered the keyes to the prouost of the toune, which was wel accom-

accompanied:then mette the king a great nomber of nobles of Flaun-ders,Brabant,Hollande and Henawde,which nobly receiued him. After them came the Coũty of Palãtine or Paulsgraue oneof ỹ electors of the empire with.xxx.horsses al his men gorgiously appareilled after ỹ fashion of his countrey,and hũbly saluted the king. At the gate of Lisle the captayn of the toune stode with a garrison in armure wel appoincted,al the stretes were set on both sides with burning torches and di-uerse goodly pagiantes pleasant to beholde:thus he passed thorow the towne with his swerde and maces borne before hym,and alighted at ỹ hal doze with his swerd borne, where met wt him thẽperour the prince of castel & the lady Margaret and hũbly saluted him:then for reuerẽce of themperour,the kinge caused his swerde to be put vp and his maces to be leyed doune,then was the kinge and all other nobles lodged and feasted according to their degrees.

In the toune of Lisle was a noys, that thre gonners with handgõnes should haue slayn the king:For which rumor many were attached, but nothinge proued,but when thys tidinges came to the campe, they were neuer mery til they saw the king agayne, great was the chere wt bankettes,playes,commodies, maskes and other pastymes that was shewed to the king in the courte of Burgoyne, and so in solace he soiornied there Sondaye and Mondaye the.xix.day of Septẽber:the.xx.
day he sent woorde that his army shoulde remoue towarde Tournay, and so they remoued to a place conueniẽt betwene Tournay and Lisle and certain capitaynes were appoincted to kepe the passage at ỹ bridge of Auandien.

After that the king had taried at Lisle.iij.dayes,and had wel reposed hym selfe,he toke his leaue and thanked the Emperour & the young prince & the lady Margaret & al the ladies of all his high chere & solace and about six of the clock at nyght he departed out of Lisle,and ỹ noble men broughte the kinge forth and so returned, and then the captayne shutt the gates.

When the kyng was a mile and more out of the toun,he asked wher he campe lay:and no man there could tel the way, and guyde had they none,the night was darcke and mistie:thus the king taried a lõg while and wist not whither to go, at last they mett with a vitayler commyng from the campe which was their guyde and brought thẽ thither. The mayster of the ordinaunce shotte diuerse peces of ordynaunce but they were not harde,but in safetie the king with all hys company returned.

The.xxj. day of September the kyng remoued his campe towarde Tournay and lodged within thre miles of the citie,on a corne grounde by the riuer. The which night came to the king Themperour and the Paulsgraue whiche were lodged in ryche tentes, and noblye serued of all byandes and thynges necessarye . The people aboute Tournay were with their goodes fledde to the citie, and yet the cytye hadde no men of warre to defende it, but wyth multitude of inhabitauntes the citie

citie was wel replenished: the king cõmaunded sir Rice and hys horsemẽ to bewe one quarter, and therle of Essex and hys company another quarter, and the lorde Walowne & the lord Ligny the other quarters: so the.xxij.day of Septẽber these.iiij.capitaines at one time were sone openly with banners displaid before the toune, and there made a longe stale & retorned. The king sent Gartier king of armes & a pursuant of armes with a trompet to somon the citie, which declared ỹ the kinge of England and of Fraunce commaunded thẽ to yelde to him his citie and to receiue him as their natural lord, or he would put thẽ and their citie x to swerde, fyer and blud. To whom they proudely answered, that thei toke no citie of him to kepe, nor none wold they rẽder, wᵗ which answer he departed. Then they fortified their walles, & made prouision for vi-taile, corne, wine & artilerie, & for al fortificacions that might be gotttẽ.
And the citie of it selfe was strong, well walled & turrited wᵗ good Bul-warkes & defences: But when they saw the kynge with such a puissãce draw nere to the citie, they were sore abashed and called a generall coũsayl: then the prouost sayde, brethren you knowe how ỹ the king of England sent an heraulde to somon vs to rendre to hym this citie, or elles he woulde put it & vs to the swerde, fyer and bloude, we answered we xx would be at defence: now he is come in our syght to fulfylll the message sent by hys herauld, & now is come ỹ time of our defence, & in this mat-uer stãdeth.iij.mischiefes, one is our bounden deuty & allegeaũce ỹ we owe to our soueraygne lord king Loys of Fraunce, the second the lifes of vs, our wyfes, childzen and neyghbours, the third how to defend the final destrucciõ of this auncient cyty whych is likely to fall, whiche citie was neuer conquired & now our citie is hole (your lyfes in sauity, your goodes your own) determine whither you wil haue warr or peace: thẽ the cõmon people cryed al war, war, war, then said the prouost, take cõ-passiõ of wyfes & childzẽ & of the olde folke, cõsyder yf you haue no quick xxx reskue you can not contynue againste yõder puisance, al tho your corages were as good as Hectors or Achylles, thys ỹ wyfest of ỹ citie & I haue cõsidered. Then sodaynly was there in ỹ coũsayll, a bantparler, a botcher whych heryng this, called a great nomber of his affynite & wẽt out of the counsayl, & so out of the gates & set fier of the suborbes on all sydes. When the counsayl sawe the myndes of the commons and that ther wayes might not be folowed, then they comforted the people and mayntayned them for ther defence. The kyng rayfed his campe & came in Array of battayle before Tornay, the Earle of Shrefbury with the forward was a littell space on the right hand brest with the kyngs bat-xl tayle, and the lord Harbert with the rereward on the left hande in lyke manner, the day was faire and the harneis glistered and banners wa-ued that they of the citie were sore afrayed: thus stode the kinges battayles in Array before Tournay. Then the kynge commaunded hys greate ordynaunce to bee caried in the waye passynge towarde the cy-tie & so euery thing according to his commaũdement was accõplished.

Then

Then the king him selfe with a fewe persones rode betwene hys ordy-naunce and the towne, and rode in great aduenture so nere the walles that he might bewe ỹ walles and the toures very wel: they shote oute of their toures peces of ordinaunce and hurt such as came within their leuel. Thent hey rong the alarme bell, which was harde wel in ỹ felde.
Then the citezens issued out at the gate by the riuer and manfully profered skirmyshe, but they with archers were sone driuen backe to theyr gates. The Englishe cariers , that came wyth the harbeshers to take ground ranne to the gates of Tornay, and toke certaine wagons with beere & vitayle and yet ỹ Turnoyes dirst not resiste, although thei wer in greater nomber then the men of cariage. In this skirmish the horsse of the lord Jhon Gray brother to the Marques Dorset which went to defende the Cariours was slayne with a gonne, and he not hurt. After ỹ the king in person had thus in ieopardie auentured him self & bewed the toun, he caused immediatly .xxj. peces of gret artilery to be brought in a plain feld before the toune, and when they were charged, they wer immediatly shotte, and the most part of the stones fell within the cytie, and so they shotte diuerse shottes one after another.

Then the king with al his battayle planted hys siege on the northe parte of the citie: Therle of Shrewsbury with his battayl warded toward the south syde of the ryuer and there lay that nyght. The Lord Harbert with the rereward plãted his battail on the west side of the ci-tie, and with great ordynaunce dayly bet the walles and toures of the citie. On the morow beynge the .xxiij. day: the Lorde Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury accõpanied with the noble men of his battayll whose names you haue heard at his first passyng the sea, passed ouer the riuer of Tornay and planted his siege on the sonth syde stretching to the Easte ende of the citie, & bẽt his artillery against the walles of the citie. Thus was the citie of Tornay besieged on all partes, & euer in hope of reskue valyantly defended her selfe.

Now must I leue the Kynge at the siege of Turnay, and diuerte to thinges done in Englande in his absence, and declare how the kyng of Sctottes inuaded the realme of Englande, and how he was defended and fought with al, and in conclusion slayne the .vij. day of this moneth of September.

When the king of Englande was determined in his high courte of Parliament to passe the sea, in proper person, for the recouery of his realme of Fraunce, he & hys coũsayll forgat not the olde Prankes of the Scottes which is euer to inuade England when the kynge is oute, or within age: and also he had knowlege that at Camphere in zeland the Scottes dayly shipped long speres called colleyne clowistes, armure & artilerie, whych dealyng made his grace and his counsail to dowt, notwythstanding that the king of Scottes was sworne on the sacramẽt to kepe the peace, yet for voy dynge of al dowtes, the kyng appoynted the lord Thomas Haward erle of Surrey sonne to the lord Jhõ Haward

duke of Norffolke and high treasourer and marshall of Englande, to he hys lieutenaunt in the North parties agaynste thesayed kyge of Scottes, yf he fortuned to inuade (as he dyd in dede) accordynge to the old traytorous accustome of hys progenitors, and that the sayed earle should reise the powers of the contrey of Chester, Lancaster, Duresme Northumberlande, Westmerlande, and Comberlande, besyde other aydes to be poyncted by the quene. And when the kynge shoulde take shippe at Douer, he toke the Earle by the hande and sayde, my Lorde I truste not the Scottes, therfore I praye you be not negligent: then x sayde the earle I shall so do my duety, that youre grace shall fynde me diligent, and to fulfyll your will shalbe my gladnes: The Earle coulde skantly speake when he toke hys leaue, for the departinge from the noble prynce hys souereigne Lorde and kynge, and from the floure of all the nobilitye of thys realme, beynge redy in suche an honorable iorney. And when he was somewhat settelled in hys mode, he sayde to some that were about hym: Sory may I se hym or I dye, that is cause of my abydinge behynde, and yf euer he and I mete, I shal do that in me lyeth to make hym as sory yf I can: meanynge thesame by the kyng of Scottes. From Douer he attendid on the quene to London, comfortynge xx her the beste he myght, and shortely sent for hys gentelmen & tenauntes, whiche were .v. C. able men, whiche mustered before syr Thomas Iouell, knyght, the .xxj. daye of July, & the .xxij. daye he rode thorough London Northward, and came to Doncaster, and there commaunded syr William bulmer knight, to make haste to the marches of Scotlande, and to lye in the castels & fortresses on the frontiers with .v. C. archers on horsebacke: for the Earle by open tokens dayly perceiued that the Scottes entended warre. Then the sayde Sir William with all spede departed and came to the borders and the erle came to Pomfret, the firste daye of August, and there taried. After that Syr Wyl- xxx liam bulmer was come to the borders, one daye in Auguste, the Lorde Chamberlayne and warden of Scotlande wyth .vij. or .viij. M. men wyth banner displayed entered into Englande, and brent and haryed a great praye in Northumberlande, that herynge syr William bulmer, called to hym the gentelmen of the borders wyth hys archers, and all they were not a thousande men. And when they were nere assembled, they brought them selfes in to a brome felde, called Mylfeld, where the Scottes shoulde passe. And as the Scottes proudely returned wyth their pray, the Englishemen brake oute, and the Scottes on fote lyke men them defended, but the archers shotte so holy together, that they xl made the Scottes geue place, & .v. or .vj. hundred of them were slayne, and .iiij. hundred and more take prisoners, and the pray reskued beside a great number of geldynges that were taken in the countrey, and the lord Hume, lord Chamberlayne fled, and his banner taken. This was the fyrst open token of warre, shewed by the Scottes, whiche call thys iourney the yll Roade.

The Earle of Surrey, beynge at Pompfret, called to hym the moste parte of the Gentelmen of the Counties to hym apoynted as is before reherſed, declaringe to them the Kynges hygh commaundement, shewynge them, that he beynge there the Kynges Lieutenaunt muste nedes haue ayde and counſayll: Wherefore he ſwaare the mooſte wyſeſt and experte gentelmen in ſuche cauſes of the kynges counſayll and hys for that tyme, for the better compaſſynge hys charge and purpoſe, and for too brynge euery thynge in dewe order: Fyrſt they toke a determinacion wyth Syr Philippe Tylney knight, Treaſurer of the warres, howe the charges ſhoulde be payde, and ſecondarely wyth syr Nycholas applyarde, maſter of the ordinaunce, for the conueyaunce of the Kynges Royall ordinaunce, pouder and artillerie to Newcaſtell, and ſo forwarde as the caſe ſhoulde requyer, whyche Syr Nycholas by William Blacknall, clercke of the Kynges ſpyceri, ſent the ſayde ordinaunce and artyllerye to Durham before, ſo that all thynges, concerning that office were in a redynes. The Earle forgatt not to ſende to alll Lordes Spirituall and Temporall, Knyghtes, Gentelmenne, or other whiche had tenauntes, or were rulers of Tounes or liberties (able to make men) to certifye what number of able men horſed and harneſed, they were able to make within an houres warnynge and to geue there attendaunce on hym, and alſo he layed Poſtes euery waye, whyche Poſtes ſtretched to the marches of Wales to the counſayll there, by reaſon whereof, he had knowlege what was done in euerye coſte.

The earle was enformed by the Lorde Dacres, of the numbrynge and preparyng of men in Scotlande, and Proclamacions ſoundynge to the breche of peace, and yet though he conſidered that the Roade made by the lorde Chamberlayne of Scotlande into England, beynge diſtruſſed by Syr William Bulmer, as is afore reherſed, was an open breche of the perpetuall peace: yet theſayde Lorde Dacres auyſed the Earle for many and greate weyghty cauſes, not to reyſe or ſtyrre the powers of the countrey, to hym appoynted tyll he myghte perceyue & openly know the ſubtyle purpoſe and entent of the Scottes aforeſaid, leſt yf the Scottes had perceyued the Engliſhemen redy to fight, they woulde haue deſiſted of theyr purpoſe for that tyme, tyll the Engliſhemen were returned to their countreys, and then ſodaynely to ryſe agayne.

Then the Erle knowynge that the towne of Barwyck was ſtrong ynough, ſent to the Capitayne of Norham, certefienge hym, that yf he thought the Caſtell in anye daungier or debylitie, he woulde put hym ſelfe in a readynes to reſkew it, if it were beſeged, the Capitayn wrote to the Earle, thankynge hym and prayed GOD that the Kynge of Scottes woulde come wyth hys puyſſaunce, for he woulde kepe hym playe tyll the tyme that the kynge of Englande came out of Fraunce to reſkew it, whyche aunſwer reioyſed the Earle muche.

After

After the kyng of Scottes had sent hys defyaunce to the kynge of Englande, lyenge before Tyrwyn, as you haue harde, he dayly made hys musters, and assembled hys people ouer all hys Realme, whereof the brute was that they were twoo hundred thousand, but for a surety they were an hubdred thousand good fightynge men at the lest, & with all hys hoste and power entered into Englande (and threw doune pyles) the.xxij. daye of August, and planted hys siege before the Castell of Norham, and sore abated the walles. The Earle hard tydynges thereof the fyue and twenty day of August, beynge sayncte Bartheleme-x wes daye.

Then he wrote to all the Gentelmen of the shyres aforesayde, to be wyth hym at Newcastell, the fyrste daye of September next wyth all there retynew accordynge to the certificat. On the morow, he wyth hys fyue hundred menne came to Yorke, and the.xxvj. daye he went toward Newcastell, and not wythstandynge that he had the fowleste daye and nyght that coulde be, and the wayes so depe, in so muche that hys guyde was almoste drouned before hym, yet he neuer ceased, but kept on hys iorney to geue example to them that shoulde folowe. He beynge at Durham was aduertised how the Kynge of Scottes wyth xx hys greate ordinaunce had rased the walles of the Castell of Norham, and had made thre great Assaultes thre dayes together, and the Capitaynes valiauntly defended hym, but he spent vaynely so muche of hys ordinaunce, bowes and arrowes and other municions that at the laste he lacked, and so was at the.vj. daye compelled to yelde hym symplye to the Kynges mercye. Thys castell was thought impregenable, yf it had bene well furnished, but the Scottes by the vndiscrete spendynge of the Capitayne, toke it in sixe dayes: thys chaunce was more sorowful to the Earle then to the Bishoppe owner of thesame. All that nyghte the wynde blewe corragiously, wherfore the earle doubted least, xxx the Lorde Hawarde hys sonne greate Admyrall of Englande shoulde perishe that nyght on the sea, who promised to lande at Newcastell with a thousand men, to accompaynie his father, whych promyse he accomplished.

The Earle harde Masse, and appoynted wyth the Prior for saincte Cutberdes banner, and so that daye beynge the thyrty daye of August he came to Newcastell: thither came the Lorde Dacres, Syr William Bulmer, Syr Marmaducke Constable, and many other substanciall Gentelmen, whome he reteyned wyth hym as counsayllers, and there determined that on Sundaye nexte ensuynge, he shoulde take the xl feelde at Bolton in Glendale, and because many souldiours were repayrynge to hym, he lefte Newcastell to the entent that they that folowed, shoulde haue there more rome, & came to Alnewyke the thyrde daye of September, and because hys souldiars were not come, by reason of the foule waye he was fayne to tarye there all the four the daye

beynge Sundaye, whiche daye came to hym the Lorde Admyrall his sonne, with a compaignye of valyaunt Capitaynes and able souldiars and maryners, whiche all came from the sea, the commynge of hym muche reioyced hys father, for he was very wyse, hardy, and of greate credence and experience. Then the Erle and his counsayll, wyth great deliberacion appoynted his battayles in order with wynges and with ryders necessarie.

¶ Fyrste of the forwarde was capitayne the Lorde Hawarde, Admyrall of Englande, with suche as came from the sea, and wyth hym syr Nycholas Applyarde, syr Stephan Bull, syr Henry Shyreburne, syr Wylliam Sydney, syr Edwarde Echyngham, the Lorde Clyfford, the lorde Conyers, the lorde Latymer, the Lorde Strope of Upsale, the lorde Egle, the lorde Lomley, syr William Bulmer with the power of the Bishoprycke of Durham, syr Wylliam Gascoyne, syr Christopher Warde, syr Jhon Eueryngham, syr Thomas Wetham, Syr Water Gryffith, and many other.

¶ Of the rerewarde was Capitayne the Earle of Surrey hym selfe, and wyth hym the Lorde Scrope of Bolton, Syr Philippe Tylney, syr George Darce, syr Thomas Barkeley, syr Jhon Rocliffe, syr Christopher Pykerynge, Rycharde Tempest, syr Jhon Stanley wyth the Bysshoppe of Elyes seruauntes, Syr Bryan Stapulton, Lyonell Percy, wyth the Abbot of Whitbyes tenauntes, Christopher Clapham, syr William Gascoing the younger, syr Guy Dawney, Maister Magnus, Mayster Dalbyes seruauntes, syr Jhon Normanuyle, the citizens of Yorke, syr Nynyan Markanuyle, syr Jhon Wylloghby wyth other.

¶ Of the wyng on the tight hande was capitayne the lorde Dacres wyth his power.

¶ On the lefte hande wynge was syr Edwarde Stanley knyght, with the residue of the power of ỳ countye Palantyne & of Lancaster.

¶ And when all men were appoynted and knewe what too do. The earle and hys counsayll concluded & determined emonge other thynges to sende Rouge Crosse, pursiuaunt of armes with a trompet to the

kynge of Scottes, wyth certayne instruccions, signed by thesayd erle, conteynynge wooꝛde by wooꝛde as folowety.

Fyꝛste where there hath bene suyte made to the kynge of Scottes by Elyzabeth Heron, wyfe to Wylliam Heron of Foꝛde, now pꝛysoner in Scotlande, foꝛ castynge doune of the house oꝛ Castell of Foꝛde, and as thesayde Elizabeth repoꝛteth vppon communicacion had, the sayde kynge hath pꝛomysed and condiscended to thesayde Elizabeth, that yf she any tyme befoꝛe none, the fift daye of September, woulde bꝛynge and deliuer vnto hym the Loꝛde Johnstowne, and Alexander Hume, x then pꝛysonerꝛs that time in England, he then is contented an agreed that thesayde house oꝛ Castell shall stande wythout castynge doune, bꝛennynge oꝛ spoylynge thesame: Whereunto thesayde Earle is content with that, vppon this condicion, that yf thesayde kynge wyll pꝛomytte the assuraunce of thesayde Castell, in maner and foꝛme afoꝛesayde vnder hys seale, to deliuer thesayde Loꝛde of Jhonstowne and Alexander Hume, immediately vppon thesame assuraunce. And in case thesayde kynge can and wyll be content to delyuer thesayd Heron out of Scotlande, then thesayde Earle shal cause to be deliuered to the sayde kynge the two gentelmen and two other, syꝛ Geoꝛge Hume and xx Wiliam Carre.

Farther thesayde Earle woll that you Rouge Crosse, shewe the sayde kyng, that where he contrary to his othe and league, and vnnaturally agaynste all reason and conscience, hathe entred and inuaded this hys bꝛothers realme of Englande, and done great hurte to the same, in castynge doune Castelles, Towres, and houses, bꝛenninge, spoylynge and destroiynge of the same, and cruelly murderynge the kynge of Englande hys bꝛothers subiectes. Wheꝛefoꝛe the sayde Earle wyll be readye to tꝛye the rightfulnes of the matter wyth the kynge in batttaill by Frydaye next commynge at the farthest, yf he of xxx hys noble courage wyll geue hym tarienge, and abode, within this the Kynges Realme so longe tyme: And the same thesayde Earle pꝛomiseth, as he is true knyghte to God and the kynge of England hys Mayster. And befoꝛe Rouge Crosse shoulde departe wyth thesayde instruccions, thesayde Loꝛde Admyꝛall gaue hym in credence too shewe thesayde kynge of hys commynge, and parte of his compaignye on the sea wyth hym: & that he hadde soughte the Scottyshe Nauye, then beynge on the sea, but he coulde not mete with theym, because they were fledde into Fraunce, by the coste of Irelande.

xl And in asmuche as thesayde kynge hadde diuerse and many tymes caused thesayde Loꝛde, too be called at dayes of true, to make redꝛesse foꝛ Andꝛew Barton, a Pirate of the sea, longe befoꝛe that banquyshed by thesame Loꝛde Admyꝛall, he wasnowe come in hys awne pꝛoper persone too be in the Vauntgarde of the felde to Justifye the deathe of thesayde Andrewe, agaynste hym and all hys people, and woulde se what coulde be layed to hys charge thesayde daye, and that he nor none of hys compaignye shoulde take no Scottshe noble man prysoner, nor any other, but they shoulde dye yf they came in hys daunger, oneles it were the kynges awne persone, for he sayde he trusted to none other curtesye at the handes of the Scottes.

And in thys maner he shoulde fynde hym in the Vauntgarde of the felde by the grace of GOD and sayncte George as he was a trew Knyghte. Yet before the departynge of Rouge Crosse wyth thesayd instruccions and credence, it was thoughte by the Earle and hys counsayll, that thesayde kynge woulde fayne and Imagen some other message, too sende an Heraulde of hys wyth thesame, onely to View, and ouer se the maner and order of the kynges royall armye, ordinaunce, and artillerie, then beynge wyth the Earle, wherby myghte haue ensued greate daungier to thesame, and for exchuynge thereof, he hadde in commaundemente, that yf any such message were sente, not to bryng any person, commynge therewith, within three or two myle of the felde at the nyghest, where thesayde Earle woulde come, and heare what he would saye: And thus departed Rouge Crosse wyth hys trumpet apparayled in his Cote of armes.

On Mondaye the fyfte daye of September, the Earle tooke hys felde at Bolton in Glendall as he had appoyncted, where all the noble men and Gentelmen met wyth their retynewes too the number of six and twenty thousande men, and aboute mydnighte nexte ensuyng, came the trompette, whyche went wyth Ronge Crosse, and declared howe the kynge of Scottes, after the message done to hym by Rouge Crosse accordynge too hys instruccions, thesayde kynge detayned hym, and sent one Jlay a Harauld of hys wyth hym vnto the Earle, to declare too hym thesayde kynges pleasure, too whome the Earle sente Yorke Heraulde at armes, to accompaignye thesayde Jlay, at a Village called Wylo, twoo myles from the felde, vntyll the commyng thether of thesayde Earle the next morow.

The sixte daye of September, early in the morynge, the Earle accompaignied with the mooste parte of the Lordes, Knyghtes and Gentelmen of the felde, euery man hauynge with hym but one man to holde hys horsse, and so thesayde Heraulde met wyth the Earle, and with blunt reuerence declared to him that he was come from hys Master the kyng of Scottes, whyche woulde knowe, whyther the Earle sente anye suche message by Rouge Crosse, the Earle iustified thesame, saynge farther, that Rouge Crosse hadde thesame message of hym in writynge signed wyth hys awne hande, whereunto thesayde Jlay sayde, as touchynge the sauynge from brennynge or destroynge, and castynge doune of the Castell of Forde, for the deliueraunce of thesayd pryseners.

prisoners. The Kynge his Mayster woulde therto make no aunswer. But as too the abydynge for battayll betwene that and Frydaye, then nexte folowynge, the Kyng his Master badde hym shewe to the Earle, that he was as welcome as any noble manne of England vnto thesame kynge, and that yf he had bene at home in his Towne of Edenborough, there receyuyng suche a message from thesayd Erle, he woulde gladlye haue come & fulfylled thesayde Earles desyre: and the Heraulde assured the Earle on the Kynge his Maisters behalfe, that thesame kynge woulde abyde hym battayll at the daye prefixed, whereof thesayde x Earle was righte ioyous and muche praysed the honourable agremēt of thesayde Royall Kynge and estemed thesame to procede of an hygh and noble courage, promysynge the Heraulde that he and good suerty wyth hym shoulde be bounde in ten thousande pounde sterlynge, too kepe thesayde daye appoynted, so that the kyng woulde synde an earle of his, and thereto a good suerty with him to be bounde in lyke summe, for the performans of thesame: And farthermore the Earle bad the Heraulde for to saye to his maister, that yf he for his parte kept not hys appoyntmente, then he was content, that the Scottes shoulde Baffull hym, which is a great reproche amonge the Scottes, and is vsed when xx a man is openly periured, and then they make of hym an Image paynted reuersed, with hys heles vpwarde, with hys name, wonderynge, cryenge and blowinge out of hym with hornes, in the moost dispitefull maner they can. In tokē that he is worthy to be exiled the compaignie of all good Creatures.

Then Ilay deliuered too the Earle a littell Cedule, wrytten with the kynges Secretaries hande vnsigned, the tenor wherof foloweth.

CAs to the causes alleged of oure commynge into Englande a- " gayne oure bande and promyse (as is alleged) thereto we aunswere, "

And for asmuche as thesayde Kynge kepte styll Rouge Crosse xl wyth hym, who was not yet returned, thesame Earle caused thesayde Ilay too be in the keppynge of Syr Humfrey Lysle and Yorke Heraulde, in thesame Vyllage, vntyll the tyme that a seruaunte of thesayde Ilay myghte ryde in all haste too the Royall Kynge of Scottes,for the deliueryng of thesayde Rouge Crosse. Then the erle Joyous of the kynges aunswer,returned to hys campe, & set forward fyue myle,too a place called Woller Hawgh,in suche order of battayll, as euen then he should haue fought, and there lodged for that nighte, three littell myles from the kynge of Scottes,and betwene the kynge and hym was a goodly and large corne felde, called Mylfelde whyche was a conuenient and fayre grounde for twoo hostes to fight on,there euery hoste myghte perceyue other.

The morowe beynge Wednesdaye, the.viij.daye of that moneth, the kynge of Scottes caused hys greate ordinaunce too be shotte at the Englishe armye, but it hurte neither man nor beaste. When the kynge of Scottes sawe that Jlay was deteyned,he sent away Rouge Crosse to the Erle,by whome,and other of the borders he was aduertised that the kynge laye vppon the syde of a hyghe mountayne, called Floddon on the edge of Cheuyot, where was but one narowe felde for any manne to ascende vp thesayde hyll to hym, and at the foote of the hyll laye all hys ordinaunce. On the one syde of hys armye was a greate Marrishe, and compassed wyth the hylles of Cheuyot, so that he laye to stronge too be approched of any syde:excepte the Englishemen woulde haue temeariously ronne on hys ordinaunce, whiche matter well considered by the Earle and hys sonne, and other of the counsayll there, they called too theim Rouge Crosse, and sent hym the nexte daye to the kynge of Scottes, willinge hym too shewe the kynge, that the sayde Earle, with dyuerse of the kynges nobles and subiectes hadde auaunced them selfes too geue battayll to hys grace, trustynge that accordinge too his promise, he woulde auaunce hym selfe and hys armye to ioyne the battayll, whyche as yet he hath not done. Wherefore he desyred the kynge that he myghte haue knowlege by noone that daye, whether he of hys noble courage would discende the hyll, where he laye and too geue battayll or not:and yf he saye that Jshal not knowe his entent,or wyll saye,that he will kepe the ground: then shewe hym that he perceyueth well that that place is no indifferent grounde for twoo armyes too fighte, and therefor Jwill looke for no mo of his delayes. The same daye beynge oure Ladye day the Natiuite Rouge Crosse departed to the kynge of Scottes, whyche woulde not heare hym speke,but sente one of hys seruitours to heare his message:Whiche seruitour after he hadde disclosed the same to the kynge,made aunswer,that it besemed not an Earle, after that maner to handle a kynge,and that he woulde vse no sorcery,nor had no truste of any grounde:

You haue harde before, howe Jlay the Scottishe Heraulde was returned for Rouge Crosse, and as sone as Rouge Crosse was returned,he was discharged, but he taryed with Yorke an Englishe Heraulde makynge good chere, and was not returned that mornynge that

Rouge

Rouge Crosse came on hys message, wherefore Rouge Crosse and hys Trompet were detayned by the seruante of Jlay, whyche the daye before went for Rouge Crosse, assurynge them that yf Jlaye came not home before none, that he was not liuynge, and then they shoulde haue their heddes stryken of, then Rouge Crosse offered that hys seruaunte shoulde goe for Jlay, but it woulde not be excepted, but as happe was, Jlay came home before none, and shewed of hys gentell enterteynynge, and then Rouge Crosse was deliue-red, and came to the Englishe armye, and made reporte as you haue x heard.

Then the Englishemen remoued their felde on the water of Tyll, and so forthe ouer many hylles and streytes, marchynge towarde the Scottes on another syde, and in their sight the Scottes burned cer-tayne poore Uyllages on the other syde of the Marishe.

The Englishemen, alwayes leauynge the Scottishe armye on the left hande, toke their felde vnder a wood syde, called Barmer wood, two myle from the Scottes, & betwene the two armyes was the Ryuer of Tyll, & there was a littell hyll that saued the Englishemen from the gonne shotte, on which hyll the lorde Admyrall perfightly saw and xx discouered them all.

In the euenynge of thesame daye it was concluded betwene the Earle and hys counsayll, and moste parte of the armye thereto agreed, that the Uauntgarde with the ordinaunce shoulde passe ouer agayne the water of Tyll, at a bridge called Twysell bridge the.ix. daye of September, and the rerewarde to passe ouer at Mylforde, pnttynge theym selfes as nye as they coulde betwene the Scottes and Scot-lande, and so to geue battayll to the Scottes on the hyll, called Floddon hyll. Frydaye the sayde nynth daye, the Lorde Admyrall, lyke a valiaunte Knyghte, passed ouer Twysell brydge wyth the Uant-xxx garde, marchynge towarde hys enemyes, lyke diligence was made by the Earle for passynge ouer at Mylforde wyth the rerewarde, saiynge to hys Cappytaines, now good fellowes, do lyke Englishe-men this daye, take my parte lyke men, whyche parte is the Kynges parte, and I wyste you woulde not, I wyll in my awne person fighte with the Kynge of Scottes, rather to dye honourablye by his crueltye, then to lyue in shame, or that any reprosche shoulde be layed to me hereafter.

To whome they aunswered, that they woulde serue the Kynge and him truely that daye. The Englishe armye that daye hadde no bitayle xl and were fastynge, and two dayes afore they had onely dronke water, and coulde scace get anye other sustenaunce for money, and yet they kept array on horsebacke from fyue of the clocke in the mornynge tyll foure of the clocke at after none, and were alwayes in the sighte of the

Scottes

Scottes.

The kynge of Scottes perceyuinge the Englishemen, marchinge towarde Scotlande, thought that they woulde haue entered into Scotlande, and burne and forray the plentifull countray, called the Marche, for so was he made beleue by an Englisheman named Gyles Musgraue whyche was familiar wyth the kyng of Scottes, and dyd it for a pollecie to cause hym to come doune from the hyll: Wherefore the sayde kynge caused hys tentes to be remoued to an other hyll in grate haste, least the Englishemen shoulde haue taken thesame hyll: And at theyr departynge they sette fyer on theyr litter and other fylthye ordure, accordynge to theyr custome, and of the fyer and smolder dyd ryse suche a smooke so thicke and so darke, that the one host coulde not perceyue the other, for the wynde dyd dryue the smoke betwene the twoo armyes, the Scottes euer keppynge the heyght of the hyll on the edge of the cheuyot, and the Englishemen passed forward styll in the lowe grounde, and euer in the couert of the smoke, in so muche that bothe the hostes were very nere together, within the space of a quarter of a myle, before one of them coulde perceyue another for the smoke. Then, when the Englishemen had passed a lyttell brooke, called Sandyfforde, whyche is but a mans step ouer, and that the smoke was passed, and the Ayre fayre and cleare, eche army myghte playnly see one an other at hande. Then the Lorde Admyrall perceyued foure great battayles of the Scottes all on foote wyth longe speres lyke mooryshe pykes: whyche Scottes furnished them warlike, and bent theim to the forwarde, whyche was conducted by the Lorde Admirall, whyche perceyuynge that, sent to hys Father the Earle of Surrey hys Agnus dei that honge at hys breste that in all haste he would ioyne battayll, euen wyth the bront or breste of the vantgarde: for the forward alone was not able to encountre the whole battayll of the Scottes, the Earle perceyuynge well the saiynge of hys sonne, and seynge the Scottes ready to discende the hyll auaunsed hym selfe and hys people forwarde, and brought theym egall in grounde wyth the forwarde on the left hande, euen at the bront or breste of thesame at the foote of the hyll called Bramston, the Englishe army stretched East and West, and their backes Northe, and the Scottes in the Southe before theim on the forsayde hyll called Bramston.

Then oute brast the ordinaunce on bothe sydes wyth fyre flamme & hydeous noyse, and the Master gonner of the Englishe parte slew the Master gonner of Scotlande, and bet all hys men from their ordinaunce, so that the Scottishe ordynaunce dyd no harme too the Englishemen, but the Englishemens Artyllerie shotte into the myddes of the kynges battayll, and slewe many persones, which seynge the kyng of Scottes and hys noble men, made the more haste too come too ioynynge, and so all the foure battayles in maner discended the hyll at once.

once. And after that the shotte was done, whiche they defended wyth Pauishes, thei came to handestrokes, and were encontred seuerally as you shall here.

Fyrste on the Englyshe syde next the West, was Syr Edmonde Hawarde knyghte, Marshall of the hoste chief Capitayne of a wynge on the ryghte hande of oure vantgarde, and was encountryd wyth the Chamberlayne of Scotlande wyth hys battayle of sperys on foote, to the number of ten thousande at the leaste, whiche foughte valiauntly, so that they by force caused the litle wynge to flye, and thesame Syr i. Edmonde thre tymes felled to the grounde, and left alone, sauynge his standarde berar, and twoo of hys seruauntes, to whome came Jhon Heron bastarde sore hurte, saiynge there was neuer noble mans sone so lyke too be loste as you be thys daye, for all my hurtes I shall here lyue ande dye wyth you, and there thesayde Syr Edmonde Hawarde was in agreat daunger and ieopardy of hys lyfe, and hardelye escaped, and yet as he was goynge to the bodye of the Vantgarde he met with Dauy Home, and slew hym hys awne hande, and so came to the Vantgard.

Secondely, Eastwarde from the sayde battayle was the Lorde ij. Admyrall wyth the Vantgarde, wyth whome encountred the Earles of Crasforde and Montroos, accompaygned, wyth many Lordes, Knyghtes, and Gentelmen, all wyth sperys on foote, but the Lorde Admyrall and hys compaignie acquyted themselfes so well, and that with pure fightyng, that thei brought to grounde a great number, and both the Earles slayne.

Thirdely, Eastwarde from the Lorde Admyrall was the Earle of iij. Surrey, Capitayne generall, to whose standarde the kynge of Scottes in hys awne person marched, beynge accompaygned wyth many Bishoppes, Earles, Barons, Knyghtes and Gentelmen of the Realme with a great number of commons, all chosen men with speres on foote, whiche were the most assuredlyest harneshed that hath bene sene, & that the tallest and goodlyest personages with all, and they abode the most daungerous shot of arrowes, which sore them noyed, and yet except it hit them in some bare place it dyd them no hurt. After the shotte endyd, the battayll was cruell, none spared other, and the kynge hym selfe foughte valiauntly. O what a noble and triumphant courage was thys for a kynge to fyghte in a battayl as a meane souldier: But what auayled hys stronge harnes, the puyssaunce of hys myghtye champions wyth whome he descended the hyll, in whome he so muche trusted that wyth hys stronge people and great number of men, he was able as he thought to haue banquished that day the greatest Pryncе of the world, if he had ben there as the erle of Surrey was, or els he thought to do such an hygh enterprice hym selfe in his person, that shoulde surmount the enterprises of all other princes: but how soeuer it happened

God

God gaue the stroke, and he was no more regarded then a poore souldier, for al went one waye. So that of his owne battaill none escaped, but Syr William Scot knight his chauncelour, and Syr Jhon forman knight, his seriaunt Porter, whiche were taken prisoners, and wyth great difficultie saued. This may be a great myrror to al prynces, how that they aduenter them selfes in such a battaill.

Forthly, Eastwarde was Syr Edwarde Stanley knight, capitayn of the left wynge wyth the sayde earle, whyche clame vp to the toppe of the hyll called Bramston, or the Scottes wyste, and wyth hym encõtred the earles of Huntley, Lennour and Argile, with a great number of Scottes whyche were sore fought wyth all, whyche perceyuing the earle of Huntley toke a horse and saued hym selfe, yf he had taryed he had bene lykely to haue gone wyth hys compaignie: suche as fled, the sayde Syr Edwarde and his people folowed them ouer thesame grounde, where the Earles battell firste ioyned, and founde ther the Scottes, whyche were by the Earles battaill slayne before, & sodainly left the chase and fell a spoyling, and spoyled the kynge of Scottes, and many that were slayne in his battaill, but they knew him not, & founde a Crosse and certayn thynges of hys, by reason wherof some saide that he was slayne by that wyng, whyche coulde not be true, for the prisoners of Scotland testified that the kynges battayll fought onely with the Earles battels, but for a truthe this wynge dyd very valiauntly: wherfore it was thought that the sayd syr Edwarde myght that daye not haue bene missed.

All these.iiij.battels, in maner fought at one tyme, and were determined in effect, littell in distance of the beginnyng and endynge of any of them one before the other, sauyng that syr Edward Stanley, which was the last that fought, for he came vp to the toppe of the hyll, & there fought with the Scottes valiauntly, and chaced them doune the hyll ouer that place, where the kynges battaill ioyned. Besyde these.iiij. battayles of the Scottes were twoo other battayls, whyche neuer came to hande strokes.

Thus through the power of God on Fridaye, beyng the.ix.daye of September, in the yere of our Lorde.M.D.xiij.was James the.iiij. kyng of Scottes slayn at Bramstone (chiefly by the power of the earle of Surrey, lieutenaunt for kynge Henry the.viij.kynge of Englande, whyche then lay at the sege before Tornay) and wyth thesayde kynge were slayne.

Wack, Clene, and manye other gentlemen, whiche be vnknowen, because no officer of armes of Scotlande woulde come to make serche for them, and yf the daye had bene lenger by thre houres (for it was foure of the clocke at after none, or the battayles ioyned) or that the the Englashemen had had bitayles, so that they myght haue bydden styll together, they had not alonelye made the greatest dystresse of Scottes by death, and takynge, that the lyke hath not bene sene in one daye: but also wythin a litle while might xxx haue put the Realme of Scotlande in suche a misery and trouble, that for euer they shoulde haue bene ware how to enter the Realme of Englande, and specially the kynge, beynge absente: for the Englyshemen wanted no good wyll, for of the Scottes they slewe twelfe thousande at the leaste of the beste Gentlemen and flower of Scotlande, and of the Englysh syde were slayne and taken not.xb.C.men, as it appered by the boke of wages when the souldiours were payed. Thus the erle of Surrey accomplyshed the promyse at hys daye prefyxed wyth the kinge of Scottes to hys great fame and honour.

xl After that the felde was foughte and the Scottes fled many Englyshemen folowed them into Scotlande, and were so farre that they wiste not whiche waye to returne and so were taken prysoners of the Scottes that were in the.ij. battailes that fled first and neuer fought. Also dyuerse were taken by the Lorde Chamberlayne of Scotlande, whiche fought with the wyng of Sir Edmond Haward, and were caried wyth hym to the nomber of syxtye. Of the Scottes that fledde, some passed ouer the water of Twede at Caudestreme Foorde, and other by the dyke Marches, durynge the tyme of the fyghte, and the nyghte after manye menne loste their horsses and suche stoffe as they lefte in their tentes and pauilions by the robbars of Tindale and Tiuidale.

The Lorde Dacre wyth hys company stode styl all daye vnfoughten with all. When the felde was done & the skoute watche broughte woorde, that there was no more apperaunce of the Scottes, but all were returned. The Earle thanked God wyth humble harte, and called to hym certaine Lordes and other gentlemen & them made knightes, as Sir Edmonde Haward his sonne and the Lorde Scrope, Sir William Percy and manye other. Then the Earle and the Lorde Admirall departed to Barmer wodde and appointcted Sir Philippe Tylney knighte with the compaignye of the Lorde Admirall and the compaignie of the Lorde Scrope of bolton, the Lorde Latymer, olde Sir Marmaduke Constable, Sir William Percy, Sir Nicholas Applyard, and their compaignies, and a fewe other to kepe the place where the felde was for sauynge of the Englyshe ordinaunce, and the ordynaunce that was taken from the Scottes, whiche was fyue great Curtalles, twoo great Culuerynges, foure Sacres, and syxe Serpẽtynes as fayre ordinaunces hathe bene beside other small peces. Wel knowen it was by thẽ that fought, and also reported by the prysoners of Scotlande, that their kynge was taken or slayne, but hys bodye was not founde tyll the nexte daye, because al the meane people aswell Scottes as Englysh were strypped out of their apparell as they laye at the felde, yet at the laste he was founde by the Lorde Dacres, who who knewe hym well by hys pryuye tookens in that same place, where the battayle of the Earle of Surrey and hys, fyrste ioyned together.

Thys kynge had diuerse deadelye woundes, and in especyall one wyth an Arowe, and an another wyth a byll as apered when he was naked. After that the bodye of the kinge of Scottes was fownde and broughte too Barwicke, the Earle shewed it too Sir William Scot hys Chauncellor, and Sir Jhon Forman hys seriante porter, whyche knewe hym at the fyrste syghte, and made greate lamentacyon. Then was the bodye bowelled, enbawmed, and cered, and secretelye amongest other stuffe conueyed to Newcastell, but thesame daye the Lorde Admirall came to the felde and there some Scottes apered on an hyll: but William Blackenall whyche was the chyeffe doar and ruler of all the ordynaunce shott suche a peale, that the Scottes fledde, or elles the Lorde Admirall had bene in greate ieopardye: and then all the ordinaunce was broughte in sauetye to the Castell of Citel and there remayned for a tyme. After thys noble victorye the Earle wrote fyrste to the Quene whyche had rayſed a greate power to reſiſte the ſayde kinge of Scottes, of the wynnynge of the battaylle, for then the bodie of the kynge of Scottes was not fownde, and ſhe yet beynge at the towne of Buckingham had wonde the next daye after that the kynge of Scottes was ſlayne and a parte of hys coate armure to her ſente, for whiche byctorye ſhe thanked GOD, and ſo the Earle after that the Northe parte was ſett in a quyetnes, returned to the Quene wyth the deade bodye of the Scottyſche king and brought it to Richemonde.

x Nowe lette vs returne too the kynge of Englande lyenge before Tournay, whyche the .xxv. daye of September receyued the gauntelett and letters of the Earle of Surrey, and knewe all the dealynge of bothe parties. Then he thanked GOD and hyghlye prayſed the Earle and the Lorde Admirall and his ſonne, and al the gentlemenne and commons that were at that valiaunte enterprice: Howe beit, the kynge had a ſecrete letter that the Cheſhire men fledde from Sir Edmond Hawarde, whyche letter cauſed greate harte burning and manye woordes, but the kyng thankefully accepted al thynge, and would no man to be diſprayſed. So, on the Mondaye at nyght the.xxvi. daye xx of September, the Lorde Harbart and ỹ Earle of Shrewſbury made greate fyers in their armies in tooken of byctory and triumphe: and on Teuſdaye the.xxvij. daye the tente of cloth of gold was ſet vp: and the kynges Chapell ſange maſſe, and after that Te Deum, and then the Byſhoppe of Rocheſter made a Sermonde and ſhewed the deathe of the kynge of Scottes, and muche lamented the yll deathe and periury of him.

The kynge of Englande lyenge thus before Tournay, cauſed hys greate ordinaunce to be planted rounde aboute the Cytye and diuerſe trenches were caſte and rampiers made and the Lorde Liſle, and the xxx Lorde Wyloughby were appoyncted to mayntayne the ordinaunce, wyth their bendes, and the Earle of Kente was lodged before the gate called port Valencien, ſo that the Cytezens coulde not yſſue oute, nor no ayde coulde come in. The ordynaunce dayly bet the gates, towers and walles, whyche made a greate batterye: and a fewe Englyſhemen aſſaulted the port Coquerell, but they were to fewe in nomber, and yf they had bene more in nomber, they had taken the toune as the Tournoſyns confeſſed after. The Citezens of Tournay conſyderynge their eſtate, came together to counſayll, and there the Prouoſte ſayde, frendes and brethren of thys noble Citie, I cannot to muche prayſe youre xl true th and fidelitie to youre Soureygne Lorde the kyng of Fraunce, conſyderynge how manfully you haue defended this citie ſythe the begynnynge of thys ſiege, but alas allthoughe it be wryten on the gates grauen in ſtone Iammes ton ne a perdeu ton pucellage, that is to ſaye, thou haſt neuer loſte thy maydenhed: yet yf this citye hadde not bene well furnyſhed, and euer at the daye appoyncted ſure of reſkewe, it coulde not haue continued: nowe you se that reskewe fayleth, our gates be raled, our towres betyn downe, our chiefe tower lyke to fall, so that yf thys perilous siege continue, or elles yf our enemies assaute vs, we be not able to defende vs: wherefore nowe, all these thynges consydered, I woulde knowe whyther you wyll treate wyth the kynge of Englande or abide the chaunce. Then they which at the last counsayll cried war, warre, nowe cryed peace peace, yet al were not agreed: then one wyseman saide: Sirs yf the towne bee assawted once agayne with a greate nomber suerlye it will be taken: you sawe the experience at the laste assaute, and then consyder yf it bee taken by force, who is there that can saye, he is sure of his life: But by entretie, the kinge of Englande is so merciful, that we maye fortune to saue bothe lyfe and goodes. Then finally al agreed to treate. Then the Prouost sent to the kinge a trõpet desirynge a saufeconduyte for hym, and certayne other to come and to speake with hym, whyche requeste was to hym graunted. Then the Prouost of the citie accompanied with eleuen wyth hym of the beste of the citie came to the armye and spake with the lordes of the counsayll and after were broughte to the kynges presence, the Prouoste kneled doune and all hys compaginy and sayde: Ryght hyghe and myghtye Prynce, althoughe the Citie of Tournay is stronge, well walled, well xx replenished with people, vitayles, artilerye, yea and the people in feare and dreade of nothinge, yet we knowe that againste youre great puissaunce yt cannot continue long, although it were ten times as stronge as it is, wherefore we knowynge by reporte, youre honoure, your wysedome, youre iustice, and noble harte, are contente to become youre subiectes and vassalles, so that we maye haue and enioye oure olde lawes, customes, lyberties, and Franchesses, vnder you as we haue before thys done vnder other Princes. Then the kynge aunswered, we haue well hearde youre peticion, we will common wyth our counsayll and make you aunswere, and when he had communed wyth his coun- xxix sayll, he aunswered sayenge: Syrs, he that asketh mercye of vs, shall not be denied, seinge you come to treate, we remitte you to oure counsayll. Then they wente into the tente of counsayll, and ther the Tournasyns fell at a poyncte, and in conclusion, they yelded the Cytye and tenne thousande pounde Sterlynge for the redempcyon of theyr lyberties, and so departed to the citie, makynge relacyon of the kynge, and hys noble corage. On Thursdaye the.xxix.daye of September, the kynge was in hys ryche tente of clothe of golde vnder hys clothe of estate, to whome came the Citezens of the Citie and were sworne to him and became his subiectes. Then the kynge appoynted the lord xxx Lysle, the Lorde of Burgayny, & the Lord Willoughby to take possession, whiche wyth syxe thousande men entered the citie and toke the market place and the walles, and searched the howses for feare of treason, and then Mayster Thomas Wolsey the kynges Almoner called before hym all the Citizens younge and olde and sware them to the kynge of Englande, the nomber whereof was foure skore thousande. Thus the kynge of Englande by conquest came to the possession of the citie of Tournay: on Sondaye the. ij. daye of October the kinge entered the citie of Tournay at porte Fountayn, and. iiij. of the chiefe of the citie ouer him bare a cannapye wyth all the armes of Englande, euery person was in hys beste apparell, the Ladies and Gentlewomen laye in the wyndowes beholdinge the kinge and his nobilitie, euerye Citezen had in his hande a staf torche, the kynge hym selfe was richelye appereilled in ryche armure on a barded courser, his henxmen bearynge p his peces of warre, as axe, spere and other, their coursers were barded with the armes of Englande, Fraunce, Irelande, and other the kinges dominions all of ryche embrawdery, thus the kinge with his nobilitie al rychely apparelled with his swerde borne before him, his herauldes and seriantes of armes with trumpettes and mynstrelsy entered the citie and came to oure Ladye Churche, and there Te Deum was songe. Then the kinge called to his presence, Edwarde Guldeforde, William Fitzwilliam, Jhon Dauncye, William Tiler, Jhon Sharpe, William Huse, Jhon Sauage, Christopher Garnische, and diuerse other valiant esquiers, and gaue to them the order of knighthode, and then went to pp his lodgynge, & at after none he came to the market place, where was prepared for him a place: then he caused a proclamacion to bee made in his name king of England and of Fraunce, that no man shoulde greue the citizens, during which proclamacion the Turnesins scace loked vp nor shewed once to him any amiable contenaūce which was much marked, the Cry finished, the king departed to hys campe leuynge the citie in safe keppynge. This weke the kinge rode to see the castel of Morton, & there his grace toke great pleasur. The king remembring the great chere that the prince of Castel and the lady Margarete had made him at Lisle which was but. xij. myle English from Tornay, desired the said ppp prince and lady wyth diuerse other to come to him to his citie of Tornay, and made preparacion for the same, and appointed a iustes wherof he him selfe would be one, and caused a Tilt to be made in the Market place. While these thinges were preparyng, the king and his counsayll ordered for the sure keping of the citie of Tornay, and there ordeyned Sir Edward Pownynges knight of the order of the gartier to be his Lieu tenaunt with. iiij. C. archers, with capitaynes horsemen and artilerie conuenient, and to haue aide of Henawde and other the kynges frendes adioyning, and of his garde he left there. iiij. C. archers, & ordinaūce was appointed for the defence of the same. Monday y. xj. day q of October the king wythout the toune receiued the prince of castel, y lady Margaret and diuerse other nobles of their countreyes and thē brought into Tornay with great triumphe. The noyse wente that the lord Lisle made request of mariage to the lady Margarete duches of Sauoy and doughter to Themperour Maximilian, which before that tyme was departed from the kyng wyth many rich gyftes and money borowed, but whether he profered mariage or not she fauored him highly: there the prince and duches soiorned with great solace by the space

A Justes. of.x. dayes. During whiche time, the.xviij. daye of October, began the iustes, the king and the lord Lisle aunswered all commers: vppon the king attended.xxiiij. knightes on foote in cootes of purple veluet and cloth of golde. A tent of cloth of gold was set in the place for the armorie and releue, the king had a base and a trapper of purple veluet bothe set ful of.S.S. of fyne bullion, and the lord Lisle in the same suyt, ther were many speres broken and many a good buffet geuen, the strãgers as the lord Walon and the lord Emery and other dyd right well. Whẽ the iustes were done, the king and al the other vnhelmed them & rode about the Tilt and did great reuerence to the ladies, and then the heraulides cried to lodginge.

This nyght the kinge made a sumpteous banket of a. C. dyshes to the prince of Castell and the lady Margarete & to all other lordes and ladies, & after the banket, the ladies daunsed, and then came in the king & a.xi. in a maske, al richely appareled with bonettes of golde, & when they had passed the tyme at their pleasure, the garmentes of the maske were cast of amongest the ladies, take who coulde take.

The.xx. daye of October, the Prince of Castel and the ladye Margarete with many great giftes to them geuen returned to Lile wyth al their trayne. After that the king was enformed that all direccyons wer taken & euery thing put in an order for the sure keping of the citie of Tornay, he toke thesame to sir Edward Powninges knight, which valiantly kept it in good order and iustice. xx

The king & his counsail before this had considered that the Frẽchmen would geue them no battail, & that winter approched, which was no time to lie at siege of other townes, concluded to kepe Tournay sauely, & to breake vp their campe for that winter, & to begin again war in the spring of the yere: this was a full conclusion taken by the kynge and his counsayll, and so the kinge and al hys people (excepte suche as were appoincted to be with sir Edward Powninges) departed out of Tournay the.xx. daye of September: and the king and the noble men made such spede, that shortly they came to Caleys, and thyther came the Lorde Admirall whome the king hartely thanked of hys paynes and there euery man was paied of his wages and conduit money, and shippes prepared for the passage, and so the.xxiiij. day of Septẽber the kyng with a priuy cõpany toke shippe & thesame day landed at Douer and shortly after all his people folowed, then he with a small companye rode to Richemond in post to the quene, where was such a louinge metyng, that euery creature reioised. This season began a great mortalite in London and other places wher much people died: Al this winter the kynges nauy kept the seas and robbed and spoyled the Frenchmẽ on their costes. xxi xxii xxiii

that

that many a gentleman dyd at the battayll at Bramston, wherefore he wrote to them hys louinge letters wyth suche thankes and fauorable wordes that euerye man thought him selfe wel rewarded. And on the day of the purificacion of our Lady at Lambeth the kynge created the Earle of Surrey duke of Norffolke with an augmentacion of the armes of Scotlande, and Sir Charles Brandon Vicont Lisle, he created duke of Suffolke, and the Lord Haward high Admiral he created Earle of Surrey, and Sir Charles Somerset lord Harbert, his chief Chamberlayne he created Earle of Worcester: and after that at another daye he made Sir Edwarde Stanley for his good seruice, lorde Montaygle, and in a march folowynge was maister Thomas Wolsey the kinges almoner consecrate bishop of Lincolne, whiche therto was named on Newers daye before: This man was borne at Ypswyche and was a good Philosopher, verye eloquente and full of wytte, but for pride, couetous, and ambicion, he excelled al other as you shall hear after.

The discripcion of Thomas Wolsy, which afterwarde was made Cardinall.

In the tyme of kinge Henry the seuenth father to kynge Henrye the eighte it was concluded betwene the sayde kinge, and kinge Phylippe of Castel sonne to Maximilian the Emperour and kynge of Castell and hys wife, that Charles his eldest sonne shoulde marye the ladye Mary doughter to the kynge of Englande wyth a dowrye to her appoyncted, at whiche tyme they were bothe younge: Nowe at the kinges retourne from Tournay he made a preparacion too sende the sayde Ladye his sister to the Prince of Castel. But the counsayll of Flaunders aunswered that concerninge her selfe they would gladdly receyue to be espowsed to their Prynce, for she was then one of the fayrest Ladyes of the worlde: but as concerninge the artycles of her dowar, they coulde not fulfill wythout thassente of the kynge of Arragon and the realme of Castell (whyche was sayde, mynded to haue hym maryed in Spayne.) The kynge lyke a louynge brother woulde not sende his syster wyldely wythoute a dowar assured, toke the firste agremente betwene the kynge her father and kynge Philippe hys father to bee of none effecte, sythe the Spaniardes would not conferme the same, and the cause was, by reason that kinge Phylyppe was not naturallye borne to bee theyr kynge, but was kynge in the ryghte of hys wyfe, and so they were not bounde too hys agreementes made wythoute their consente. So thus the kynge of Englande reteyned stil hys syster and all the preparacyon that he hadde done for her conueyaunce, whiche was very costlye.

This season the lady Margaret quene of Scottes late wife to king James the.iiij. slayne at Bramton, and sister to the kyng, wrote to the kynge to haue compassion of her and his two Nephewes her sonnes, for she was in feare lest he woulde haue inuaded her realme. The king moued wt brotherly cõpassion, sent her word, that yf the Scottes kept peace he would kepe peace, yf they woulde haue war he wold likewise haue war, & so with that answere the messenger departed. In ỹ spring tyme of the yere the kyng wrote hys letters to all noble men and gentlemen that he woulde shortly passe agayne into Fraunce in hys owne person, wherfore euery man prepared him self mete for that iornay: the Flemminges hearing therof, made puruiaunce for wagons, vitayl and other thynges, whiche turned them to great losse for that viage brake of, as you shall heare.

All this season Sir Richard Whethil and sir Jhon Tremayle kept so Thenglishe pale that the Frenchmen durst not medyll, and yet they spoyled to base Bollen.

Before this tyme the tounes about London as Islyngton, Horstō Shordych and other, had so enclosed the comon feldes with hedges & diches, that nother the young men of the citie myght shote, nor the aūcient persons might walke for their pleasur in the feldes, except either the bowes and arrowes were broken or taken away, or the honest and substancial persons arrested or indited, saieng that no Londoner shuld go out of the citie but in the hygh wayes. Thys sayeng sore greued the Londeners, and sodainly this yere a great nōber of the citie assembled teem selfes in a morninge, and a turnar in a fooles coote came cryenge through the cytye, shouels and spades, and so manye people folowed ỹ it was wonder, and within a short space all the hedges about the townes were cast doune, and the diches filled, and euery thyng made plain the workemen were so diligent. The kinges counsayll hearyng of this assembly came to ỹ Gray Friers, & sent for the mayre and the counsail of the cytye to knowe the cause, whiche declared to them the noysance done to the Citezens, and their commodities & liberties taken frō them though they would not yet the commonaltie and younge persones, whyche were dampnefyed by the noisaunce would pluck vp & remedy thesame. And when the kinges counsayll had harde the aunswer, they dissimuled the matter, and commaunded the mayer to se that no other thynge were attempted, and to call home the citezēs, which when they had done their enterprice, came home before the kynges counsayll and the Mayre departed without any harme more doing, and so after, the feldes were neuer hedged.

The .vi. yere

IN the moneth of Maye the kyng and the newe Duke of Suffolke wer defenders at the Tilt against al commers the kynge was in a scopelary mantel and hat of clothe of siluer & like a whit hermite, and the duke appareled like a black hermite al of black veluet, both their berdes wer of Damaske siluer, & whē they had ridden about the Tilt & shewed them seles to the quene, then they threw of their apparel & sent it to the ladies for a larges, then was the king in black, and the Duke in whit with black staues, on the staues was wrytten with whit letters:

who can hold that wyl away: thys poyse was iudged to be made for the Duke of Suffolke and the Duches of Sauoy, at these iustes were the duke of Longeuyle and the Lorde Cleremond, and there the kinge and the Duke dyd so valiantly that they obteyned the price, at these iustes wer broken. C. xiiij. speres in a short season.

The kinge at this season sent agayne into Flaunders for the performaunce of the mariage of the younge Prince of Castell and the fayre Ladye Mary his sister, and shewed howe he had prepared al thynges necessarie and conueniēt for suche an high estate. The counsail of Flaū-x ders aunswered that they woulde not receiue her that yere, with many subtill argumentes, by reason wherof the perfite loue betwene Englande, and the low countreys was much slaked.

The .xix. day of May was receyued into London a Capp of maintenaunce and a swerde sent from Pope July, with a great compaigny of nobles and gentlemen, which was presented to the kyng on ỹ Sondaye then nexte ensuynge wyth great solempnitie in the Cathedrall Churche of sainct Paule. About this time, the warres yet contynuing betwene Englande and Fraunce, prior Jhon (of whom you haue hard before in the fourth yere) great capitayne of the Frenche naūye, wyth xi his Galeyes and Foystes charged wyth greate basylyskes and other greate artillerie came on the border of Sussex, and came a lande in the night at a poore village in Sussex called Bright Helmston, and or the watche coulde him escrye he sett fier in the toune and tooke such poore goodes as he founde: then the watche fiered the bekins, and people began together, whiche seinge Prior Jhon Sowned his trompet to call his men aborde, and by that tyme it was day: then syx archers whiche kepte the watche folowed Prior Jhon to the sea and shott so faste, that they bet the galymen from the shore and Prior Jhon hym selfe waded xxx to his Foyst, and the Englishe men went into the water after, but they were put backe wyth pickes or ells they had entered the foyst, but they shott so fast, that they wounded many in the foist, and Prior Jhon was shott in the face with an Arrow, and was likely to haue died, and therfore he offered his image of wax before our Lady at Bolleyn with the English arrow in the face for a myracle. The Capp of maintenaūce

When the lorde Admirall of Englande had hearde these newes he was not content and sent sir Jhon Wallop to the sea incontinent wyth diuerse English shippes, which sayled to the cost of Normandy & there landed and brent. xxj. villages & tounes with great slaughter of peoxl ple, & brent shippes and boates in the hauens of Treaport, stapels and in euery place. This sir Jhon Wallopp quit hym selfe so, that men marueled of his entrepryses, considerynge he had at the most but. viij. C. mē, and toke lande there so often.

In the moneth of June the lord Powntremy that was capitayn of Tyrwyn with banner displayed and greate ordinaunce, with a greate army came into Picardy nere to Arde. Sir Nicholas Uaux captain of Guyſues conſidering that ỹ Frenchmen had ſuch ordinaunce, thought that they would haue beſieged Guiſnes, and wrote therof to the king, which incontinent prouided a great army for the reſkewe. And when euery thynge was ready and the army forward, the lord Pountremy reiſed his campe, and departed without anye more doing, but for all ỹ the king ſent oner ſir Thomas Louell knight wyth. vj. C. men to Caleys for the more ſtrength of that towne and other townes and caſtelles beyng within the Engliſh pale and the marches there.

Guysnes

The French king this yere appointcted to Richard de la Pole traitor of England and baniſhed the realme. xii. M. lanceknightes to kepe x Normandy, and alſo to entre into England and to conquere theſame, where they made ſuche a Riot that many of them were ſlayn & he was faine to cary them to ſainct Malos in Britaigne to take ſhippe: for the Frenchmen would fayne haue bene rydde of them, they cared not how, their condicions were ſo byle and ſhameful, but by the reaſon that the French kyng luyd for peace, this iourney toke no effect.

The French king by an herauld wrote to the king of England, that he marueiled greately why he made hym ſo ſore war, and brent & toke his townes, ſlewe and robbed hys people withoute anycauſe geuen on his parte, wherfore he required the king to graunt ſaueconduit to his xx ambaſſadoures, whiche ſhoulde entreate the cauſe: wherupon in June the French king ſent a commiſſion with the preſident of Roan and the generall boyer and certayne other nobles of Fraunce to entreat peace and alliaunce betwene both the princes: and farther, becauſe that they knew that the mariage was broken betwene the prince of Caſtel & the lady Mary (as you haue heard) thei deſiered thelaid lady to be eſpouſed to the French king, affirming a great dower & fuertes for theſame with great treaſures: ſo much was offered that the king moued by his counſail, and ſpecially by the biſhop of Lincolne Wolſey, conſented upõ condicion that yf the ſaide French king Loys died, then ſhe ſhould yf it xxx pleaſed her retorne into England again with al her dowar and riches: after this entretie, the indentures were ſealed & the peace proclaimed the. vij. daye of Auguſt and the king in preſence of the French ambaſſadours ſworn to kepe theſame, & likewyſe ther was ſent an Ambaſſade out of Englande to ſe the French kynge ſwere theſame.

The Dutchmen hering theſe newes were ſory, and repented them that they receiued not the lady, & ſpake ſhamfully of this mariage, that a feble, old & pocky man ſhould mary ſo fayr a lady, but the voys of people let not princes purpoſes.

By the concluſion of this peace was the duke of Longuile & other xl priſoners deliuered, payeng their raunſom, and the ſaied Duke affied ỹ lady Mary in the name of kyng Lewes his maiſter. This Duke was highly interteined in England of many noble mẽ and had great chere, but whẽ they came into Fraunce with the quene he would ſcace know them. Then when al thinges were redy for the conueyaũce of this noble ble Ladye, the kyng her brother in the moneth of September with the quene his wife and his sayde sister and al the court came to Douer and there taried, for the wynde was troublous and the wether foule, in so muche that a shippe of the kings called the Libeck. of. ix. C. tonne was driuen a shore before Sangate and there brast & of. vi. C. men scantely escaped. iij. C. & yet the most part of them were hurt with the wrecke. When the wether was fayre, then all her wardrope, stable and riches was shipped, and suche as were appointcted to geue their attendaunce on her, as the duke of Norffolke, the Marques Dorset, the Bysshop of x Durham, the earle of Surrey, the lorde Delawar, the lorde Barnes, the lord Montaigle, the Marques. iiij. brother, sir Morice Barkeley, sir Jhon Peche, sir William Sãdes, sir Thomas Bulleyn, sir Jhõ Car and many other knightes, squiers, gẽtlemen & ladies, al these went to ship, and the sayde lady toke her leaue of the quene in the castell of Douer, and the king brought her to the sea syde, and kissed her and betoke her to God and the fortune of the sea, and to the gouernaunce of the French king her husbande. Thus the. ij. daye of October at the hower of foure of the clocke in the mornynge this fayre ladye toke her shippe with al her noble compaignie: and when they had sayled a quarter of xx the sea, the wynde rose and seuered some of the shippes to Caleys, and some into Flaunders & her shippe with greate difficultie was brought to Bulleyn, and with great ieopardie at the entring of the hauẽ, for the mayster ran the ship hard on shore, but the botes were redy & receiued this noble lady, and at the landynge sir Christopher Garnysshe stode in the water and toke her in his armes, and so caried her to land, where ỹ Duke of Uandosme and a Cardinall wyth many estates receiued her, and al her ladies, and welcommed all the noble men into that countrey and so the Quene and al her trayne came to Bulleyn, and there rested xxx and from thence she remoued by diuerse lodgynges tyll she came all most within thre mile of Abuile beside the forrest of Arders, and there kynge Loyes vppon a great courser met with her, and she would haue alyghted but he woulde not suffre her, and welcommed her to his coũtrey, and when he had sene her beauty (which he so long desired) & tal- was wt her a litle space, thẽ he returned to Abuile by a secret way & she ked with great triumph, procession and pagiãtes receiued into ỹ toune of Abuile, the. viij. day of October by the Dolphin, which receyued her wt gret honor, she was apparelled in cloth of siluer, her horse was trapped in goldsmyths work very rychly. After her folowed. xxvj. ladies, xl al their palfreys trapped with crymsyn veluet, embraudered: after thẽ folowed one chariot of clothe of tyssue, the seconde clothe of golde and the third Crimsyn veluet embrawdered with the kings armes & hers full of roses. After them folowed a great nomber of archers, and then wagons ladẽ wt their stuffe. Great was ỹ ryches in plate, iuels, money apparel, & hanginges that this lady brought into Fraũce. The Monday beyng the daye of Sainct Denyse, the same kynge Lewes maried

the lady Mary in the great church of Abuile, bothe appareled in goldsmithes wooꝛke. After the maſſe was done, there was a great banket and feſt, and the ladyes of England highly entretayned.

The Tewesday beyng the tenth day of October al Thenglyſhmen except a fewe that were officers with theſayd quene, were diſcharged which was a greate ſoꝛowe foꝛ theim, foꝛ ſome had ſerued her longe in hope of pꝛefermente, and ſome that had honeſt romes lefte thē to ſerue her, & now thei were without ſeruice, which cauſed thē to take thought in ſo muth ſome died by the way returning, and ſone fel mad, but there was no remedy. After thengliſhe Loꝛdes hadde done their cōmiſſion & the Frēch king wylled them to take no lenger payne, & ſo gaue to them good rewardes, and thei tooke their leaue of the quene, and returned. Then the Dolphin of Fraunce called loꝛd Frauncis duke of Ualoys, & by his wife duke of Bꝛitaigne foꝛ the moꝛe honour of this mariage, beꝛe Thenglyſhmen departed from Abuile, cauſed a ſolempne iuſtes to be pꝛoclaymed, which ſhoulde be kept at Paris in the moneth of Nouēber next enſuyng, and that he with his .ix. aydes ſhoulde aunſwere, all commers beyng gentlemen of name and of armes. Firſte, to ronne .v. courſes at the Tylt with peces of auauntage, and alſo fyue courſes at Randon with ſharpe ſperes, and twelfe ſtrokes with ſharpe ſwoꝛdes, & and that done, he and his aides to fight at the barriers with al gentlemen of name and of armes. Fyꝛſt, fyꝛ foynes with handſpeares, and after that eyght ſtrokes to the moſt auantage yf the ſpere ſo long held, & after that twelfe ſtrokes wyth the ſwerde, and yf any man be vnhoꝛſed oꝛ be felled with fightinge on foote, then hys hoꝛſe and armoure to bee rēdered to the officers of armes, and euery man of thys chalenge muſt ſet vp his armes and name vpon an arche triumphante, whiche ſhalbe made at the place where the iuſtes ſhalbee, and farther ſhall wꝛyte to what poinct he ſhal aunſwere to one oꝛ to all. When this pꝛoclamacion was repoꝛted in Englande by the noble men that returned from the mariage: the Duke of Suffolke, the Marques Doꝛſet, and hys foure bꝛethꝛen, the Loꝛde Clynton, Sir Edward Neuell, Sir Giles Capel, Thomas Cheney & other ſued to the kyng to be at the chalenge, which requeſt he graciouſly graunted. Then the Loꝛdes and knyghtes pꝛepared all thinge neceſſarye foꝛ their enterpꝛice, and ſhypped their hoꝛſes and harneſſe, and dyd ſo muche by iourneye, that they came to Paꝛys, at the ende of the moneth of October, whiche were hartelye welcomed of the kyng and the Dolphin, but moſte of all, of the Frēch quene which then lay at ſaynct Denyſe, and was not yet crouned noꝛ entred into Paris.

The Dolphin deſired the duke of Suffolke and the loꝛd Marques Doꝛſet, whoſe actiuitie he knew well by repoꝛte, to be two of his immediat aides, which therto aſſented: therfoꝛe was erected an Arch of widnes at the tournelles beſide ỹ ſtrete on ſainct Anthony, directly befoꝛe ỹ Baſtel, on ỹ which were ſet .iiij. targettes oꝛ ſcutchions, the one ſiluer

and he that sett his name vndet that shylde, runne at the Tylt accoꝛding to the articles: he that put his name vnder the golde target should come with the sharpe speres and fight with sharpe swerdes: they that put ther names to the black shilde, should fight a foote with speres and swerdes foꝛ the one hand. And he that touched the tawney sheld shoulde cast a spere on foot with a targett on his arme, & after to fight with a.ii. hand swerde: on this arche aboue stode the armes of the kyng and the quene, and benethe theim stode the armes of the Dolphin and his aydes, and vnder nethe stode the.iiii.scochions that you haue harde of, and vnder theim all the armes and names of suche as set their names to any of thesayde.iiii.scochions. While all these thinges were pꝛepatynge, the lady Mary of England the.v.daie of Nouember then being Sondaie, was with great solempnytee crowned Quene of Fraunce in the monasterie of Sayncte Denyce, and the Dolphyn all the season held the croune ouer her hed, because it was of greate waight to her greuance, at whiche coꝛonation were the loꝛdes of England, and accoꝛdynge to their degrees well enterteyned.

Mondaye the.vi.daye of Nouember thesayde Quene was receyued into the cytee of Parys after the oꝛder that foloweth. First the garde of xx the Cytee met with her with oute Sayncte Denyce all in coates of goldesmythes wooꝛke with shippes gylt, and after them mett her all the pꝛiestes and religious which were esteemed to be.iii.M. The quene was in a chayꝛe couered about (but not ouer her person) in white cloth of golde the hoꝛses that dꝛewe it couered in cloth of golde, on her hed a coronall all of greate perles, her necke and bꝛest full of Jueles, befoꝛe her wente a garde of Almaynes after their fassion, and after them al noblemen, as the Dolphyn, the Duke of Alanson, the Duke of Burbon, the Duke of Vandosme, the Duke of Longeuyle, and the Duke of Suffolke, the Maꝛques Doꝛsett.v. Cardynalles and a greate nomber of xxi estates, aboute her person rode the kynges garde whiche were Scottes. Thus was this quene receyued into Paris and so cõueyed to the cathedꝛal churche and ther offered, and from thence to the pallayce where she offered at the holy Chapel, and from thence she went to the lodgyng foꝛ that nyght, foꝛ whome was pꝛouided a great supper and the heraulde cryed a larges and had to theim geuen a ship of siluer and gylt, and other plate to the valewe of.ii.C.marke, and after supper began daũsyng and pastyme. On the moꝛowe begã the iustes, & the Dolphin with his aydes entered the feld, the apparell & bardes were cloth of golde, cloth of syluer and cryinsyn veluet kanteled together all in one sute, they shewed themxxii selfs befoꝛe the kyng & quene who were in a goodly stage, and the quene stode so that all men might see her and wondered at her beautie, and the kyng was feble & lay on a couche foꝛ weakenes. Then entered the counter parte by a rayle foꝛ combꝛyng the place. These iustes contynued.iii. dayes, in the whiche were aunswered.iii.hundꝛed and.v.men of armes and euery man ran.v. courses, and with sharpe-speres, dyuerse were slayne and not spoken of: the English lordes and knightes dyd as well as the best of any the other. At the Randon and Tournay the Duke of Suffolke hurt a gentelman that he was like to die, the Marques strok Mounsire Grew an Albanoys with his spere and persed his hed pece & put hym in ieopardy: the duke of Suffolke in the tornay ouerthrewe a man of armes horse and man, so dyd the lorde Marques another, and yet the Frenchmen woulde in no wyse prayse them. At this tornay the Dolphyn was hurt in the hande, so that he coulde not performe hys chalenge at the barriers and put one of his ayde in his rome, the nexte daye after began the fight at the barriers and because the Dolphin was not present, the duke of Suffolke and the lorde Marques Dorset that daye began the feld, and toke the barriers with speres in hand abyding all commers. The Dolphin brought a mā secretly, which in al the court of Fraunce was the talleste and the strongest man, & he was an Almayne and put him in the place of an other person to haue had ꝑ duke of Suffolke rebuked. The same great Almayne came to the barres fiersly with face hyd, because he would not be knowen, and bare his spere to the duke of Suffolke with all his strength, and the duke him receiued, and for all his strength put hym by strong strokes from the barriers, and with the but ende of the spere strake the Almaine that he staggared, but for al that the Almayne strake strongly & hardly at the duke, and the iudges suffred many mo strokes to be foughten then were appointed, but whē they saw the Almayne rele & staggar, then they let fall the rayle betwene them. The lorde Marques Dorsett at the same time, euen at the same barre fought with a gentelman of Fraunce that he lost his spere, and in maner with drewe: When the rayle was let fal, these two noble men put vp their vysers & toke ayer, & then they tooke swerdes with poynct & edges abated, and came to the barriers, and ꝑ Almayne foughte sore with the duke, which imagened that he was a person set on for the nonce but the duke by pure strength tooke him about the necke, and pomeled so a- xix boute the hed that the bloud yssued out of his nose, & then they were departed, and the Almayne was conueyed by the Dolphyn lest he should be knowen. These twoo noble men of Englande that daye fought valiantly diuerse feates, and the Frenchmen likewise nobly them defended but it happened the lord Marques one time to put for his aide his yoūgest brother called the Lorde Edward Grey of the age of .xix. yere, and to hym was put a gentelman of Fraunce of greate stature and strength to thentente to plucke hym ouer the barres, but yet the younge Lorde was of suche strength, powre and pollecy, that he so stroke his aduersarie that he disarmed hym, al the face bare. Thus was these enterprices fynished to the laude of al parties, and Thenglyshmen receyued muche honoure and no spott of rebuke, yet they were priuely sett at and in many ieopardies: for the declaracion of this triumphe, he that sawe it can tell howe goodly the courses trotted boūded and quickly turned: How valiantely the men of armes behaued them selfes and howe the Duke of Burbones bede was apparelled & bassed in tawny veluet, & clothe of syluer clowdy, the bende of therle of Saynete Polle apparelled and barded in purple veluet all to cut on putple satten, the enfante of Artagon sonne to Frederycke last kynge of Napels, hys bende al in clothe of golde and syluer paled. This lord was but young but was very towarde. The Duke of Vandosme and his bende in clothe of golde, and pluncket veluet. The Dolphyn and hys aydes were euery daye newe appareled at his coste, one daye in syluer and golde, a nother in Crymesyn veluet and yelowe veluet, and another daye in white veluet x and grene, some daye mypted with satyn, some daye embzaudered, some daye poũced with golde, and so euery date in chaunge as the woozkers fantasye coulde deuyse, but the Englishemen had euer on their apparel red crosses to be knowen foz loue of their countre: at this triumphe the countie Galeas came into the place on a Jenett trapped in blewe satten and he hym selfe likewyse apparelled and rã a cozse with a speere, which was at the hed. b. ynches on euery syde square, that is. xx. ynches about, and at the but. ix. ynches square, that is. xxxbi. ynches, this spere was tymber and yet foz al that he ran cleane with it a long course & slightely auoyded it to his great honour.

This yere in December ther was one Richard Hun a marchaunt taiRichard Hun cõmitted to ỹ lowers towe & murthered.
loz of London in Lollers tower by the commaundement of the Bishop of London, called Rychard Fytziames & doctoure Hozsey his chaunceller, whiche was a man moze of witt to pzeferte the Bysshoppes iurisdicion and the clergie, then the trueth of the Gospell: but so it was that the said Hun was found dead hãging by the neck in a girdle of silke, within the said towze. The beginning of this matter must be shewed foz the fo-xl lowing of the cõsequent: foz this Hun had a child that died in his house being an infant, the curate clamed the beting shete foz a moztuary. Hun answered that the infant had no pzopertie in the shet, whetupõ the pziest ascited him in the spiritual courte, he taking to him good counsail, sued the curat in a pzemunire, & whẽ the pziestes hard of this, thei did so much of malice that they accused hun of heresy, and bzought him to the lollers towet and ther was founde deed as you haue hard.

This man was counted of honeſt reputacion,no man to the ſight of people moze vertuous, wherfoze vpon this mater a greate matter folo- wed,foz the Byſhoppe and his Chauncellet doctour Hozſey ſayde that he hanged him ſelfe,and all the tempozaltie ſayde that he was murthe- red,and there vpon.xii.men were charged befoze the Cozonour whiche xii.were elected by greate dyſcrecion,and many tymes they were wyth the kynges counſayll and hard their opinions, but in the meane ſeaſon the Byſhop of London bzent the dead Carcaſſe of theſayde Rychard Hun in ſmythfeld,to the abhommacion of the people: but after that the matter had ben hard by the iudges, and after by the kynges counſayll his grace beyng pzeſent and heting the cauſe openly debated and much bozne by the ſpiritualtie,yet at the laſt he remitted it to the tryall of the lawe,and ſo vpon good euidence doctour Hozſey the Chauncellet and Belrynger with Charles Joſeph the ſomnet, were endyted of the mur- ther:but afterward by the meanes of the ſpiritualty & money, Doctour Hozſey cauſed the kynges attozney to confeſſe on his arraynement hym not to be gylty,and ſo he eſcaped and went to Exetre,and foz very ſhame durſt neuer come after to London.But yet foz a further truthe to be de- clared in this abhominable and deteſtable murther,here ſhall folow the whole inquyzy and verdicte of thenqueſt woozde.foz wozde

The inquiry of the death of Richard Hun

The.v.and the.vi.daie of December in the.vi.yere of the reigne of our ſouereigne lozde kyng Henry the.viii.Wyllyam Barnewell crow- ner of London,the daye and yere aboue ſayde within the warde of Caſ- tylbaynerd of London aſſembled a queſt,whoſe names afterwarde doo appere,and hath ſwozne theim truely to enquire of the death of one Ry- chard Hun whiche lately was founde dead in the Lollers towet with in Pauls churh of London, wherupon al we of the inqueſt together went vp into theſayd towet,where we found the body of theſaid Hun hãging vpon a ſtaple of iron in a gyzdell of ſylke,with faire countenaunce hys heed fayze kemmed,and his bonet right ſittyng vpon his heed,with his eyen & mouth fayze cloſed,withoute any ſtaring,gapyng,oz frownyng. Alſo without any dzeuelyng oz ſpurgyng in any place of his body, wherupõ by one aſſent all we agreed to take downe the body of theſaide Hun,& as ſone as we began to heue at the body it was looſe, wherby by good aduyſemẽt we percepued that the gyzdell had no knot aboue the ſtaple, but it was double caſt & the linkes of an iron chayne which dyd hãg on theſame ſtaple were laid vpõ theſame gyzdle wherbi he did hãg: Alſo the knot of the gyzdel that wẽt about his neck ſtode vnder his left eare, whiche cauſed his head to leane toward his right ſhoulder. Not wi- withſtãding there came out of the noſtrels.ii.ſmal ſtremes of bloud to the quãtite of.iiii.dzopes,ſaue only theſe.iiii.dzopes of blode, ỹ face lip- pes,chinne,doublet, coler,& ſhurt of theſaide Hun was cleane from any bloud.Alſo we fynd that ỹ ſkyn both of his neck & thzote beneth the gyz- del of ſylk,was fret & faſed away,with that thing which the murtherers had had broken his neck with all. Also the hãdes of thesayd Hun wer wrõg in the wristes, wherby we perceyued that his handes had been bounde.

Moreouer we fynd that within thesayde prison was no meane wher by any man might hang him selfe, but onely a stole, which stole stode vpon a bolster of a bed, so tyckle that any man or beast myght not touche it so lytle but it was redy to fall, wherby we perceyued that it was not possible that Hun might hange him selfe the stole so standinge. Also all the gyrdell from the staple to his necke, as well as the part which went about his neck was to litle for his hed to come out therat. Also it was not possible that the soft sylken gyrdell shoulde breake his neck or skyn beneth the gyrdle. Also we finde in a corner somewhat beyonde the place wher he dyd hang, a great persell of bloud. Also we fynde that vpon the lyfte syde of Huns Jacket from the breast downeward. ii. great stremes of bloud. Also within the flappe of the lyft syde of his Jacket, we fynde a greate cluster of bloude and the Jacket folden downe therupon, whiche thing thesaide Hun coulde neuer folde nor do after he was hanged: Wherby it appeareth plainly to vs all, that the necke of Hun was broken, and the greate plenty of bludde was shed before he was hanged. Wherefore all wee fynde by God and all out consciences that Rychard Hun was murthered: also we acquyte thesaid Richard Hun of his aune deathe.

Also an ende of a wax candell whiche as Jhon Belrynget sayeth, he lefte in the prison burnyng with Hun that same Sondaye at nyght that Hun was murthered, whiche ware candell we founde stycknge vpon the stockes fayre put oute, aboute seuen or eyght fote from the place where Hun was hanged, whiche candell after oure oppnion was neuer put oute by hym, for many lykelyhodes whiche we haue perceyued. Also at the goynge vp of Master Chauncellor into the Lollars tower we haue good proofe that there laye on the stockes a gowne eyther of murrey or crimosyn in grayn furred with shankes, whose goune yt was wee coulde neuer proue, neyther who bare it awaye. All wee fynde that Master Wyllyam Horsey Chauncellor to my lorde of London hath had at his commaundement bothe the rule and guydynge of thesayde prysoner. Moreouer, all we fynde that thesayde Master Horsey Chauncellor hath put Charles Joseph out of his office, as thesayde Charles hath confessed, because he would not dele and vse thesayde prisoner so cruelly and do to him as the Chauncellor would haue had him to do. Notwithstãding the deliueraunce of the keyes to ỹ Chaũceller by Charles on the Saturdaye at nyght before Huns deathe and Charles ryding out of the towne on the Sondaye in the mornyng ensuyng was but a conuenciõ made betwixte Charles and the Chauncellor, for to colour the murther, for thesame Sõdaye that Charles rode furth, he came agayne to towne the Sonday at nyght, and kylled Rychard Hun, as in the deposycions of Julian Littell, Thomas Chitcheley, Thomas Symondes, and Peter Turney doeth appere.

After colouryng of the murther betwixte Charles and the Chauncel-ler conspired, the Chaunceller called to hym one Jhon Spaldyng Beltynger of Poules and delyuered to thesame Beltynger the keyes of the Lollars towre, geuyng to thesayde Beltynger a great charge, sayeng: I charge the to kepe Hun moze straytely than he hath been kepte, and let hym haue but one meale a daye. Mozeouer I charge the, let no body come to hym wythoute my lycence, neyther to bzynge hym shurt, cap, kercheffe, oz any other thynge, but that I see it befoze yt come to hym.
Also befoze Hun was caried to Fulham, the Chaunceller commaunded too bee put vppon Huns necke a greate coller of Jron with a greate chayne whiche is to heuy foz any man oz beast to were and longe to endure.

Mozeouer it is well pzoued that befoze Huns death thesayd Chaunceller came vp into thesayde Lollers tower, and kneled downe befoze Hun, holdyng vp hys handes to hym, pzayenge hym of fozgeuenesse of all that he had done to hym and muste do to hym. And on the Sondaye folowynge the Chaunceller commaunded the Penytensary of Pou-les, too goo vp to hym and saye a Gospell, and make foz hym holy water and holye bzeade, and geue yt to hym, whiche so dyd and also the Chaunceller cõmaunded that Hun should haue his diner. And thesame dyner tyme Charles boye was shute in pzyson with Hun, whiche was neuer so befoze, and after dyner whan the Beltynger fet oute the boye, the Beltynger sayde to thesame boye, come no moze hyther with mete foz hym vntyll to mozowe at noone, foz my mayster Chaunceller hathe commaunded that he shall haue but one meale a daye: and thesame night folowynge Rychard Hun was murthered, whiche murder coulde not haue been done wythoute consente and lycence of the Chaunceller, and also by the wittynge and knowelege of Jhon Spaldynge Beltyn-ger, foz there coulde no man come into the pzyson but by the keyes beyng in Jhon Beltyngers keppynge. Also as by my Lozde of Londons booke doeth appere, Jhon Beltynger is a pooze innocente man, wherefoze all wee doo percepue that thys murther coulde not be done, but by the commaundement of the Chaunceller, and by the wittynge and knowyng of Jhon Beltynger.

Charles Joseph wythin the tower of London of hys awne free wyll and vnconstreyncd sayde, that Master Chaunceller deuysed and wzote with his awne hand, all suche heresyes as were layd to Hũs charge, recozde Jhon God, Jhon Truy, Jhon Palmar, Richard Gybson with many other.

Also Charles Joseph sayeth, that whan Rychard Hun was slayne Jhon Beltynger bare vpp the steyze into Lollars tower a waxe can-dell, hauynge the keyes of the dozes hangynge on hys arme, and I Charles went nexte to hym, and master Chaunceller came vp last, and whan all wee came vp, we founde Hun lyenge on hys bedde, and than Master Chaunceller sayde, lay handes on the thefe and so all we murthered

thered Hun, and than J Charles put the gyrdell about Huns necke, and than Jhon Belrynger and J Charles dyd heue vp Hun and Master Chaunceller pulled the gyrdell ouer the staple, and so Hun was hanged.

The deposicion of Iulian littell Late seruaunt to Charles Ioseph by her fre vvill vnconstrayned the.vi.yere of oure souereigne lord kyng Henry the.viii.vvithin the Chapell of our lady of Bethelem shevved to thynquest.

Fyrst Julian sayeth, that the Wednesdaye at nyght after the death £ of Rychard Hun, that Charles Joseph her master came home to hys supper: than Julian sayde to hym, master it was tolde me that ye were in pryson, Charles aunswered, it is merye to turne the penye, and after supper Charles trussed persell of his goodes, and with helpe of Julyan bare them into Master Porters howse to kepe, and that done Charles sayde to Julian. Julian, yf thou wilt be sworne to kepe my counsayll J wyl shewe the my mynde. Julian aunswered ye, yf it be neyther felonie or treason: than Charles toke a boke oute of his purse, and Julian sware to hym therupon, than sayde Charles to Julian, J haue disxx stroyed Rychard Hun. Alas Master sayde Julian, howe, he was called an honest man: Charles aunswered, J put a wyre in his nose, Alas sayde Julyan nowe be ye cast awaye and vndone, than sayde Charles Julyan J truste in the that thou wylt kepe my counsayll, and Julyan aunswerd, ye but for Godes sake master shifte for your selfe, and than Charles sayde J had leuer than a hūdred pound yt were not done, but that is done can not be vndone. Moreouer Charles sayde than to Julyan, vpon Sondaye whan J rode to my cousyn Baryngtons house, J taryed there and made good chere all daye tyll yt was nyght, and yet before it was mydnyghte J was in London, and had kylled Hun, and xx vpon the next day J rode thether agayn & was there at dyner, and sent for neyghbours and made good chere. Than Julian asked Charles, where set you your horse that nyght you came to towne, and wherfore came ye not home, Charles aunswered, J came not home for feare of bewrayinge, and than Julian asked Charles, who was wyth you at the kyllynge of Hun, Charles aunswered, J wyll not tell the: and Julyan sayth that vpon the Thursdaye folowynge Charles taryed all daye in his house with great fere, and vpon Frydaye folowyng erly in the morynge before daye, Charles went forth (as he sayde) he wente to Poules, and at his commyng in agayne he was in great fere sayenge Hastexl ly, get me my horse and with great feare and hast made hym redye to ryde, and bad Maister Porters lad lede his horse into the felde by the backsyde, and than Charles put into hys slewe hys mase or masor wyth other plate, and borowed of Masteres Porter bothe golde and syluer, but howe muche J am not sure, and Charles wente into the felde after hys horse, and Julyan brought hys booget after hym. Also vpon Fryday in Chrystmas weke folowyng, Charles came home late in the night and brought with him .iii. bakers and a Smyth of Stratforde, and the same nyght they caried out of Charles house all his goodes by the feld syde to the Bell at Shordyche, and erly in the mornynge conueyed yt with cartes to Stratford.

Moreouer Julyan sayth that the Saturdaye at nyght before the death of Hun, Charles came home and broughte with him a Gurnard, sayenge, yt was for Hun, and Charles boye telled to Julian, that there was also ordeyned a pece of freshe Salmon, whiche Jhon Belrynger had.

Also Charles sayde to the sayde Julyan, were not this vngratious trouble, I coulde brynge my Lorde of London to the dores of heretyques in London bothe of men and women that ben worthe a thowsand pound: But I am aferd that the vngracions myd wyfe shall bewraye vs all.

Also Charles sayde vnto maistres Porter in lykewyse a more larger sateng of the best in London, where to maistres porter answered, the best in London is my lord Mayer, than Charles sayde, I wil not skuse him quyte for he taketh this matter whote.

Where as Charles Joseph saieth he laye at necke hill with a harlott a mans wyfe in Baringtons house the same nyght, and there abode vntyll the morowe at .xi. of the clocke that Richarde Hun was murthered whereupon he brought before the kynges counsayll for his purgacion the forsayde baude Baryngtons wyfe, and also the foresayde harlott, whiche purgacion we haue proued al vntrewe as right largely may appere as well by the deposicion of Julian Littell, as of Thomas Chytcheley Taylor and of Jhon Symons Stacioner, with other, as of Robert Jhonson and Peter Turner.

The deposycion of Thomas Chitcheley Taylor.

The sayd Thomas saieth, the same Monday that Richard Hun was foũd dead, within a quartar of an howr after .vii. a clock in ỹ morning. he met with Charles Joseph cõming out of Pouls at the nether north doze, goyng toward Pater noster row, sayẽg good morow master Charles, & the sayd Charles answered good morow & turned hys back whan he was without the churche doze, and loked vpon the saide Chytchelay.

The deposicion of Thomas Symondes Stacioner.

He sayeth, the same mornyng that Hun was founde deed, ỹ with in a quater of an howr after .vii. a clock in the mornynge, Charles Joseph came before him at his stal & sayd good morow goshyp Symons, & the same Symons sayd good morow to him agayne, & the wyfe of the same Symons was by him, & because of the dedly cõtenaunce & hasty goyng of Charles, the sayd Thomas bad his wife loke whither Charles gothe, and as she coulde perceyue, Charles went into an ale howse standing in

The depoſicion of Roberte Ihonſon and his vvife dvvellyng at the bell in Shorditche, vvhere Charles Ioſeph ſett his horſe that nyghte that he came to toune to murther Richard Hun.

Theſayde Robert ſayeth that Charles Joſeph ſent hys hozſe to hys houſe vpon a holydaye at nyght about.iii.wekes befoze Chriſtmas by a boy, which hozſe was albe ſwet, and albe myzed: and theſaid boye ſayd x let my fathers hozſe ſtād ſadelled, foz I can not tel whether emy father wyll ryde agayne to nyghte oz not, and theſayde hozſe ſtode ſadelled all nyght and in the mozynynge folowynge Charles came boted and ſpurted aboute.viii.of the clocke, and aſked yf hys hozſe was ſadelled and the ſeruaunt aunſwered: ye, and theſayde Charles lepte vpon his hozſe and prayed the hoſte to let hym out of his backe gate that he myght ryde out by the feld ſyde, whyche hoſt ſo dyd. And becauſe he was vncertayne of the daye, we aſked hym yf he hard ſpeke of the death of Hun at that tyme oz not, and he aunſwered nay: but ſhoztly after he did. Neuertheleſſe Peter Turner Charles ſonne in law which brought the hozſe by xx nyght into the Bell Robert Jhonſons houſe, confeſſed it was the ſame night befoze that Hun was founde dead in the mozning. Mozeouer the Frydaye befoze Huns deth Peter Turner ſayde to an honeſt woman a waxe chaundelers wyfe dwelling befoze ſainct Maries ſpitel gate, that befoze this day ſeuen night Hun ſhould haue a miſcheuouſe death. And theſame daye at after none this Hun was founde dead, theſayde Peter came to theſame wyfe and tolde her that Hun was hanged, ſayenge what told I you.

Alſo Jaimes the Chaūcellers cooke, the Fryday befoze Huns death, ſayde to.v.honeſt men, that Hun ſhoulde dye oz Chriſtmas, oz els he xxx woulde dye foz hym, and on the Mondaye that Hun was founde dead theſayde Jaimes came to theſame men: and ſayde, what tolde I you, is he not now hanged.

And we of thynqueſt aſked both of Peter Turner & of Jaimes cooke wher they had knowlege that Hun ſhould ſo ſhoztely dye, and thei ſayd in maſter Chauncellers place by euery man.

The depoſicion of Ihon Spaldyng Belrynger.

Fyrſte theſayde deponent ſayeth, that on Saturdaye the ſeconde daye of December. Anno. M. D. xiiii. he toke the charge of the pryxl ſon at foure of the clocke at after none, by the commaundemente of maſter Chaunceller, and ſo toke the keyes, wherupō he gaue commaundemēt to the deponēt, that he ſhould let no maner of perſon ſpeke with the pryſoner excepte he had knowlege of them, and ſo at.v.of the clocke the ſame daye theſayde deponent wēte to the pryſoner hym ſelfe alone, and ſawe hym and cheryſhed hym where he gaue theſayde deponente a pece of freſh of fresh Salmon for his wyfe. And after that thesayde deponent sayeth that he went to master commissaries to supper with his felowe, where he remembred that he had left his knyfe with thesayde prysoner, wherupō by the counsayll of master Commissary he went to the prysoner and fe= ched his knyfe, where he founde the prisoner sayeng of his beades, and so thesayde deponent requyred his knyfe of thesayde prisoner, and the= saide prisoner delyuered the knyfe to thesayd deponent gladly, and so de parted for that nyght.

And after that on the Sonday next folowyng thesaid deponent came to the prisoner at. ix. of the clock, and asked him what mete he would ha= x ue to his diner and he aunswered but a morsell, and so thesaide deponēt departed and went to the Chauncellor into the quere, & he commaūded, that he should take the penitensary vp to the prisoner with him to make hym holy water and holy bred, and made thesaide deponent to departe the prison house for a whyle, and after that he brought hym his dyner, & locked Charles boye with hym all dyner whyle, vnto the hower of. i. of the clocke, and so let the lad out agayne and asked hym what he would haue to his supper, and he answered that he had meate ynough, and so departed vntyll. vi. of the clocke, and than thesaide deponente brought hym a quarte of ale, and at that tyme one Wylliam Sampson went xx with thesayde deponent to see the prysoner where he was, and sawe him and spake together, and so from the hower of. vi. a foresayde vnto twelfe a clocke on the morow thesayde deponent came not there, and whan he came there he met the Chauncellor with other doctoures goynge to se the prisoner where he hanged.

He sayeth the Sondaye next before that one Buttons wyfe gaue knowledge to thesaide deponente that his father shoulde bee arested by dyuerse sergeantes assone as he coulde be taken, and thereupon thesayd deponente gaue knowlege to thesayde father in lawe at the blacke Fri= ers at the water syde. Wherupon he auoyded, and thesame nyghte may= ster chauncellor gaue the keyes to Jhon Belringer, and gaue him char= ge of the prisoner and on thesayde Sondaye thesayde deponente wyth Jhon Belrynger serued thesayde prisoner of his diner at. xii. of ỳ clocke xl and than Jhon Belrynger sayde to the deponēt, that he would not come to him vnto the morowe for my lord had cōmaunded him that the pryso= ner should haue but one meales mete of the daye. Notwithstādyng that thesayde Jhon Belrynger after that he had shut Poules church dores, went to the foresaide prisoner, with another with him at. vii. of the clock at nyght thesayde Sondaye.

And

And the sayde deponent sayeth, that he came on the Monday at the hower of eyghte of the clocke in the mozenynge to seke Jhon Bel-rynger, and coulde not fynde hym, and taryed vntyll the hye Masse of Poules was done, and yet he coulde not fynde Jhon Belrynger, and than Jhon Belryngers felowe, one Wyllyam, delyuered the keyes to thesayde deponent, and so thesaid deponent with two officers of my lozdes beyng somners went to serue thesayd pzisoner, and whan they came the pzisoner (thei saide) was hanged, his face to the wal warde, and vpõ that thesayde deponent immediatly gaue knowelege to the chauncelle, x wherupon the thaunceller went vp with the master of the rolles, and master Subdeane with other doctoures vnknowen, to the nomber of a dosen and their seruauntes.

The deposicion of Ihon Enderby Barber.

The sayde Jhon Enderby sayth, the Frydaye befoze the death of Ri-

The deposicion of Alen Cresvvell vVax Chaundeler.

xxx Thesayde Alen sayth, that Jhon Grandger seruaunte with my lozde was seryng of Huns cokken, that Grãdget tolde to him that he was pze-sent with Jhon Belrynger thesame Sonday at night that Richard was founde ded of the mozowe whan his kepers set hym in the stockes, in so muche thesayde Hun desyzed to bozow the kepers knyfe, and the keper asked him what he would do with his knyfe, and answered, I had leuer kyll my self than to be thus entreted. This depositiõ thesayde Alen will

The deposicion of Richard Horsnayle Bailyfe of the sanctuary

Thesayd Richard saith, ỹ Fryday befoze Chzistmas date last past, ỹ one Charles Joseph, somner to my lozd of Londõ, became a sanctuary man,and theafore sayde Frydaye he regestred his name,the saide Charles sayenge yt was for the sauegarde of his body. for there be certayne men in London so extreme agaynst hym for the deathe of Richard Hun, that he dare not abyde in London: Howbeit the sayde Charles saithe, he knowlegeth hym selfe gyltles of Huns death,for he deliuered the keyes to the Chauncellor by Huns life,also the saide Bialife sayth,that Charles payd the deuty of thesayde regestryng, both to him and syr Jhon Studely Vicar.

The copye of my lorde of Londons Letter sent to my lorde Cardinall.

Thomas Barnewell, crouner of the citie of London.

This Chrystmas on Newyeres night, the kyng, the duke of Suffolke and twoo other in mantels of clothe of syluer, and lyned with blew Uelues, the syluer was pounsed in letters, so that ỹ Uelues might be sene thrzough, the mantels had great capes like to the Portingall hoppys, and all their hosen, doublettes and cotes were of thesame fasshion cut and of thesame stuffe, with them were foure ladies in gounes, after the fasshion of Sauoy, of blew Uelues, lyned with clothe, the Uelues all to cutt, and mantels lyke tippettes knytte together all of syluer and on their heddes bonettes of burned golde, the foure torche bearers were in Satyn white and blew. This straunge apparell pleased muche euery persone, and in especiall the Quene, and thus these foure lordes and foure ladies came into the Quenes chambet with greate lyght of torches, and daunsed a great season, and then put of their visers, and then they were wel knowē, and the Quene hartely thanked the kynges grace for her goodly pastyme, and kyssed hym.

Lykewyse on the twelue night, the kyng and the Quene came into the hall of Grenewyche, and sodaynly entered a tent of clothe of golde and before the tent stode foure men of armes, armed at all poynctes and swerdes in their handes, and sodaynly with noys of trompettes entered foure other persons all armed, and ran to the other foure, and there was a great and a fearce fight, and sodainly came out of a place lyke a wood eight wyldemen, all appareiled in grene mosse, made with slyued sylke, with Uggly weapons and terrible vysages, and there foughte with the knyghtes eight to eight, and after long fyghtyng. the armed knyghtes xxr drawe the wylde men out of their places, and folowed the chace out of the hall, and when they were departed, the tent opened, and there came out syx lordes and syx ladyes rychely appareyled, and daunsed a greate tyme: when they had daunsed their pleasure, they entered the tent agayn and so was conueyed out of the hall, and then the kynge and the Quene were serued with a right sumpteous banquet.

The third day of Februarie, the kyng made a solempne Justes, and he and the Marques Dorset would aunswere all commers, their apparell and bardes were of blew Uelues, and clothe of syluer, all to cutte in suttell knotes, rychely enbroudered, all the seruitours in white & blewe xl sylke. The counterparte, whiche were. xuii. in number, rychely appareyled in Uelues clothe of golde, & brouderte, euery man after his awne deuice. The kyng was that daye hyghly to be praysed, for he brake. xriii. speres besyde attayntes, and bare doune to ground a man of armes and hys horse: the lorde Marques and all other dyd valiauntly, and hadde

muche prayse, for euery man did passyng well, whiche is seldome sene in suche a case, but the kyng for a suertie exceded all other.

The.iiij.day of October, the kyng remoued to Lambeth, and on the morowe began the hygh courte of Parliament, syr Thomas Nuel was then speaker, in this parliament was diuerse actes made, but in especial two, whiche were muche spoken of, the one was the acte of apparail, and the other the acte of labourers, of these twoo actes was muche commoning and much busynes arose, for the labourers would in nowise labour by the daye, but all in talke and in greate, and therefore muche trouble fell in the cõtrey, and in especiall in Haruest tyme, for then husbandmen coulde scace get workemen to helpe in their Haruest. This Parliament contynued tyll Easter, in the whiche diuerse subsidies were graunted to the kyng toward his great costes and charges, that he had bene at in his vyage Royall in Fraunce, and after Easter the nyne and twenty daye of the moneth of Apryl, the kyng deliting to set forth young gentelmen, called Nicholas Carew, and Fraunces Bryan, and cauled diuerse other young Gentelmen, to be on the counter parte, and lent to them horse and harneys to encourage all youthe to seke dedes of armes. This yere died at Rome by poyson as was reported the Archebyshop of Yorke a Cardinall, called doctor Benbricke, whiche was the kynges Ambassadour there: this was a wise man and of a holy courage. The kyng then gaue thesaied Archebishoprike to Thomas Wolsey, then bishop of Lyncoln, whiche at that tyme bare all the rule aboute the kyng, and what he saied was obeied in all places. And when he was once Archebishop he studied day and nyght how to be a Cardinall, and cauled the kyng and the Frẽche kyng to write to Rome for hym, and at their requestes he obteyned his purpose as you shall here afterwarde.

Cardinal Bẽbrick poysoned at Rome

At this tyme was muche cõmoning, & verely as it appered it was entended, that the kyng in person would passe the sea to Caleys, and there on the marches of thesame, the Frenche king and Quene to come & se the kyng their brother, & for thesame iorney many costly workes were wrought, and much riche apparell prouided for, and much preparation made against the next spryng: but death, whiche is the last ende of all thynges let this iorney, for before the next spring the Frenche kyng dyed at the citie of Paris, the first daye of January, when he had bene maried. lxxxij. dayes. And when the kyng was aduertised of the death of the Frenche kyng, he cauled a solempne obsequie to be song for hym in the cathedral church of. s. Paule with a costly herse, & many noble men being present.

And after he sent a letter to comforte the Quene his sister, requyryng to knowe her pleasure whither she would continue styl in Fraunce or returne into Englande againe. And when he was aduertysed of her purpose, which was to returne into England. He sent the duke of Suffolke, syr Richard Wyngfeld, and doctor West with a goodly bande of yomẽ all in blacke to Parys, whiche were well receiued of the newe Frenche kyng Fraũces the first of the name, and declared to hym, that according to the couenauntes made at the tyme of the mariage betwene kyng Loyes & the ladie Marie, sister to the kyng of England, thei demaunded to haue thesayde quene deliuered to thé with her dower, & shewed their cōmission for the receite of her. Then the coūsaill of Fraunce, accordinge to the apointmentes assigned her a dower, & the Duke of Suffolke put in officers, then she was by endenture deliuered to the duke, whiche behaued hym selfe so to her, that he obteined her good will to be her husband, and therupon he wrote to the kyng her brother, mekely beseechyng hym of pardon of his request & humbly requiring him of his wil and consent, at whiche thinge the kyng a while staied, & at the last by the meane of the Frenche quene her selfe, and other great frendes on the dukes parte: After long suite it was agreed that the duke of Suffolke should bring her into England vnmaried, & at his retorne to mary her in England: but for doubte of chaunge he maried her secretely in Parys as was sayde.

¶ The seuenth yere.

After that the duke of Suffolke had receaued the Frenche quene with her dower apointed, and all her apparell, iuels and husholde stuffe deliuered, he with the quene toke their leaue of the Frenche kyng, leauing doctor West, nominate byshop of Ely, for the conclusion of the newe league to bee made betwene the kyng of England, and the newe Frenche kyng called Fraunces the first, and so passed thorough Fraunce to Caleis, where she was honourably enterteined. And after with greate honoure maried to lorde Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolke openly: howbeit, some saied he was maried priuely before at Parys, in ỹ house of Cluigny. Against this mariage many men grudged & saied that it was a great losse to the realme that she was not maried to the prince of Castell: But the wysest sorte was content, considering that if she had bene maried again out of the realme, she should haue caried much riches with her, & now she brought euery yere into the realme. ix. or. x. M. markes: but whatsoeuer the rude people said, the duke behaued hym selfe, so that he had bothe the fa-uour of the kyng and of the people, his witte and demeanour was such.

The kyng & the quene accompanied with many lordes & ladies roade to the high grounde of shoters hil to take the open ayre, and as they passed by the way, they espied a company of tall yomen, clothed all in grene with grene whodes & bowes & arrowes, to the nūber of. ii. C. Then one of them, whiche called hym selfe Robyn hood, came to the kyng, desyrynge hym to se his men shote, & the kyng was content. Then he whisteled, & all the. ii. C. archers shot & losed at once, & then he whisteled again, and they likewyse shot agayne, their arrowes whisteled by crafte of the head, so that the noyes was straunge and great, and muche pleased the kyng the quene and all the company. All these archers were of the kynges garde and had thus appareled them selues to make solace to the kynge.
Then Robyn hood desyred the kyng and Quene to come into the grene & malynge.

wood

wood, and to se how the outlawes lyue . The kyng demaunded of the quene and her ladyes , if they durst aduenture to go into the wood with so many outlawes. Then the quene said, that if it pleased hym, she was content, then the hoznes blewe tyll they came to the wood vnder shoters hill, and there was an Arber made of bowes with a hal, and a great chā-ber and an inner chamber very well made and couered with floures and swete herbes, whiche the kyng muche prayised . Then said Robyn hood, Sir, outlawes brekefastes is venyson, and therefore you must be contēt with such fare as we vse. Then the kyng and quene sate doune, and were x serued with venyson and vyne by Robyn hood & his men, to their great contentacion . Then the kyng departed and his company, and Robyn hood and his men them conducted, and as they were returnyng, there met with them two ladyes in a ryche chariot drawen with. v. horses and euery horse had his name on his head, and on euery horse sat a lady with her name writen. On the first courser called Cawde, sate humidite, or humide. On the ii courser called Memeon, roade lady vert . On the. iii. called pheton, sate lady vegetaue. On the. iiii. called Rimphon, sate lady pleasaūce. On the. v. called lampace, sate swete odour, and in the Chayze sate the lady May, accompanied with lady Flora, richely appareled, and xx they saluted the kyng with diuerse goodl songes, and so brought hym to Grenewyche. At this Mayng was a greate number of people to beholde to their great solace and confort.

Thesame after none, the kyng, the duke of Suffolke, the Marques dorset, and the erle of Essex, their bardes and bases of grene veluet & clothe of golde, came into the fielde on great coursers, on whom wayted diuerse gentelmen in silke of thesame colour. On the other side entred. xvi. lordes and gentelmen, all appareiled richely after their deuises , and so valiauntly they ranne their courses appointed : and after that they ran volant one as fast as he might ouertake another, whiche was a goodly xxx sight to se: & when al was done they departed, & wēt to a goodly bāquet.

This Sommer the kyng toke his progresse Westward, & visited his tounes & castels there, & hard the complaintes of his poze comminaltie, and euer as he roade, he hūted & liberally departed with venyson: and in the middes of Septēber he came to his maner of Oking, & thether came to hym the Archebyshop of Yorke, whom he hartely welcōmed & shewed hym great pleasures: And while he sotourned there, a letter was brought to the Archbyshop frō Rome, certefiyng him howe he was elected to be a Cardinall, whiche incōtinent shewed thesame to the kyng, disabling him self in wordes, though his entent was otherwise, & so the kyng did encou-xl rage him, & willed him to take the order on him, & so called him my lorde Cardinall, but his hat, bul nor other ceremonies were not yet come.

In the moneth of Nouembet, the kyng assembled his hygh courte of Parliamēt at Westmynster, and diuerse actes made in the Parliament the. vi. yere, amended and altered, & especially the acte of apparell, and the acte of labouters, as by the booke of statutes more playnly apereth.

And at the ende of this Parliament, the Archebyshop of Cauntourbury perceauing that the Archebyshop of Yozke medled moze in his office of Chauncelourship then it became hym to suffer, except he would auẽture the kynges displeasure, and seing also that thesaid byshop of Yozke coucted to beare all the rule, and to haue all the whole auctho̓itie, consideryng also his awne great age, gaue vp into the kynges handes his rowme of Chauncelour, and deliuered to the kyng the great Seale, whiche deliuered thesame to the Archebyshop of Yozke, and made hym Chauncelour. And assone as he was Chauncelour, he directed commissions into all Shires, foz to put the statute of apparell and the statute of labourers in execucion. And he hym selfe one daye called a gentelman named Symon fyz Richard, and toke from hym an olde Jacket of Crymosyn veluet and diuerse bzoches, whiche extreme doinge caused hym greatly to be hated, and by his exsample many cruell officers foz malice, cuell intreated dyuerse of the kynges subiectes, in so muche that one Shynnyng Mayze of Rochester, set a young man on the Pillozy foz weryng of a tyuen shert. x

The Cardinals hat receaued.

In the ende of this moneth was sent into Englande the Cardinalles hat, and receaued by gentelmen of Kent, and bzought to London with suche triumphe as though the greatest pzince of Chzistendome had bene come into ỹ realme. And on a Sonday at. s. Peters church at Westminster he receaued the habite, hat, and piller, & other vayngloztious tryfles, appertaignyng to the ozder of a Cardinal. And when he was once a perfite Cardinall, he loked then aboue all estates, so that all men almost hated hym, and disdayned hym. xx

Then after the Parliamẽt sir Edward pouninges laboured to be discharged of the keping of the citie of Tozney, foz there he was euer sickly, and so he was discharged, & sir Williã blunt lozd Mountioye was sent thether. And foz Marshal there was apointed sir Sampson Nozto̓. And when the lozd Mountioye was come thether, and sir Sampson Nozto̓, xxi there happened such a tyot that the citie was in great ieopardy, the very cause was vnknowen, but all the souldioure, except such as were of the kynges garde rebelled, & put the lozd Moũtioye in ieopardy of his lyfe. And in conclusion to appease the people, sir Sãpson Nozto̓ was banisshed the toune foz euer. And after the citie was appeased, & euery thyng thought to be fozgotte̓, diuerse were executed, & diuerse banished ỹ toune and some fled and were banyshed both England and the toune.

After the Parliamẽt was ended, the king kept a solempne Chzistmas at his maner of Elthã, & on the. xii. night in the hall was made a goodly castel, wõderously set out, & in it certeyn ladies & knightes, and when the xl kyng & quene were set, in came other knightes, & assailed the castel where many a good strype was geuen, & at the last, the assaylantes were beaten awaye. And then issued out knightes and ladies out of the castel, whiche ladyes were ryche & straungely disguysed, foz all their apparell was in bzaydes of Gold, fret with mouing spangels, syluer and gilt, set on Crymosyn mosyn satyn lose and not fastened: the mens apparell of thesame suyte made like Julis of Hungary, and the ladyes heddes & bodies were after the fassion of Amsterdam, and when the daunsyng was done, the banquet was serued in of. ii. C. dyshes, with great plenty to euery body.

This yere was the new league betwene the kyng & the Frenche kyng openly proclaymed thorough the citie of London with a trompet. This yere also, Margaret quene of the Scottes, wife to James the. iiii. slayn at Bramston the. v. yere of the kyng, & elder syster to the kyng, after the death of her late husbande maried Archiball Douglas erle of Angus, without the kyng her brothers assent, or the counsail of Scotlãd, for the whiche he was not well content. But after that, there fell such a strife betwene the lordes of Scotland, that she & her husband like banished persones came into England, & wrote to the kyng for mercy & comfort. The kyng euer enclyned to mercy, sent them apparell, vessell and all thynges necessary, willyng them to lye still in Northumberland, till they knewe farther of his pleasure: And so they laye still at Harbotell, and the quene was there deliuered of a faire lady called Margaret, and all the countrey were commaunded by the kyng to do them pleasure.

This yere the. xviii. of Februarye, at Grenewiche was borne a faire prynces and christened with great solempnitie, and named Mary.

This yere died the kyng of Arragon father to the quene, for whome was kept a solempne obsequy in the Cathedrall churche of Paules.

¶ The eight yere.

YE haue harde the last yere how the quene of Scottes with her husband was come for succour into England, and laye at Harbottell in Northumberland, tyl the kynges pleasure was to send for them. So he, lyke a natural brother sent for her and her husband to come to hys courte for their solace. For the whiche kyndnes the erle Humbly thanked the kyng, & promised to geue his attendaũce on the quene his wife to the court: wherupon the kyng sent William blacknal esquier, clerke of his Spycery with syluer vessell, plate and other thynges necessary for the conueyaunce of her, and sent to her all maner of officers for her estate conuenient. And when she was ready to departe, she asked for her husbande, but he was departed into Scotland, & left her alone, nothing remembring his promes, which sodeyn departyng muche made her to muse: Howbeit, the lordes of Englande greatly encouraged her to kepe her promyse with the kynge her brother: and so after she was somewhat appeased, she set forward, and in euery toune she was well receaued, & so on the. iii. day of May she made her entry into Londõ, riding on a white palfrey (which the quene of Englãd had sent to her) behind sir Thomas par richely besene, & with great company of lordes & ladies, she roade thorough the citie to Baynardes castel, & from thence she was conueighed to Grenewiche, & there receiued ioyously of the kyng, the quene, the Frenche quene her syster, and highly was she feasted. And when the kyng heard that the Erle of Angus her husbande was departed, he saied, it was done like a Scot. This Quene sometyme was at the courte, and sometyme at Baynardes castell, and so she continued in Englande all this yere.

The kyng for the honoure of hys syster, the. xix. and. xx. day of Maye prepared. ii. solempne dates of Justes, and the kyng him selfe, & the duke of Suffolke, the erle of Essex, & Nicholas Carew esquyer, toke on them to aunswere al commers. The apparel of them & their horses was blacke veluet, covered al over with braunches of hony suckels of fine flat gold of damaske, of lose worke, every lefe of the braunche moving, the em= x broudery was very connyng and sumptcous. On the kyng was attending in one suyte on horsebacke, the lorde Marques dorset, the erle of Surrey, the lord Burgainy, the lord Hastinges, sir Jhon pechy, the lord Ferreys, sir William Fitzwilliam, & .xii. other knightes, all these were in frockes of blewe veluet, garded with ryche clothe of golde, & their horse trappers of blew veluet, frynged with golde: And on foote were. xl. persons all in blew satyn, garded with clothe of golde. And so they entered the fielde with trompettes, dronslades and other mynstrelsey.

Then in came the counterpart, richely appareled, to the number of. xii and on that daye every man did well, but the kyng did best, and so was x adiudged, and so at night they ceassed, and came to supper.

The kyng, the next day & his company were appareiled horse and al in purple veluet, set ful of leaues of clothe of gold, engrailed with fyne flat golde of dāmaske, embroudered like to Role leues, & every lefe fastened to other with pointes of dammaske golde, & on al their borders were letters of gold, bullion. And on the kyng wayted. v. lordes. xiiii. knightes in frockes of yelow veluet, garded and bound with riche clothe of gold, & xxx. gentelmen were in like apparell on fote, & .xl. officers in yelow satyn edged with clothe of gold: thus with great triumphe thei entred ỹ fielde. Then the cuntrepartie entred, al clothed & barded in white satyn, trauer= xx sed with clothe of golde richely. This day was many a great stripe geuē. The kyng and sir William kyngston ranne together, whiche sir Williā was a strong & a tall knight, & yet the kyng by strength ouerthrew hym to the groūd. And after that the kyng & his aides had perfourmed their courses, they ranne volant at al cōmers, whiche was a plesaunt sight to se. And when night approched, they al disarmed thē, & wēt to the quenes chāber, where was a great bāket for ỹ welcome of the quene of Scottes.

This moneth of May were sent out of England. xii. C. masons and Carpenters, & .iii. hundred labourers to the citie of Torney: for the kyng and his counsaill, cōsideryng that the garrison that was kept there, was xl chargeable, and therfore it was determined that there should be builded a Castell to chastice the citie if they rebelled, and to minishe the garrison. And therfore these worckemen were sent thether, whiche this yere began a strong Castell, and wrought still on it.

This yere, by the Cardinall, were all men called to accompt that had the

had the occupying of the kynges money in the warres or els where, not to euery mans contentacion, for some were found in arrerages, and some saued them selfes by policy & byby ozy, and waxed ryche, and some Innocentes were punished. And for a truthe he so punished periury with opē punyshment and open papers weryng, that in his tyme it was lesse used. He punyshed also lordes, knyghtes, and men of all sortes for ryottes, beryng and maintenaunce in their countreis, that the poze men lyued quietly, so that no man durst beare for feare of imprisonemēt: but he him selfe and his seruauntes, whiche were well punished therfore. The poze peox ple perceaued that he punished the ryche, then they complayned without number, and brought many an honest man to trouble and vexacion. And when the Cardinall at the last had perceaued their vntrue surmises and fayned complaintes for the moste parte, he then waxed wery of hearyng their causes, and ordeined by the kynges cōmission, diuerse vnder courtes to here complaintes by bill of poore people. The one was kept in the white hall, the other before the kynges Almoner doctor Stokesley, a mā that had more learnyng then discretiō to be a iudge. The third was kept in the lord treasourers chamber beside the starre chamber, and the.iiii. at the tolles at after none. These courtes were greatly haunted for a ty-xx me, but at the last ỹ people perceaued that much delay was vsed in these courtes, & few matters ended, and when they were ended, they bound no mā by ỹ law, then euery man was wery of thē & resorted to ỹ cōmō law.

In the moneth of october came into Englande Mathew Byshop of Sedonon & Cardinall, called cōmonly the Cardinal of Swyshes, from the Emperour Maximiliā. This Cardinal was a wise mā & of great boldenes, & was wel entreteined in the court & of the kyng. And at his contemplaciō & for old loue, ỹ kyng lent to ỹ Emperour Maximiliā a great summe of money: wherof ỹ cōpany of Friscobalde, & Antony caueler Geneuoy vndertoke therchāge, but they paied not ỹ Emperour at his day, xxx not wtstanding thei had receaued ỹ money of ỹ kyng. This Friscobald & Antony Cauelet by meanes of rewardes, geuē to great lordes of ỹ coū-sail borowed of ỹ king.xxx.M.l. & had lōg daies for the paimēt: but Friscobald was shortely cōsumed, & Anthony Caueler could not be sene, & so the kyng was not payd at his daies, & many English merchauntes were by these men vndone, for they spent liberally of euery mans goodes.

This yere the kyng kept his Christmas at his maner of Grenewiche, & on the.xii, night, according to the old custome, he & the quene came into the hal. & when they were set, & the quene of Scottes also, there entred in to the hall a Gardeyn artificiall, called the Gardeyn of Esperance. This xl Gardeyn was towred at euery corner, and railed with railes gilt, all the bankes were set wt floures artificial of silke & gold, ỹ leues cut of grene sattyn, so ỹ they semed very floures. In the middest of this Gardeyn was a piller of antique worke, al gold set with perle & stone, & on the toppe of the piller, which was.vi. square, was a louer or an arche embowed, crouned with gold: within whiche stode a bushe of Roses red and white, al of sylke and golde, and a bushe of Pomegranates of like stuf. In this gardeyn walked. vi. knightes and. vi. ladyes rychely appareyled, and then they discended and daunsed many goodly daunses, and so ascended the gardeyn agayne, and were conueighed out of the hal, and then the kyng was serued of a great banket. After this Christmas, the kyng exercysed hym selfe muche in hawkyng.

In this season, the Genowayes, Frenchemen and other straungers sayde and boasted them selfes to be in suche fauoure with the kyng and hys counsaill, that they set naughte by the rulers of the citie: And the multitude of straungers was so great about London, that the poze Englishe artificers coulde skace get any liuing: And most of all the straungers were so proude, that they disdained, mocked and oppressed the Englishemen, whiche was the beginning of the grudge. Foz amonge all other thynges, there was a Carpenter in London called Willyamson, whiche bought two stockdoues in Chepe, and as he was about to paye foz them, a Frencheman toke them oute of his hande, and said they were no meate foz a Carpenter: well said the Englysheman I haue bought them and now payed foz them, and therfoze I will haue them, naye saied the Frencheman I wil haue them foz my lozde the Ambassadour, and so foz better oz wozse, the Frencheman called the Englisheman knaue, and went a waye with the stockdoues. The straungers came to the Frenche Ambassadour, and surmysed a complainte againste the pooze carpenter, and the Ambassadour came to my lozde Maire, and said so muche, that the carpenter was sent to prison: and yet not contented with this, so complayned to the kynges counsail, that the kynges commaundement was layde on hym. And when syz Jhon Baker knyght and other wozshipful persones sued to the Ambassadour foz hym, he aunswered, by the body of God that the Englyshe knaue shoulde lose his lyfe, foz he saied no Englysheman shoulde deny that the Frenchemen required, and other aunswere had they none. The pryde of Frenchemen.

Also a Frencheman that had slayne a man, should abiure the realme and had a crosse in his hande, and then sodeynly came a greate sozte of Frenchemē about hym, & one of them said to the Constable that led him, syz is this crosse the price to kyll an Englisheman. The Constable was somwhat astonied and aunswered not. Then said another Frencheman, on that pryce we would be banyshed all by the masse, thys saiyng was noted to be spoken sputefully. Howebeit, the Frenchemen were not all onely oppressozs of the Englysshemen, foz a Lombarde called Fraunces de bard, entised a mannes wyfe in Lombarde strete to come to his chambze with her huldandes plate, whyche thynge she dyd. After when her husbande knewe it, he demaunded his wyfe, but aunswere was made he shoulde not haue her, then he demaunded his plate, and in lyke maner aunswere was made that he shoulde neither haue plate noz wyfe. And when he had sewed an accion against the straunger in the Guylde hall, the straunger so faced the Englisheman, that he faynted in his sute.

And

And then the Lombarde arrested the poore man for his wyfes boorde, while he kept her from her husbande in his chamber. This mocke was muche noted, and for these and many other oppressions done by them, there encreased suche a malice in the Englisshe mennes hartes, that at the last it brast oute. For amongest other that sore grudged at these matters, there was a broker in London called Jhon Lyncoln, whiche wrote a bill before Easter, desyring doctor Standiche at hys Sermon at saint Marye Spyttell the Mondaye in Ester weke, too moue the Mayre and Aldermen, to take parte with the comminaltie agaynste the straungers: The Doctor aunswered that it became not hym too moue anye suche thinge in a Sermon. From hym he departed, and came to a Chanon in sainct Mary Spittell, a doctor in Deuinitie, called doctor Bele, and lamentably declared to hym, howe miserably the common artificers lyued, and skase coulde get any woorke to fynde them, their wyfes and chyldren, for there were such a number of artificers straungers, that tooke awaye all the lyuynge in maner. And also howe the Englysshe marchauntes could haue no vtteraunce, for the marchaunt straungers bryng in all Silkes, clothes of Golde, Wyne, Oyle, Iron, and suche other marchaundyse, that no man almoste byeth of an Englysshman.
And also outwarde, they carye so muche Englysshe Wolle, Tynne, and Leade, that Englysshmen that auenture outwarde can haue no lyuyng: Whiche thynges saied Lyncoln hathe bene shewed to the counsaill, and cannot be heard. And farther sayed he, the straungers compasse the cytie rounde aboute, in Southwarke, in Westminster, Temple barre, Holborne, Sayncte Martynes, Sayncte Jhons strete, Algate, Towre hyll, and Sainct Katherines, and forstall the market, so that no good thynge for them commeth to the market: Whiche is the cause that Englysshe men want and sterue, and they lyue habundauntly in great pleasure. Wherefore sayed Lyncolne master Doctor, syth you were borne in London, and se the oppression of the straungers, and the great misery of your awne natyue countrey, exhorte all the cytezens to ioyne in one against these straungers, raueners and destroyers of your countrey. Master doctor hearynge this, saied he muche lamented the case if it were as Lyncolne hadde declared, yes sayde Lyncolne, that it is and muche more, for the Duchemen bryng ouer Iron, Tymber, lether and Weynskot ready wrought, as Nayles, Lockes, Baskettes, Cubbordes, Stooles, Tables, Chestes, girdels, with pointes, sadelles and painted clothes so that if it were wrought here, Englishemen might haue some worke & lyuynge by it. And beside this, they growe into suche a multitude that it is to be looked vpon, for I sawe on a Sondaye this Lent. vi. C. straungers shotyng at the Poppyngaye with Crosbowes, and they kepe suche assemblies and fraternities together, & make suche a gathering to their cõmon boxe, that euery botcher wil holde plee with the citie of Lõdõ: wel sayd the doctor, I will do for a reformacion of this matter asmuche as a priest may do, and so receaued Lincolnes bill & studied for his purpose.

Then

Then Lyncoln very ioyous of hys enterpryce went from man to man, saiyng that shortly they shoulde heare newes, and dayly excited younge people and artificers to beare malice to the straungers. When Easter came and doctor Bele shoulde preache the Tuesdaye in Easter weke, he came into the pulpit, and there declared that to hym was brought a pi-tifull byll, and red in this wyse. To all you the worshypfull lordes and masters of the cytie that will take compassion ouer the poore people your neighbours, and also of the greate importable hurtes, losses, and hynderaunces, whereof proceadeth the extreme pouertie too all the kynges subiectes that inhabite within this cytie and suburbes of the same, for x so it is that the alyens and straungers eate the bread from the poore fa-therles chyldren, and take the liuynge from all the artificers, and the entercourse from all merchauntes, wherby pouertie is so muche encrea-sed that euery man bewaileth the misery of other, for craftes men be brought to beggery and merchauntes to nedynes: Wherefore the premisses considered, the redresse muste be of the commons, knyt and vnite to one parte, and as the hurt and dammage greueth all men, so muste all men set to their willyng power for remedy, and not to suffre thesayed alyens so highly in their wealth, and the naturall borne men of his region too come to confusion. Of this letter was more, but the doctor red no far- xx ther, and then he began Cœlum cœli domino, terram autem dedit filijs hominum, and vpon this text he intreated, that this lande was geuen too Englishemen, and as byrdes woulde defende their nest, so oughte En-glishemen to cherysshe and defende them selfes, and to hurte and greue aliens for the common weale. And vpon this text pugna pro patria, he brought in, howe by Goddes lawe it was lawfull to fyght for their coutrey, and euer he subtellie moued the people to rebelle against the strau-gers, and breake the kynges peace, nothynge regardynge the league betwene prynces and the kynges honoure. Of thys Sermon many a light person tooke courage, and openly spake agaynste straungers. xx And as the deuell woulde, the Sunday after at Grenewyche in the kynges gallery was Fraunces de Bard, whiche as you heard kept an Englishe mans wife and his goodes, and yet he could haue no remedy, and with hym were Domyngo, Anthony Caueler, and many mo straungers, and there they talkynge with syr Thomas Palmer knyght, Jested and laughed howe that Fraunces kepte the Englishemans wyfe, saiyng that if they had the Mayres wyfe of London, they would kepe her: syr Thomas sayed, Sirs you haue to muche fauour in England. There were diuerse Englishe merchauntes by, and heard them laugh and were not content, in so muche as one William bolt a Mercer sayed, wel you who- xl reson Lombardes, you reioyse and laugh, by the masse we will one daye haue a daye at you, come when it wyll, and that saiynge the other merchauntes affirmed. This tale was reported aboute London, and the younge and euell disposed people sayed, they woulde be reuenged on the merchaunte straungers, alwell as on the artificers straungers.

On

On Monday the morow after, the kyng remoued to hys manor of Rychemonde.

The.ix.yere.

Upon this rumour the.xxviii.daye of Apryll, diuerse yõge men of the citie assauted the Alyens as they passed by the stretes, and some were strikẽ, & some buffeted, & some throwen in the canel. Wherfore the Mayre sent diuerse persõs to ward, as Stephyn Studley skynner, and Bettes and Stephenson & diuerse other, some to one coũter, & some to another, and x some to Newgate. Then sodeynly was a cõmen secret rumour, & no mã could tell how it began, that on May daye next, the citie would rebell & slaye all Aliens, in so muche as diuerse straungers fled oute of the citie. This brute ranne so farre that it came to the kinges counsail, insomuch as the Cardinall beyng lord Chaũcelour, sent for Jhon Rest Mayre of the citie, and other of the counsayl of the citie, & demaũded of the Mayre in what case the citie stode, to whome he aunswered that it was wel & in good quyet: Nay sayd the Cardinall, it is informed vs that your yõg and ryotous people wyll ryse & distresse the straungiers, heare ye of no such thyng? No surely sayd the Mayre, & I trust so to gouerne thẽ that xx the kynges peace shalbe obserued, & that I dare vndertake yf I & my brethren the Aldermẽ may be suffered. Wel said the Cardinal, go home & wisely forsee this matter, for & yf any suche thyng be, you may shortly preuent it. The Mayre came from the Cardinals at.iii. of the clocke at after none on May euen, & demaunded of the officers what they harde, diuerse of thẽ aunswered that the voyce of the people was so, & had ben so.ii. or.iii. dayes before. This heryng the Mayre sent for al his brethrẽ to the Guylde hall in great hast, & almost.vii. of the clocke or the assemble was set. Thẽ was declared to thẽ by Master broke the recorder how that the kynges coũsail had reported to thẽ that ỹ cõminaltie that night xxx would rise, & distresse al the Aliẽs & straũgers that inhabited in the citie of Lõdon: the Aldermẽ aũswered they harde say so, but they mistrusted not the matter, but yet they sayd that it was wel done to forsee it. Then sayd the recorder, it were best that a substãcial watche were set of honest persons, housholders, whiche might withstand the euell doers. An Alderman sayde, that it was euell to rayse men in harneys, for if suche a thinge were entended, they coulde not tel who woulde take their parte. Another Alderman sayd, that it were best to kepe the younge men asonder, and euery man to shut in hys doores, and to kepe hys seruauntes xl within. Then with these opinõs was the Recorder sent to the Cardinal before.viii. of the clocke, and then he with suche as were of the kynges counsayll at his place, commaunded that in no wyse watche shoulde be kept, but that euery man shoulde repayre to his awne house, and there to kepe hym and hys seruauntes tyl.vii. of the clocke of the morynyng: with whiche commaundement, thesayde Rychard broke sergeaunt at the lawe and recorder, and syr Thomas Moore, late vndersheryfe of Lõ-don, & then of the kynges coũsaill, came to the Guylde hall halfe houre and before.ix.of the clocke, and there shewed the commaundemẽt, of the kynges counsayl. Then in all hast, euery Aldermen sent to his warde Ao. 1517 mayday that no man should stirre after.ix.of the clocke out of his house, but to kepe his doores shut, and hys seruauntes within tyll.viii.of the clocke in the morrynge. After this commaundement, syr Jhon Mondy Alderman came from his warde, and founde two young men in Chepe play-nge at Buckerels, and a great company of young men lokynge on thẽ for the commaundement was then skace knowen, for then it was but.ix. x of the clocke. Master Mondy seyng that, bade them leaue, and the one younge man asked hym why: and then he sayd thou shalt know, & toke hym by the arme to haue had him to the counter. Then all the yoũg mẽ resisted the Alderman, & toke him from master Mondy, and cryed pyen-tyses and clubbes. Then out at euery dooze came clubbes and weapõs and the Alderman fled, and was in great daungier. Then moze people arose out of euery quarter, and oute came seruynge men, and water men and Courtiers, and by a.xi.of the clocke there were in Chepe.vi.or.vii. hundreth. And oute of Paules churcheyarde came.iii.hundreth, whiche wist not of the other, and so out of all places they gathered, and brake xx vp the counterpes, and tooke out the prisoners, that the Mayre had the-ther committed for hurtynge of the straungers, and came to Newgate and tooke out Studley and Petyt, committed thether for that cause.

The Mayre and Shrifes were there present, and made Proclamacion in the kynges name, but nothynge was obeyed. Thus they ranne a plump thorow sainct Nycholas Shãbels, & at sayncte Martyns gate, there met with them syr Thomas Moore and other, desyrynge theym to go to their lodgynges: And as they were intreatyng, and had almost brought them to a staye: The people of sayncte Martynes threwe oute stones and battes, and hurte dyuerse honest persones, that were per- xx swadynge the tyotous people to ceasse, and they bade them holde their handes, but still they threwe oute bryckes and hoate water. Then a sergeaunt of Armes called Nycholas dounes, whiche was there with master Moore, entreatynge them, beynge sore hurt, in a fury cryed doune with them. Then all the mistruled persons ranne to the doores and wyndowes of sayncte Martyn, and spoyled all that they founde, and caste it into the strete, and lefte fewe houses vnspoyled. And after that they ranne hedlynge into Cornehill by Leaden hal, to the house of one Mutuas a Frencheman or Pycardy borne, whiche was a greate bearer of Frenchemen, were they pyckpursses, or howe euell disposicion soeuer xl they were of, and within hys gate, called Grenegate, dwelled dyuerse Frenchmen that kalendred Worsted, contrary to the kynges lawes: & al thei were so borne out by thesame Mutuas, ỹ no mã durst medle with them, wherfore he was sore hated, & yf the people had found hym in their

fury,they would haue striken of his head:but when they foūd hym not, the water men,& certeyn young prestes that were there fell to rifynge: some canne to Blāchechapelton, & brake the strūgers houses, & threwe shooes and bootes into the strete: This from.x.or.xi.of the clocke, continued these ryotous people, durynge, whche tyme a knight called syr Thomas parr,in great hast went to the Cardinall & tolde him of thys ryot,which incontinent strengthened his house with men & ordinaunce. And after.this knight roade to the king toRichemōd,& made the report much more then it was:Wherfore the king hastely sent to Lōdō,& was truly aduertised of the matter, & how that the ryot was ceassed, & many of the doers apprehēded.But while this ruffling cōtinued,syr Richard Cholmeley knight, Lieutenaūt of the Towre,no great frende to the citie,in a frantyke fury losed certayn peces of ordinaunce,& shot into the citie,whiche did litle harme, howbeit his good wyl apered.About.iii.of the clocke,these ryotous persons seuered and went to their places of resorte,& by the waye they were takē by the Wayte and the heddes of the citie,and some sent to the Towre,and some to Newgate,and some to the Counters,to the number of.iii.C.some fled,and specially the watermen and prestes,& seruyng men, but the poore prentises were taken. About fyue of the clocke,the erles of Shrewesbury and Surrey, whiche had harde of this ryot,came to London with suche strength as they had, so dyd the Innes of court,and diuerse noble men:but or they came,all the ryot was ceased,and many taken as you haue heard.

Then were the prisoners examined,& the sermon of docter Bele called to remembraunce,and he taken & sent to the Towre, & so was Jhon Lyncoln:but with this ryot the Cardinall was sore displeased. Thē the iii.day of May was an Oyer & determiner at Lōdō before the Wayte, the duke of Norffolke,the erle of Surrey and other. The citie thought that the duke bare them grudge for a lewde priest of his,which the yere before was slayn in Chepe,in so much the duke then in his fury sayd, I pray God I may once haue the citezēs in my daungier: & the duke also thought that they bare him no good wil,wherfore he came into the citie with.xiii.C.men in harneys to kepe the Oyer & determiner. And vpon examinaciō it could neuer be proued of any metyng,gathering,talking or cōuenticle at any daye or tyme before that day,but that the chaūce so happened without any matter prepēsed of any creature sauing Lyncoln & neuer an honest person in maner was taken but onely he. Then Proclamations were made that no womē shoulde come together to bable & talke,but all men should kepe their wyues in their houses. All the stretes that were notable stode ful of harnessed men, which spake many opprious wordes to the citezens, whiche greued them sore: and yf they woulde haue bene reuenged,the other had had the worsse,for the citezēs were.ii.C.to one:but lyke true subiectes they suffered paciently.

There was a great mournyng of fathers & frendes for their chyldren & kynsfolke. Emong the prisoners many were not of the citie, some were priestes, and some husbandmen & laborers, the whole some of the prisoners were .ii.C.lxxviii. persons. The cause of the treason was, because the kyng had amitie with all Christen princes, that they had broken the truce & league, cõtrary to the statute of kyng Hẽry the .v. Of this treasõ diuerse were endited, & so for ỹ tyme the lordes departed. And the next day the duke came agayn, & the erle of Surrey with .ii. M. armed men, which kept the stretes. Whẽ the Mayre, the duke, & the erle of Shrewsbury & Surrey were set, the prisoners were arreigned, and .xiii. founde gultye of high treason, & adiuged to be hanged, drawen & quartered, and for execucion wherof, were set vp .xi. payre of galowes in diuerse places where the offences were done, as at Algate, at Blãchechapelton, Gracious strete, Leadẽ hal, & before euery coũter one, & at Newgate, at S. Martens, at Aldrisgate, at Bishops gate. This sight sore greued the people to se galowes set in the kynges chamber. Then were ỹ prysoners ỹ were iudged, brought to the places of execution, & executed in most rigorous maner, for the lord Edmõd haward sonne to the duke of Northfolke, & knight Marshal shewed no mercy, but extreme cruelty to the poore pongelinges in their execuciõ, & likewise the dukes seruauntes spake many opprobrious wordes, some bad hãge, some bad drawe, some bad set the citie on fyer, but all was suffred.

On Thursday the .viii. day of May was Lyncoln, Shyrwyn, & two brethrẽ called Bets, and diuerse other adiudged to dye. Then Lyncoln said, my lordes, I meant well, for & you knew the mischief that is ensued in this realme by straũgers, you would remedy it, & many tymes I haue cõplained, & then I was called a busy felow: now our lord haue mercy on me. Then all thesayd persons were layd on the hardels, & drawen to the standarde in Chepe, & first was Jhon Lyncoln executed, & as the other had the rope about their neckes, there came a commaũdemẽt from the kyng to respite execution. Then the people cried, God saue the king. Then was the Oyer and determiner deferred tyll another daye, and the prisoners sent agayn to warde, and the harnessed men departed oute of London, and all thynges quyet.

The .xi. daye of Maye the kynge came to his maner of Grenewiche, where the recorder of London & diuerse Aldermen came to speake with his grace, and al ware gounes of black coloure. And when they perceaued the king comming out of his priuie chambre into his chãbre of presence, they kneled doune, & ỹ recorder sayd: Our most natural, beninge and souereigne lorde, we knowe well that your grace is displeased with vs of your citie of Lõdon for the great ryot late done: we assertein your grace that none of vs, nor no honest person were condiscendynge to that enormitie, and yet we, oure wyfes and chyldrẽ euery houre lament that your fauour shoulde be taken from vs, and forasmuche as light & ydle persones were the doers of thesame, we moost hũbly beseche your grace to haue mercy of vs for our negligence, & compassion of the offendours for their offence and trespasse.

Truly sayd the kyng, you haue highly displeased and offended vs, & ye oughte to wayle and be sory for the same, and where ye saye that you the substantiall persons were not consentyng to the same, it appereth to the contrary, for you neuer moued to let theim, nor sturred once to fyght wtih theim, whiche you saye were so small a nombre of light persones, wherefore we must thynke, and you cannot deny, but you dyd wynke at the matter, but at this tyme we wyll graunt to you neither out fauor nor good will, nor to thoffenders mercy, but resort to the Cardinall our lord Chaūcelour, & he shal make you an answer & declare our pleasure, and with this answer ỹ lōdoners departed & made relatiō to ỹ Maior.

The.xviii.day of this moneth the quene of Scottes, which had bene at the Courte and at Baynardes Castell, a whole yere at the kynges charge, and was richely apoynted of all thinges mete to her estate, both of Jewells, plate, tapissry, Arras, Coyne, Horsses, and all other thinges of the kynges gift & liberalitie, departed out of London toward Scotland with great rythes, albeit she came into Englande with muche pouertie, and she entred into Scotland the.xiii.daye of Juyn, whome her husband receaued at Berwick: but the Englishemen smally hym regarded. All her charges within the realme, comminge to the courte & returnynge, were of the kynges purse.

Thursdaye the.xxii.day of May the kynge came into Westmynster hall, for whome at the vpper ende was set a clothe of estate, & the place hanged with Arras, with him was the Cardinall, the dukes of Northfolke & Suffolke, ỹ erles of Shrewsbury, of Essex & Wilshyre, of Surrey, with many lordes & other of the kynges coūsaill. The Mayre & Alderme, & al the chief of the citie were there in their best liuery (according as the Cardinall had thē apoynted) by.ix.of the clock. Then the kynge cōmaūded that al the prisoners should be brought foorth. Thē came in the poore youg̃linges & olde false knaues boūde in ropes all along, one after another in their shertes, & euery one a halter about his neck, to the nūber of.iiii.C.mē & .xi.womē. And whē all were come before the kinges presence, the Cardinal sore layed to the Mayre & cōminaltie their negligēce, & to the prisoners he declared that thei had deserued death for their offence: Then al the prisoners together cryed mercy gracious lord, mercy. Then the lordes altogether besought his grace of mercy, at whose request the kyng pardoned thē al. And then the Cardinal gaue vnto thē a good exhortacion to the great gladnes of the herers. And whē the generall pardon was pronoūced, all ỹ prisoners shouted atonce, & altogether cast vp their haltersinto ỹ hal roffe, so that the king might perceaue thei were none of the discreetest sorte. Here is to be noted ỹ diuerse offenders which were not takē, hering ỹ the king was inclined to mercy came wel appareled to Westmynster, & sodeynly stryped thē into their shertes w halters, & came in emong the prisoners willingly, to be partakers of the kynges pardon,by the whiche doyng,it was well knowen that one Jhō Gellon yoman of the Croune,was the first that began to spoyle,and exhoyted other to dooe theſame,and becauſe he fled and was not taken, he came in the rope with the other pꝛiſoners,and ſo had his pardon. This compaignie was after called the blacke Wagon.Then were all the galowes within the citee taken doune, and many a good pꝛaier layed foꝛ the kyng,and the citezens toke moꝛe hede to their ſeruauntes.

In June the kyng had with hym diuerſe Ambaſſadoꝛs, foꝛ ſolace of whom he pꝛepared a coſtly Juſtes,he hymſelf and.xii.agaynſt the duke of Suffolk and other.xii.his baſe and bard was the one halfe clothe of ſiluer,and the other halfe blacke Tinſell. On the ſiluer was a curious loſe woꝛke of white veluet embꝛaudered with Golde,cut on the Siluer and euery cut engrayled with golde,ſo that that ſide was golde,Siluer and veluet. On the blacke tynſell ſyde was blacke veluet enbꝛoudered with golde and cut,and euery cut was engrayled with flat gold of Damaſke.The baſe and barde wer bꝛoudered with greate letters of maſſy golde Bullion,full of peaꝛles and ſtones,meꝛueylous riche:al his compaignie wer in like ſuite, ſauing that they had no iuelles.The kyng had on his hed a ladies ſleue full of Diamondes.On the kyng attended gē tlemen,Armouꝛers,and other officiers to the nomber of.CxxV.perſones all in white Ueluet and white Sattyn,hoꝛſe and harneis foꝛ hoꝛſemen. Cappes and Hoſen foꝛ footemen,all white at the kinges coſt.This royally the kyng & his compaignie with his waiters came to the tiltes ende

Then entered the Duke of Suffolke with the Marques Doꝛcet, the Erles of Eſſex and Surrey, and.viii.other of his bande,in bardes and baſes of white Ueluet & cꝛimoſin ſattin loſenged,ſet full of letters of.C. M.of gold,foꝛ Charles & Mary,and thei toke the other ende of the tilt. Then the Trompettes blewe,and the Kyng and the Duke ranne fiercely together,and bꝛake many ſpeꝛes,and ſo did all the other,that it was harde to ſaie who did beſt: but when the courſes were ronne, they ranne volant one at another,ſo that bothe by the repoꝛte of ſir Edwarde Eylfoꝛde Maſter of the Armury, and alſo of the Judges and Heraldes,at theſe Juſtes wer bꝛoken fiue hūdꝛed and ſixe ſpeꝛes: and then the kyng theſame night made to the Ambaſſadoꝛs a ſumpteous banket,with many ridelles and muche paſtyme.

After this greate triumphe,the king appointed his geſtes foꝛ his paſtyme this Sommer,but ſodeinly there came a plague of ſickenes, called the Swet yng ſickenes,that turned all his purpoſe. This malady was ſo cruell that it killed ſome within thꝛee houres, ſome within twoo houres,ſome mery at diner and dedde at ſupper.Many died in the kynges Courte,the Loꝛde Clinton, the Loꝛde Grey of Wilton,and many knightes, Gentlemē and officiers. Foꝛ this plague Wighelmas terme was adiourned,and becauſe that this malady continued from July to the middes of December,the kyng kept hymſelf cuer with a ſmall compaignie,and kept no ſolempne Chꝛiſtmas,willyng to haue no reſoꝛt foꝛ feare of infeccion: but muche lamented the nombre of his people, for in some one toune halfe the people died, and in some other toune the thirde parte, the Sweate was so feruent and infeccious.

The.x.yere.

IN the beginning of this yere, Trinite terme was begon at Orenford, where it continued but one day, and was again adiourned to Westminster. This yere came to Calice frō Pope Leo, a legate de latere, called Laurence Campeius, commonly called the Cardianall Campeius, for to exhorte the kyng to make warre on the Turke. And likewyse the sayed Leo sent iii. other legates furth, at that tyme for the said purpose, one into Fraūce another into Spain, and the third into Germany. The.ix. yere. x

When the Cardinall of Yorke knewe, that there was comming a legate into Englande, whiche should haue a greater preheminence then a Cardinall, he whose ambicion was neuer satisfied, caused a Bishoppe and certain Doctors to passe the Sea to Calice to welcome hym, and to shewe hym that yf he would haue the Popes purpose to take any effecte in Englande, he should in any wyse sende in poste to Rome, to haue the sayed Cardinall of Yorke to be legate also, and to be ioyned in commission with hym, whiche thing was doen, (not without good rewardes) so that in thirtie and fiue daies, the bull was brought to Calice, During whiche tyme the Cardinall of Yorke sent to the Legate to Calice, redde cloth to clothe his seruauntes, whiche at their comming to Calice, were but meanely appareled. And when all thinges were ready, he passed the sea and landed at Douer, and so kept furthe his iorney toward Londō. At euery toune as thei passed, he was receiued with Procession, and accompaigned with all the Lordes and gentlemen of Kent. And when he came to Black heth, ther met hym the Duke of Norffolke, with a great xx nomber of prelates, knightes and gentlemen, all richely appareled. And in the waie he was brought into a riche tēte of clothe of golde, where he shifted himself into a robe of a Cardinall, edged with Ermyns, and so toke his Moyle ridyng toward London.

The night before he came to London, the Cardinall of Yorke, to furnishe the carriages of the Cardinall Campeius, sent to him twelue mulettes with emptie Coffers couered with redde, whiche twelue Mulettes wer led through London, emongest the Mulettes of Campeius, which were but eight and so these.xx. Mulettes passed through the stretes, as though thei had been full of treasures, apparell, and other necessaries. xl And when they came into Chepe, one of the Mulettes brake from her keper, and ouerthrewe the Chestes, and ouerturned twoo or three other Mulettes cariages, whiche fell with suche a violence, that diuerse of them vnlocked, and out of some fell olde Hosen, broken Shoen, and toasted Flesshe, peces of Breade, Egges and muche vyle baggage: at whiche sighte the Boyes cryed, see, see my Lorde Legates treasure, and so the Muleters wer asshamed, and tooke vp all their stuffe & passed furth. And about thre of the clock at after none on the.xxix.day of July the said legate entred the citie, & in Sothwarke met him all the clergie of London, with crosses, sensers & copes & sensed him with great reuerence. The Maior and Aldermen, and all the occupacions of the citee in their best liueries stode in the stretes, & hym hyghly honored: to whō sir Thomas Moze made a brief ozaciō in the name of the citee. And whē he cam to Paules, ther he was receiued by bishops mitred, and vnder a canapy entred the churche: whiche canapy his seruaūtes toke foz their fees. And when he had offred, he gaue his benediccion to al the people, and toke a- gain his mule, & so was with al his train afozsaid, conueighed to Bathe place, & there rested: where he was welcomed of the Cardinall of Yozke. And on Sondate next ensuyng these twoo Cardinalles as legates, toke their barges & came to Grenewiche, eche of them had beside their crosses two pillers of siluer, two litle axes gilte, and two cloke bagges embzou- dered, and the cardinalles hartes bozne befoze thē. And when they came to the kynges hall, the Cardinall of Yozke went on the right hande: and there the king royally appareled and accompaignied, met them euen as though bothe had come from Rome, and so bzought them bothe vp into his chamber of pzesence, and there was a solempne ozacion made by an Italian, declaryng the cause of the legacy to be in twoo articles, one foz aide agaynst Gods enemies, and the second foz refozmaciō of the Cler- gie. And when Masse was doen, they were had to a chambet, and serued with lozdes and knightes, with muche solēpnitie: and after dinner they toke their leaue of the kyng and came to London, and rode thzough the citee together, in greate pompe and glozy to their lodgynges.

When the Cardinall of Yozke was thus a legate, he set vp a court, & called it the court of the legate, and pzoued testamētes, and hard causes to the great hinderaunce of all the bishops of the realme. He visited bis- shopes and all the Clergie, exempt and not exempt, and vnder colour of xxx refozmacion he gat muche treasure, & nothyng was refozmed, but came to moze mischief: foz by exāple of his pzide, pziestes & al spiritual perso- nes wered so pzoude, that thei ware veluet, & silke, bothe in gounes, tac- kettes, doblettes, & shoes, kept open lechery, and so highly bare thē selfes by reason of his auctho3ities & faculties, that no mā durst once repzoue any thing in thē, foz feare to bee called heretike, & then thei would make hym smoke oz beare a faggot. And the Cardinall hym self was so elated that he thought hymself egall with the kyng: & when he had said Masse he made dukes & erles to serue him of wyne with a say taken, & to holde the basō at the lauatozies. Thus the pzide & ambicion of the Cardinal & xl clergie was so high, ỹ in maner al good persons abhozred & disdeined it.

This yere the French kyng wzote to the kyng of Englād, ỹ if it were his pleasure, he would send an ambassade into England, to cōmon with the kyng & his counsaill foz the redempyng of the citee of Turney & other thynges: whiche answered the messenger, that the ambassade of ỹ Frēche

kynge should be right hartely welcome to him. And so the Frenth kyng sent into England the lorde Boneuet, hygh Admyrall of Fraunce, & the bishop of Parys as chiefe Ambassadors, accompanyed with many noble men, & young freshe galãtes of the courte of Fraunce, to the nũbre of lxxx. & more, & with them came a great nũbre of rascal & pedlers, & Juellers, and brought ouer hattes and cappes, and diuerse merchaũdise vncustomed, all vnder the coloure of the trussery of the Ambassadours.

After that these noble men were landed at Douer, thei were receaued r by the nobles and gentelmen of the countrey, and so conueyghed from lodgyng to lodgynge tyll they came to Blackheth, & before them went their cartages and people in great numbre, to the summe of. xii. C. one & other, whiche was thought to be to many for an Ambassade. These gẽtlemen of Fraunce were very freshe.

Monday the. xxvii. day of September, the erle of Surrey hygh Admyrall of Englande, in coate of riche tyssue cut on cloth of siluer, on a great courser richely trapped, & a great whistell of gold, set with stones and perle, hangyng at a great and massy chayne baudryck wise, accompanyed with an. C. xl. gentlemen, rychely appareled, on goodly horsses came to blackheth, & there amiably receaued ỹ Ambassadors of Fraũce. xx The yoũg galantes of Fraũce had coates garded with one colour, cut in. x. or. xii. partes very richely to beholde: & so al the Englishmẽ accoupled thẽ selues with the Frenchmen, louingly together, & so roade to Lõdon. After the. ii. Admyrals folowed. xxiiii. of the Frenche kynges garde whome accompanyed. xxiiii. of the kynges garde. And after thẽ a great numbre of archers, to the nũbre of. iiii. C. And in this order they passed thorough the citie to Taylers hal, & there the chiefe Ambassadors were lodged, & the rẽnaunt in marchaũtes houses about. When these lordes were in their lodgynges, then the Frẽch harder mẽ opened their wares, & made the Taylers hal lyke to the paunde of a marte. At this doynge xxi many an Englishmã grudged, but it auailed not. The last day of Septẽber, the Frẽch Ambassadors toke their barge, & came to Grenewiche. The Admyrall was in a goune of cloth of siluer rayled, furred with rych Sables, & al his cõpany almost were in a new fassiõ garmẽt, called a Shenew, which was in effect a goune cut in the middle. The gẽtlems of Fraũce were brought to the kynges presence, wher the bishop of Parys made a solẽpne oracio: which beyng ended, & aũswer made therto, ỹ kyng highly entreteyned the Admirall and his company, and so dyd all the English lordes and gentelmen. The Ambassadours beyng dayly in counsayl at Grenewiche, the other gentlemen daunced & passed the tyme xl in the quenes chãbre with ladies & gentlewomen. After long coũsailing & muche deslyng of the French kyng and his counsayll, it was agreed that the citie of Tourney should be deliuered to the Frenche kynge, he payenge. vi. hundred thousande crounes for the citie, and. iiii. hundred thousand crounes for the Castel, the which the kyng had buylded, but it was not fully perfourmed: & also he should pay. xxiii. M. l. Tournies, the whiche summe the citezens of the citie of Turney ought to the kyng of England for their liberties and fraunchises.

Upon these agremētes to be perfozmed, it was cōcluded that the citie of Tourney shoulde be deliuered to the French kyng. The Frechemē the lother to come to their purpose, made a pzetēce of mariage to be had betwene the Dolphyn, sonne & heyze to the Frēche kyng & the lady Mary the kynges daughter, which was agreed vpō this cōdicion, that if they both consented at lawful age, then to be ferme & stable, oz els not: foz thē they were both very young. And so all matters were concluded, and the erle of Wozcester & the bishop of Ely apoynted to go into Fraunce foz the deliuery of the citie of Tourney, and perfozmyng of the other agrementes. And foz the sure payment of the summes of money to be payde to the kyng of England vpon thesayd agrementes, there were .iiii. gentelmen of the realme of Fraunce left in Englande foz hostages: whose names were Mounsire Memozancy, Mouñsire Monpesart, Mounsire Moy, Mounsire Mozret. Of the whiche .iii. the .ii. kyzst named were of noble blood, but the .ii. last were but of meane houses. And because they were youg, there was auncient gentelmē, apoynted gouernours to thē.

When all thinges were concluded & sealed, the kyng and all the Ambassadours richely appareled & the .ii. legates, toade solēply to ỹ church of sainct Paul frō the bishop of Durhās place: & there was made from the West dooze to the quere dooze of the churche egall with the highest stiep, a hautepace of tymber of .xii. fote bzoade, that the kyng & the Ambassadozs might be sene. And there the Cardinall of Yozke sange hygh masse, & had hys cloth of estate of Tyssue: hys Cupboozd set with basōs all gilt couered: his place was .v. steppes high. At the first lauatozy, iii. Erles serued him, & at the second .ii. dukes & a Marques, & with the laye taken, they gaue hym wyne, and after water. And when masse was done, the Cardinal Campeius and he gaue to the people (as they sayd) cleane remission. And after that done, doctoz Pace the kynges secretozy, a man very eloquēt, made a goodly Dzacion in pzayse of peace: and that done, the kyng and all his nobles and Ambassadozs went to the Bishops palace to dynner, where they were highly feasted. And after dynner the kynge roade agayne to the bishop of Durhams place.

That night the Cardinall of Yozke made to the Ambassadozs a solempne banket, & them accōpanied many lozdes & ladyes of Englande. And when the banket was done, in came .vi. mynstrels, richely disguysed, & after them folowed .iii. gentelmen in wyde & long gounes of Crymosyn sattyn, euery one hauyng a cup of golde in their handes, the first cup was ful of Angels & royals, the second had diuerse bales of dyce, & the .iii. had certayn payzes of Cardes. These gētelmē offered to playe at mōchaunce, & whē they had played the length of the first boozde, thē the mynstrels blew vp, & then entred into the chābze .xii. ladyes disguysed, the fyzst was the kyng hym selfe & the French quene, the second the duke of Suffolke, the lady Dawbeny, ỹ lozd Admirall & the lady Guyldfozd syr Edward Neuel, and the lady Sentliger, syr Henry Guyldford, and mastres Walden, Capitayn Emery, and mastres Anne Carew, syr Giles Capel, & lady Elizabeth Carew, Nycholas Carew, & Anne bzoune, Fraunces Bzian and Elizabeth blont, Henry Nozrys & Anne wotton, Fraunces poyntz and Mary fyenes, Arthure poole & Wargaret Bzuges. On this cõpany attended.xii. knightes disguysed, beating tozches all these.xxvi. persons disguysed were in one suyte of fyne grene satyn all ouercouered with clothe of golde, vnder tyed together with laces of gold, & maskyng whoodes on their heddes: the ladyes had tyers made x of bzaydes of dãmaske gold, with lõg heres of white gold. Al these mas-kers daũced at one tyme, & after they had daunced, they put of their vizers, & then they were all knowẽ. The Admyzal & lozdes of Fraũce hartely thanked the kyng, that it pleased hym to viset thẽ with such dispozt and then the kyng and his company were banketed, and had high chere, and then they departed euery man to hys lodgynge.

The.viii.day of October at Grenewiche was song a solẽpne masse by the bishop of Durhã, & after masse doctoz Tũstal master of the Rolles, which after was bishop of Londõ, made an eloquẽt pzepositiõ in pzaise of ỹ mattimony to be had betwene the Dolphyn & the lady Mary: & all xx that day were ỹ straũgers feasted, & at night they were bzought into the hall, where was a rock ful of al maner of stones, very artificially made, A pageaunt.
& on ỹ top stood.v.trees, ỹ first an Oliue tree, on which hãged a shild of ỹ armes of the church of Rome: the.ii. a Pyneaple tree, with ỹ armes of the Emperour: ỹ.iii. a Roysyer with the armes of Englãd: the.iiii. a bzaũche of Lylies, bearing the armes of Fraũce: & the.v. a Pomegranet tree, bearing ỹ armes of Spayn: in tokẽ ỹ al these.v. potentates were ioined together in one league against ỹ enemies of Chzistes fayth, Jn: & vpon ỹ middes of ỹ Rock sate a fayze lady, richely appareled with a Dolphin in her lap. Jn this Rock were ladies & gẽtelmẽ, appareled in Crimosyn xxx sattyn, couered ouer w̃ floures of purple satyn, embzoudered on w̃ wzo thes of gold knyt together with goldẽ laces, & on euery floure a hart of gold mouing. The ladies tyer was after ỹ fassiõ of Jnde, w̃ kerchieses of plealaũce, hached w̃ fyne gold, & set with letters of Greke in golde of bulliõ: & the edges of their kerchieses were garnished w̃ hanging perle, These gẽtiemẽ & ladyes sate on ỹ neyther parte of the Rocke, & out of a caue in the said Rock came.x. knightes, armed at all poyntes, & faughte together a fayze tournay. And when they were seuered & departed, ỹ disguysers dissended frõ ỹ rock, & daũced a great space: & sodeynly ỹ rocke moued & receaued ỹ disguysers, & ymediatly closed agayn. Then entred xl a person called Reapozt, appareled in Crymosyn satyn full of tõges, sitting on a flyẽg hozse with wynges & fete of gold called, Pegasus. Thys persõ in Frẽche declared ỹ meaning of the rocke & ỹ trees, & ỹ Tournay.

After this pastyme ended, the kyng and the Ambassadours were ser-ued at a bancket with.ii.C.& lx. dyshes: & after that a boydee of spyces Abanquet. with.lx. spice plates of siluer & gilt, as great as mẽ with ease might beare.

This

This nyght the Cupboord in the hall was of.xii.stages all of plate of golde and no gilt plate. When that euery mā had ben plenteously serued, the tables were taken vp, and the kynge and the quene and all the straungiers departed to their lodginges. After diuerse Justes & feastes made, the sayd Ambassadors by the kynge & lordes: Syr Thomas Exmew Mayre of Londō, made to them a costly dynner at the Goldsmythes hall, which dynner they highly praysed, it was so well ordred.

And whē tyme came, they toke their leaue of the kyng, the quene and the kynges counsaill, & deliuered into the kynges possessiō their.iiii.hostages as you haue harde before: at whiche departing the kyng gaue to the Admyral of Fraūce a garnisshe of gilt vessel, a payre of couered basons gilt.xii.great gilt bolles,iiii.payre of great gilt pottes, a stāding cup of gold, garnished with great perle: and to some other also, he gaue plate, to some Cheynes of gold, to some riche apparel, & to some greate horses with ryche bardes, so that euery gentelman was well rewarded: which liberalitie the straūgers much praised: & after that al their trusses were ready they departed toward the sea, & toke ship & lāded at Boleyn.

Sone after their departing, the erle of Worcester, beyng the kynges chāberlayn. The bishop of Ely, the lord of.S.Jhōs, syr Nicholas baur, syr Jhon pechy, syr Thomas bulleyn as Ambassadours frō the kyng of England, accompanyed with.lxx.knightes & Gētelmen & yomē, to the nūber of.iiii.C. & aboue passed the sea with some stormes, & came to Calys, & passed thorough Picardy with great & kynde entreteynmēt in all places, till they came to Parys, where they were nobly receaued, euery man matched with a lyke pere: & after they were brought tothe Frenche kynges presence, where the bishop of Ely made a solempne oracion, as concerning the mariage and the peace: he did it with suche a bolde spirite that the Frenchemen muche praysed his audacitie.

The cōclusiō of this peace was this, that Hēry king of Englād, Fraūces kyng of Frenchemen, & Charles kynge of Castel had sworne a perpetuall peace, duryng their lyues. And yf it shoulde happen any of the iii. to violate the league in any poynt and to moue warre: then the other.ii.should ioyne together, and make warre agaynst the violater or breaker of the peace.

After al thinges cōcluded, the Frēch king made a banket house in the bastill of Parys betwene.iiii.olde walles: this house was couered with coardes strayned by craft, & euery coarde was woūd aboute with bore, & so layd crosse wise one ouer a nother in fret, & at the metynges a great knop gilt with gold foyle: Ouer their coardes was streyned wollen clothes of light blew: this roofe was.lxx.fote high, & on euery side.iii. stages high: al the pillers of the stages were couered with antique worke, & the brestes of the stages curiously wrought with armes, fynettes & braunches: the roofe was set full of starres gilt furnished with glasses betwene the fretes: and in this house was.ii.C.xii.braunches gilt hanged, and on euery braunche a great numbere of lightes of white waxe:

and diuers sortes of maskes were shewed that night: and also there was shewed at euery side of the palace a great Cupboord of massiue plate of muche greatnesse, and euer the French kyng welcommed the lordes and Ambassadours with good coũtenaunce. After diuerse feastes, iustes and banketes made to the Englishe Ambassadours the byshop of Ely with syr Thomas Bulleyn and sir Rychard Weston were sent by the Frenche kyng to Konyack to see the dolphyn, where they were well receaued, and to them was shewed a fayre young chylde: and when they had sene hym, they departed. The fame went that the Frenche kyng at that tyme x had no sonne, but that this was but a colour of the Frenche kyng, howbeit it was proued otherwise after.

In this season the Earle of Worcestre, and with hym sir Nicholas Vaux, sir Jhon Pechy, syr Edward Belknap with many other knightes toke their leaue of the Frenche kyng, and roade to Courtney, where they were well receiued. Then began the Capitaynes and the souldiours to mourne, knowyng that the toune should be yelded to the Frenche kyng, and many a young gentelman, and many a tall yoman wished that they had not spent their tyme there. And the next day after, the sayd earle discharged sir Richarde Jernyngham of his office of capitayne and com-xx maunded euery man to be obedient to the kynges pleasure and to prepare to returne into England. The eight day of Februarye the lord Chatilion came nere to the citie of Tournay with. xxi. hundreth men in harneys. The erle of Worcestre sent sir Edward Belknap to knowe his commission, and there he sheued hym his commission, whiche was to receiue the citie of Tourney. Then sir Edward Belknap desired hym too sende his commission to the earle of Worcestre, whiche he refused to do, saiyng it was sufficient to shewe it: well sayd sir Edwarde Belknap you must understande that we haue a commission from the kyng our master to deliuer you the citie at a day appointed: wherfore we must shewe the xxx kyng of Englande both your commission that you had authoritie to receiue it from the Frenche kyng, and also that you by your indenture sealed with your seale of armes shall confesse that you receiue the citie as a gift, and not rendred as a right to the kyng your master, or els be you sure that the citie shall not be deliuered. Then the lorde Chastileon was wonderous wroth ỹ he was no better beleued: And so dayly were great messages sent to the citie from him to the erle of Worcester, and aũswers were sent of the Englishe part. But when the day approched he had full aunswere that he must deliuer his cõmission and also seale the indenture, or els the Englishmen would not put him in possession of the toune, for xl their commission was otherwise. The Frenche capitaines perceauing ỹ yf they disagreed at the daye, that doubtes might folowe, wherfore they sent their commission and sealed their indenture and sent it likewyse in the mornyng, and came forward with their banners displayed: whereof herting the earle, he sent woord that the cytie was neither yelded nor gotten, but deliuered for confederacion of mariage, and therfore thei should not entre with banners displaied. Then were the Frenchmen angry, but there was no remedy but to rolle vp their standerdes and banners. And when thei came to the gates, there their commission and Indenture were solemply red openly: and then the Frenchemen entred with drumsades and minstrelsy without any banner: and then to Monsire Castileon was deliuered the Castell, and there he ordeined watche and warde in euery part. Thus was the cytie of Turnay deliuered the eight daie of February in the. x. yere of the reigne of the kyng, and many a tall yoman that lacked liuyng fel to robbyng, which would not labor after their returne.

Duryng this tyme remayned in the Frenche court Nicholas Carew Fraunces Bryan and diuerse other of the young gentelmen of England and they with the Frenche kyng roade daily disguysed through Parys, throwyng Egges, stones and other foolishe trifles at the people, whiche light demeanoure of a kyng was muche discommended and gested at. And when these young gentelmen came again into England, they were all Frenche, in eatyng, drynkyng and apparell, yea, and in Frenche vices and braggyes, so that all the estates of Englande were by them laughed at: the ladies and gentelwomen were dispraised, so that nothing by them was praised, but if it were after the Frenche turne, whiche after turned them to displeasure as you shall here.

After the kynges Ambassadors were returned, and Tournay deliuered to the Frenchemen vpon the conditions aforesaid, the hostages that were here lefte for the paument of the great somes and performaunce of the conditions comprysed in the league (of the whiche one was that if the mariage toke none effect, then the citie of Turnay should be redeliuered vpon repayment of thesame some) thesaied hostages knewe not in what case they stode, but when they knewe it, they were very heuy & sorowful: howbeit, they dissimuled the matter in the best wise thei could. The kyng vsed familiarly these foure hostages, and on the. vii. daie of Marche prepared a disguisyng, and caused his great chamber at Grenewyche to be staged, and great lightes to be set on pillers that were gilt, with basons gilt, and the rofe was couered with blewe satyn set full of presses of fyne gold and flowers: and vnder was writen, lammes, the meanyng wherof was, that the flower of youth could not be oppressed. Into this chamber came the kyng and the quene with the hostages, and there was a goodly commedy of Plautus plaied, and that done, there entred into the chamber eight ladies in blacke veluet bordred about with gold, with hoopes from the waist downward, and sleues ruffed and plited at the elbowe and plain in the middes, full of cuttes, plucked out at euery cutte with fyne Camericke, and tired like to the Egipcians very richely. And when these ladyes had passed aboute the place, in came eight Noble personages in long gounes of taffeta set with flowers of golde bullion, and vnder that apparell cotes of blacke veluet enbroudered with golde all to cut, and plucked out with cuttes of white sarcenet, and euery man had buskyns of blacke veluet full of agglettes of golde. Then the eight men daunced with with the eight ladies all beyng viserd, and sodainly the men cast of their large gounes, and then their vnder apparell was sene. And when al was done, euery lorde and lady put of their visers, and then it was knowen that the kyng and the duke of Suffolk and the French quene were there whiche were present at the plate tyme.

The. viii. daie of Marche was a solempne Justes, the kyng hymself & eight young gentelmen based and barded in blacke Veluet embroudered with gold, against the duke of Suffolk and eight of his bande al in white satyn with droppes of golde. And that daie they all ranne excea- xx dyng well, whiche the straungers highly commended. & iustes.

In the ende of Marche the kyng sent for all the yomen of garde that were come from Tourney, and after many good wordes geuen to thē, he graūted to thē. viii. C. the day without attendaunce, except thei were specially cōmaunded, & yet for all this the cōmaltie said that the kyng was euil counsailed to geue away the citie of Tourney, because the maintenyng of a garrison there should haue norished & brought vp men & yonger brethren in feates of warre to ỹ great strength & defence of ỹ realme.

This yere the. xii. daie of February died the Emperour Maximilian, for whome the kyng caused a solempne Obsequy to be done at Paules xx churche, all the nobles of the realme and knightes of the Garter beyng present, of whiche ordre the said Emperour was one.

IN the beginnyng of this yere, the kyng with all the knightes of his ordre beyng in Englande, roade on double horsses, with the henxmen folowing the kyng, from Colbroke to Winsore in gorgious apparel, and there he kept with greate solempnitie the feast of. S. George, and dined in the hall. And the byshop of Wynchester prelate of the ordre sat at the boordes ende alone. The kyng was solemply serued and the surnap cast like the feast of a coronacion. All thynges were plenteous to straungers that resorted thether. At the masse of Requiem was xxx offered the banner and other hachementes of honor belonging to Maximilian the Emperor late deceased. After this feast ended, the kyng came to Richemond, and so to Grenewyche, and late all Maie.

In whiche moneth the kynges counsaill secretly communed together of the kynges gentlenes & liberalitie to all persones: by the whiche they perceiued that certain young men in his priuie chamber, not regardyng his estate nor degree, were so familier and homely with hym, and plated suche light touches with hym that they forgat themselfes: Whiche thynges although the king of his gentle nature suffred and not rebuked nor reproued it: yet the kynges counsail thought it not mete to be suffred for xl the kynges honor, & therfore thei altogether came to the king, besechyng him al these enormities and lightnes to redresse. ¶ To whom the kyng answered, that he had chosen thē of his counsaill, both for the maintenaūce of his honor, & for the defence of all thyng that might blemisshe thesame: wherfore if they sawe any about hym misuse theimselfes, he committed it to their reformacion. Then the kynges counsaill caused the lorde chamberlein to cal before them Carew (and another who yet liueth, & therfore shall not at this time be named) with diuerse other also of the priuy chãber, whiche had bene in the Frenche court, and banyshed them the courte for diuerse considerations, laiyng nothing particulerly to their charges. And they that had offices were cõmaunded to go to their offices: whiche dischatge out of the courte greued sore the hartes of these young menne whiche were called the kynges minions. Then was there foure sad and auncient knightes, put into the kynges priuie chãber, whose names wer sir Richard Wingfeld, sir Richard Jernyngh̃, sir Richard Weston and sir Willyam Kyngston: and diuerse officers were chaũged in al places.

Then sir Jhon Pechy was made deputie of Caleis, and sir Rychard Wingfeld therof discharged, & Nicholas Carew made capitain of Ricebanke and commaunded to go thether, whiche was sore to hym displeasant. These young minions which was thus seuered from the kyng, had bene in Fraunce, and so highly praised the Frenche kyng and his courte, that in a maner they thought litle of the kyng and his court, in comparison of the other, they were so high in loue with the Frenche court, wherefore their fall was litle moned emong wise men.

This yere in the moneth of June was elected to be Emperor Charles xx kyng of Castel, & nephew to the quene, by the whole assent of the electors of thempire: Although the Frenche kyng sent his great Master to cause hym to be elected to the high maiestie of the Empire: yet his ambassador & great Master of his household called Gonffier lord of Boisy, & brother to Willyam Gonfier lorde Boneuet Admirall of Fraunce, whiche was Ambassadour of England the last yere as you haue hard, did not so his message that it toke any effect. The kyng which had sẽt doctor Pace his secretory for the auauncement of his nephewe the kyng of Castell to the dignitie imperiall, because he had the duchie of Ostrik & many other seignories in Almain, was very toyous of this election, & caused a solẽpne xxi Masse to be song at Paules the. viii. daie of July: at whiche Masse. was present the Cardinall Campetus, the Cardinall of Yorke, the Duke of Buckynghã, of Norffolk & Suffolk, with the Ambassadors of Spain, Fraunce, Venice and Scotlande. And after Masse was done, the quier sang Te deum, and then all the lordes departed to Baynardes Castle to dinner, & that night were solempne fiers made through London, & great plẽty of wine geuẽ by Italiẽs, duchemen & Spaniardes for these newes.

This sommer the quene desired the kyng to bring to her manour of Hauering in the Bower in Esser, the gentelmen of Fraunce being hostages. And for their welcõmyng she purueyed all thynges in the moste li- xl berallest maner: and especially she made to the kyng suche a sumpteous banket that the kyng thanked her hartely, and the straungers gaue it great prayse. The kyng lyng there did shote, hunte, and ronne dayly with the hoftages to their greate ioye.

Essex, otherwyse called Beaulieu, where the kynge had newly buylded a costly mancion, and there to welcome the quene and the Lordes, and the Frenche gentelmen, he made to them a sumpteous banket, and all a long the chamber sat a ladie and a lorde, or a knight, which were plenteously serued. And after the banket ended, with notie of minstrelles entered into the chamber eight Maskers with white bердes, and long and large garmentes of blewe satyn pauned with Sipres, poudered with spangles of Bullion golde, and they daunsed with ladies sadly, and communed not with the ladies after the fassion of Maskers, but behaued themselfes sadly. Wherfore the quene plucked of their visors, and then apperedthe duke of Suffolk, the Erle of Essex, the Marques Dorset, the lord Burgainy, sir Rychard Wyngfeld, sir Robert Wyngfelde, sir Rychard Weston, sir Willyam Kyngston: all these were somwhat aged, the youngest man was fiftie at the least. The ladies had good sporte to se these auncient persones Maskers. When they were departed, the kyng and the foure hostages of fraunce, & the erle of Deuonshire with sixe other yong Gentelmen entered the chamber, the whiche sixe were all in yelowe Satyn, hosen, shoen, and cappes, and sixe other were in like maner in Grene: the yelowe satyn was freted with siluer of damaske, and so was the grene very rychely to behold: and then euery Maskер toke a ladie and daũsed: and when they had daunsed and cõmoned a great while, their visers were taken of, and theladies knewe them, and there the kyng gaue many brooches and proper giftes to the ladies. And after this done, the quene made a banket to the kyng and his lordes and the other straungers.

In the moneth of Nouember, the kyng came from Lambeth to Westminster hal, and so to the starre chamber, and there were before him the Lorde Ogle, the Lorde Hayward, sir Mathewe Broune, sir Willyam Bulmer, and Jhon Skot of Camerwell, for diuerle riottes, misdemeanours and offences, & especially the kyng rebuked sir Willyam Bulmer knight, because he beyng the kynges seruaunt swore, refused the kynges seruice, & became seruaunt to the duke of Buckingham, saiyng: that he would none of his seruauntes should hang on another mannes sleue, and that he was aswel able to maintein him as the duke of Buckynghã, and that what might be thought by his departyng, and what myght bee supposed by the dukes retaining he would not then declare. The knight kneled still on his knees criyng the kyng mercie, and neuer a noble man there durst entreate for him, ỹ king was so highly displeased with him. Yet at the last when other matters were hard, the kyng moued with pitie forgaue thesaied sir Willyam his offence, saiyng, that we will that none of out seruauntes shalbe long to any other person, but to vs, nor we wil not that our subiectes repine or grudge at suche as we fauoure, for our pleasure we will haue in that cace as vs liketh, for one we wil fauor now and another at suche tyme as vs shall like: and therefore sir Willyam if you serue vs hartely, you shall not be forgotten, & for this tyme we pardon you. Likewise he pardoned the lorde Edmõd Hayward, and sir Mathew thew Browne their offences, which were indicted of riottes, and maintey-naunce of bearynges of diuerse misdoers within the countie of Surrey: but the lorde Ogle humbly besecched the kyng of his mercie, to whom he aunswered. Sir your matter concerneth murder of our subiecte, whiche greate offence is not onely to vs but to God, and therfore we remit you to the common lawe. And then he rose and went to his barge, and by the waie he made James Yarforde Maior of the Cytie of London knyght, and so he with all his counsaill came to Lambeth.

The. iiij. gentelmen hostages of Fraunce, daily resorted to the courte and had great chere, and were well entertained, and euery tyme they moued, stirred and required the kyng to passe the Sea, and to mete with the Frenche kyng their Master, whom they preised hyghly, affirming that if the kyng & he might once familierly common together, that there should suche a constant loue rise and encrease betwene theim, whiche afterward should neuer faile. This request was often tymes hard and litle regarded, but yet by the meanes of the Cardinall at the last, in the ende of February it was agreed that the kyng in person, should passe the sea to his castell and lordshyp of Guisnes, & there in Maie next comming betwene Guisnes and Arde, the kyng and the Frenche kyng should mete. When this was fully concluded, the kyng wrote letters to all suche lordes, ladies, gentelmen and Gentelwomen as should geue their attendaunce on hym and the quene: which incontinent put theimselfes in a redines after the moste costliest fashion, for the furniture of thesame metyng.

Then were sent to Guysnes vnder the rule of sir Edwarde Belknap three. M. artificers, which buyloed out of the yearth on the playn before the castle of Guysnes, the most goodliest palaice of timber that euer was wrought in thesame place, and so curiously garnished without & within.
Beside this, prouisions were made within the realme of Englãd and in Flaunders for vitaill, wine and all other thynges necessary for thesame.
And yet beside all this Orleaunce kyng of armes of Fraunce came into the court of England and made proclamation, that the kyng of Englãd and the French kyng, in a campe betwene Arde and Guysnes with. xviii aydes in June next ensuyng, should abyde all commers beyng gentelmen, at the tylt, and torney, and at barriers, and lyke proclamation was made by Clarenseaux kyng of Armes of Englande, in the Courte of Fraunce, and in the courte of Bourgoyne, and in diuerse other Courtes and places in Almain, and Italy. For turnyshyng of Justes, there was deuised a tilte and all thynges necessary for that enterprice, in a goodly playn betwene Guysnes and Arde.

Duryng the tyme of these preparations, newes were brought to the ki king that Charles his nephew elected Emperor of Almain would shor-tely depart out of Spain by sea, and come by Englande to go into Germany to receiue his firste Croune at Acon. Wherefore the kyng caused great prouisions to be made at euery haue, for the receiuyng of his wel-beloued nephew and frend, and daily prouisions were made on al sides.

for

foz these noble metynges of so hygh pzinces: and especially the quene of Englande and the Lady doʼwager of Fraunce, made gzeate coste on the apparell of their ladies and gentlewemen.

The first date of Febzuary being Candelmas euen, as the kyng and quene were come from euensong at their manour of Etenewiche, before the quenes chamber there blewe a trompet sodainly, and then entred into the Quenes chamber foure Gentelmen appareled in long and large garmentes of blewe damaske bozdered with gold, and bzought with the a tricke waggon, in the which sat a lady richely apareled with a canapy x ouer her hed, & on the.iiii. cozners of the waggon were.iiii. hed peces called Armites, euery pece beyng of a sundery deuice: thesaied lady put vp a bill to the kyng, the effecte wherof was that the.iiii. gentelmen present would foz the loue of their ladies answer al commers at the tilt at a day by the kyng to be apointed: whiche daie was apointed at shzofetide next ensuing. At whiche daie the fozesaid gentelman valiantly accomplished their enterpzice, with greate laudes of the kyng the quene and ladies.

In this yere the kyng beyng informed, that his realme of Irelande was out of ozdze, discharged the Erle of Kildare of his office of deputie, and therunto (by the meanes of the Cardinall as men thought) was ap-xi poynted therle of Surrey lozde Admiral, to whom the Cardinal did not owe the best fauour. Wherfoze thesaid erle of Surrey in the beginning of Apzil, tooke leaue of the kyng, and the duke of Nozffolke his father, and passed into Irelande, and had with him diuerse gentlemen, that had bene in the garrison of Tourney, and one hundzed yomen of the kynges garde, and other to the nombet of a thousande menne. Where he by hys manhod and wisedome, bzought the erle of Desmonde and diuerse other rebelles, to good confozmitie and ozdze: and there he continued in greate hardnes two yere and moze, in whiche space he had many battailes and skirmishes with the wild Irysshe.

xx When it was concluded that the kynges of Englande and Fraunce should mete, as you haue hard, then bothe the kynges committed the ozdze and maner of their metyng, and howe many daies they should mete, and what pzeheminence eche should geue to other, to the Cardinall of Yozke, whiche to set all thynges in a certauntie, made an instrument, the very true tenour whereof ensueth.

THE most noble and puisant kyng, kyng Henry the.viii. king of England and of Fraunce, the yere of our Lord, a. M. fiue hundred and .xx. and of his bodely age .xxix. yere, and the .xxii. daie of Apryl began the .xii. yere of his reigne ouer the realme of Englande, & halowed the daie of saintt George at the maner royal of Grenewych with the noble knightes of the Gartet in robes of the order.

The kyng intending and persieuering in purpose to mete with Frances the Frenche kyng greate and ryche prouisions were made, wherfore the noble kyng and the Quene with all the noble courte, remoued the twentie and one daie of May beyng on Mondaie, from their maner of Grenewyche, towardes the Sea side, and so on the Fryday beyng the twentie and fiue daie of May, arriued at the cytie of Cantorbury, intendying there to kepe his Pentecoste.

Sone after whiche comming to Cantorbury, tidynges wete brought that Charles Emperor electe, was on the sea, in sight of the coast of England, wherfore officers of the kyng were sent with great diligence to the Castle and toune of Douer, to be there in a redines against the arriuall of the Emperor.

The reuerent father in God my lorde Cardinall, came to the toune of Douer in hast with a nobell repayre, abidying the commyng of the Emperour, whiche Emperour, the Saterdaye beyng the .xxvi. daie of May arriued with all his nauie of shippes royall on the coast of Kent, directe to the toune or porte of Hieth thesaied daie by noone, where he was hayled by the noble knight sir William Fitzwilliam, vice admirall of Englande, with syxe of the kynges shippes well furnished, whiche laye for the safegarde of passage betwene Douer and Calcis, at the costes and charges of the kyng of Englande. Calmenes of the wether and lacke of wynde, caused that the Emperour might not so sone take lande at the porte of Douer, as he would haue dooen. Notwithstandyng towardes the euen he departed from his shyppes, and entered into his boate commyng towardes the lande, where in his comming to the lande: on the sea the reuerent father lorde Wolsay Cardinall and Legate, mete and receiued hym with suche reuerence, as to so noble a Prince appertetgned. Thus landed the Emperour Charles, vnder the clothe of his estate of the blacke Egle all splated on riche clothe of golde. In his retinue with hym, were many noble menne, and many fayre Ladyes of his bloud as princes and princesses, & one ladie as chiefe to be noted, was the princes Aulnion with many other nobles whiche landed with hym in high and ſumptuous maner and greate riches in their apparell: greate ioye made the people of Englande to ſee the Emperour, and more to ſee the benyng maner and mekenes of ſo high a prince.

Then when the Emperour thus had taken lande, the reuerente father lorde Cardynall was as conduite to theſame noble Emperour from the ſhore of Douer vnto the caſtell ther: then were all perſons chered the beſt that there in the towne might be.

After the departyng of The emperour to the lande from hys nauy, the apparell of euery ſhip then ſhewed, as flagges, banners, ſtremers & tar- x getes, then the mighty ordinaunce of euery of them brake oute by force of fyer as though the ſee had brente, maruelous was the noyſe of the gonnes.

The Emperour beyng thus in the caſtell of Douer, wyth haſt tidyn- ges came to the kyng where as he was at Cantorbury, who haſted hym towards the noble Emperour. And ſo came tidyng early in the morning to the caſtell of Douer, within which caſtell the kyng alighted: the Em- perour hering the king to be come, came out of his chamber to mete with the kyng, and ſo mete with him on the ſtayres or he could come vp, wher eche embraced other right louyngly: then the kyng brought the Emper- xx our to his chamber, where as ther communyng was of gladnes.

Sone after, theſe twoo noble princes on the Whitſonday early in the morenyng toke their horſe and rode to the Cytee of Cantorbury, the more to ſolempne the feaſt of Pentecoſt but ſpecially to ſee the quene of Eng- land his aunte was the intent of the Emperour.

The noble perſonages of the realme of Englande and the quene wyth her beautiful trayne of ladies receiued and welcommed the ſame Char- les elect Emperour, whoſe perſon was by the kyng conueighed to a faire and pleaſant chamber where theſayde Emperour apparelled hym right richely. Then the noble retynue of theſayde Emperour aſwell of lordes xx as ladyes were lodged, aſwell as there myght be wyth ioye and muche gladnes, and there in Cantorbury ſoiorned the Emperour and all hys trayne wyth the kyng, vntill the Thurſdaye in theſame weke.

The laſt daye of May beyng Thurſday, the Emperour toke leaue of the kyng and of all the ladyes, and gaue great thankes, and ſo rode to Sandewiche, and there toke his ſhippes, the wynd to hym was likynge, whereby he ſayled into Flaunders.

Then theſame daye, the kyng of Englande made ſaile from the porte of Douer and with noble apparaile landed at Calys at the hower of. xi. of the clock, and wyth hym the quene and ladyes and many nobles of xx the realme. And ſo was the kyng receiued into the Checker and there reſted: great repayre of noble men came to the towne of Caleys from the Frenche court, to ſe the kyng and to ſalute hym, which were of his grace, princely entretayned.

Mondaye the. iiij. daye of June the kynges grace with all the nobles aſwel aſwell the quene with her trayne of ladyes as other, with al the whole nõber of nobles remoued from Calis to his lordſhip royall of Guiſnes into the moſt noble and royal lodgynge beſore ſene, for it was a palays, the palays was quadrant, and euery quadrant of theſame palays was iij.C.xxviij. foote longe of a ſyſe, whiche was in compaſſe. xiij.C.&.xij. foote aboute. This palayce was ſette on ſtages by great connynge & ſumpteous wooꝛke. At the enterynge into the palays beſoꝛe the gate, on the playne grene was buylded a fountayne of enbowed woꝛke, gylte with fine golde, and bice, ingrayled with anticke woꝛkes, the olde God of wyne called Baccus birlyng the wyne, whiche by the conduyctes in therth ranne to al people plenteouſly with red, white, and claret wyne, ouer whoſe hedde was wꝛiten in letters of Romayn in gold, faicte bonne chere quy uouldra.

On the other hand oꝛ ſyde of the gate, was ſet a pyller which was of aunciẽt Romayne wooꝛke boꝛne with. iiij. Lyons of golde, the pyllers wꝛapped in a wꝛethe of golde curiouſly wꝛoughte and intrayled, & on the ſommet of theſayde pyller ſtode an image of ỹ blynde God Cupide wyth his bowe and arrowes of loue redy by his ſemynge, to Stryke the younge people to loue.

The foꝛgate of theſame palays oꝛ place with great and mighty maſonry by ſight was arched, with a tower on euery ſyde of theſame poꝛt rered by great craſte, and inbattayled was the gate and tower, & in the feneſtres & wyndowes were images reſemblynge men of warre redy to caſte greate ſtones: Alſo theſame gate oꝛ tower was ſet with cõpaſſed images of auncient Pꝛynces, as Hercules, Alexander and other by entrayled wooꝛke, ryche ly lymned wyth golde and Albyn colours, & well and warly was made ouer the gate loups, and enfoꝛced wyth batteylementes and in theſame gate a lodge foꝛ the poꝛter: whyche there appered and other, ſumpteouſly apparayled like vnto kynges officers.

By theſame gate, all people paſſed into a large courte fayꝛe & beautifull, foꝛ in this court appered much of the outward beutie of this place foꝛ from the firſte water table to the rayſyng oꝛ reſun pieces, was bay wyndowes on euery ſyde myxed with clere Stoꝛies, curiouſly glaſed, ỹ poſtes oꝛ monyelles of euery wyndow was gylte. Thus ỹ outward parte of the place lumyned ỹ eyes of the beholders, by reaſon of ỹ ſumptuous wooꝛke. Alſo the tower of the gate as ſemed, was buylded by greate maſonry, and by great engyne of mans wit, foꝛ the ſundꝛy counꝛtenañces of euery image that their appered, ſome ſhotyng, ſum caſtyng, ſume ready to ſtrike, and firynge of gonnes whiche ſhewed very hoꝛſume ready to ſtrike, and firynge of gonnes whiche ſhewed very hoꝛnoꝛably. Alſo all theſayd quadꝛantes, bayes and edifices, were royally entrayled, as farre as vnto theſame court appartayned. And dyrecte againſt the gate was deuiſed a hallpas, and at thentry of the ſtaier was images of ſoꝛe and terrible coũtenaunces, all armed in curious wooꝛke of argentyne. The bay of theſame halpas pendant by craſte of trimmer & vnder the trimmer, anticke images of gold enuyꝛoned wt verdour of Oliues cast in compas, mounsteryng their countenaunces towardes ye enteryng of the palaice. The staier of thesaied halpas was caste of passage by the wentes of brode steppes, so that from the firste foote or lowest steppe, a persone might without payn goo vnto the highest place of thesame halpas.

On euery hande was there chamber doores & enterynges into the chambers of thesame palais, which were long and large, and well proporcioned, to receiue light and aire at pleasure: the roofes of them from place to place, and chamber to chamber wer syled & couered wyth cloth of Silke, of the most faire and quicke inuencion that before that tyme was seen, for the grounde was white ingrailed, Inbowed and batoned with riche clothes of silkes knitte, and fret with cuttes and braides and sundery newe castes, that thesame clothes of silke shewed like bullions of fine burned golde & the roses in lossenges: that in thesame rose, were in kyndly course, furnished so to mannes sight that no liuyng creature might but ioye, in the beholdyng therof, for from the iawe peces of thesaied selyng: whiche pece was guilte with fine Golde, were woorkes in paan paled, all the walles to the creste encoũteryng the clere stories, the same creste which was of large depenes, the worke was antique knottes with bosses cast and wrought with more cunnyng then I can write, all which worckes and ouerages were gilte: and to set it the more to the glory, the florishyng Bise was comparable to the riche Ammell.

Also at the foote of thesame palaice was another creste all of fine sette gold whereon hanged riche & marueilous clothes of Arras wroughte of golde and silke, compassed of many auncient stories, with whiche clothes of Arras, euery wall and chamber were hanged, & all wyndowes so richely couered, that it passed all other sightes before seen. In euery chamber in place conuenient were clothes of estate, greate and large of clothe of golde, of Tissue, and riche embroudery, with Chaiers couered with like cloth, with pomelles of fine gold: and great Cushyns of riche woorke of the Turkey makynge, nothynge lacked of honourable furnishement.

Also to thesame palais was rered a Chapell with two closettes, the quire of thesaied Chapell siled with clothe of golde, and thereon frete ingrailed bent clothes of Silke, all was then silke and golde. The aultars of this Chapell were hanged with riche reuesture of cloth of gold of Tissue, embroudered with pearles. Ouer the high aultare was hanged a riche Canaby of merueilous greatnes, the aultare was appareled with fiue paire of Candelstickes of golde, and on the aultare an halpas and thereon stode a Corpus domini, all fine golde, and on thesame halpas stoode twelfe Images of the bignes of a childe of foure yeres of age all gold: And all the Coopes and Uestementes so riche as might be prepared or bought in the citie of Florens, for all the copes and Uestementes wer but of one pece, so wouen for the purpose, cloth of Tissue & poudered with redde Roses purled with fine golde; the Ofrys sette with pearles and precious stones. And all the walles and deskes of his Chapell was hanged with right Clothe of golde, & three ryche greate Crosses were there ready to be borne at festiual times, and basyns and Sensers, Gospellers, Paxes, Crewetes, holy Water vessels, & other ornamentes all of gold.

Also in the fyrst Closet was a trauerse for the kynges person of cloth of golde: And within that the kynges place and Chaire, with Cusshins of clothe of golde: before the trauerse was an altare of presence, whiche Aultare was adourned with clothe of brouderie, & riche Pearles and x precious stones, set in goldesmithes woorke of fine golde. On the aultare was a deske or halpace, whereon stoode a patible of the Crucifix of fine golde, with an Image of the Trinitee, an Image of oure Lady, & twelue other Images all fine golde and precious stones, twoo paire of Candelsticks of fine golde, with Basens, Crewettes, Paxes, & other Ornamētes, thesaied Closet was hanged with Tappettes embraudered with riche woorke fret with pearles and stones, the roffe of thesame Closet was siled with woorke of Inmouled, gylte with fine Golde and Senapar and Bice.

The seconde Closette was for the quenes persone, in whiche was a xx trauerse of riche clothe of golde, the aultare so richely apparcled, that there lacked neither Pearles nor Stones of riches: on the aultar were twelue greate Images of golde, the Closet hanged with clothe of gold all other iewelles Myssall, I suppose neuer suche like were seen, & the rooffe of thesame closet was siled with like woorke that ỹ kynges closet was as is before rehersed.

And from this palaice or place into the mightie and stronge fortresse and Castle royall of Guisnes, was a galery for the secrete passage of the kynges persone into a secret lodgyng within thesame Castle the more for the kynges ease.

xxx Also to this palaice was all houses of offices, that to suche an honourable Courte should apperteigne, that is to wete, the lord Chaumberlaine, lorde Steward, lorde Threasourer of the houshold, for the Comptroller and office of grene Clothe, Wardroppes, Iuell house, and office of houshold seruice, as Ewery, Pantrie, Seller, Buttery, Spicery, pitcher house, Larder and Poultrie, and all other offices large and faire that the officers might and did marueiles, as in the craft of viandes, by Ouens, harthes, reredorses, Chimnayes, Ranges, and such instrumētes that there was ordained. In this Palaice as ye haue hearde, was ỹ kynges grace lodged & all the nobles after their degrees. And for that xl the toune of Guysnes was litle, and that all the noble menne might not there be lodged, theisette vp tentes in the felde, to the nōber of twentie and eight hundred sundery lodgynges, whiche was a goodly sighte. Thus was the kyng in hys Palais royall at Guysnes.

mynge,many tentes, hales & pauilions,were set and pight in the felde. On ỹ French partie also,there was at thesame toune of Arde buylded the Frenche kynges lodgyng full well,but not finished,muche was the prouisions in Picardy on euery part through all. The French kyng cõ- maunded his lodgyng to be made,a litle out of the toune of Arde in the territorie of an old castle,whiche by the war of old time had been beatẽ. On thesame place was edified a house of solas and sporte, of large and mightie compas,which was chiefly sustained by a great mightie maste, wherby the greate ropes & takell strained, thesame maste was staied. All the rosse of thesame house hong on thesame Maste, and with takell was strained & borne,by the suppoꝛters of thesame Maste oꝛ tree, the colours of thesame was all blewe,set with starres of gold foyle,and the Oꝛbes of the heauens by ỹ crafte of colours in the rosse, were curiosly wꝛought in maner like the sky, oꝛ firmamen, & a cresant strained sum- dell towardes ỹ toune of Arde,this cresant was couered with frettes and knottes made of Iue bushes,and boxe bꝛaunches,and other thyn- ges that longest would be grene foꝛ plealure. x

In this tyme the reuerent father loꝛde Thomas Wolsay Cardinall & legate a Latere as the kynges high ambassadoꝛ rode with noble re- paire of loꝛdes, gentlemen & pꝛelates to the toune of Arde,to ỹ French xx courte where of the Frenche kyng,thesame loꝛd Cardinall was highly enterteined. Of the noblenes of this Cardinall,the Frenchemen made bokes,shewyng the triumphant doynges of the Cardinalles royaltie. The nomber of the gentlemen,knightes and loꝛdes al in crimosyn bel- uet,with the marueilous nomber of chaines of golde, the great Hoꝛse, Mules, Courlers, & cariages , that there were,which went befoꝛe the Cardinalles commyng into Arde with sumters & cofers. Of his great Crosses and Pillers boꝛne,the pillowe bere oꝛ case bꝛoudered,the two mantelles,with other the Ceremoniall Offices, with greate & honou- rable nomber of bishoppes geuyng their attendaunce,the mightie and xxx great nomber of seruaũtes,as yomen,gromes, all clothed in Scarlet who so redeth of the Frenche boke,shall finde wonderfully set furthe.

The kyng of England beeyng at the Castle of Guysnes in the newe palais,many noble men of the Frenche court resoꝛted to his grace,to se the kyng of England and the quene,and to salute thẽ:who of the kyng of Englande were well entertained.

When the loꝛd Cardinall had soiourned at Arde in the Frence court by the space of twoo daies , and the high and vrgent pꝛincely causes in counsaill declared,the loꝛd Cardinal toke his leaue of the French kyng and of all the Frenche courte , & repaired vnto the Castle of Guysnes, xl where he founde the kyng of England his souereigne Loꝛde. And the- same kyng by his letters patentes,had geuen full power and aucthoꝛi- tie to thesame loꝛd Cardinall , concernyng all matters to bee debated, touchyng the kyng and the realme,and also gaue vnto thesame Cardi- nall,full strenght,power,and aucthoꝛitie, to affirme & confirme,bynde,

and vnbynde,what soeuer shoulde be in question,betwene hym and the French kyng,as though the kyng in proper person had been there presently.

When the lordes of the Frenche counsaill, sawe the high and greate aucthoritie that the Cardinall had, thei shewed it vnto ỹ French kyng, who incontinēt commaunded his commission to be made,of like power and aucthoritie,that the kyng of Englāde had geuen vnto thesaid lord Cardinall:thesame power & aucthoritie had thesame reuerent father, geuen to hym by Fraunces the French kyng,and affirmed by the counx saill royall of Fraunce: Then hastely was sent to the kyng of Englande the Frenche kynges patent,for the lorde Cardinall saied humbly to the Frenche kyng,that he would no suche power receiue, without the consent of the kynge of England his souereigne Lord: but when the kyng of Englande and his counsaill,had seen and vewed the French kynges Patent,and well considered, then he sent thesame Patent of power to tde lorde Cardinall with full assent:then the lord Cardinall the power receiued with much gladnes. It was highly estemed & taken for great loue that the Frenche kyng had geuen so greate power to the kynge of Englandes subiect.

xx Thursday the seuenth day of June,in the vale of Andren,within the lordeship royall of Guysnes,before daie was set and pight a royall rich tent,all of clothe of gold,and riche embroudery of the kyng of Englandes,and diuerse other hales and pauilions:thesame riche tente of gold was within hanged of the richest Arras,newly contriued & made, that euer before was seen,and a presence of the kynges estate,with two chayers & riche cusshyns therein:the ground was spred with Carpettes, of newe Turkey makyn,all of beautie.

But here is to be noted,that in this meane season in all the feldes about,bothe nigh and far,wer many of the French gard, ridyng and bexx holdyng the maner of the Englishe parte,some of the kynges gard,and some of the duke of Burbons gard,and some of the Admirall of Fraunces Gard,whiche slily marked the conueighaunce of the people of Englande. At the houre of metyng appoynted,the Lordes of England set their people and seruauntes in good arraie of battaill, in a plain felde directly before the castle of Guysnes. The kyng of England commaundded that his Garde should bee set in the breste of the battaill, or bend of footemen, & so it was doen. This battaill of footemen conducted themselfes so in ordre, that from the firste to the laste, neuer a person of the footemen brake his place or arraie, but kept theimselfes so well, that xxi neuer seruyng men theimselfes better demeaned. The seruynge men thus set in ordre in the felde, on the left hande of the kyng of Englande, somewhat towarde the Marres, longe while thus abidyng, in whych tyme the Castle of Guysnes shot a warnyng pece to the toune of Arde, and in lykewyse the Toune of Arde gaue warnynge to the Castle of Guysnes.

Now was gathered the Frenche kynges repaire, and by the Lord Marshall and Constable of Fraunce, the Lordes, and gentlemen were set in ordre: thus bothe these two high and mightie princes, intendyng to mete and assemble, many woordes and tales, and suspect demeaninges arose in the Englishe partie, for the great loue that we the English men had to our Prince, caused the ignoraunt people that wer not worthy to know the pretence of princes, to suspecte the Frenche partie, and the more because that Monsire Chatelion a Lord of Fraunce, in rigorous and cruell maner, threwe doune foure pennons of white & grene which were set vp by Richarde Gibson, by commaundement from the kynge for the suer marke or metyng place of the twoo kynges, in what grounde they shoulde encounter, woordes rose betwene Monsire Chatelion and Richarde Gibson, as farre as became for that deede, but at the commaundement of the Earle Marshall for that tyme, which was the noble Earle of Esser, the kynge of Englandes cosyn, that wronge by vs Englishemenne was paciently suffered, thus from tyme to tyme, and watche to watche, and bewe to bewe, the houre drewe nere, that was by bothe the Princes appoynted, of metyng or encountre.

Wherefore the kyng of Englande oure souereigne Lorde, with all the Court of nobles of England mounted on horsebacke, and marched towardes the baley of Andern in honourable ordre, all Gentle menne, Squiers, Knightes, and Barons, roade before the kynge and bishoppes also, the Dukes, Marques and Erles, gaue attendaunce next the kynge. He were muche wyse that coulde haue tolde or shewed of the riches of apparell that was emongest the Lordes and Gentlemenne of Englande, Clothe of Golde, Clothe of Siluer, Veluettes, Tinsins, Sattins embroudered, and Crymosyn Sattens: The marueilous threasor of Golde that was worne in Chaynes and Bauderickes, so greate, so weightie, some so manifolde, some in Colers of. S. greate, that the Golde was innumerable to my demynge to be summed, of all noble menne, Gentlememne, Squiers, Knightes, and euery honeste Officer of the kynge was richely appareled, and had Chaynes of Golde, greate and meruelous waightie: what shoulde bee sayed? surely emong the Englishemen lacked no riches, nor beautifull apparell or aray, and alwayes as the kynge of Englande and hys horsemenne marched, so pace for pace marched the moste goodly battayll or bend of foote men (out of defensable apparell) that euer I trowe before was seen.

The Frenche kyng on his partie marched towardes the encountre with all the ruffelers and gallantes of the Frenche Courte. In which tyme came to the Frenche kyng some reporte, that caused him to tarry, and alight from hys Horse, then the Frenchemen were very doubtfull and in a staye so still rested, vntill a Lorde of Fraunce called Monsire Morret, the saied Morret came to the Frenche kyng, and shewed him the very fidelitie of the kyng of England, whereby the Frenche kynge

mounted on horsebacke, and the better couraged, marched towardes the place appoynted of encountre.

Thus in marchyng thone kyng to the other, to the kyng of England came lord George Neuell lorde Aburgheny, and openly saied, sir ye be my kyng and souereigne, wherefore aboue all I am bounden to shewe you truthe, and not to let for none, I haue been in the Frenche partie, and they be mo in nomber, double so many, as ye bee: with that was the Erle of Shrewesbery Lorde Stewarde ready and saied, sir, whatsoeuer my Lorde of Burgheny saieth, I my selfe haue been there, and the x Frenchemenne bee more in feare of you and youre subiectes, then your subiectes bee of them, wherefore saied the Earle, yf I were worthie to geue counsaill, your grace shoulde marche forwarde, so we intende my Lord sayed the kyng: then the Officers of Armes cried on afore, then in shorte while was the kyng on the banke of Andern: thē euery gentleman as they roade toke his place, and stoode still side by side, their regard or face towardes the vale of Andern.

Then the kyng of England shewed hymselfe somedele forwarde in xi beautie and personage, the moste goodliest Prince that euer reigned ouer the Realme of Englande: his grace was apparelled in a garment of Clothe of Siluer, of Damaske, ribbed wyth Clothe of Golde, so thicke as might bee, the garment was large, and plited verie thicke, and canteled of very good intaile, of suche shape and makynge, that it was marueilous to beholde. The Courser whiche hys grace roade on, was Trapped in a marueilous vesture of a newe deuised fashion, the Trapper was of fine Golde in Bullion, curiously wrought, pounced and sette with anticke worke of Romayne figures. Attendyng on the kynges grace of Englande, was the Master of his horse, by name Sr Henry Guylford, leadyng the kynges spare horse, the which horse was xxx Trapped in a Mantellet bront and backe place, al of fine golde in Scafers, of deuice with Tasselles on Cordelles pendaunt, the Sadell was of thesame suite and woorke, so was the hedde stall and raynes. After folowed nyne henrce menne, ridyng on Coursers of Naples, thesame young Gentlemen were appareled in riche Clothe of Tissue, the Coursers in Harneis of marueilous fashion, scaled in fine Golde in Bullion, and workes subtile more then my sighte couide contrue, & all thesame horse Harneis were sette full of tremblyng spanges that were large & faire. The Lorde Marques Dorset bare the kynges sweard of estate before the kynges grace, the reuerent father Lorde Cardinall did hys attendaunce.

xl Thus in litle tyme, abidyng the commyng of the Frenche kynge and his, the which in shorte tyme came with greate nomber of horsemen ie, freshely apparelled, the Frenche kyng & his retayne, put themselfes in place appoynted, direct against the Englishe partie, beholdyng euery other of bothe nations, the Frenchemenne mused muche of the battaill of the foote menne, and euery of the Frenchemen to other spake of the multitude of the englishe men whyche semed greate, yet were not they so many as the Frenche partie.

When the Frenche kyng had a litle beholden the Englishe men, he put hymself some what before his people, that were there on him attẽdaunt, the Duke of Burbon bearynge a naked Swearde vpright, the Lorde Amirall of Fraunce, and the Countie Colmen Galias, Master of the Frenche kynges horse, and no mo persones gaue their attẽdance in passyng with the Frenche kyng: whẽ it was perceiued that the Frẽch kynges swearde was borne naked, then the kynge of Englande commaunded the lord Marques Dorset to drawe out the sweard of estate, & and beare it vp naked in presence, whiche was so doen.

Then vp blewe the Trumpettes, Sagbuttes, Clarions, & all other Minstrelles on bothe sides, and the kynges descended doune towarde the bottome of the valey of Andern, in sight of bothe the nacions and on horsebacke met and embraced the twoo kynges eache other: then the two kynges alighted, & after embraced with benyng and curteous maner eche to other, with swete & goodly woordes of gretyng: and after fewe woordes, these two noble kynges went together into the riche tente of clothe of golde, that there was set on the grounde for such purpose, thus arme in arme went the Frenche kyng Fraunces the firste of & Fraunce, and Henry the eight kyng of Englande and of Fraunce, together passyng with communicacion.

When the two princes were in the tente, before rehersed, the French kyng saied, my dere brother and Cosyn, thus farre to my paine haue I trauailed to se you personally, I thinke verely that you esteme me as I am. And that I maye to you be your aide, the realmes and seigniories shewe the might of my persone: Sir said the kyng of England, neyther your realmes nor other the places of your power, is the matter of my regarde, but the stedfastnes & loyall keppynge of promesse, compriſed in Charters betwene you and me: that obserued and kepte, I neuer sawe & Prince with myn yen, that might of my harte bee more loued. And for your loue I haue passed the seas, into the fardest frontier of my realme to se you presently, the whiche dooyng now gladdeth me. And thẽ wer the twoo kynges serued with a banket, & after mirthe, had communicacion in the Banket tyme, and there shewed the one the other their pleasure.

The Englishe officers went and ranne with greate pottes of Wyne, and Bolles to the Frenche menne, and them chered the best that might bee, all this season stoode still the noble men of the Englishe partie, and all other, and from their places moued nothyng that thei were appointed vnto. And the seruyng men in lykewise, not once moued from their ground or standyng, but the Frenchemen sodainly brake, and many of them came into the Englishe partie, speakyng faire, but for all that, the court of Englande and the lordes, kept still their arraie.

After the two kynges had ended the banket, and spice and wyne geuen uen to the Frenchemen, Ipocras was chief drinke of plentie, to all that would drinke. In open sight thē came the two kynges, that is to wete: the Frenche kyng, & the kyng of England, out of their tent, by whiche I then well perceiued thabiliment royall of the Frenche kyng. his garment was a chemew, of clothe of siluer, culpond with clothe of golde, of damaske cantell wise, and garded on the bordours with the Burgon bendes, and ouer that a cloke of broched satten, with gold of purple coloure, wrapped about his body trauerse, beded from the shulder to the waste, fastened in the lope of the first fold: this said cloke was richely set x with pearles and precious stones: this Frenche kyng had on his hed a koyfe of damaske gold set with diamondes, & his courser that he rode on was couered with a trapper of Tissue, broudered with deuise, cut in fashion mātel wise, the skirtes were embowed & fret with frised worke, & knit with Cordelles, & buttons tasseled of Turkey makyng, Raines & hedstall, answeryng of like woorke: & verely of his persone thesame Fraunces the Frenche kyng, a goodly Prince, stately of countenaunce, mery of chere, broune coloured, great yes, high nosed, bigge lipped, faire brested and shoulders, small legges, and long fete.

All the nobles of the Frenche courte, were in garmētes of many co-xx lours, so that thei were not knowē from the braggery: thus as the two kynges were in communicatiō, diuerse noble men of England were called to presence. And then the two kynges departed with their compaignie, the kyng of Englande to Guysnes, the Frenche kyng to Arde.

Saterdaie the.ix.daie of June in a place within the Englishe pale were set and pight in a felde, called the campe, two trees of much honor the one called the Aubespine, and the other called the Framboister, whyche is in English the Hathorne, whiche was Henry, and the Raspis berry for Fraunces, after the significacion of the Frenche, these twoo trees were mixed one with ỹ other together on a high mountaigne, couered with xxx grene Damaske, thesame Trees were artificially wrought resemblyng the nature of thesame as nigh as could be, the leaues were grene Damaske, the braunches, bowes, and withered leaues of clothe of gold and all the bodies and armes of thesame clothe of golde, laied on tymber, thei were in heigth frō the foote to the toppe. xxxiiij. foote of assise, in compasse aboute an hundred twentie and nyne foote, & from bough to bough, fourtie & three foote: on these trees were flowers & fruites, wrought in kyndly wise with siluer and Uenice gold, their beautie shewed farre: on the mountaigne was a place harber wise, where the Heraulde were, the mountaigne was rayled about, & the raile couered xl with grene Damaske.

Thesame day the two noble kynges came to thesame trees of honor with great triumphe, accompaignied with diuerse nobles & yonge baliauntes, before whom were their shildes caried, & after borne aboute the listes, and set on the highest place, shewyng into the feldes, ỹ kynge of Englandes armes within a Gartier, and the French kynges within a Coller of his ordre of sainct Michael, with a close Croune, with a Flower delice in the toppe. The Campe was in length nyne hundred foote and in bredth three hundred and twentie foote, ditched rounde about, sauyng at the entrees with broade and depe diches, diuerse skaffoldes were rered aboute thys Campe, for the ease of the nobles: on the right side of the felde stood the quene of England, and the quene of Fraunce with many ladies. Thesame Campe was railed & bard on euery ende strongly, there was twoo lodgynges in the entery of thesame felde, for the twoo kynges richely adourned, which were vnto them very necessarie, for therein thei armed theimselfes and toke their ease: also in the- x same compasse was two greate Sellers couched full of wyne, whyche was to all men as largesse as the fountain.

a Coller

The cause of the settyng vp of the twoo greate shildes with armes Royall, was for ioye of the honourable metyng, there to passe the tyme from idlenes, with the exercise of noble feactes of Armes in honour, articles of Justes, Turnayes, battailes on foote at the Barres and suche victorious feactes were farre in Realmes Proclaimed, whyche caused muche people of noble courage thether to resorte: the twoo kynges as brethren in armes, vndertoke to deliuer all personages of thesame feactes, and to thesame twoo kynges by the ordre of armes were sociate, xx

When the speares were xl spent, then swordes to them were geuen. Then preased to the Barriers the two valyaunte kynges, and other, then was no tarynge but fought with suche force that the fier sprang out of their armure. Thus bende after bende they were all deliuered by the two noble kinges and their aydes of retayne.

Then in came a bend with two hande swordes and castinge dartes to answere to that chalenge.xij.menne wel armed,which preced to the barriers & mightely threw theyr speares the one to the other,ready or not ready,none fauored other more then two enemies or at vtterance, and euer still two for twoo,til al were deliuered concernynge the chalenge,so this same two kinges safe in body and limmes ended the battaill for that daye at the barriers wyth great honor.

Al men of armes passed and departed for that time, much preparacion was made there,as setting vp tentes, hales, and other places for furnishyng of houses of offices,and chambers of estates for the kynges & and quenes,& also thesame night was in the campe rered a large frame of tymber worke for a chapell place, whyche was siled w ryche clothes embrodered,wherin was made a stage of two degrees,with the chaire and cloth of state for the lorde Cardinall, the alter apparelled wyth all Iuelles missal of greate riches,thesame chapel thus finished the. xxiij. day of June beyng Satterday,at houre conuenient,the said lord Cardinal sang an highe and solempne masse by note before the two kynges and quenes:thesame done,Indulgence was geuen to all hearers, the two kynges together associate tooke their chamber. Of thys masse in Flaunders arose muche communication,in so muche that the common xx voyce went,how the.ij.kinges wer sworne together on the sacrament whyche was contrary,for the masse was for none other entent then to geue Indulgence to the kynges.

When tyme was,the two kynges washed and satte to meat vnder their clothes of estate,where they were rychly serued,the royaltie of ye fare and the ryches of vessel,plate and Iuelles surmounteth the witte of mā to expresse:the quenes in another Chamber wer serued with no lesse honor,the dyner ended,thesayd straūgers royally apparelled,presented them selfes in places of estate.

To tel you the apparel of the ladies,their rych attyres,their sumptuous Iuelles, their diuersities of beauties,and the goodly behauyor from day to day syth the first meting,I assure you ten mennes wyttes can scace declare it. xxx

The two noble kinges put them selfes in armes with their bend and entered the felde on foote,before the barriers,then entered the bendes of men of armes in armur ryght rychly,then al was ready and the two kynges at the barriers ready to fyght ryght noblye. Thys daye was deliuered at barriers by battail,a.C.&.vj.persones,the.ij.last battails did the kynges. The kyng of England with few strokes disarmed his counter partie. The French kyng likewyse bare him self right valiantly. Thus thesayd satterday was fully ended, and all men deliuered of articles of Iustes and all Turneys and battailes on foote by thesayde two noble kynges. xl

After this chalenge honorably performed,the kynges prepared di-uers maskers, and especially of the king of England, had.iiij. cõpanies, and in euery company.x. persones apparelled as you shall heare.

The firste persone of the firste.x. was appareilled like Hercules in a shirt of siluer of damaske writen in letters of purple about the border, en femes & infauntes cy petit assurance, whyche in Englyshe is as muche to saye: In women and childzen is litle assuraunce: he had on his head a whode with a garlonde of grene damaske cutte into leaues like Vyne leaues and Hawthorne leaues, in hys hande a club couered wyth grene damaske full of pzickes: the Lyons skyn aboute his backe was of cloth of Ouer that ỹ said.x. persones had euery one a large mantle oz Robe of crimosyn satten enbzodered full of fygures of golde and on their heades bonettes of stoole wozke of gold of damaske, and euery one had on hys vyser a berde of golde wyth with whoddes and buskyns of crimosyn Satten.

Thus the kynge of England, and.xix. noblemen

with hym and his sister Quene Marye do wager of Fraunce and .xix. ladies with her like maskers apparelled as you haue heard, all mouted on horses trapped in veluet white and yelow, and euermore a lord and a lady rydyng together, with mynstrelsie departed out of Guysnes on sonday the .xxiiii. day of June and toke their way toward Arde, and in the way on the banke of Anderne these maskers met with the Frenche kyng, beyng in a chariot with .xxviii. persones richely apparelled in Maskyng apparell, and eche compaigny passed by other without any countenaunce makyng or disuiseryng.

The Frenche kyng and his compaignie went to Guysnes, the king of England to Arde, where his maiestie was receiued into the French court, and brought into the chamber of riche apparell, where at the instance of the French Quene the kinge and al hys, them disuisered and shewed theyr faces, and al the ladies of England likewyse, then began feast & chere to aryse, the king of England was set, and after all the ladies and Maskers of England, and were nobly serued of many straūge meates: After diner began the daunces in passing the tyme ioyously e.

The French Maskers apparel was not all of one suite, but of seueral fashions, of diuers silkes, some cut, some broched, some had plumes that were very fayre, but very beautifull was the syght.

The Frenche kinge and his company was then at Guisnes, where the quene of England met and welcomed them. Then the French king and his Maskers shewed themselfes bare faced, and when the Quene them saw she did then the more reuerence. Greate was the chere that then was there. After dyner and daunces done, the French king drew him self into a secret chamber & put from hym his appparel of maskery and toke to him hys apparell of vsaunce, in the whyche were many fair Emeraudes, this done, he toke his leaue of the quene, and on the court he loked with a high countenaunce and so departed, the lord Cardinal and the duke of Buckingham hym conductinge, the king of Englande, this tyme durynge, was at Arde, where he passed the time with much solas. At tyme conuenient he toke leaue of the Frenchmen & all other of the frēch court, and after they had visered them selfes they rode nobly thus apparelled through the towne of Arde, and so passed till they came to the campe, where as all the chalenges were finished, and there the French kyng perceiuing the cōmyng of the English maskers, stode still beholding them. Then the kyng of Englande put of his viser and preased vnto the French king: then the two kinges embraced and amiably together communed, after which communicacion eyther of other by kyngelye salutynge tooke leaue, and for remembraunce eyther to other gaue gyftes. The kynge of England gaue to the Frenche kynge a colloure of Jewels of precyouse stoones called Balastes the Sanker furnyshed wyth greate Dyamantes and Perles. The Frenche kynge gaue to the kynge of Englande a Bracelet of precyouse stones, riche Jewels and fayre, and so departed thesayde two noble kynges,

the sayd.xxiij.day of June, which was sonday and Midsomer day.

During this triumph so much people of Picardie and West Flaunders drew to Guysnes to se ỹ kyng of England & his honor, to whō vitailes of the court were in plentie, the conduicte of the gate rāne wyne alwayes, there wer bacaboundes, plowmen, laborers & of the bragery wagoners & beggers that for drunkennes lay in routes and heapes, so great resort thether came, that both knightes aud ladies ỹ were come to se ỹ noblenes, were fayne to lye in hay and strawe, and helde theim therof hyghly pleased. From the court of the Emperor, nor of the lady x Margarete court, nor of Flaunders, Brabāt nor Burgoin came neuer a persone to aunswere to the chalenge: By that it semed that ther was smal loue betwene the Emperor and the Frenche kynge: Moreouer Mounsire Fayot captayne of Boleyn wyth Mounsyre Chattelon did theyr deuoyer to haue taken the toune of sainct Omer, of which doyng was thought no goodes to the Emperor.

Monday the.xxb.day of June, the kyng of England & the Quene & al the court remoued frō Guysnes to the toune of Caleys & ther made the king his abode, where was concluded the metinge of the Emperor with the kyng, wherfore was made newe and great prouisions.

xx In the tyme of the triumph there was a muttering that the toune of Caleys should be rēdred into the French kynges hādes, & for trueth ỹ Frēchmen so spake & sayd, wherwith many Englishmē wer greued.

While the king lay thus in Caleys, he considered the charge of hys nobles, and thought that lesse nombre of seruauntes would now serue them for the tyme of his abode, and so caused the Cardinal to cal al the gentlemen before him, whiche in the kinges name gaue to theim thankes with much commendacions, and for eschewing of coste, because the king taried but the Emperors cōminge, he licensed them to send home the halfe nombre of their seruauntes & bad them after their long charxxx ges to liue warely, this terme warely was amongest the most part taken for barely, at which saying the gentlemen sore disdayned.

Thus in Caleys rested the king & the quene vntil ỹ.x.day of July. Then ỹ kinges grace with goodly repayr rode to the toune of Graueling in Flaunders ther that night to rest & se the Emperor, on ỹ kynge wer wayting the lorde Cardinall, Dukes, Marquises, Erles, bishops, Barons, knightes, and gentlemē. The noble Emperor passed the water of Graueling, and at a place called Wael, there he mete & receyued the kinge of Englande, the Emperor made such semblant of loue to all the court of Englande that he wan the loue of thenglishmē, & so passed xl the Emperor and the king of England to Graueling, where the kynge lodged the best that might be, all lordes, gentlemen, yomen, & all sortes of Englishmen from ỹ highest to the lowest were so chered and feasted, with so louing maner that much they praysed Themperors court. In Grauelyng was the Emperors Aunte Margarete, she welcomed the kinge and other noble men of the realme.

When

When the French king and his lordes had knowlege of ỹ metynge of the Emperor and the kyng of England in the towne of Grauelinge, they were therwith greately greued, as by many thinges appered for after the Englishmen were in Fraunce disdained, & in their suites ther greatly deferred and had litle right and muche lesse fauor, so from day to day still more and more began hartburnning, and in conclusion open warre did arryse betwene the two realmes.

Wednisday the. xj. day of July, the Emperor & the lady Margaret came with the king of England to the toune of Caleys, the Emperor & the lady Margaret were lodged in Staple hal, and al gentlemen and other lodged in other places right well prepared of all necessaries for their cõming: & for solas was buylded a banqueting house. 800. foote round, after a goodly deuyse, builded vpon Maskes of shyppes in suche maner as I thinke was neuer sene, for in it was the whole speare portrated, which by reason of the great winde that blewe, coulde not be acheued, thesame day at night, the king & .xb. persones wer apparelled all in black Ueluet couered with cloth of golde, cut on the veluet, fastened w̃ knottes of gold, on the whiche knottes honge spangels of golde lyke tuftes and bonettes of thesame and clokes of crimosyn Satten & cloth of gold wrapped trauers, and their buskyns of thesame clothe of gold. All these lusty maskers went to the Emperors lodging and were receiued and in the chambre of presens daunced and reuelled, the which at the Emperors request, the kinge and other theimselues disuisered, whereby the king was knowen: then the kynge toke his leaue and departed for that nyght.

Tewsday the. xij. day of July, because the banquet house could not be finished, the Emperor and the lady margaret supped with the king & the quene at the checker, where thesame night after supper reuelled lxxxvi. Maskers: after the reuelles was a bãquet: After whych banket the kyng brought the Emperor and the lady Margaret to ỹ Staple, and after withdrew hym.

This night was. viij. compaignyes of maskers, and in euery compaignie. xij. persones all in gold, siluer and veluet rychely appareilled, but because the rome was small, the shew was the lesse.

In these reuelles were put in maskers apparel diuers gentlemen of the French court vnweting to ỹ kyng or any other that bare rule, for diuers yong gentlemen of the French court fauored more the Frenche partie, then the Emperors partie, through which meanes thei saw and much more heard then they should haue done.

Friday, the. xiij. day of July, the Emperor did entẽd to haue departed from Caleys, but the counsail was suche that he departed not that night. The charters before tyme concluded, there were redde, and to the Emperor declared al the whole articles of high peace & league tripertite, to which the French kynge had assented and fully contented, & for the more exemplificacion of thesame, he sent the lorde de Roche wyth let-letters of credēce to signifie to the Emperors Maiestie that to thesame articles he the Frenche kyng promised in the worde of a king as prince faythfull, to obserue & kepe for him and his realme & subiectes. Thus by the lord de Roche in the Emperors presēce & before the king of England in the name of his master there shewed the Frenche kynges will in the toune of Caleys with many high and vrgent causes concernyng the princes, whereby the Emperor went not out of Calays that night, by whiche abode the emperors seruauntes were muche in doubt of the Emperors persone.

x Saterday the .xiiij. day of July, about none ỹ Emperor toke leaue of the quene of England his aunte and of her traine of ladies, the kyng with all his nobles conducted the Emperor on his way to a billage towardes Flaūders called Wael, wher the Emperor enbraced the kyng, and him betoke to almightie God, and the kyng gaue to him a courser of Naples richely apparelled.

The kyng toke leaue of the Duches of Sauoye great aunte to the Emperor and of all nobles of the Emperors court, & so departed, smal tyme in Calayce the kyng made abode, but in goodly hast shipped and with te quene and all other nobles in safetie tooke lande. And after xx passed the tyme of Sommer with huntyng and other sportes honorably and made no great iestes this yere.

This yere the kynge kept his Christmas at his Maner of Grenewiche with muche noblenes & open court. And the .x. day of Febuary in his owne person Jusied to all comers, and the .xij. day his grace and therle of Deuonshyre with .iiij. aydes answered at the Turnay all comers which were .xvj. persones, noble and riche was their apparel, but in feates of armes the kyng excelled the rest.

In this tyme was Edwarde Duke of Buckyngham accused to the kyng of high treason, wherfore the kynges grace by the aduise of hys xxx cousail, sent & directed his letters to the sayd duke, beyng at his maner of Thornbury in the countie of Glocester, that incontinent he shoulde come to his presence all excuses layde aside. Also the kynge gaue commaundement to sir Willyam Cumpton, sir Richard Weston, and Sir Willyam Kyngston knightes for the kynges bodye, to take with them secret power and also seriauntes at armes, and that thei shoulde wisely take hede that whē the duke had receiued the kynges letters, he should not conuey hymselfe, whiche they wisely accomplished. The duke of Buckyngha accused.

The sayd Duke vpon the sight of the kynges letters remoued, & sojnied tyll he came to Wyndsore, and there offered at. S. George, and xl alwayes not farre from him awaityng his demeanor, were thesame knightes lyng. The Duke lodged in Wyndsore for that night, and as it was well proued, he meruailously feared, inso muche that he called vnto him a seruaunt of the kynges named Thomas Ward, thesame Thomas Ward was gentleman Herbenger for the kyng, and demaūded of him what he made there, who answered, saiyng that ther lay his office, there the duke perceiued that he could not escape. And so muche was he in spirit troubled that as he was at breakefast his meat would not doune, yet he made good countenaunce, and shortly toke his horse, and so rode till he came to Tothill besides Westminster where he toke his barge: before this tyme was the dukes chauncellour taken and as a prisoner kept in the tower, whiche had confessed matter of high treason concernyng the kynges persone.

When the Duke was in his barge, he commaunded to lande at my lorde Cardinals bridge, where he landed wyth foure or fiue of his seruauntes, desiryng to see the same lorde Cardinall, but to hym was answered how the same lorde was diseased, well sayd the duke yet wyll I drynke of my lordes wyne or I passe, then a Gentleman of my Lordes brought the Duke with muche reuerence into the Seller, where the duke dranke.

When he sawe and perceiued no chere to him was made, he chaunged colour and so departed to hys barge, saiynge to his seruauntes, I meruaill where my chauncellor is, that he cõmeth not to me, not knowynge that he was in prison.

The duke thus in his barge cõmyng towardes London, sir Henry Warney capitaine of the kynges Garde, on him attendyng. C. yomen of the kynges garde in a barge on the ryuer of Thames met the same duke, and without abode borded the dukes barge & hym in the kynges name attached. And then from him were put his seruauntes, and the duke was brought to the Hale wharfe and there landed, the dukes seruauntes were commaunded to go to the Maner of the Rose in saincte Larence Pountnay, and there to abide till the kynges pleasure were further knowen.

Sir Henry Warnay brought the duke through the Thames strete to the Tower of London, the people muche mused what the cause might be, and for trouth tyll it was knowen, among theim was muche speakyng. There was also attached a Monke of a Charterhouse besides Bristow called Henton, also Mayster Jhon Delaker the Dukes Confessor, and the dukes Chauncellor before mencioned, al were in the Tower prisoners. The.xvj. day of April was the same Duke brought to the Tower. Alas the whyle that euer ambicion shoulde be the losse of so noble a man, and so muche in the kynges fauor, by hym all Lordes and other may beware how they geue credence to false prophesies, or false hypocrites. For a Monke of the Charter house shewed the Duke that he shoulde be kynge of Englande, whych to the kynges persone coulde be no higher treason.

Alas that euer he gaue credence to suche a false traitor.

The

The.xiij.pere.

N this tyme inquiries were made in diuers shyres of Edwarde Duke of Buckyngham beynge prisoner in the tower of London, where, by the knightes & gentlemen, there he was endited of high treason for certaine wordes spoken by thesame Duke in Blechyngly to the Lorde Aburgenye, thesame Lorde was attached for consaile-ment, and the Lord Mountague the kynges Cosyn and both ledde to the Tower. And sir Edward Neuell knight, brother to the sayd lorde Aburgeney forbidden the kynges presence.

x The Duke of Northfolke was made by the kynges letters patētes high Steward of Englande, to accomplishe the high cause of appele of the Piere or Pieres of the realme, and to decerne and iudge the causes of the pieres. &c.

Wherfore shortly after was made in Westmynster hall a scaffolde for the Lordes and a presence for a Judge, railed and counter railed about, and barred with degrees. The Duke of Northfolke was chiefe Judge, and many Pieres of the realme, as the Duke of Suffolke, the Marques Dorcet, the Erles of Worcester, Deuonshyre, Essex, Shrewisbury, Kent, Oxford, and Darby, the lorde of S. Jhons, Lorde Delaware, lorde Fitz Warren, Lorde Wylloughby, Lorde Broke, Lorde xi Cobham, lorde Harbert, & the lorde Morley, satte as Peres & iudges vpon thesame duke of Buckyngham.

When the lordes had taken their places, sir Thomas Louell and sir Richard Chomley knightes, brought the duke to the barre with thaxe of the Tower before him, who humbly bareheaded reuerēced the duke of Northfolke, and after all the lordes and the kinges lerned counsaill. Then the Clarke of ỹ counsail sayd, sir Edward duke of Buckyngham hold vp thy hande, thou art endited of high treason, for that thou traitorously hast conspired and ymagined as farre as in thee lay to shorten xii the life of our soueraigne lorde the kyng: of this treason how wilt thou acquite thee, the Duke answered by my Peres.

And when thenditement was openly redde, the duke sayd, it is false and vntrue and conspired and forged to bryng me to my death, & that wil I proue, allegyng many reasons to falsefy the inditement, & against his reasons the kynges Atturnay alleged the examinacions, cōfessions and proues of witnesses.

The Duke desired the witnesses to be brought furth, then was brought before hym Syr Gylbert Perke preste his Chauncellor, fyrst accusor of thesame Duke, Maister Jhon Delacourt priest, the Dukes xi Confessor and his owne hand writyng layde before hym to the accusement of the duke. Charles Kneuet Esquyer Cosyn to the Duke, and a Monke, Prior of the Charterhouse besides Bathe, whiche like a false ypocrite had enduced the Duke to the treason, and had diuers tymes sayd to the duke that he should be kyng of England, but the duke sayd that in himselfe he neuer consented to it. Diuers presumpcions and accusementes wer layde to him by Charles Kneuet, which he would fain haue couered. The depositions were redde, and the deponentes were deliuered as prisoners to the officers of the Tower.

Then spake the Duke of Northfolke, and sayd my lorde, the kynge oure souereigne Lorde hath commaunded, that you shall haue hys lawes ministred with fauor and right to you. Wherefore yf you haue any other thinge to say for your selfe you shalbe hard. Then he was commaunded to withdrawe him, & so was led into Paradise a house so named. The Lordes went to counsaill a great while and after tooke their places. Then sayd the Duke of Northfolke to the Duke of Suffolke, what say you of sir Edward duke of Buckyngham touching the high treasons? The Duke of Suffolke answered, he is giltie, and so sayd the Marques and all the other Earles & lordes: Thus was this prince duke of Buckyngham founde giltie of high treason by a Duke, a Marques, vii. Erles, and. xii. Barons.

The Duke was brought to the barre for chafyng and swette meruailously, after he had made his reuerēce, he paused a while. The duke of Northfolke as a Judge sayd, sir Edward, you haue heard how you be indited of high treason, you pleaded thereto not gyltie, puttyng your selfe to the peres of the realme, the whiche haue found you giltie: then the Duke of Northfolke wept and sayd, you shalbe ledde to the kynges prison and there layde on a Herdill and so drawen to the place of execution, and there to be hanged, cutte doune aliue, your membres to be cutte of and cast into the fyer, your bowels brent before you, your head smytten of, and your body quartered and deuyded at the kynges wyll, and God haue mercy on your soule. Amen.

The duke of Buckinghās iudgement.

The Duke of Buckingham sayd, my lorde of Northfolke, you haue sayd as a traytor should be sayed vnto, but I was neuer none, but my lordes I nothyng maligne for that you haue done to me, but the eternall God forgeue you my death and I do: I shall neuer sue to the kyng for life, howbeit he is a gracious prince, and more grace may come from hym then I desire. I desire you my lordes and all my felowes to pray for me.

Then was the edge of the axe turned towardes him, and so led into a barge, Sir Thomas Louell desired him to sytte on the cusshyns and carpet ordeined for him, he sayd nay, for when I went to Westminster I was duke of Buckyngham, nowe I am but Edwarde Bowhen the moste caitiffe of the worlde. Thus they landed at the Temple, where receiued him sir Nicholas Vawse & sir Willyam Sandes Baronetes and led him through the Citie, who desired euer the people to pray for him, of whom some wept and lamented, and sayd, this is thende of euill life. God forgeue him, he was a proude prince, It is pitie that he behaued him so against his kynge and liege lorde, whō God preserue. Thus aboute.iiij. of the clocke he was brought as a cast man to the Tower.

Frydaie the.xvij. day of Maie, about.xj. of the clocke. This duke w a great power was deliuered to Jhon Kyeme and Jhon Skeuyngton shyriffes, who led him to the skaffolde on Tower hill, where he sayd he had offended the kynges grace through negligence and lacke of grace, and desired all noblemen to beware by him, and al men to pray for him, and that he trusted to dye the kynges true man. Thus mekely with an x axe he toke his death, on whose soule Jesu haue mercy. Then the Augustine friers toke the body & head & buried them. Alas that euer the grace of truth was wdrawen frō so noble a man, that he was not to his kyng in alegeaunce as he ought to haue been, suche is thende of ambicion, thende of false prophesies, thende of euill lyfe and euill counsaill.

About this tyme Fraunces the Frenche kynge made open warre against the Emperor Charles both by lande and sea. The Prouinces of Aragon, Castle, and all Spayne, Germany, Brabant, Flaunders & the steades mainteined the partie of the Emperor. The kynges highnes cōsideryng ỹ murder & effusion of Christen bloud, and the trouble that xx might ensue to al the princes of Christendome, by inuasion of the great Turke sent the Cardinall of Yorke his Chaūcellor by name lord Thomas Wolsey to his toune of Calayce to intreate an amitie and peace betwene those two mightie princes. For this voiage great preparacio was made, not onely for him but also for the Earle of Worcestre then lorde Chamberlayn, the lorde of S. Johns, the lord Ferrys, the lorde Harbert, the bishop of Duresme, the bishop of Ely, the Primate of Armicane, sir Thomas Boleyn, sir John Peche, sir Jhon Hussey, Sir Richarde Wyngfelde, sir Henry Guldforde, and many other knightes, Esquiers, gentlemen, Doctors, and learned menne. And thus honora-xxx bly accompanied he rode through London the.xxb. daye of July, & at Thomas Beckettes house the Mayer & Aldermen toke leaue of hym, praiyng God to send him good spede. Thus passed he to Cantorbury where tharchebishop, and the bishop of Cantorbury and other prelates receiued him in pontificalibus and brought him to his lodgyng vnder Canape to the bishoppes palayce: the.viij. day of Julye he came to Douer: the.xx. daye he & thother lordes with their retinues toke passage, and ariued at Calayce in safetie, where the lorde Deputie and counsaill receined theim wyth muche honor, and lodged the Cardinall in the Staple hall.

xl Shortly after whose ariuall, came thether ỹ Chauncelor of Fraūce and the Countie de Palays with.iiij.C. horse, as ambassadors frō the Frenche kynge. And likewise from the Emperor came great Ambassadors, and when thei satte in counsail, the Emperors Ambassade shewed their Commission & power. And euen so did the Frenche kynges Ambassade, which was more larger then the Emperors commission.

Thus when the grudges were declared on bothe sides, when the Emperors Ambassadors cõsented to peace, the French kynges would not. And when the Frenche Ambassadors cõsented to peace, the Emperors would not. The Cardinall then would haue knitted the Emperor, the kyng our soueraigne lorde, the Frenche kynge, and the bishop of Rome in a league and amitie together: the other Ambassadors had no suche Commission, especially the bishop of Romes, where vpon letters were sent to Rome in all hast and the Frenchmen taried in Calayce till he returned, & beheld the toune, with whiche the counsail of Calaice wer not contented. Herevpon the Cardinal rode to the Emperor accompanied & with his Ambassadors (and left the Frenche ambassadors in Calaice to abide his returne) and passed by Grauelyng, Dũkirke, Newport, Owdenborow, & sundry tymes in the waye he was encoũtred and receiued with noble men. And without Bruges he was receiued with many noble men, and many lordes and other of the Emperors court, and a myle without Bruges the Emperor his owne persone met him, and shewed to him and to the other lordes & gentlemen of england gracious countenaũce, & so accompanied ỹ cardinall into the toune, where great multitude of people beheld them, & so rode to the Emperors palayce where he lighted, and fyrst embraced the Cardinall and after all the lordes, & knyghtes, and gentlemen of Englande. It is to suppose the Emperor knewe of the Commission geuen to the sayd Cardinall, whiche had the kynges power as if his grace had been present, and also had the great seale wyth hym, whiche had not been seen before, or els the Emperor woulde not haue done hym so high honor and reuerence.

The Englishe lordes, knightes, esquiers, yomen of the kynges gard & other beyng to the nomber of. iiij. C. lx. horse, were wel lodged euery man after his degree, and euery lodgyng furnished with fewell, bread, bere, wyne, Bens, Muttons, Ueles, Lambes, Uenison, and all maner deintie biand aswell in fishe as flesshe, with no lacke of spices and banketting dishes. & & &

The next day after the great chere made to ỹ lord Cardinall & to all his lordes, knightes, gentlemen, and all other lordes and knightes of England (in whose presence) the Cardinall made his proposicion cõcernyng peace to be had betwene the sayd Emperor and the French kyng declaryn the calamities, misery, and wretchednes that came by warre: and the cõmodities, benefite, and welth that came by peace, concorde & tranquilitie, whiche proposicion continued a great while: and when the Cardinall had made an ende, the Emperor himselfe answered and said: The lawe of God byndeth euery man to claime & aske his right, & that & thesame lawe byndeth no man to holde, kepe, and withstande another mans right. Our cosyn of Fraunce doeth wythholde our rightes & patrimonies whiche we haue princely desired, & eftsones wil, and if he wil rendre to vs our said rightes & patrimonies, we are contented to haue peace with hym and his subiectes, yf not we trust in God & oure ryght

that the troubles by your fatherhed reherſed, ſhal come vpon hym and his adherentes. And for the titles of our regalitie, to putte that to the biſhop of Rome, we do conſider that kynge Edwarde of Englande the thirde of that name of noble memory, warred by iuſt title to recouer the realme of Fraunce from Philip de Ualois, whiche title by interceſſion was put to the biſhop of Rome & his court, to diſcuſſe & expended there by ỹ ſpace of. xxiij. yeres vndetermined, notwithſtãding great purſuite & labor was made to haue it ended: Suche lyke tyme ſhoulde be to vs tedious, wherfore we entende by the ayde of God to folowe our title.

x The Cardinall replied & declared the league that was betwene the thre mightyeſt princes of the worlde, that is to ſaye, the Emperor, the kynge our ſoueraigne lorde Henry the. viij. and the Frenche kyng, and how that to the prince that fyrſt moued warre, the other two ſhould be enemies vnto hym, and ſayd, beholde the mightie power and puiſſaunt realme, riches, ſhippes, vitailes, and ordinaũce, lordes, chyualry, horſemen, archers and comminaltie, this is in the high and mightie kynge of England my ſoueraigne lord, and he that fyrſt warre beginneth, by the ſayd league my ſayed ſoueraigne lorde to his honor may lefully ſpred his baner and make warre in defence of his frende. For this and other xx thynges my ſoueraigne lorde deſires of your highnes and maieſtie the conſent of peace.

My lorde Cardinall ſayd the Emperor, I eſteme moſte the honor of my dere vncle the kynge of Englande and truſt in his aſſuraunce, that neither his royall perſon, his realme, his power, Nauye, nor ordinaũce ſhalbe but to our ayde in aſſiſtynge our tried title, nor will cõſent to any thyng in diſhonorynge vs or our Empire: God defende but we ſhoulde humble our ſelfe to his requeſt, our high honor reſerued. Lorde God who may eſteme more higher iniuries and wronges thẽ we in our perſon, our predeceſſours, and our louyng ſubiectes haue endured by the xxx houſe of Fraunce. My lorde Cardinall ſayd the Emperor, their pride with our honor we may & muſt apprehende and ouerthrow by the help of God: With theſe wordes the counſaill brake vp.

All the lordes and menne of honor of England that day dyned in the Emperors court.

When they were ſet and ſerued, it came ſo to paſſe that an honorable man of the Emperors as he ſat at dyner ſayd thus. It is thought that the kynges Maieſtie of Englande entendeth to make a peace. Alas that euer he ſhoulde ymagyn a thyng ſo muche to the diſhonor of the Emperor. The kynge is his vncle, is it not come to his hearynge that xl all the worlde heareth? It was ſo that by aſſent of the Byſhoppe of Rome and other princes to make peace wyth vs, the Frenche partie after the battayll of Gyngate obtained by Maximilian then archeduke of Oſtriche, where euerye noble manne of vs foughte wyth the Frenchmen quarter naked, and ſlewe of theim a meruailous nomber. They deſired the doughter of Maximilian named Margarete to wife, whiche lady is Duches of Sauoy and yet liuyng, & she beynge like an Emperors childe was deliuered into their handes as quene of the realme, with diuers tounes in Picardie rēdred with her and parte of high Burgonie, and treasure meruaylous. Nowe sithen thesame Maximilian had spoused Jane doughter and heire of Fraunces Duke of Britaigne, whiche lande the Frenchemen ouer rāne and spoiled, and she constrained to sue vnto Charles kynge of Fraunce for a safe conduict to passe through his realme to Maximilian her spouse, and vpon the same safeconduict graunted, the sayd ladie Jane passynge through Fraunce with a small company, was by thesame Charles taken at Amx bois & there maried her against her wyll, wherupon he forsoke the lady Margarete and sent her againe to her father themperor without rediliuer or rendryng againe the tounes that wer deliuered with her. And where as the duke of Geldre is subiect to the Emperor, is he not yet at this day by the procurement of the Frenche kynge, rebell? And where also by iust title the realme of Naples ought to be vnited to the croune of Castle, dyd not the Frenche kynge fayne a iorney into the holy lande pretendyng title by Jeniamy brother to the great Turke beynge then captiue in Rome, and by a craftie treatie obtained the sayd Jeniamy, & so passed into Naples wythout peril, and seazed all the lande into hys xx handes, & then prisoned he thesame Jeniamy? Thus to the great damage of Castle, he made claime to Naples by Margaret quene of England late wyfe to Henry the.vj.

The kyng of Nauerne is euermore vassal to the houle of Aragon & Castell, yet the Frenche kyng caused him to rebell, hopyng thereby to subdue the sayd countreys.

Of late daies the Frenche kyng by false treason caused Sir Robert de la Marche to submitte himselfe to the Emperors Maiestie, who receiued him vpō his othe & fidelitie, pardonyng all offences past. Is not this false traitor returned, and is of the Frenche partie? How may that xxx court, that counsaill, that kyng, that realme that cōsenteth to treason & periury by maintenaunce of traitors be called honorable? Hath not the French kyng sworne, and is bounden neuer to retaine the Switchers in wages to make warre against the Emperor? & yet doth at this day. And albeit that his Maiestie speaketh not of these thynges, yet he well considereth them. I trust verely sayd this noble man that God sayeth, Vine Burgoigne, euery manne that heard this reherfall, knewe that it was true, howbeit he was not answered, but some Englishe knightes sayd, Sir you haue sayd well, and as God will all muste be. Thus was this narracion ended. xl

In this season the Emperor gatte the toune of Newzon: Also of the Emperors partie a great army arriued in the Duchy of Mylan & also the Emperors power besieged the noble citie of Nessiers, but the capitaine called Franciscus was suspected of treason, for he remoued wyth the the hoste from the seage without knowlege of the Emperor.

The Emperor made a seage volant about the Citie of Turnay, for the reskue wherof and also of Messiers, the French kyng made a great army and him selfe in person.

Durynge this seage the Frenchemen toke a Spaniardes ship laden with Englishemens goodes at Margate within the kynges streames, not without great slaughter on both parties, yet the Frenchmen were C.lx.men, and of Spaniardes and Englishemen only.xxb.

The kynge of Denmarke Cristianus came to se themperor his brother in law beyng a stately prince, yet meanes was made that the lorde Cardinall and he spake together without great signe of amitie.

The lorde Cardinall after he had soiorned in Bruges by the space of xiij.daies & concluded diuers matters with the Emperor & accomplished his cõmission: he tooke leaue of his Maiestie, and likewise dyd all the noblemen of England, & after cõuenient iornies arriued with al his company at Calyce, where thembassadors of Fraunce taried him, & immediatly after his ariuyng he treated with them of peace, yet not so ernestly as he did before & that perceiued well thesayd Ambassadors and wrote therof to the Frenche kynge, yet the welth & prosperitie of both the realmes & their subiectes were highly reasoned betwen the Cardinall & the sayd Ambassadours, especially for fishyng, where vpõ was concluded that ỹ subiectes of both the princes might freely fishe on the sea, & repaire to any porte of thone or thother prince without robbyng, spoylyng, or takyng vnto the second day of Februarye next.

The French kyng with a mightie army & himselfe in person repaired to the coũtrey of Cambray, mindyng to passe the streites, but they wer wstanded by the Emperors power, yet he cõtinued there frõ October vnto Nouembre wout any thing doyng, to the great displeasure of the Frenche kynge. The duke Dalefon hearyng that, made preparations wyth the Almaynes to passe the marryes by the point Dassans, and there the Almaynes had made bridges of pypes & vessels, & brought thither their great ordinaunce. The Emperor beyng in the toune of of Valencian and therof aduertised, caused strong watche to be made, and as they would haue passed, the bastarde Emery, & the capitaine of Gaunt with.xij.C.men mette with them, where was a great conflicte and many men slaine, and at the last the Almaines were put to flight & their bridges and other prouisions broken: Of the Frenche partie wer slaine in this conflicte.xiiij.C.men, and of the Burgonians were slaine the bastarde Emery, the capitaine of Gaunte and.iiij.C.men.

The lord Cardinal after he had long treated with the Ambassadors of Fraunce and could not bryng theim to no cõformitie of peace, he sent to the Emperor the lord of sainct Jhons & sir Thomas Boleyn knight to aduertise his Maiestie therof.

Lykewise

Likewise the sayd lord Cardinall sent to the frenche kyng the Erle of Worcester and the bishoppe of Ely to exhorte hys grace to peace, he hard theim, but he gaue theim but fewe wordes to answere, and after they had been. xix. or. xx. daies in his hoost, they tooke leaue and returned to Calyce.

Duryng the continuaunce of the Cardinall in Calayce all writtes and patentes wer there by hym sealed and no shyrifes chosen for lacke of his presence.

The kyng of Hungary sent an Ambassador to the kynges highnes for ayde against the Turke, whom the Cardinall honorably entertayned duryng hys abode in Calayce. His commyng was for ayde as men sayd against the frenche kyng. x

The lorde Cardinal after the returne of the englishe Ambassadors from the Emperour and from the frenche kynge, tooke shippyng and landed at the porte of Douer, the. xxvij. day of Nouember, and there toke his iorney to Blechyngly, where the kinges grace welcomed hym geuyng him also thankes for his great paines and trauaill.

This tyme the frenche kynge layde seage to the toune and Castle of Hedyng, the Burgonions perceiuynge they were not furnished for the defence thereof, forsoke the sayed toune and castle and fledde into Flaunders to no litle reioysyng of the sayd Frenchemen. xx

The Admyrall of Fraunce named Mounsire Bonyfet with a puissaunt armye made signe as though he woulde passe into Nauerne, howbeit sodainly he reculed with his hooste and beseaged the toune of Fontraby in Biskay, and brake the fyrste, second, and thirde walle thereof with his ordinaunce meruailously: And after gaue a freshe assault to the same. The Spaniardes (notwithstandynge that the ordinaunce was caryed into Nauerne for defence thereof) defended theimselfes manfully and slewe of the Frenchemen. vj. hundreth and moo, and of the Spaniardes. lx. slaine. Then the Capitaine of Fontraby made serche what vitailes was in the toune, and founde that there was but for two meles, he called the inhabitauntes and menne of warre together declaryng their great necessitie, and sayed the batterey of the walles discorageth vs not, but the great necessitie of vitailes, wherfore we muste do like the Wolfe that runneth from the wood for hunger to hys death, and considerynge the great scarcitie of vitailes in Byskay, by meanes whereof we cannot be vitayled we muste nedes rendre the toune. Neuertheless they kept the toune seuē daies after that they had neither bread, flesshe fruite nor oyles in the same, but onely herbes and water, yet at last herbes failed also, by meanes wherof they rendred the toune by composicion, and or the Frenchmen entered, they deliuered the Englishemen all their goodes out of the toune. xxx xl

The Frenche kynge liyng enbattailed in the countrey of Cambray sodainly brake his campe, not muche to hys honor. Great warres was this tyme in Italye, in so muche that the Emperours hoost wanne the citie and countrey of Mylan to the high displeasure of the Frenche kynge, for he lost there many of his nobles and other capitaines & men of warre.

Thus the Frenche kyng returned into his countrey without reskuyng the citie of Turnay, neuertheless he sent them a letter which was taken by the people of the Countys of Nasson, the tenour whereof x folowеth.

Trustie and welbeloued we grete you well, lettyng you to wete that " dayly before vs appeareth your true faythfull seruices, by that you " abode within oure citie of Turnay with great ieopardie, to the muche " honor of vs and our realme, and to your praise and manly fame for euer " and vs to be your good lord for the demerites of your so high seruices. " And where as we entended the relief and reskue of you and our sayde " subiectes and citie of Turnay, we consideryng the weale of our person " and realme, haue remoued vs from that purpose. Wherefore we maye " no more saye vnto you but God and Mounsire sainct Denys be youre " xx succours.

When the Countie of Nasson knewe that no reskew shoulde come, he then sent for more people and ordinaunce and planted siege on all parties of the citie. Then the capitaine of the Castell and Prouost of the citie after thei knewe of the French kynges retreite, and after long consultacion amongest them had, rendred the Citie and Castle by appointment, that is to say, that the Burgeises should haue. xv. daies to depart with bagge & baggage, leuyng behynd thē all the ordinaunces aswell of the Castle as of the Citie. Thus was the Castle and Citie of Turnay rendred into the Emperors handes the last day of Nouembet xxx the yere of our Lorde God. M. D. xxi.

This yere many goodly & gorgious Mommeries were made in the court to the great reioysing of the Quene and ladies and other nobles beyng there.

The last day of december the Cardinall accompaignied the Emperors Ambassadours to the court where they were honorably receiued and highly feasted durynge their abode there, and many sumptuous and gorgious disguisynges, enterludes and bankettes made in the same season.

Pope Leo dyed and Adryan chosen.

xl This yere was a great pestilence and death in London & other places of the realme, and many noble capitaines died, as the lorde Broke, sir Weston Browne, sir Jhon Heron, sir Edward, sir Jhon Peche and muche other people.

The bishop of London Doctor Fitz James likewise deceased thys yere, and Doctor Tunstall was preferred to thesame benefice.

The

The lorde Thomas Haward earle of Surrey, came out of Ireland to the court the.xxv.day of January, when he had been there the space of.xx.monethes in great trauaill & payn, & often tymes sore troubled by the wylde Irishe, howbeit by his noblenes and manhod he brought the lordes of Ireland to the kynges due obeylaunce, and had of them many victories to his perpetuall laude and praise.

The Frenchemen this tyme spoyled & shamefully robbed ỹ kynges subiectes on euery coast of the sea, so that wheresoeuer the kyng roade his poore subiectes came with lamentacions and cryes shewynge hys grace of the crueltie of the Frenchemen & of their inhumaine dealynge with them, but euer the Frenche Ambassadours promised restitucion of euery thyng, but none was restored.

In this moneth of January, the kyng commaunded all his shippes of warre to be made in a readynes, which was done with all diligence.

About this tyme the duke of Albany arriued in Scotland, notwithstandynge that the Frenche kynge sware vnto the Cardinall that he should neuer come into Scotlande, without the kynge our souereigne lordes consent, but for all that he had cõmission from the frenche kyng although the Frenche kynge wrote to the kynge that he was entred Scotlande without his assent.

The second day of Februarye, the kynge beyng at Grenewiche, came thether the Cardinall with a Legacion from Leo bishop of Rome, and also his ambassadour, on whõ waited many a nobleman, the kynge met them at his chamber dooze welcõmyng them as though they had both come from Rome. Then sayd the Cardinall, high and victorious kyng it hath pleased our Lorde God to indue your grace with a great multitude of manifolde graces as a kynge electe in fauor of the high heauen, and so appeareth presently by your noble persone, so formed & figured in shappe and stature with force and pulchritude, whiche signifieth the present pleasure of our lorde God wrought in youre noble grace. And further he praised his wisedome, prudence, and learnynge, with many other goodly wordes in the praise of hys most noble grace. And finally the Cardinall declared how the sayd bishop of Rome had sent his highnes an Atte in Bull vnder leade, declaryng therein his grace to be the defendor of the Christian sayth, and his successors for euermore.

And when his grace had receiued the sayd Bull and caused it to be redde & published, he went to his chapell to heare Masse accompanied with many nobles of his realme and also with Ambassadors of sundrye princes, the Cardinall beyng requested to syng Masse, the Erle of Essex brought the Bason with water, the duke of Suffolke gaue thassay, the duke of Northfolke helde the towell, and so proceded to Masse. And that done gaue vnto all them that heard the Masse cleane remission & blessed the kyng and the Quene ond all the people: ther was the Bull efsones declared, and trumpettes blew, the shalmes and saggebuttes played in honor of the kynges newe style. Thus hys hyghnes went to dinner. In the middes whereof, the kyng of Heraldes and his compaignie begau the larges, cryng Henricus dei gratia rex Angliæ, et Frãnciæ, defensor fidei, et dominus Hiberniæ, thus ended the dinner, with muche habundance of vitaill and wyne, to all maner of people.

The.x. daie of febyuary, the Lord Hodie chief Baron of the kynges Eschequer gaue ouer his office, and for him was admitted by the Cardinal, master Jhon Fitz James, a right honorable man & well learned.

In this time was much busines betwene the Emperor & the Frẽch kyng, wherfore the king sent to the sea sixe good shippes, well manned x and vitayled for the warre: the Admiral was called Christopher Coo, a man expert on the sea, for saffegarde of the Merchauntes, and other the kinges subiectes, that were greuously spoyled and robbed on the sea, by Frenchmen, Scottes and other rouers.

This tyme was the.viij. day of Febyuary, the lord Dacres Wardein of the Marches of Scotlande, entered into Stotland with.v.C.mẽ, by the kynges commaundemente, and there Proclamed that ỹ Scottes should come into the kynges peace, by the fyrst daye of Marche folowynge, or els to stande at their perilles, the Duke of Albany beynge then within fyue myles, with a mightie power of Scottes.

xx The.xj. day of Febyuary, sir George Neuell lorde Burgayny, beeing then prisoner in the Tower was brought to Westminster, and ther in the kinges Bẽche confessed his enditement of misprision, in the cause of Edwarde late Duke of Buckingham to bee true, and after the open confession thereof, led againe to the Tower.

The lord Montacute the kinges cosyn, was about this tyme recõciled to his graces fauor, which had bene prisoner in the Tower, wyth sir Edward Neuel knight, this sir Edward Neuel was forbidden the kynges presence, for bearinge fauor to the Duke of Buckingham.

This yere the second of Marche, certain noble men of the Empire xxx arriued in England to passe into Spain, who wer honorably receyued and in honor of them great Justes and triumphes wer made, and that finished and done, thei toke their leaue and departed on their iorney.

Also this time commission was geuen throughoute the realme, for generall musters to be had, to knowe what power might be made with in thesame, & also men sworne of what substaunce and landes thei wer of. And the Cardinal aduertised of thesame: not wythout grudging of ỹ people, & marueiling why thei shuld be sworne for their own goodes.

The citie of London was thys moneth aduertised of the comming of the Emperor, wherefore was greate preparacion: and the citezens xl sent the kynges grace one hundred tall men wel harnisshed, to furnysshe hys nauie, appoynted to kepe the narowe seas.

The Frẽch kyng certified the kynges hyghnes, by his leters dated in Marche, how the Graund capitain of Fraunce, the Countie de Palais, Monsire de Lescue, and other noble men of Fraunce, had won the toune of Milain, which was not true, for within fiue or syxe dayes after,it was euidently knowen that the Frenchmen were beaten backe, and had wonne nothyng, to their great shame and reproche.

Moreouer thesame season the Frenche kynge wrote his letters to the Seignory and commonaltie of Gean, to send him thre Carectes & sixe Galeis furnished for the warres, vnto his porte of Breste,to maintein his warres agaynst the forsayd Emperor,who made him by their letters suche a reasonable excuse, that he was contented to spare them for that tyme.

The kynges hyghnes kepte thys yere his Easter at his manour of Richemont, and caused hys amner to make enquiry,eyght miles roũd about thesaid manour,what poore people was in euery parish. And for the eschuyng of murther, that moste commonly fortuned euery good-friday,by reason of the great resort of poor people,his grace caused thẽ to be refreshed with his almose at home at their houses.

About this tyme a rouer or thiefe of Scotland,called Duncan Camell,was after long fight taken on the sea,by a Squyer of Cornewall called maister Jhon Arondell,& presented to the kinges highnes, who committed him to the Tower of London, where he remaygned prisoner a long season after.

In the moneth of Marche,as you had hard before,came certain noble men from the Emperor to the king, which the more to solace theim enterprised a Jultes,he him self was chief on the one syde, hys courser was barded in cloth of siluer,of Dẽmarke,embrodered wyth. L. L. L. of Golde,and vnder the letters a harte of manne wounded , and great rolles of Golde with blacke letters , in whyche was wrytten, mon ua uera, put together,it is, ell mon ceur ua uera, she hath wounded my harte, and thesame suit was his base.

Then folowed sir Nicholas Carewe , his base and bard was white Damaske,on whiche was embraudered with Clothe of gold : a prison and a man loking out at a grate,and ouer the prison came from the prisoner a rolle,in which was written in Frenche, in prison I am at lyberty,and at libertie I am in pryson,and all his apparel was garded with shakelles of syluer.

Then folowed therle of Deuonshire,the lord Roos in one suit,their apparell was whit veluet,embraudered wyth cloth of gold, wroughte in deuice an harte,trauersed crosse wise wyth a chayne,the which deuided the bard in foure quarters,in twoo quarters was a hand of golde holding a spere of the worlde , on the other twoo quarters was twoo handes holding two plumes of fethers,and on the borders were written,my harte is betwene ioye and peyne.

Then folowed Anthony Kyngston,and Anthony Kneuet,their apparell was a hart bounde in a blew lace,embroudered on Crimsin sattin,and written about wyth letters of gold,my harte is bounde.

Nicholas Darrell had a bard and base of black sattin,embraudered full of hartes, turned or broken of gold,and written in letters of siluer.

my

my harte is broken.

Last of that bend was Anthony Broune, which had a bard of siluer full of speres of the world broken, set on hartes broken al of golde writen aboute in letters of blacke Sance remedy, wythout remedy.

Then entered the Duke of Suffolke and his bend al in bardes and bases of russet veluet and cloth of siluer, embraudered with braunches of paunces of golde, at these Justes were many speres broken, whych the straungiers highly commended.

The third day of Marche, the Cardinall made to the kyng and the x Ambassadors a great and a costly banket, and after that a playe and a Maske, their garmentes were russet sattin and yelowe, all the one side was yelowe, face and legge, and al the other syde was russet.

On shrouetewesday at nyght, the said Cardinall to the kinge & ambassadors made another supper, and after supper thei came into a great chamber hanged with Arras, and there was a cloth of estate, and manye braunches, & on euery braunche. xxxij. torchettes of waxe, & in the nether ende of the same chamber was a castle, in which was a principal Tower, in which was a Cressel burning: and two other lesse Towers stode on euery side, warded & embattayled, and on euery Tower was xx a banner, one banner was of thre rent hartes, the other was a ladyes hand gripinge a mans harte, the third banner was a ladies hand turning a mannes hert: thys castle was kept with ladies of straūg names, the first Beautie, the second Honor, the third Perseueraunce, the fourthe Kyndnes, the fyfth Constance, the sixte Bountie, the seuenth Mercie, and the eyghte Pitie. these eyght ladies had Willian gounes of white sattyn, euerye Ladye had her name embraudered wyth golde, on their heades calles, and Willein bonettes of golde, with Jwelles. Undernethe the basse fortresse of the castle were other eyght ladyes, whose names were Dangier, Disdain, Gelousie, Vnkyndenes, Scorne, Malebouche, Straungenes, these ladyes were tired xxx lyke to women of Jnde. Then enterd eyght Lordes in clothe of golde cappes and all, and great mantell clokes of blewe Sattin, these lordes were named, Amorus, Noblenes, Youth, Attendaunce, Loyaltie, Pleasure, Gentlenes, and Libertie, the kyng was chyefe of thys compaignie, thys compaygnye was led by one all in Crymosyn Sattin wyth burninge flames of golde, called Ardent Desire, whyche so moued the ladies to geue ouer the Castle, but Scorne and Disdain sayed that they woulde holde the place, then Desire sayd the ladies shoulde be wonne, and came and encoraged the knyghtes, then the lordes ranne to the castle) at whych tyme wythoute was shot a greate peale of gūnes) and the ladies defended the Castle wyth Rose xl water and Comfyttes, and the lordes threwe in Dates and Drenges, and other fruites made for pleasure, but at the last the place was wonne, but Ladye Scorne and her compaygnye stubbernely defended theim wyth bowes and balles, tyl they were driuen out of the place and fled. Then the lordes toke the ladies of honor as prysoners by the handes, and brought them doune, and daunced together verye pleasauntlye, whiche much pleased the straungers, and whē thei had daunced their fyll, then all these dysuisered themselfes and were knowen: and then was there a costly banket, and when al was done, the straungiers toke their leaue of the king and the Cardinall, and so departed into Flaunders, geuing to the king muche commendacion.

The kynge like a prince which forseeth all thinges, saw that warre was likely to ensue, caused the earle of Surrey, his hygh Admirall, to put in readines his nauie, both for the conduictynge of the Emperoure into England, and also for the defence of his subiectes, which wer daily robbed and spoiled on the sea, which lorde Admiral toke such diligence with the helpe of sir William Fitz William his Vice Admyrall, that all the shyppes by the beginnyng of April, were rigged and trimmed, and in especial the Henry grace of due, the kynges great ship, was brought out of the ryuer of Thamis into the Downes, readye to sayle whether God and the kynge woulde.

In thys yere at the Assise, kept at the castle of Cambridge in Lent, the Justices, and al the gentlemen, Bailiefes and other, resorting thether, toke such an infeccion, whether it wer of the sauor of the prisoners or of the fylth of the house, that manye gentlemen, as syr Jhon Cut, syr Giles Alington knightes, and many other honest yomen therof dyed, and al most all which were there present, were sore sicke and narrowly escaped with their liues. And this yere also dyed Sir Edward Powninges, knight of the Gartier, sir Jhon Pechy, and sir Edwarde Belknap baliaunt capitaynes, whiche were suspected to be poysoned, at a banket made at Arde, when the two kinges met last.

This yere also, was not wythout Pestilence nor Derth of Corne, for Whete was sold this yere in the citie of Londō, for .xx.s. a quarter, & in other p'aces, for .xxvj.s. viij.d. And in thesame yere in Decēber, died Leo bishop of Rome, for whom was chosen, one Adrian born at Utrike, ỹ Emperors schole maister, and in thesame moneth Gawan Douglas bishop of Dunkel in Scotland, fled out of Scotland into Englād because the Duke of Albany was arriued into Scotland, and had taken vpon him to be gouernor of the kyng and the realme, to whom the kyng assygned an honest pencyon to lyue on. But when the kyng was aduertised that the Duke of Albany was arryued into Scotland, and had taken the rule of the young king, his realme, and he much doubted the sequele of the matter, considerynge the Duke to be heire apparant to the croune of Scotland: wherfore he sent Clarenseaux kinge of Armes into Scotland, and wyth commaundemēt, that he should declare to the Duke of Albany, that his pleasure was, that he should departe ỹ realm of Scotland for two causes, the one, because it was promised by the French king, at the last meting, that he would not come into Scotland, the second was, that the kyng of England was vncle to the kyng of Scottes, and by the very bond of nature, ought to defende his nephew, Wherefore hys nephew beyng young, and in the custody of him to whom,if he should dye, the realme of Scotlande should discende,he doubted lest he might be brought out of the way,as other dukes of Albany before had serued the heires of Scotlande:and if he would not auoyde Scotlande,then Clarenseaux was commaunded to defie hym, which accordyngly did defie hym,at holy Rode house in Edenbrough, to whome he answered,that neyther the French king, nor the kyng of Englande,should let hym to come into his naturall countrey, by theyr agrement:also as towchyng the young king,he sayd,that he loued him as his souereigne lord,and him would kepe & protect,against al other.

x When Clarenseaux had reported his answere to the king, then he knewe wel that al this was the French kinges doynge, wherefore he prouyded in all thinges accordingly. The Earle of Anguishe of Scotland that had maryed lady Margaret,the king our souereigne lordes sister,late wyfe vnto kyng James of Scotlād, that was slain at Flodon felde, was by the Duke of Albany,sente by a coloured Ambassade into Fraunce,where shortly after his arryuyng,he was by the French king committed to prison,and his brother like wyse, which escaped after as you shall heare.

Also the.vj.day of Marche, the French kyng commaunded all En-xx glyshmēnes goodes beyng in Burdeaux,to be attached and put vnder a reste:and likewyse deteyned the kynges trybute, whyche he shoulde haue out of Fraunce,and also the French quenes dowry,and when the kyng sent to him for it,he euer gaue faire wordes, and made delaies, but none was payed,and euer the Ambassador promised fayre.

¶ The.xiiij.pere.

xxx He king this yere kept the daye of saynt George w̄ great solempnitie,at his manour of Richemond, where wer elect to the order of the Gartier, Done Ferdinādo brother to the Emperor,and Archduke of Oystrycke, and sir Richard Wingfeld, knight by the Emperors meanes,to the which ỹ Emperor had geuen two hundred pound penciō out of ỹ house of Burgoin,which sir Edward Pouninges before had of the Emperors gyft. Duryng this war betwene the Emperor and the French king, & the kyng of Englande lyng still an entreator betwene them,the Englishmē wer robbed on both sydes,and when their wines were laden at Burdeaux,and redy to depart, it was attached,and the Merchauntes put in prison:the poore fishermen on the coast of Englād sometyme met wyth the Frenchmen and them spoyled, but to no recō-xl pence of that they had taken. The Merchauntes of England,that had factors at Burdeaux,complayned to the king of England,and shewed hym how the Frēch king, contrary to his league and his safeconduyte vnder hys seal,by hys people,had taken their goodes,and empryshoned their factors and frendes,and can haue no remedy. Likewise complained all the Merchauntes,how their shippes were restrayned,in euery porte of Fraunce, and their goodes rifeled, and could haue no redreſſe. The king and his counſail were ſory to here the cõplaintes of the merchauntes, and ſo concluded to ſende for the Frenche Ambaſſadours, to whom the Cardinal ſayd: ſir how is this chaunce happened? you haue promiſed euer in the name of the kyng your Maiſter, that all leagues, promiſes and couenauntes ſhould be kept, & that full reſtitucion ſhould bee made of euerye hurt and dammage, and that ferme peace & amitie ſhoulde be kept: but contrary to your ſaiyng, our Merchaũtes be robbed and ſpoyled, yea, although he hath graunted his ſafeconduyte, yet they be robbed, and ſtayed at Burdeaux, is this the peace that you and your Maiſter hath promiſed to be kept? is this the amitie that he was ſworne to kepe? Is this the word of a king? Is thys the ſtrength of a prince, to breake hys ſafeconduyt? And wher you aduiſed our merchãtes to ſue in Fraunce for reſtitucion, and dyd warrant them to be reſtored, you haue put them to coſte and loſſe, for thei haue ſued there longe and ſpẽt their goodes wythout any redreſſe, and now you haue empriſoned them, and kept both them and their goods, is this iuſtice? is this reſtitucion? And all this was youre procurement, and now ſe what is come of your promyſe, ſurely thys may not be ſuffered, and beſyde this the kyng is enformed, that the kyng your Maiſter had ſpoken by hym, foule and oppробrious wordes, yea, in the hearynge of the Engliſhmẽ whyche were ſore greued to hear ſuch wordes, and were not ſo able to be reuenged.

The Ambaſſadour of Fraunce ſayd, that it was not ſo as it was reported: wel ſayed the Cardiuall, yf you note the counſayll of Englande ſo lyght, as to tel fables, you be miſauiſed, but I pray you how often times hath the kyng written to your Maiſter, for the reſtitucion of ſuch roberies as hath be done, and yet can haue no redreſſe? Wherefore he graũted letters of marcke, which may ſtand wyth the league, but Mõſire Chaſtilion hath taken Merchauntes of Englande pryſoners, and hath ſent certain hether for their raũſome, this is open war & no peace. Maiſter Preſident Polliot or Pulteyne the Frenche Ambaſſador, anſwered, that ſurely the matters which wer alleged againſt his maiſter the French king, were but forged matters and not true: but he ſayed ye for a truthe, daily in the Court of Fraunce, were complaintes made againſte the Engliſhemen, for greate robberies done by them, aſwell on land as on ſea, affirmyng it to be done in the Emperors querel, & yet ye French kynge for the loue he beareth to England letteth his ſubiectes to be vnhard, although he dayly lament the great iniury, done to hym and his ſubiectes by Englyſhmen: and therfore my lord I pray you, beleue not ſuch tales, tyl I haue tolde you the truthe.

Then the Cardinal called the foure hoſtages, that lay here for the payment of money for Turney, & they four were deliuered, to my lord of ſainct Jhones, to ſir Thomas Louel, to ſir Andrewe Windſore, and to ſir Thomas Neuell, euery knight one to kepe ſafe, and none of their

countrey to speake with them priuely, & the Ambassador was cõmaunded to kepe his house in silence, and not to come in presence, till he was sent for, whiche ordre sore abashed the French hostages, and thambassador, but ther was no remedy, and commaundement was geuẽ to the Maior at London, to attache al the Frenchmen body and goodes, and them to kepe in prison, til he hard farther of the kynges pleasure: then were all the Frenchmen in London and aboute, arrested and brought to prison, so that al the prisons in and aboute London, wer full of them, some of them escaped by speakyng Dutch, and sayd they wer Fleminx ges borne, whiche was not tryed.

The king for safegard of his Merchaũtes, sent. xxviij. goodly shippes to the sea, wel manned and trimmed for the warres, and seuẽ other shippes he sent towarde Scotland, whych entered the Frith, and proferred to enter into the Scottysh shippes that lay in the hauen, but the Scottes ran their shippes on land, and the Englishmen folowed wyth boates and landed, and set the shippes on fire, and at Lith toke certain prisoners, whych they brought into Englande, & stil the kynges great nauie kept the narrowe seas, for then was neither peace betwene Englande and Fraunce, nor open warre as you haue hearde.

xx The king had perfect knowledge, that Charles the Emperour would be at the kinges toune at Calice the. xxiij. day of May, to passe thorow Englande into Spain, wherfore the kyng sent the Marques Dorcet, accompaignied with diuerse knightes and gentlemen, to receyue hym at Calice, which in al hast sped them thether. Lykewyse the Cardinall toke his iorney toward Douer the. xx. day of Maye, & rode throughe London, accompaignied wyth two Erles. xxvj. knightes, & an hundred Gentlemen, eyght Bishoppes, ten Abbottes, thirty Chapelleines all in veluet and Sattin, and yomen seuen. C. & so by ioyneing he came to Douer the. xxvi. day beyng Mõday. In the meane season tidinges xxx wer brought to the kyng, that the French kyng had sent a great army toward Calice, and the men of war lay at Abuile, Munstrell, Bulleyn, and about, nere the Englysh pale. Wherefore the kynge lyke a Prynce that forsawe all, and entending not to be disceiued, wrote to his nobles and cities and tounes, to prepare certayne menne of war in a readines which was shortly done, and so they were sent to the nauie, so that thei might shortly be at Calice yf nede required.

On Sundaye the. xxv. daye of Maye, the lorde Marques Dorset the bishop of Chichester, & the lorde de Lawar, with other noble mẽ, at the water of Graueling, receiued the Emperor in the name of ỹ kynge xl of England, and so the Emperor embraced theim, and he hauing in his compaignie many noble men, came toward Calice, wher at the Turnepike in the lordeship of Marke, he was receiued of sir Edward Guylford Marshall of Calice, wyth fyftie menne of armes richly besene, and also a hundred archers on horsebacke, then in passing forward toward Calice, the ordinaunce shot terribly, and into Calice he was receyued wyth procession, and then by the lord Barne deputie there, and the cousayll of the toune: then was he receiued by the Maior and Aldermen of the toune, and then of the Maior and Merchauntes of the Staple, & so conueighed to the Checker, and there lodged.

On the Monday, he and al the nobles of Spain, Flaũders, & Germany, toke ship at Calice and landed at Douer, at foure of the Clocke at after none, and with him the Duke Daluoy, the Prince of Orenge, the Countie Nassaw, the Countie Ualcord, the lord Ogmond, and the Marques of Brandenbrough, all in one ship bote. The Cardinal receiued hym on the Sandes, accompaygnyed with thre hundred Lordes, & Knightes and Gentlemen of Englãd: Themperor embraced the Cardinall, & tooke hym by the arme, and so passed forward, and toke horses and rode together to Douer Castle, wher thei wer lodged. Thenglish Harbingers diligently lodged the Emperors train, euery man according to hys degree. The kyng of England was come to Cantorbury, the.xxbij.day of May, and receiued by the Archbishop: and hearynge of the Emperors arriual, wyth a smal compaignie on the Wednesday, beyng the Assension euen, he rode to Douer, and with muche ioye and gladnes the Emperour and he met, and there taried the Assension day, and on Friday, the kinge brought the Emperoure aborde on hys newe xx shyp, called the Henry grace a dieu, a shyppe of.xb.C. and rowed about to all hys greate shippes, whych then lay in Douer rode, the Emperor and his lordes, muche praised the makyng of the shyppes, and especially the artilerie, they sayed, they neuer sawe shippes so armed.

Thesame day at after none, the two noble princes marched forward to Cantorbury, where the Maior and Aldermen receiued thẽ without the toune, with a solempne oracyon, to whom the Emperors secretary answered ornatly. Then the Princes with their swerdes borne naked before theim, and the Empẽrour on the ryght hand, entered the citie of Cantorbury, and so with procession were brought to Christes Church xxx where the Archebishop and twelue prelates mitered, receyued thẽ vnder a Canapy, and so they offered to the Sacrament, & the Emperour was brought to the Bishoppes palace, where he lay for that night, and the kyng lodged at S. Augustynes. The morowe after, these princes remoued to Sytyngborne, & the next day to Rochester, wher the Bishop receyued them with the whole Couent, & on Mondaye thei came to Grauesende by one of the Clocke, where they toke their Barges, & ther were thirty Barges appoynted, for the straungiers, & so by.vj.of the clocke they landed at Grenewiche, thesame Monday, the.ij.day of June, where the Emperour was of the kyng newly welcõmed, & al his lx nobilitie, & at all the hal doore the Quene and the Prynces, and all the Ladies receyued & welcommed hym: and he asked the Quene blessing (for that is the fashyon of Spain, betwene the Aunte & the Nephew) ỹ Emperor had great ioye to se the Quene hys Aunte, & in especyall his young cosyn Germain the lady Mary. The Emperor was lodged in the kinges lodging, whiche was so richely hanged, that the Spanyardes wõdered at it, and specially at the rych cloth of estate: nothyng lacked that might begotten, to chere the Emperor and his Lordes, and al that came in his compaignie, were highly feasted.

The Wednesday, the more to do the Emperor pleasure, was prepared a Justes royall: on the one part was the kinge, the erle of Deuonshire and .x. more compaignions, al mounted on horsback, their apparell and bardes, were of rich Cloth of golde, embroudered wyth syluer letters, very ryche, with great plumes on their heades. This cõpaigx nie tooke the felde, and rode aboute the tilt: then entered the Duke of Suffolke, and the Marques Dorset, and .x. with them barded, & their apparell was russet veluet, embroudered wyth sundery knottes, and culpyns of golde. The Emperor & the Quene, with al the nobles stode in the galery, to behold the doyng. The king ran at the Duke of Suffolke .viij. courses, and at euery course brake his spere. Thẽ euery man ran his courses and that done, all ranne together volant, as as faste as they could discharge, and when the speres appointed were brokẽ, then they disarmed & went to supper. After supper, the Emperor beheld the ladies daunces, and sodainly came to the chamber, sixe noble mẽ, appaxi reled in Crimosin veluet and cloth of golde, and a mantell of Taffeta, rolled about their bodies, and hoddes and bonettes of cloth of gold, on their heddes, & veluet buskyns on their legges: these Maskers entred and daunced a great while wyth the ladies, and sodainly entred syx other Maskers with drumslades, appareled in lõg gounes, and hoddes of cloth of gold, of whych nomber was the kyng, the duke of Suffolke, the prince of Orẽge, the countie of Nassow, the countie of Naueray, & Monsire Egremõd. When these maskers wer entred, the other auoyded, & then thei toke ladies and daunsed, so ỹ the straũgiers much praised thẽ: & whẽ the time came, euery person departed to their lodgyng.

xii Thursday, they that Justed the other daye, appoynted themselfs to Tornay, & as the kyng was armyng him, there came to him one George Luffkin and shewed him, that there was one come frõ his Ambassador in Fraunce, the king called for the messenger, and deliuered his letters, which ỹ king red, and said to syr William Compton, tel the Emperor that I haue newes, if it pleaseth hym to come hether: Sir William Compton went and told this to the Emperoure, which without delay came to the kyng, whych shewed him the letters frõ sir Thomas Cheiney his Ambassador, wherin was conteyned ỹ definitiue answer made aswel to sir Thomas Cheyney, as to Clarẽseaux king of armes of En-xi glande, by the French kynge, to the kinges requestes: for you shall vnderstand, that the kyng of Englande by hys Ambassador, had often times demaunded, both his trybute and hys lawful debte, and also restitucyon to be made to his subiectes greued, and farther also the league was broken, by makyng warre on the emperor, so that now by ỹ league the kyng of Englande should be enemy, to him that first brake, and did

take part wyth the other, yet he had so much compassion, on sheding of Christen bloud, that he would not enter warre, but shew him self a mediator and an entreator betwene thē. And vpō thys sir Thomas Cheney had often moued the French kyng, & also moued him to take peace with the Emperor for two yeres, so that some mediaciō of peace might be entreated, in the meane season: to all this the French king answered we haue wel considered your Maisters desire, to ỹ which we nothinge agree, nor hold vs content wyth his request. Sir said thambassador, ỹ kyng my Maister shalbe aduertysed of your answere by me, wherfore I besech your grace of safeconduit, to returne into England: then sayd ỹ the kyng, there is an officer of armes come hether out of Englande, let him come and he shalbe hard, and haue an answere, to which thing Sir Thomas Cheney answered not, but wyth reuerence departed, and so on the .xxj. daie of Maie, the said officer called Clarenseaux king of armes, came to the French kinges chāber at Lions, which was accōpaignied with many noble men and gentlemen, and then Clarenseaux put on his cote of armes, and desired licēse to speake, and libertie according to the law of armes, which was to him graunted: thē he declared that where the French kinge was bound by league tripertite, to kepe peace with the Emperor, and with the king of England, and whosoeuer first ỹr brake, the other two to be enemies to hym, to ỹ which league the Frēch king was sworne, whiche league he apparantly had broken, by making warre on Thēperor, by syr Robert de la Marche, and by hym selfe in persone. Wherfore the kinge by that league muste bee hys enemie, and take parte agaynst hym.

Also he declared, ỹ the Frēch king kept away the kinges rētes, and debtes, dew to him. Also ỹ he deteyned the dower of the Frēch quene. Also that contrary to his promyse, he had sent the Duke of Albany into Scotland: Also that contrarye to Justice he had empriſoned Merchantes, hauing his safeconduite, where they should haue gone in safty ỹr seyng there was no warre proclaimed, betwene him and the kyng his maister: al these articles with many mo, ỹ kyng my maister is ready to proue. Nay said the French kyng, I begā not the war, nor sent Robert Lamarche to make warre, but commaunded him to the contrary, and or I made warre in proper person, his warre was open, & he had oure toune of Tournay strongly besieged, and as touching the Duke of Albany, it hath cost me .xl. M. Frankes, to kepe him out of Scotland, but I could not let hym to go into his owne coūtrey. Thys ỹ Frēch kynge excused his vntruth. Sir I am farther charged to tell you, said Clarēseaux ỹ the king my souereigne lord, holdeth you for his mortal enemie ỹr this day furth, & al your adherentes: wel sayd the Frēch king, I loked for this a great while agone, for sith the Cardinall was at Bridges, I loked for no nother, but you haue done your message: thē ỹ Frēch king rose and departed, and Clarenseaux was cōueighed to his lodgyng, & shortly after, sir Thomas Cheyney and he, by safeconduyt, departed & came came to Bulleyn, and there Monsire Fayet capitain there, theim both staied til the Ambassador of Fraunce, whiche had lien in England, wer clerely delyuered out of Calice. The whole circūstaunce of the demaū-des and defiaunce, and the French kinges aunswere, was conteined in the letter, which was brought to the king, which shewed it to the Em-peror (as you haue hard) but while the king and the Emperor loked on the letter, a sodein noise rose emongest both their subiectes, that it was a letter of defiance, sent to them bothe by the French king, whych was nothing so. Thus now was the warre open of al parties, betwene En-x glande and Fraunce, & Spain. When the two princes had of this mat-ter commoned their fill, themperor called for a horse, and the king him-self was armed, and bothe the bendes that should Tournay, mounted on horsebacke, and themperor in rich apparell of tissew and richly trap-ped brought the kung into the felde, and toke vp hys horse, that all men had great pleasure to beholde him. The men of armes fel to Turnay, and brake swerdes and wer seuered, and after came together agayn, & fought very valiauntly, and when tyme was, the Heraulides cryed the disarme, and assone as the king was vnarmed the Emperor & he went to supper, and after supper, the kyng brought the Emperor into the hal xx where was a Cupperd of. xij. stages, al set wyth great mightie plate al of golde, at the vpper end honge thre clothes of estate, and the hall was ful of great lyghtes, set on gylt braunches.

When the two Princes were set, and the Quene also, then entered in eight noble menne, in Maskers apparell with visers, their garmen-tes blacke Ueluet, garded and embroudered wyth golde in cut workes and ouer that double Lumberdy Mantelles of Sattin, folded vp on euery shulder, curiously embroudered, these Maskers were halfe En-glish Lordes, and the other straungiers. They toke Ladies and dau-sed, and sodainly entered eight other Maskers, apparelled in rych tin-xxx sel, matched wyth clothe of golde, and on that Turkey Clokes, reban-ded wyth Nettes of Siluer, and betwene the knittinges Flowers of Golde, and the Mantelles were Crimosin Sattin, both the Maskers had hoddes of Crymosyn Sattyn, these lustie Maskers entered, and reueled lustely, and when they had done, then were the spices brought and wyne, and then al persones began to draw to reste.

On Friday, the sixt day of June, the king and the Emperour, wyth all their compaignies marched toward London, where in the waye a Myle from Sainct Georges Barre, was set a ryche Tent of Cloth of golde, in whyche tente were two lodgynges, one for the Emperoure, xl and another for the kyng, where these two Princes shifted theim. And when the Heraulides had appointed euery man their roume, then eue-ry man set forwarde in ordre, rychlye apparelled in Clothe of Golde, Tyssew, Siluer, Tinsell, and Ueluettes of all coloures. There lacked no massye Cheynes, nor curyous Collers: an Englyshe manne and a straungier roade euer together, matched accordinge to their degrees,

before the Emperoure and the kinge, were borne two swordes naked, then the two Princes folowed in Coates of cloth of golde, embraudedered with syluer, bothe of one suite: after theim folowed the Kynges Henxmenne, in Coates of Purple Ueluet, pieled and paned wyth rych Cloth of siluer, and with them were matched the Emperours Henxemenne, in equall nōber, in Coates of Crimosyn Uelvet, with two gardes, the one golde, and the other siluer: then folowed the Capitaynes of the Gardes, then the Emperours Gard on the right hande, and the Englishe Garde on the left hande, and so in this ordre they wente forwarde, and in the waye the Maior Jhon Milborne and hys brethren, x in fyne Skarlet and well horsed, met wyth the Emperour and ỹ king where one sir Thomas More knight, and well learned, made to theim an eloqueut Oracion, in the praise of the two princes, and of the peace and loue betwene them, and what comfort it was to their subiectes, to se theim in such amitie, and how that the Maior and Citezens, offered any pleasure of seruice that in them laye, next their souereigne lorde.

When this was done, they came into Southwarke, wher the Clergie receiued theim, in Copes, with Crosses, and Sensers, and so kepte the one syde of the strete, al the citie throughe. When they came by the Marshalsie at the kinges Benche, the Emperoure desired pardō of the xx kyng, for the prisoners, and he at the Emperours requeste, pardoned a great nomber of theim. When they were almoste at the Brydge foote there was a staye, the kyng demaunded the cause, and it was told hym that the Heraulides had appoynted two gentlemen to ryde together, one was the Ambassadour from the Marques of Mātua, to the Emperour, and the other from the Citie of Seines, to the Emperour also and the Citie and the Marques were not frendes, the Emperour incontinent, sent his Lord Chamberlayne to theim, saiynge: that yf they woulde that daye do hun honour, he would thanke theim, and yf they woulde not ryde as they were appointed, he prayed them to departe. xxx When the lorde Chamberlayne had told this message, they rode furth and made no more curtesye.

When they wer come to the Drawe Bridge, ther were set Targettes, of the Armes of the Emperour and his Dominions, rychly paincted, and on the other syde, stode one great Giaunt, representynge Hercules, wyth a myghty Clubbe in hys hand, and on the other syde stode another Giaunte, representyng Sampson, wyth the Jawe bone of an Asse in his hande. These twoo Gyauntes helde a greate Table, in the whyche was wrytten in Golden letters, all the Emperours Style. From the Drawe Bridge these two Princes passed, to the myddes of xl the Bridge, where was raised a faire edifice, wyth Towers embattailed and gates, al lyke Masonrye, of Whyte and Blacke, lyke Touche and Whyt Merbell: aboue this buildinge was a faire pagiaunt, in the whych stoode Jason all in harneys, hauyng before hym a golden Fleece, and on the one syde of hym stode a fiery Dragon, and on the other side

stode two Bulles whiche beastes cast out fyer continually, & in a tower on the one side stode a fayre mayde representyng the lady Medea whiche was very straungely and rychely appareled, and aboue this Pagiant were writen these verses.

Leticię quantum mimijs prebebat, Iason Aurea Phrixee vellera nactus ouis Leticię quantum tulerat Pompeius et vrbi Hoste triumphato Scipio Romulidum Tantum tu nobis Cæsar mitißime Princeps Intrans Henrici Principis hospicium

When they had beholde this Pagiant they came to the Conduite at Gracious strete where was made a Bastyle with two great gates, one on the one syde of the way and the other on the other side, and ouer these gates and betwene these gates were made.iii.great towers embattailed and bauted with lopes Lucanes lyke Masonry, curiously wrought, and in the middle tower was a clothe of estate, vnder whiche sat one representyng the Emperor, and in the third tower representyng the kyng. And Charlemayne hauyng.ii.swordes gaue to the Emperor the sworde of Justice, and to the kyng the sworde of triumphant victory, & before xx hym sat the Pope to whom he gaue the croune of thorne & thre nayles, About this pagiant were sette all the armes of the electors of thempyre and these verses in a table.

Carolo Christigenum decus et quem scripta loquntur
A magno ductum Carolo habere genus Tuque Henrice pia virtutis laude refulgens Doctrina in genio religione fide Vos pretor consul sanctus cum plebe senatus Vectos huc fausto sydere gestit ouans

This Pagiant was made by the Esterlynges.

xxx From Gracious strete where the Esterlinges stode in good order, the two princes came to Leden halle wher ouerthwart the great strete that leadeth to Bishoppes gate was erected a goodly Pagiant wonderfull curiously wrought, it was.xxviii.fote broade and.lxxx.of length, at the fote of the pagiant sat Jhon duke of Lancastre called Jhon of Gaunte sonne to kyng Edward the third. This duke sat in a rote and out of the rote sprang many braunches curiously wrought with leaues whiche by pollicie dropped swete water, and on euery braunche satte a kyng and a quene or some other noble parsonage descended of the sayd duke to the nomber of.lv.images, and on the toppe stode the Emperor, the kyng of xl England and the Quene, as thre in the.vi.degree from the sayd Duke. This pagiant was made at the cost of the Italyans & was much praised. Frō thence they passed to the Conduite in Cornehill where the strete was enclosed frō side to side with.ii.gates to open & shitte, and ouer the gates wer arches with towers embattailed set with vanes and scutchions of the armes of the Emperor & the kyng, and ouer the arches were two towers, the one full of Trompettes and the other full of Shalmes and shagbuttes whiche played continually: Betwene these two towers was a place, vnder a riche clothe of estate sat kyng Arthur at a rounde table & was serued with .x. kynges, Dukes and erles all bearyng Targettes of their armes, and when the Emperor and the kyng were comnyng thether a Poet sayd.

Laudant magnanimos vrbis inclita Roma Catones Cantant Hannibalem punica regna suum Gentis erat Solime rex ingens gloria Dauid.
Gentis Alexander gloria prima sue Illustrat fortes Arthur fama Britannos Illustras gentem Cæsar & ipse tuam Cui deus imperium victor precor hoste secundet Regnet vt in terris pacis amica quies

When this was sayd, they came to the Stockes where was a quadrant stage where on was an Herber full of Roses, Lylies & all other flowers curiously wrought, and byrdes, beastes and all other thynges of pleasure. And aboute the Herber was made the water full of Fyshe, and about it was the Elementes, the Planettes and Starres in their places and euery thyng moued, and in a type in the toppe was made the Trinitie with the Angels singyng, and the Trinitie blessed the kyng & the Emperor, and vnder his feete, was written, behold the louer of peace and concorde. And so they passed through the Poultry to the great Cõduite in Chepe, where was made on the right hand of the sayd Conduite (as they passed) in maner quadrant with fower towers, at euery corner one with goodly types, betwene euery tower was a gallery, whiche galeries were hanged with clothes of golde and siluer within, & so couered ouer. The forefrontes of euery gallery were hanged with white & grene Sarcenet wrethed and with great knottes of golde, let doune in maner of a valence before the gallery, and vnder the sayd galleries were Targettes and schutchions of the Emperors and kynges armes & deuyses. In the fower towers were fower fayre ladyes for the cardinall vertues so richely sene that it was great pleasure to behold, euery vertue hauyng a signe and token of her propertie. In the galleries sat chyldren mixed with men and women singyng and playyng on instrumẽtes melodiously, of the whiche sort one child sayd these verses folowyng.

Quanto amplexetur populus te Cæsar amore Testantur varijs gaudia mixta sonis Aera, tube, Litui, cantus cithare calamisq; Consona te resonant organa disparibus
Vnum te celebrant, te vnum sic cuncta salutant O decus, O rerum gloria Cæsar aue.

When they came to the stãdard there was made a mightie buildyng of tymber w̃ towers set in cables forced with arches buttãd & al abilimentes embossed, & the lynterelles inhaunsed with pillers quadrant & the vautes in orbes with crobbes depẽdyng & mõsters bearyng vp the pillers pillers and in the toppe was a louer swelling, in the toppe wherof was a bã-ner of the armes of Spayne and Engeland and all the pagiant full of scutchions of armes of the.ii.princes. At the fote of this pagiant sat Alphons kyng of Spayne richely appatelled, and out of his brest a braunche of whiche sprang many kynges, quenes and princes whiche satte and were liuely persones richely apparelled euery one with a scut-

Tuq; Henrice simul stemmata iuncta gerens Alter germanis, lux alter clara britannis Miscens Hispano sanguine vterque genus Viuite felices quot vixit secula Nestor

After this pagiant seen & the verses sayd, they came to the litle Conduite in Chepe where was buylded a place lyke heauen curiously paint-ted with cloudes, erbes, starres & the Jerarchies of angels, in the top of this pagiant was a great type & out of this type sodainly issued out of a xx cloude a fayre Lady richely apparelled, & then all the mynstrels whiche wer in the pagiant played and the angels sang, and sodainly agayne she was assumpted into the cloud whiche was very curiously done, and aboute this pagiant stode the Apostles wherof one sayd these verses.

Ob quorum aduentum tocies gens ipsa britanna

Quos etas omnis, pueri, iuuenesq;, senesq; Optariunt oculis sepe videre suis Venistis tandem auspicio Christi Marieq;

xxx Hereos saluete pij, saluete beati

Yet you must not forget for all the pagiantes how the Citezens well

Long prosperitie
To Charles and Henry Princes moste puissant.
The one of fayth
The other of the Churche Chosen defendant.

When they were paſt the lytle Conduite they came to the Weſt ende of Poules churche and there they alighted, & there was a Canapie redy vnder whiche they two ſtoode and were receiued by the Archebyſhop of Caũtoꝛbury and.xxi.pꝛelates in pontificalles and ſo they offered at the high aulter and returned to hoꝛſebacke and came to the Blacke Friers where the Emperoꝛ was lodged in great royaltie: All his nobles were lodged in his newe palace of Bꝛydewell, out of the whiche was made a Gallery to the Emperoꝛs lodgyng, whiche gallery was very long, and that gallery and all other galleries there wer hanged with Arras. The kynges palayce was ſo richely adoꝛned of all thynges that my witte is to dull to deſcꝛiue theim oꝛ the riches of the hangynges oꝛ the ſumptuous buildyng and giltyng of chambers.

On ſaterday the kyng & the Emperoꝛ playd at tennice at the Bayne agaynſt the pꝛinces of Oꝛenge and the Marques of Bꝛandenboꝛow, & on the Pꝛinces ſyde ſtopped the Erle of Deuonſhyꝛe and the loꝛde Edmond on the other ſyde, and they departed euen handes on bothe ſydes after.xi.games fully played.

On Whitſonday the.viii.day of June themperoꝛ and the kyng with great honoꝛ both apparelled in cloth of ſiluer reyſed, gounes and cotes and all their apparell white except their bonettes, roade to the Churche of ſaint Paule & there heard high Maſſe whiche was ſong by the Cardinall which had his trauers & cupboꝛde, and befoꝛe Maſſe.ii. Barons gaue him water & after the Goſpell.ii.Erles, and at the laſt lauatory.ii. Dukes whiche pꝛide the Spanyardes ſoꝛe diſdayned. When Maſſe was done they returned to Bꝛydewell where the Emperoꝛ was highly feaſted. Theſame ſonday at afternoone the two pꝛinces went by water to Weſtminſter and roade to the churche, and in ridyng all the ſanctuary menne cryed mercye and pardon, they were ſo haſtye and pꝛeſed ſo nere that the ſergeauntes at armes could ſcaſe kepe theim from touchyng the Emperoꝛ and the kyng: The Cardinall gaue them a gentle anſwere whiche contented theim foꝛ a tyme. They wer receyued with Pꝛoceſſion into the Abbey & heard euenſong & beheld kyng Henry the ſeuenthes chapel & then went into Weſtminſter halle, at the largeneſſe wheroꝛ the Emperoꝛ muche meruayled, then they turned to Bꝛydewell and there ſupped.

On Mõday they dyned in Southwarke with the duke of Suffolke and hunted there in the Parke, and roade to the Manoꝛ of Richemond to their lodgyng and the next day to Hampton court, where they had great chere and from thence on thurſday to Wyndſoꝛe wher he hunted Fryday and Saterday and on Sonday at night in the great halle was a diſguiſyng oꝛ play, theffect of it was that there was a pꝛoud hoꝛſe which would not be tamed noꝛ bꝛideled, but amitie ſent pꝛudence & policie which tamed him, & foꝛce & puyſſaũce bꝛideled him. This hoꝛſe was mẽt by the Frẽche kyng, & amitie by the kyng of Englãd & themperoꝛ, & the other other prisoners were their counsail & power, after this play ended was a sumptuous Maske of.xii.men and.xii.women, the men had on garmentes of clothes of golde and siluer lose layde on crimosyn Satten, knit with pointes of golde, bonettes, whoddes, buskins, all of golde, The ladies were in thesame suite whiche was very riche to behold, and when thei had daunced, then came in a costly banket and a voidy of spices, and so departed to their lodgyng.

Monday, tewsday, and wednesday the princes and their counsail sat moste parte in counsail, and on Corpus Christi day, they with great triumph rode to the collage of Wyndsore where the Emperor ware his Mantle of the Garter and satte in his owne stall, and gaue to the Herauldes.CC.crounes: that day bothe the princes receiued the Sacrament, and after Masse bothe sware to kepe the promyses & leagues eche to other, for the which amitie great ioy was made on both parties, & after that Masse was ended thei went to dynet, where was great feasting.

On fryday they departed out of Wyndsore, & by easy iorneys came to Wynchester the.xxii.day of June, & in the way thether, the Emperor hunted the Hart. Before the Emperor was come to Wynchester, therle of Surray Admyrall of Englād with all the kynges Nauy was come to Hampton, and with him the lorde Fitz Water, the Baron Curson, syr Gyles Capell, sir Nicholas Carew, sir Richard Wyngfeld, sir Richard Jernyngham, Fraunces Bryan, Anthony Browne, Jhon Russell, of whiche many were of the kynges preuy chāber: These with many more departed from Hampton with.xxx.shippes well manned & ordinaunced in the ende of June, noisyng that they should onely skoure the seas for sauegard of the Emperor and his Naupe: But they had priuy instruccions to go to another place as you shall heare after.

All this while was the warre on the parties of Picardy hotte, and the capitaine of Bullain called Fayet wrote euer mockyng letters to the garison of Calice, and sayd: yf the garison of Calayce would issue out, he would mete with theim halfe way with.iiii.M.men Wherupon sir Edward Guldforde Marshall of Calayce, whom the capitaine of Bullain called the fyrebrand, because it was his badge, sette furth out of Calayce the.xi.day of June with.xii.C.men and went out of Calayce and sent a pursiuant to the capitayn of Bullain certifyng hym that he was commyng with his fyerbrand, and bad hym kepe promise. This officer declared the message to hym, but he came not: Furth matched sir Edward til he came to Marguison and taryed to see whether the captayn of Bullayne would come or no, and when he sawe he came not, he set fyer in the toune, and the light horsemen forrayed the beastes and pillage, and brent byllages all about, whiche was wel perceiued in the countrey a farre of, and to warde night all the crew came home with good pillage, & on the morow sir Edwarde Guldford deliuered a prisoner franke and free, on condicion he should tell the capitaine of Bullain that he had bene at Marguison with his fyerbrand, whiche truely did his message, for the whiche the capitaine brake hys head: all the castels and fortresses in the Englishe pale were well manned and vitailed and lacked no artillerie, so that the Frenchemen could do theym no harme.

When the Emperor and the kyng laye at Byshops Walthan they ioyntly sent letters of defiaunce to the Duke of Lorraine, as alye and confederate with the Frenche kyng. The fyrst day of July the Emperors nauy sailed before Hampton, which wer. C. lxxx. goodly shippes. When the Emperors shippes were come, he tooke leaue of the kyng and had great gyftes geuen him and muche money lent to him, & so the vi. day of July he toke his shippe, so with all his Nauy he made sayle towarde Spayne where he arriued in sauetie the. x. day after. x

The kyng about this very tyme sent to the citie of London to borow xx. M. poũdes, whiche sore chaked the citizens, but the somme was promised, and for the payment the Mayer sent for noue but for men of substaunce. Howbeit the craftes solde muche of their plate. This summe was payed, and the kyng sent his letter promtsyng payment of thesame and so did the Cardinall. The poore men were contented with this payment and sayd, let the riche churles pay, for they may well. Lyke loane was practised through al the realme, and priuy seales deliuered for the xx repayment of thesame.

This season the. xxi day of Maye was the citie of Geane gotten by the Emperors capitain called Octauiano de Columna, whiche had with hym. iiii. M. and. iiii. C. Spaniardes. b. M. Italyans, and. iiii. M. Lanceknightes: & in the citie was taken Porter de Nauarro the Frenche kynges familiar capitaine and all the lordes of Geane whiche fauored the Frenche kyng were taken prisoners or slayne, & especially one Octauiano Faragoso, whiche ruled there for the Frenche kyng, was euil punished: The spoyle of the citie that the souldiers had, was. iiii. M. dukates beside the pillage, whiche was a great thyng. xxx

Now let vs returne to the lorde Admyrall of Englande whiche departed frõ Hampton as you haue heard, and so with his Nauy sayled and skouted the seas, and at last came on the costes of Brytaigne, and commaunded the wysest Masters and Marrtners to boy the heauen of Worles, whiche was done, and so the next night all the fleete came to the hauen of Worles in safetie & moored their shippes together. Then all men were commaunded to harnes and to auaunce their standardes, & all souldiers to geue their attendance on their capitaines, and then the lorde Admyrall appointed and caused. xiiii. pieces of ordinaunce called Faucons to be brought to land and drawẽ furth with strength of men. xl Then when all menne that should go forwarde were landed, the lorde Admyral with banner displayed tooke lande on the Estside of the hauen the fyrst day of Julye, and with hym a fayre band of souldiers, as the lorde Fitz Water, the Baron Curson, sir Richard Wyngfelde, sir Richard Jernyngham, sir Wyllyam Barantine, sir Adrian Fortkew, sir Edwarde Donne, sir Edwarde Chamberlayne, Fraunces Bryan,

x ported, with many other gentlemen and souldiers, to the nombre of viii.M. The lorde Admyrall and sir Richard Wyngfeld brought these men in good order of battaill,& caused Christopher Morres the master gunner to see all thinges redy prepared,& then about.viii.of the clocke the sayd fyrst day they marched towarde Moyles in good orde of battail with banners displayed. The alarme rose in the countrey and came to the toune of Moyles wherby the gentlemen of the countrey shewed themselfes pryckyng,but when they heard the Gunes they fledde as though they neuer vied warre. They of Moyles armed theimselfes & went to the walles and shut the gates and laide ordinaunce where was xx moste ieopardie. The Englishemen had gone fiue long myle and were now come to the subberbes of the toune: then the Englishemen archers shot,and the Brytons them defended:then the Admyrall commaunded the toune to be assauted,then the lord Fitz Water and the Baron Curson quartered the toune on all sides: The Englishemen shot with long bowes,and the Brytons with crosse bowes,whiche defended themselfes manfully. Before the port Mornet where is a Meason de dieu, At this gate gaue the assaut sir Richard Wyngfelde,Nycholas Carew, Fraũces Bryan, sir Jhon Wallop and all their bendes hauyng with theim thre pieces of ordinaunce called Faucons, whiche the master Gunner xxx of tymes shot, but the Britons had set the gate full of hacbusshes, then the gunner sayd,haue at the wicket,and in the smoke of the gunnes let vs entre the gate,the gentlemen assented, then the sayd sir Christopher Gunner strake the locke of the wicket, so that it flew open, then in the smoke ranne to the gate the sayd Christopher and the other forenamed gentlemen,and when Christopher came to the gate he found the wicked open & entred,and the gentlemen folowed,the Brytons defended themselfes,but thei were put backe or slaine,then was the great gate opened and then entered the souldiers that were on the other side of the toune When the Brytons on the walles sawe the towne gotten, some fled at xl the posterne and some by another way,the best way that they could.

Therle of Surray with bãner displayed toke the market place. Then the souldiers fell to pillage and rifled the chestes and ware houses of marchauntes,for the toune of Moyles was very riche, and specially of lynnen clothe, the gentlemen suffered the souldiers to do what they would. When the souldiershad taken their pleasure of the toune as muche for attrueth or more then they could beare away,

 The

The lorde Admirall cõmaunded the trumpettes to blow, & cõmaunded all men to set fyer in al places of the toune (the holy places onely except) the fayre market place was set on fyer, & the subburbes brent ardantly. Wo herfore all men were commaunded to their standardes, and aboute vi. of the clocke the army retreted, and as they passed they brent the villages and places. And when night approched they drewe together and all that night lay on land abiding their enemies. And the next day with honor they tooke their shippes, and when all menne were shipped and fewe or none missed. The lorde admyrall commaunded .xvi. or .xvii. shippes small and great lyng in the hauen to be brent. Then they sayled furth and came to ancker before saint Polle de Lyon, then he commaunded that the foyst and other small shippes and great botes should be manned to enter into an harborow for shippes called pympoll or pympole, which was sone done, the boates entred the place and some landed, but then the Brytons were to strong, and so they tooke their boates and bet the Bryttons on the shore, and the Brytons shotte great ordinaunce at the Englishmen, but it did them no harme, and yet the Englishen Brent a shippe of .CC. and many small vessels. When tyme came the whole flete sayled into the haue of Brest and with barkes and rowe barges entred the haue and toke land, and some Englishme did so muche that they set fyer in houses nere the castle. And euen as thenglishemen sayled by the coost, the Brytons them askryed and fortefied the landyng places, yet dayly the Englishemen kyrmished with the Brytons and came safely to their shippes againe: with this warre was all the duchy of Brytaigne sore troubled.

When the lorde Admirall had wonne the toune of Morles as you haue heard: He called to him certaine squyers whom for their hardines and noble courage he made knightes, fyrst sir Fraunces Bryan, sir Anthony Broune, sir Richard Cornwall, sir Thomas More, sir Gyles Huse, sir Jhon Russell, sir Jhon Raynsford, sir George Cobham, sir Jhõ Cornwalles, sir Edward Rigley and diuers other. And after he wrote letters to the kyng of his good spede: In the whiche he muche praised all the gentlemen and souldiers for their hardynes. When he had sayled a while on the seas, he had letters sent from the kyng that he should retreyte, and so he came withall his fleete vnder the Isle of Wyght to a place called the Kow, and then he departed from his shippe and came to Estamstede the xxi. daye of Julye to the kyng, of whom he was well welcomed you may be sure. And so on Mounday the .xxiii. day of July the kyng and he came to London to the Cardynals place and there sat in counsayle to determine what should be done. After this the kyng dyned with the Cardinall the .xxiii. day of Julye, where he reherssed that he had knowlege that the Admyrall of Britaine was in Morles with a .C. horsemen and a .C. crosbowes, and yet he fedde, and the kyng muche cõmended the lorde Admyral for his payne and hardynes, and praysed theim of hys garde, and specially fiftie, whiche left pylferyng

and neuer went from the lorde capitaine.

On the third day of July while this enterprise was done at Mozles, certaine Frenchemen to the nomber of.CCC.horsemen came nere to the castle of Guysnes and kept theim selfe in a close couert and so appered viii.or.x.horsemen and came nere Guysnes: out of the Castle came.viii. Englishe archers and issued out of the gate and fell with the Frenche horsemen in skyrmishe: to the Frenchemennes, reskue came.iii.men of armes and skyrmished with the archers whiche were a fote. Then out of Guysnes issued.xii.dimilances all Welshemen and ranne boldely to x the Frenchemen in reskue of the fotemen, Then the whole bend of Frenchemen issued out & set on the Welshemen, the fotemen shotte while arrowes lasted and were faine to fight with swordes, the Welchmen kept themselfes together and entred into the bend of Frenchemen and brake their speres and then fought so with swordes that they made away, so that they escaped from the bend of.CCC.horsemen, and of the Frenche men were slayne.iii.men and.v.horse, the fotemen were ouerpressed and solde their liues dere, for the Frenchemen slew them al and would take none prisoner, they were so angry with the kyllyng of their horse.

Also the.xxv.day of July sir Wyllyam Sandes treasorer of Caleys xx and sir Edward Guildforde Marshal, with banners spred, issued out of Caleys with.xiiii.C.menne and went into the Frenche pale lokyng for Mounsire Foyat whiche was a great mocker and a coward: But when he appeared not they went to Whitsand baye and set it on fyer, and the people fled to the churche whiche was fortified and stode at defence, the body of the churche was wonne and then they toke the steple and some yelded themselfes, but the remnãt by counsail of a priest mainteined so long that the Steple was fyred and then the priest cried succour, but it was to late and so the Frenche people was fayne to lepe the Steple & diuers perished, & they that were saued wer led to Caleys as prisoners.
xxx Farther the.xxiii.daye of thesame moneth Thwaites a capitaine of an Englishe shippe tooke land besyde Bulleyn, and went vp thre myle into the countrey to a toune called Newe Castle and forrayed all the countrey and in his returne set fyer on the toune & brent a great part therof maugre the Bullenoys, and with his bowes and men whiche only was vi.score, he put backe.lxxx.Haugbusches and.CCC.men of warre of the countrey and so came to their shippe with all the botie and lost no mã, notwithstandyng they were sore folowed to their shippe.

On the.vi.day of July the Cardynall satte in the starre chamber at Westminster where he sayd, my Lordes it is reason that you should xl know the honorable enterprise done by the lorde Admiral and his compaigny in Brytaigne whiche hath dispoyled and destroyed the great toune of Mozles in Brytaigne with all the villages and countrey

adioynyng to thesame, whiche is in the Frenche dominion, whiche mischiefe had neuer risen yf Fraunces the Frenche kyng had kept his othe and promise. For he is bound that he should neuer retayne the Swyches from the Emperor, nor that he shall not inuade any of the Emperors landes or dominions, whiche he hath done, for he hath inuaded the countrey of Henaude and Cambrises and taken Heding and Fountraby with many other iniuryes. For when the kyng sent me and other to his great costes the last yere to Caleys to treate a vnitie and peace betwene theim, all our saiynges were by the Frenche kyng turned into a mocquery. Also contrary to hys promyse he hath suffered Duke Jhon of Albany to entre the realme of Scotland to the great perill of the yong kyng, Nephieu to our soueraigne lorde, and also entendeth to mary the Quene of Scottes contrary to the kynges honor. The sayd Frenche king also witholdeth the kinges dueties and his sisters dower: wherfore of necessitie the kyng is entered into warre, for no prince wyll suffre the wrong that the French kyng offereth hym as an vntrue and forsworne prince, wherfore for your owne welth yoū must now ayde your prince, trustyng to punyshe and chastice hym to your great honor and fame.

xx Then by commaundement wer all Frenchemen and Scottes imprisoned and the goodes seazed, and all suche as were denizens were commaunded to shewe their letters patentes, & suche as were allowed had all their goodes and the other not, and all Frenchemen and Scottes that had maryed Englishe women, the wifes and childzen had halfe the goodes deliuered vnto them, and euery denizen to fynde suertie for hys good abearyng, and all the other yf they would be bayled to fynde suerties for their trueth and allegeaunce or els to be kept in pryson, for the portes were so kept that they could not flye.

xxx The kyng nowe beyng entered into the warres thought not to slepe and let the Frenche kyng alone, wherfore by his letters he commaūded certain persones with their powers to come to Lōdon in August. They that wer appointed came accordyngly, euery man with suche a nomber as to him was appointed, and when they had mustered at London before the kynges Commissioners they were nere.xii.M.menne with the Poyners, and they were sent to the lorde Admyral whiche lay at Douer with.iiii.M.men, but because haruest was not done, the vitayle at Caleys was to litle for so great an armye, wherfore they lay in Kent at tounes there a good space, whiche made vytaile dere there.

xl In this sommer the lorde Rosse and the lorde Dacres of the North whiche were appointed to kepe the borders agaynst Scotland did so valiantly that they burned the good toune of Kelsy and.lxxx.billages and ouerthrew.xviii.towers of stone with all their Barnkyns or Bulwerkes.

The

The kyng also in this moneth was credibly enformed that the duke of Albany prepared an army royall of Scottes and Frenchemen to inuade England. Wherfore the kyng appointed the Erle of Shrewsbury his lorde Steward to be his Lyeutenaunt generall against the sayd Duke and his inuasions, whiche directed his letters to the shyres of Yorke, Darby, Stafford Shropshyre and al other beyond Trent that all menne should be in readynes.

The.xx.daye of August the Cardynall sent for the Maior, Aldermen and the moste substantialleste commoners of the Citie of London, where he declared to theim that the kyng had appoynted commissioners through the whole realme of England for to lwere euery manne of what value he is in mouables, the more to be in readynes for the defence of this realme. And the kyng for the loue he beareth you would haue syt with you hymselfe, but for certayne other affayres in hys warres to be doone he is letted, and so hath appoynted me your Commissioner. Wherfore in conuenient tyme certifye me the nomber of all suche as be worth one hundreth pounds and vpwarde, to the intent I may sweare theim of their values: for fyrst the kyng asketh of you your louyng heartes and due obeysaunce, the whiche shall appeare by your conformitie to his requestes, and when the value is taken he desyreth onely the tenth part of goodes and landes whiche is the least reasonable thyng that you can ayde your prince with. I thynke euery one of you wyll offer no lesse, as for the spiritualtie euery manne is in the shyres sworne and shall and wyll gladly pay the fowerth part to the kyng and lyue on the iii.partes. Nowe to your part I am sure you wyll not grudge, therfore name me the menne of substaunce and for the meaner sorte, meaner Commissioners shall be appoynted. Syr sayd a marchaunt yf it may please you, how shal this tenth part to the king be deliuered? In money plate or Jucls sayd the Cardinall at a value. O my lorde sayd the Aldermen it is not two monethes sithe the kyng had of the Citie.xx.thousand pound in ready money in loane, whereby the Citie is very bare of money, for Goddes sake remembre this, that riche marchauntes in ware be bare of money: Well sayd the Cardynall, this must be done and therefore go about it. So the Aldermen resorted to their Wardes and named suche as they iudged to be of that value, whiche came before the Cardinall and moste humbly besought hym that they myght not be sworne for the true value of their substaunce, for the true valuation to theim was vnknowen and many honest mennes credence was better then his substaunce, and therfore they doubted the peril of periury. Well sayde the Cardinall sythe you dread the cryme of periurye, it is a tygne of grace, and therefore I will for you borowe of the kyng a lytle. Make you your billes of your owne value lykely likely to repoꝛt youꝛ fame,and then moꝛe buſynes nedeth not, foꝛ you ſee what two coſtly armyes the kyng hath ready againſt bothe Fraunce and Scotland,therfoꝛe nowe ſhewe youꝛ ſelfes lyke louyng ſubiectes, foꝛ you be able enough. And I dare ſweare the ſubſtance of London is no leſſe woꝛth then two Myllions of golde. Then ſayd the citezens we woulde to God that it were ſo,and the citie is ſoꝛe appaired by the great occupiyng of ſtraungers. Well ſayd the Cardinall it ſhalbe redꝛeſſed if I lyue : But on Saterday next I ſhall appoynt one to receyue youꝛ bylles,and he that is of credence moꝛe then of ſubſtance let hym reſoꝛte to me and I will be ſecrete and good to hym. Thus the Citezens de- x parted in great agony ſaiyng, that at the laſt loane ſome lent the fifth part and nowe to haue the tenth part was to muche. And here note well that the.x.thouſand pounds that was lent was not taken as the.xx.of euery mannes ſubſtaũce,but it ſhould be allowed as part of the.x.part, and this valuacion ſhoulde perfoꝛme vp the whole.x.part. Great was the mournyng of the common people as it is euer in ſuche caſes of paymentes. But in the ende one doctoꝛ Tonnys a ſecretary to the Cardinal came to the Chapiter houſe of Paules,and to him the citezens bꝛought in their bylles and on their honeſtie they were receiued, whiche dales afterwarde turned them to diſpleaſure. xx

The ſpiritualtie made ſuite to the loꝛde Cardinall that no tempoꝛall men ſhould ſit to exampne them, to be made pꝛiuy to their poſſeſſions & goodes: wherfoꝛe biſchoppes and Abbottes were appoynted commiſſio-ners to take the value of their ſubſtaunce.

In this ſeaſon was great plentie of vitaile ſent to Caleys, and to the loꝛde Admyꝛal were ſent Tentes and Pauilions ſome of.lxx.lodgyn-ges foꝛ hym and other noble men.

The Friday beyng the.xxii.day of Auguſt certain Welſhemen were lodged at a pooꝛe billage named Cauſe, becauſe in Caleys was beꝛye naꝛow lodgyng,and theſame night.CCCC.Frenchmen paſſed by Ca- xxx leys hauẽ foꝛ lacke of good watche and came into theſame billage and ſet fyer in the houſe where the Welſhemen lay whiche ranne awaye naked into the Mariſhe and ſaued themſelfes,but their hoꝛſes wer taken. This chaunce happened foꝛ lacke of good watche.

When the loꝛde Admyꝛall had bꝛought all his menne out of the ſhippes and that all the ſouldioꝛs were come out of Englande and the oꝛdinaunce ſet on land,then came into Caleys hauen.xxiii.ſhippes out of Spayne from the Emperoꝛ whiche ſet on land.CCC. Spanyardes whiche were ſent to ſerue the loꝛde Admyꝛall and vnder hym they were put. When all thinges were ready,the loꝛde Admyꝛall ſet in oꝛder his xl battels and foꝛ the foꝛwarde he appoynted ſir Robert Ratcleffe, loꝛde Fitzwater foꝛ Capitayne, and with hym diuers knightes and gentlemen whiche capitaine kept his men in very good oꝛder.

After

After that battail folowed the ordinaunce, artilerie and other trusses with vitail and neceſſaries, and for the capitaine of the horſemen was appointed ſyr Edward Gylford, by whō the currers and vewers of the countrey were appointed. The myddle warde ledde the lorde Admyrall himſelfe, and in his compaignie the lord Edmond Haward his brother, with many worſhipfull knightes ſquiers and tall yomen: The laſt battail was ledde by twoo valiaunt knightes of the Garter ſyr Wyllyam Sandes and ſyr Richard Wyngfelde, and with theim was ſir Richard Jernyngham with many other. In good order of battaill they paſſed r ouer Newnam bridge the.xxx.dai of Auguſt to a place called Calkewel and their lodged betwene the Wyndmyl and the marriſhe.

The ſame day came to the lorde Admyrall a certain nombre of wilde perſones, as menne out of ſeruice and apprentiſes that rann from theyr Maſters and other ydle perſons, and him deſired that they might be retained in the kynges wages, to whom he anſwered, that the kyng had appointed the nombre of ſuche as ſhould haue wages, which was fully complete, and aduiſed theim to returne into Englande and not to loyter there. Then ſayd a tall yoman, my lord here be many good felowes that with your fauor would ieopard to get or loſe, for their mynde is to be rr reuenged on the Frenchemen enemies to the kyng and his realme. Good felowe ſayd the lorde Admirall, theyr myndes be good, but if for lacke of conduite they ſhould be caſt awaye, it were a loſſe to the kynge and a great corage to the Frenchemen. Then al the compaignie cried, let vs go in the name of God and ſainct George: Then after counſaill taken he gaue them a Penon of ſainct George and bad them aduenture (of whiche they were called aduenturers) and farther bad theim that yf they got any botie they ſhould euer bryng it to tharmy, and they ſhould be payde to the vttermoſt, and then he gaue them money and cōmaunded them weapons and ſo the ſayd.xxxi.daye the ſayd aduenturers.iiii.

Monday the fyrſt day of September the armye remoued towarde Guiſnes, which day was very hote & drunke lacked, and water was not nere, ſo that ſome died for faintnes, & this night they laye at Guyſnes.

Tewſday the ſecond day of September the armye paſſed towarde Arde: And in the golden Valay where the kyng of Englande and the Frenche kyng met two yeres before, there met with tharmy of England two capitaines of the Burgonions, the one called therle of Egremond the Seneſchal of Henaude, and the lorde of Bauers Admyral of Flaū-rl ders with.v.C.horſemen, like men of warre. The lord Admiral in gentle maner receiued theſe two capitaines and their compaignie & ſo they ioyned theimſelfes to the Engliſhe armye, and the ſame day they tooke lodgyng at Arde ſouth from the toune, where they were wel vitailed, & there lay wedniſday all day, and the Burgonyons lay vnder the caſtle of Mountorrey. The next day they remoued to the vale of Lyekes, and there encāped themſelfes, Sir George Cobham theſame day with.ii.M

men,by the Admiralles cõmaũdement came to thee toune of Selloys & set fyer in the toune,& whẽ the toune was on fyer he assauted the castle. They within made resistence,but it auailed not,for the walles were entred & the souldiers taken,and the castle set on fyre,& with gunpouder ouerthrew the walles:thẽ with hast he remoued to a town called Brune bridge and set it on fyer and also brente a toune called Senkerke,and also the tounes of Botyngham and Wanstier & so returned to the lord Admirall whiche gaue him greate thankes, The Frenchemen appered in plumpes,but yet they durst not reskewe theyr tounes.

On saterday the lord Admirall remoued with the whole army too a ground beside saynt Nerbyns and there lay all Sonday beyng the.vii. day of Septembre,wher he sent diuers compaignies out,which forranged the coũtreyes & brent many villages as farre as thei might trauail the lord Admirall caused the toune of Narbyn to be brent,& tooke thee castle and rased it and vtterly destroyed it.

On Monday the.viii.day, he remoued to Dauerne and brente al the tounes as he passed,and lying there he brente the toune of Dauerne and cast doune the castle of Columberge & the Castle Rew,but the churches of Dauerne and a house of Nonnes,wer saued by his cõmaundement. Thesame day was brente sainte Matic de Boys and all the countreye twelue myle about was of light fyer,the people fledde and lefte tounes and Castelles full of wyne,corne,and all other necessaries, so that in Dauerne the Englishemen found greate plenty,whiche or they went away they set a fyer.

The.ix.day of Septembre the whole armye came before the toune of Boyardes in which was a Churche more liker a Castle then a Church, for it was depe ditched with drawe bridges and with Bulwarkes,fortefied and lopes very warlike. The Admirall beholdyng it sayd, thys is like no house of prayer.Then he commaunded his people to enter the dyches and plucke doune the drawe bridges,and set fyer in the churche and with gunpouder ouerthrewe it,and brent the toune and all the villages adiacent to thesame,the people cried and fledde.well was he that might saue him selfe.

The.x.day thei came to the toune of Vaus,which was ny the toune called Fauconberge and there a company of Frenchemen were askried, for out of a wood they shewed them selues.but thei taried not long,but without profer of encounter thei departed. Wherfore thee whole armye toke their campe & there lay till the xiii.day whiche was saterdai,euery daye sendyng plumpes out to set fyer in the countrey,and on that daye they toke the way to Frynge or Frynges, and ther brent the towne and destroyed the castle which was very strong.

The Sonday beyng the.xiiii.day,the lorde Admirall with his compaigny in great raine and yll wether passed by hilles and baleys verye painefully,and with greate labor came to a toune called Blamow, and there taried monday all day and there al day counsailed the capitaines both bothe of England and Flaũders or Burgon what was best to be done.

On tewsday in the morynyng came a trumpet from the Castle of Hedyng and desired to speake wyth the capitaine, whiche incontinent sent for hym: my lorde capitaine sayd the trumpet, the capitaine of Hedyng desireth you to come thither and see the place, and on the walles he wyll bring you good lucke, and he prayeth you not to hurt the dere in hys parke, and for any other hurt you can do hym he careth not: well sayde the lorde Admyrall, I wyll send hym answere by my trumpet. Incontinent he called a trumpet and bad hym go to Hedyng to Mounsire de Bees and to say to him that he would come to the castle of Hedyng, and if he slay any of my menne with his artillerie, let him trust me, that if I gette the castle I shall saue neither man, woman, nor childe. So wyth that message the trumpet departed & declared it to Mounsire de Bees, whiche sayd that it was spoken of noble corage, and so the trumpet returned, and thesame day the campe was remoued and the whole armye came about the castle of Hedyng, at whiche tyme the toune of Hedynge was sore infecte with pestilence, wherefore a generall commaundement was geuen that no man should once come into the toune, howbeit some of the Burgonyans did and set fyre in the houses.

Message fro Hedyng.

The answere

Hedyng besieged.

When the siege was planted, the ordinaunce was very light for the wayes were so depe and the grounde so wet that the greate ordinaunce could not be caried. Thys thing was well debated by the lord Admirall and the capitaines. After they had been there.xi. dayes, fyrst they considered that the castle could not be obtained wyth out great ordinaunce, whych in no wyse could then be caried, and also if they wyth the light ordinaunce shotyng should spend all their pouder and not get the castle then in theim might be reckened great foly, and also they should bee in great ieopardie to passe wythout ordinaunce, and further the plage began sore in the armye, wherefore they determined to leaue the siege and returne. But whyle they lay at ỹ toune they bet doune tosses, galleries, chymnies, and suche other thynges as the light ordinaunce would bete doune, whyche sore defaced the beautie of the castle. They also destroied all the dere in the Parke, whyche were falowe dere and left none for the capitaine. The Englishemen were clerely determined to haue assauted the castle if the Burgonions would haue done thesame: But they refused, whyche seyng the Englishmen left the assaut alone: For though the Englishemen had gotten it, it should haue been deliuered to the Emperours vse by the treatie, for he claymed it as his inheritaunce, whyche caused the Englishemen to leaue the assaut.

The cause why the castle was not assauted.

The siege raised.

And so the.xrii. daye of September they rered the siege and set theim selfes in good order of battaill and passed styl onwarde til they came to Dorlans and brent the toune, and rased the castle, and frõ thence came to the good toune of Darrier and brent and spoyled thesame. Thus he brent all the way as he passed: and euer the wether was worse, and men fell sicke wherfore the Burgonions and the Spaniardes returned into Flaunders aboue Betwyn.

The lord Admyral sawe that it was no time to kepe the felde, tutned backward in good order of battaill and came to Calaice the.xvi.daye of October. And while he lay at Calayce he sent out syr Willyā Sandes, syr Myrice Barkeley, syr William Fitzwillam wyth.iii.M.men, whiche brent Marguyson whyche was newly edified and fortefied, they brent also the toune of sainct Johnes Rhode & Temple toune, & many villages. At this voiage wer taken many prisoners xiii.M, shepe, xiiii. C. great cattel as Oxen & Kyen.xiii.C. hogges, and.vi.C. Mares and Horses, wyth this great botie this crew returned to Calayce in safetie.

Then ỹ lord Admyral sent syr Jhon Walop wyth.ix.C, men to saint Omers to lye there and at Guysnes, Hammes, and at Warke, & at Oy he left another nombre and left capitaines to ouerse them & all the soudiers had a monethes wages payed them & so returned into Englande. The aduenturers taried still and gat many good prayes, and brought to the garrisons, and lacked nothyng: they were muche drad of all the common people, for of them they had great prayes, and dayly learned feates of warre whiche made them the bolder.

When the lorde Admirall had set all thynges in an order on that syde the sea, he toke shippe & with the Nauy came into the riuer of Thames & so to the kynge, of whom he was wellcommed and not vnworthy.

In this season were banished out of Southwarke.xii.Scottes whiche had dwelt there a long season & wer conueied frō parishe to parishe by the constable like men ỹ had abiured the realme, & on their vttermost garment a white crosse before & another behynd them. Thus were they conueyed through London Northwarde till they came to Scotlande.

While the lorde Admiral was this in Fraunce destroiyng the countrey, the noble Erle of Shrewsbury lorde George Talbot & Stewarde of the kynges houshold prepared by the kynges commaundment a great army toward Scotland: for the kynge was enformed that Duke Jhon of Albany (whiche in ỹ Parliament of Scotland was made lord gouernor of the realme and of the yong kyng duryng hys nonage) had raised a mightie & puissaunt host of Scottes to the nomber of.lxxx.M. men as after was well knowen, whiche were warlike appointed, & that he wyth.v.C. Frenchemen with handgunnes and other great artillerie was cōmyng forward to inuade the west Marches of England adioynyng toward Scotlande. Wherefore the kyng sent worde to therle of Shrewsbury, which with all diligēce lyke a noble capitaine set forward towarde Yorke, & wrote to therles of Northumberland, Westmerland and Darby, to the lorde Dacres, Lumley, Clyfford, Scrope, Latemer, Ogle, Darcy, Conyers, & to al other gentlemen to be ready within.viii. houres warnyng with all their powers: and so in iorniyng, he wyth his power whiche was great, came to the citie of Yorke abidyng the ordinaunce, and the lordes and all other thynges necessary in suche a case.

In the meane season the Scottes were come nigh to the citie of Carleyle leyle & lodged them nigh the water of Eske not farre from Sulway sandes, & there made their abode. Therle of Westmerland, the lord Datres, the lorde Roos, the lord Mountaigle, with the knightes of Lancashere, Westmerland and Cumberland were ready with .xxviii. M. men to haue geuen them battaill.

When the Scottes sawe that they could not come into Englād without battaill, the lordes of Scotland drew to counsail, and amongest all one wyseman said, my lordes, hether be we come by the cōmaundement of my lorde Gouernor the duke of Albany, but for what cause the warre is we should know: you al remēber that the last warre was to the realme of Scotland muche preiudiciall: For kyng James the. iiij. brought the realme of Scotland to the best that euer it was: and by his warre it was brought to the worst almost that may be, for by that warre was he & his nobilitie slain, whiche Scotland sore lamenteth: Wherfore by myne aduice let vs go to the duke & know of him the cause. Thē thei al came to ỹ dukes court, & therle of Arrayn an auncient man spake for thē al & saied, my lord Gouernor, by your will & cōmaundemēt here is assēbled almost all the nobilitie of Scotland w̄ their power vpō a pretence to entre into Englād, my lordes here would know the cause & quarel why this warre is begō, if it might please your goodnes, it should wel satisfie their mindes.

Thes prygs of a Scottish Erle.

The duke studied a good while & sayd: this questiō would haue bene demāūded or now: For wel you know that I for ỹ very loue that I bere to the realme of Scotlād of the which I haue my name, honor & lynage. I haue passed the seas out of ỹ noble realme of Fraūce into this realme of Scotlād. One great cause to bryng you to a vnitie when you were in deuision: By reason of which deuision your realme was likely to be conquered & destroied. Also the Frenche kyng by my suites & intercessiō wyl ioyne with you in aide against thenglish nation: & when this warre was determined in the parliament you made me capitain, authorising me to inuade Englād w̄ bāner displaied: then was no questiō demāūded of ỹ right or quarell, and that I haue is by your assent & agrement, & that I will iustifie: But to answer your demaūde, me thinke you haue iust cause to inuade England with fyer, sworde, & bloud, if you be not to forgetfull, & without you wil beare dishonor & reproche for euer: for you know that this realme of Scotland is our inheritaūce as a porcion of ỹ world allotted to our nacion & auncetors whom we succede: Then where may be better warre then to mainteine this our naturall inheritaunce. is not daily sene the great inuasion that thenglishmen on vs make, the greate manslaughters & murders with robberies & spoiles that they do daily? Is not this cause of warre? To defend the cōtrey is the office of a king the honor of noble men & the very seruice of chiualry, and the duty natural of the cominaltie. For I thinke it a iust quarel if we might cōquere ỹ realme of England & anner it to our realme & make a Monarchie: For sith the beginning of our habitacion in this Ile of Britaigne, that nacīō & we haue bene enemies, and vs they haue euer hated, & yet we haue euer withstode thē til at the last battail of Bran, ston where we by chaūce lost

The answere of the duke of Albany.

our soueraigne lord and many noble men, but that was by treason of his lord chãberlain, & yet I thinke we wan ỹ fielde: which murther I thinke all we noble men ought to reuenge. Therfore I would that you should corageously auaũce your self in this quarel to get honor & to be reuẽged

Then a sad man called the president of the coũsaill said, my lord: Fortune of warre is led by him that all ledeth, & he striketh the stroke, we can worke no miracles, & here are the lordes of Englãd redy to encoũtre vs, and surely they will fight, for their power shall encreace daily and ours is at the hyest. And God geue vs the victory as I trust he will, yet haue we not won the field. For redy cõming is ỹ lord talbot erle of Shrewsbury so muche dread in Fraunce as you know wel, with a great puissaunt army, & there is no doubt but the kyng of England wil send or bring another army, if we should chaunce to get the first battail: if we get the.ii. fields, that wil not be without losse of many nobles, by reason wherof the realme shalbe weaker. And if we be ouercome, how many shalbe slayne God knoweth: they ỹ sle be worthy to be reputed as traitors to the king and so by wilfulnes & rolishe hardines ỹ realme shalbe in ieopardy to be vndone, & I say, whyle ỹ king is within age, we ought to moue no warre, sith by warre we may bring him to distruccio. Alas said the duke here is al the puissaũce of Scotlãd: if we returne we shal encorage our enemies, and the realme of Scotlãd shall euer be rebuked & defamed. All this cõmunicacion in counsaill was written by one sir Lother priest & Scot & secretary to the quene of Scottes, whiche was a secretary there in ỹ host at that tyme, to a Scottishe priest ỹ dwelt in Lõdon: & farther he wrote that the Scottishe kyng did muche for the Frenche kynges pleasure to draw ỹ lordes of Englãd with their powers toward that partie & to put the kyng of England to charges, so that he should not inuade Fraunce.

After this cõmunicacion the quene of Scottes which doubted the sequele of this matter, sent worde to the duke & him required to coms of a peace with the warden of thenglish Marches, which sent an Herauld to the lord Daker then warden of the west Marches, ỹ lord Daker agreed, & vpõ hostages wer to the duke of Albany into his cãpe, where the quene of Scottes by that tyme was come, & so ther was an abstinẽce of warre taken for a season: and in the meane tyme the duke and the quene promised to send Ambassadours to the kyng of England to conclude a peace: And thus the Scottes returned into their houses. This truce was taken the.xi.day of Septẽber betwene Englãd & Scotlãd this.xiiij.yere of the kyng. Therle of Shrewsbury hearyng of the truce by the lorde Dacres letters returned with al his company, sory that he had not gone forward on the Scottes In this season the commissioners sat for the loane of the x. part of euery mans substaunce in euery shyre. the people were sworne and some auaunsed themselfes more then they were worth of pride, not remembryng what was comyng, and the commissioners did what they could to set the people to the vttermoste, whiche afterwarde tyzned the people to muche heautnes, & by reason of this, great summes of money were leuied, but the moste part were not content, because the loane was so so sodainly paied. But vnder the value of .v. pound no man lent a peny. The. vii. day of October was. iiii. M. pound paide to the citie of London whiche was lent for a priuate cause about the loane of the. x. part.

In this yere the bakers of London came and tolde the Mayre that corne would be dere, wherupon he and the Aldermen made prouision for xv. C. quarters, and when it was come they would by none, and made the commō people beleue that it was musty, because they would vtter their owne, so that the lorde Cardinall was fayne to proue it; and found the bakers false and commaunded them to bye it.

x The. xv. day of October the kyng lay at Hichyn in Hartford shyre to see his Haukes flye, and by chaunce, there the kynges lodging was on fyer and he in greate feare, but in no ieopardie, and so the kyng came shortly to London and sent for the Mayre and dyuers Comoners and to them gaue thankes for many kyndnes whiche they thought they had well deserued.

The warre thus continuing betwene the Frenche kyng and the kyng of Englande, there was a valiaunt Capitayn Constable of the castle of Hammes vnder the lorde Mountioy called sir Richard Whethyll, the Frenchemen hym so muche hated that they deuised a policie to take him, xx and so on Chrystmas day at night there issued out of Bullain. CC. horsemen and. CCC. fotemen, and somuche they trauayled that all together were come to a place where Hoppes grewe, nere Hammes castell called Catte Hall. When they were come thither, they kept themselfes couert, and in the morning they brake vp the Turne pyke by saint Gertrudes: Then sent they into Hammes Marshe. ix. or. x. footemen to take cattell. In the castle the alarme rang, but the embushement kept theim stil close: The constable perceiued what the alarme ment, and armed hym, and so did his archers, and toke his horse, and thre gentelmen went on foote by him. The Frenchemen of purpose driued the cattell here and there as xxx though it would not be driuen, sir Rychard Whethyll pursued them. When the driuers sawe hym, they droue the cattell into a greate fielde: then were the bushment of horsemen and fotemen betwene hym & saince Gertrudes, and they sodainly brake out on hym, and the thre gentelmen on foote fought valiauntly but thei were slaine, the knight alighted and fought on foote manfully, but he was borne doune with pykes, and sore wounded and so was compelled to yelde hym selfe prisoner: by that tyme were. xxx. archers come out of the castle, and when they sawe the greate nomber of the Frenchemen, then they knewe that their capitain was betrayed and so returned.

xl In this Chrystmas whiche was kept at Eltham, the Cardinall made dyuers reformacions for the kynges housholde, and al they that had no masters were commaunded to auoyde.

The. xvii. day of February syr Jhon Walop knyght lent. ix. auenturers from Guysnes to seke auentures, and they mette with a Gentelmanne called Thomas Palmer whiche went with them. And out of a Castell betwene Bullaine and Margupson called Hadyngham came out. lxxx. Frenchemen with Pykes and Crosbowes, and sette on thesame Palmer whiche hym defended.

Al his cõpany sauyng.xxiii.persons were gone about to seke their pray. These.xxiii.persons him mankully succouzed & after the Frenchmen had slain his hozse and wounded hym, his company slew.iii Frenchemen and toke,xxb on liue whiche were all hurt and so were thenglishemen, foz the Frenchemen fought soze. All these pzisoners were bzought to Guisnes, & the remnant of thaduenturers returned with muche cattell.

The last day of Febzuary.lx. Englishmen archers & bilmen came to a place called saint Anthonies nere to Marguison & entred the houses and x. tell a spoilyng: The Frenchemen were thereof aduertised by a spy, & came on & set on a few Englishmen which were together: then with noise other of thenglishemen appzached, so they were.xl. persones. Then came out a freshe embushment of Frenchemen & set on thenglishemen & so slewe.xi. & toke.xx. pzisoners & the other scaped. About this tyme ỹ duke of Albany sailed out of Scotland into Fraũce, & the French kyng somuch fauozed hym, ỹ as it was shewed to the kyng of Englãd foz truthe, that when the French kyng rode thzough Paris he rode on the one hand & Richard de la Pole a traitoz to Englãd & by parliament attainted on the other hãd, and that the duke had asked of the French kyng.v.M. hozsemen & x.M. xx Almaines, & that he had pzomised the Frẽch kyng if he had those.xv.M men, he would do one of these.iii.thynges, either sley the kyng of Englãd in battaill, oz els take hym pzysoner, oz els dziue hym out of his realme. These were shamefull bzagges of a noble man and very foolishe.

The duke of Albany returned.

Ye haue hard befoze how truce was taken by ỹ duke of Albany & the lozd Dacres foz a season betwene England & Scotlãd & that Ambassadozs should be sent to the king of Englãd, so it was ỹ in October accozdyng to their accustomed doublenes they sent.iii. personages of smal behauoz as it semed, as Ambassadours from Scotlãd: thei were smally regarded and shoztly departed. Their cõmission was to know whether the same tyme oz abstinẽce of watre was by ỹ kyng assẽted to oz not, & other cõmission had they none. Thus they ment craftely as you may perceyue, foz in suche troubelous tyme they may steale vnpunished, whiche they may not do in tyme of peace. Wherfoze the kyng to be sure of them sent foz Henry the.v. erle of Nozthũberland & him made warden of the whole Marches which thankefully accepted thesame, & so departed lozd Warden. But howsoeuer it happened he made suite to the kyng & his cousaill and neuer left, til he was discharged of thesame, & then therle of Surray lozd Admirall of England was made generall warden, & the lozd Marques Dozset was made Warden of thest Marches & Myddill, and the xl lozde Dacres of the west Marches: whiche.iii. lozdes sped them thether the.vi. day of March foz the defence of the bozders. Foz refusyng of this office therle of Nozthũberland was not regarded of his owne tenauntes whiche disdained hym & his bloud, and muche lamented his foly, and al men estemed hym without hart oz loue of honour and chiualry.

Ambassade frõ Scotlãd.

The loane gathered.

The kyng out of hãd sent cõmission to gather the loane, this was called led the practisyng of the loane, which sore emptied mens purses. In the same moneth were musters taken through the realme & euery mã commaunded to be ready within a dayes warnyng to do the kyng seruice in harnes, whiche caused euery man of honesty to bye harnes and weapon

The lorde Marques Dorset warden of the East Marches betwene Englande & Scotland accompanied with sir Willyam Bulmer and sir Arthur Darcy and many other noble men, the second day of Apryl then beyng shere thursday entred into Tyuedale & so .x. myle into Galoway and brent on euery side townes and billages, and the Scottes in great x nomber shewed themselfes on the hylles & did not approche, & so he all that night taried in the Scotishe ground, and on good Friday returned wyth their botie whyche was .iiii. M. head of nete into Englande, when they had brent Grymslay, Bowhouse, Dufforde mylles, Ackeforthe, Crowlyng, Nowes maner, Widder Crowlyng, Warbottel, Low Bog, Seffoyth Maner, Wyddyl rigge, Prymsed, Broket, Shawes Hatuel, wide open Haught & other tounes & billages, & yet lost not many men,

The.xb. daye of Apryll beganne a Parlyament at the blacke Fryers in Londõ, & that day the Masse of the holy ghost was song, all the lordes beyng present in their Parliament robes. And when Masse was xx finished the kynge came into the Parliament chamber and there satte doune in the seate royall or throne, and at his fete on the right side satte the Cardynal of Yorke & the Archebishop of Cantorbury, & at the table behind stode doctor Tũstal bishop of Lõdon, which made to the whole Parliament an eloquent Oracion, declaryng to the people the office of a kynge. Fyrst he muste be a man of iudgement accordyng to the saiyng of the Prophet Dauid Deus iudicium tuum regi da &c. Also he muste be a man of great learnyng accordyng to the saiyng of the Prophete Erudimini qui iudicatis terram. Accordyng to whiche saiynges he sayde that God had sent vs a prince of great iudgment, of great learnyng, & great xxx experience, whiche accordyng to hys princely dutie forgat not to studye to sette forwarde all thynges whyche might be profitable to his people and realme, least ther might be layde to hys charge ỹ saiyng of Seneca Es rex et non habes tempus esse rex: Art thou a kyng and hast no tyme to be a kyng: whiche is asmuch to say, as art thou a kyng and doest nothyng profitable to thy people: Art thou a kyng & seest the people haue an insufficient lawe: Art thou a kyng and wilt not prouide remedy for the mischiefe of thy people: These thynges haue moued the kynges highnes to call this hys high court of Parliament both for the remedy of mischiefes whiche be in the common law, as recoueries, forain vouxl chers and corrupt trials. And for makyng & orderyng of new estatutes which may be to the high auauncement of the cõmon wealth, wherfore he willeth the commons to repayre to the common house and there to elect them a speaker, or theyr common mouth, and to certifie the lorde Chauncellour of thesame, whyche should thereof make report to the kynges moste noble grace, whyche should declare hys pleasure when he would haue hym presented before hys persone. Thys was the cause of the Parlyament he sayd, but surely of these thynges no worde was spoken in the whole Parlyament, and in effect no good acte made except the graunt of a greate subsidie were one, but accordyng to thys instruccion the commons departed to the common house and chose for their speaker sir Thomas Moore knight & presented hym the saterday after in the Parlyament chamber, where he accordyng to the old vsage disabled hymselfe both in wit, learnyng, and discrecion, to speake before the kyng, & brought in for his purpose how one Phormio desired Hannibali to come to his readyng, whyche thereto assented, and when Hannyball was come, he began to reade, de re militare, that is of Chiualrie, when Hannyball perceiued hym, he called hym arrogant foole, because he would presume to teache hym whych was master of Chiualrie, in the feates of warre. So the speaker sayde, if he should speake before the kyng of learnyng and orderyng of a common welth and such other like the kyng beyng so well learned & of suche prudence & experience might say to hym as Hannyball sayd to Phormio. Wherfore he desired hys grace that the commons might chose another speaker: The Cardinall answered, that the kyng knewe his witte, learnyng & discrecion by long experience in his seruice, wherefore he thought that the commons had chosen him as the moste meetest of al, and so he did admit hym. Then sir Thomas Moore gaue to the kyng hys moste humble thankes, and desired of hym two pecicions: The one, if he should be sent from the commons to the kyng on message & mistake their entent, that he might with the kinges pleasure resort againe to the commons for the knowledge of their true meanyng: The other was, if in communicacion & reasonyng any man in the common house should speake more largely then of dutie he ought to do, that all such offences should be pardoned, and that to be entred of recorde, whiche two petictons were graunted, and so thus began the Parlyament and continued as you shall heare.

The Oration of Sir Thomas Moze.

The Rhodes beeieged.

Because an euil chaunce happened to the great rebuke of al christen princes, I entend briefly to declare thesame miserable chaunce. In the beginnyng of this yere Sulton Solyman Pac called ỹ great Turke which was but the. bui. of the ligne of Ottoman, the first that toke vpõ hym to be a great capitain or ruler. And to whom Sultan Selyme his father had lost thempyres of Constantinople, Trapesonde, Alexandry, & Babylon, with many diuers kyngdomes & realmes: whyche Sultan Solymon the yere before had gotten thee towne of Belgrado beyng the key of Hungary. Because he sawe all ỹ greate princes in Christendome now at discord, thought it moste for his honor & profite to make warre on the Isle of the Rodes and to take thesame, which Isle had been kept by the space of. CC. xtiii, yeres by the brethren or knightes of the order of sainct Johnes of Jerusalẽ. Dyuers thynges moued him to take this enterprice, One was because this Isle stode so that the religious of the same oftentymes toke & destroyed his shippes as they came with golde and other riches fron Egypt Sirie and other Estparties to Constantinople, so that by theim of that Isle he sustayned more hurt then by all Chzistendome, because the sayd Isle stode in the entry toward Constãtinople. Another mocion was because his father when he died charged hym to assay to take the Rhodes for to be reuenged of the shame that they had done to hys graundfather Mahomet the great Turke which was with dishonor beten from the siege of the Rhodes. But the greatest occasion of all was the exhortacion of a great counsailer of the religion called Andrewe Admiral borne in Portyngale, whiche knew the whole estate & in what case the toune stode in: The cause why this Andrew Amyral bare malice to his religion, was because after the death of Frier Fabrica de Laretto lord maister of their religion, he was not elected to that honor, but one Philip de Vylliers de Lisle Adam of Fraunce was named to be lord Master, wherfore the said Andrew prouoked the Tur ke to come to the Rhodes.

The great Turke seyng so great an occasion offered & desiryng honor, & also knowing the fortresse of ỹ Rhodes to lacke munitions (for surely the brethren of the sayd order wer both of suche wealth & pride and also liued after suche an vngracious & vngodly fashion, ỹ they toke neither hede of their vow & solempne profession, nor also did forese the thynge to come, so that the greate welth of them & their euil liuyng blinded them, so that they thought ỹ Turke durst not ones attẽpt to set on their garrison, & so they beyng eleuate in this point of pride, left their toune vnfurnished and so wer sodainly surprised as you shall heare) wherfore ỹ sayd Turke couertly puided for.iii.C saile, in ỹ whiche he caried all his artilery & al other thinges necessary: in the which armye wer.lx.M.myners & pyoners prepared for the only intent to digge and myne. All the rest of the army of the Turke came by lãd to a place called Fysco, which stãdeth so directly against ỹ Rhodes that a fyer may be seen frõ the one side to the other, frõ whiche place the Turke sent letters to ỹ abouena-med Philip de Vylliers lorde Master of the sayd religion signifiyng to him that he would haue ỹ sayd Isle for great damage ỹ they had done to him & his people, and if they would yeld to hym the sayd Isle, he promised on his faith and by Mahomet his fyrst prophet, thei should haue no damage nor hurt by hym, & that thei that would depart should go in safetie, & they that would tary & serue him should haue good wages and if they refused thys to do, he swore that he would subuert the walles of their fortresse and destroy them all and make them slaues, which letter was dated at Constantinople the first dai of June. The said Lord Master and his compaignie were greatly abashed at this letter, but yet lyke hardy gentlemen they intended to defende them, and made all the preparations that they could do in so short a space, and wrote to al princes christen of their nede & distres. But the Turke like a wyly serpent knowyng the great deuision amongest the christen princes, so that he knewe that they could sende no succours to the Rhodes, sent .CC.M. Turkes whiche arriued in the Isle of the Rhodes on Mydsomer dai, which was the feastfull daye of the Rhodians in honor of Saint Jhon baptiste whiche sodain commyng sore abashed the Rhodyans beyng but. vi. C. knightes and.v.M.other mete to beare armes: yet of noble courage and trusting in God,they determined to defende the enemies of God,and the xxviii.day of July the Turke arriued there in his awne persone,whiche muche encouraged his people.

When the Turke was arriued, he bent his ordinaunce towarde the toune and did no great harme,when he sawe that the walles were of that defence that ordinaunce did litle harme, he caused all his Pyoners to The moũtes. cast yearth,one banke ouer an other still tyl they came within a bowshot of the wall, and although that many of the pyoners were slain with or- x dinaunce of the toune, they neuer ceased tyll they had made a banke of yearth hyghet by.x.foote then the wall of the toune,and there they layde their ordinaunce, so that no persone durst styrre on the walles or Bulworkes, and thus with mountaines of yearth was the toune enuironed and behynd the mountaynes lay the Bashcaux and chief captaines of the Turke whiche were euer ready to take their aduauntage, and dayly they shot into the toune and bet doune houses and slewe the people in the streates,for they vpon this mount myght easely see into the toune.
The Mynes. Besyde this, the Turke caused so many mynes to bee made in diuers places, that they within were not able to make countermynes for lacke xx of people, insomuche as weimen were set a worke to dygge and cary, by reason wherof a greate part of the walles were ouerthrowen,and if they within had not made countermynes the toune had bene gotten within a short space.

Also the Turkes in September gaue to the Rhodyans foure greate
The assautes assautes lyke valiaunt warriers, but the Christen men within, so valiantly defended them,that at euery assaute they lost at the lest.iu.M.men. and at the fourth assaute they lost.x.M.Turkes and more.

The greate Turke seyng the losse of his men at the assautes, sent for Monstaffa Bashaw,through whose counsail he toke on him this enter- xxx prise and much blamed hym that he had made hym beleue that he might haue the toune within.xu.dayes or in a moneth at the most,wherefore in that furie he would haue put hym to death, if the other Bashawes had not entreated for him:but in conclusiõ the Turke determined clerely to rayse his siege and to departe,and so had done if that same night syr Andrew Amyrall that you heard of before and a Jewe beyng within the Rhodes had not written letters and shot them out on quarelles into the Turkes army. By whiche letters the Turke knewe the necessitie of the toune and feblenes of the people, whyche caused hym to chaunge his Treson espi- purpose. But this treason was espyed, and the traytors taken and xl
ed. put to terrible execucion. And the Turke caused so many Mynes to bee made, that although some tooke none effecte, yet by some he ouerthrewe bothe Bulwarkes, walles and towers, so that he myght entre into the toune:and so on sainct Andrewes euen he caused a greate assaute to bee geuen, whiche was very fierce, but yet the Christen men so valiauntly defended

defended them, that they slewe thre thousande Turkes and mo, and kept them from enteryng that date, but the Citezens of the Rhodes after this assaulte, came to the lorde Master, and prated hym to haue compassion of them, their wiues and children, and shewed him that if the toune were taken by assault, (as it was like to be) that thei al should be cruelly murdered, the lorde Master muche regarded his honour, and comforted the people with faire wordes, but by chaunce about thesame tyme, the great Turke sent a letter into the Rhodes, willyng theim to deliuer the toune, and they all should haue their lyues and goodes, and they that would x tary, should tary in quiet, & thei that would depart should sauely depart.

When this letter was knowen, then the people cried out on the lorde Master, to take the offre, wherfore he callyng all his counsaill together seyng that it was not possible to kepe the toune longer, both for lacke of artilary and bytayle, and also because his nomber was so minished, that scace he had souldiers to kepe the walles, wherefore he by greate aduice determined to take the Turkes offer, and so sent to hym twoo of his religion, for the farther conclusion and assurannce of thesame, whiche well entertained them, and had wrytynges sealed of all thynges that they desired, to which two knightes, Aymeche Basshaw swate by his faith that xx there was slayn at the siege. lxiiii. thousande Turkes, and. xl. thousande dedde of mortalitie and mo. The peldyng by of the Rhodes.

And so on Christmas date, the great Turke hymselfe entered into the Rhodes, and toke possession therof, and the lorde Master and all his religion, the first date of January tooke shyp and sailed to Candy, and so in conclusion came to Rome, and there declared his chaunce and aduenture. Thus was the toune and the isle of the Rhodes, taken by the great Turke, whiche was a great succour to all christian men, resortyng into the East partes of the world, whiche chaunce was muche lamented thorowe all Christendom, and much blame put in all Princes, because they xxx sent no succoure nor aide to the Isle.

And this yere the byshoppe of Durefme died, and the kyng gaue the byshoprike to the Cardinall, and he resigned the byshoprike of Bathe, to doctor Jhon Clerke master of the Rolles, and he made sir Henry Marney his vicechamberleyn lorde Priuie Seale, & after created hym lord Marney. In the ende of this yere, doctor Blithe byshop of Chester, was attached for treason, but he acquite hymselfe. And about this season, the Cardinall of Yorke beyng Legate, proued testamentes, and dyd call before hym, all the executors and administrators. of euery Dioces within the realme, so that the bishoppes and ordinaries, did proue no great wil-xl les in their dioces, except he were compounded with, not to their litle dysauauntage. Also by his power Legantine he gaue by prouencions, all benefices belongyng to spirituall persones, by the whiche doyng, he not onely had the hatred of the spiritualtie, but also he ran into the daunger of the Premunire, whiche he sore after repented, as it shall appere in the xxi. yere of this kyng.

¶ The.xv.yere.

The xv. yere. The Cardinalles ozacio.

THe Parliament beyng begon, as you haue hard befoze reherſed, the Cardinall accompaigned with diuerſe lozdes, aſwell of the Spiritualtie, as of the tempozaltie, came the xxix. daie of Apzill into the Common houſe, where he elo-quently declared to the commons, how the Frenche kyng Fraunces the firſt, called the moſte Chriſtened kyng had ſo often tymes bzoken pzomiſe with the kyng of England, and his welbeloued nephew Charles the Emperoz, that the kyng of his honoz, could no lõger ſuffre.
Foz firſt he declared, that the metyng of theſaied twoo pzynces at Guiſ- x nes, theſaid Frenche kyng was ſwozne, to kepe all the articles contened in the triparttie league, made betwene him, the Emperour, and the kyng of Englande, ſithe the whiche tyme, he hath made warre on themperozs dominions, by Robert de la Marche his capitain. He alſo hath with holden the tributes and other paumentes, whiche he ſhould paie to the kyng of Englande, foz redemption of Tozney and Tirwin, and not with this content, hathe not alonely robbed and ſpoyled the kynges ſubiectes, but alſo hath ſent Jhon duke of Albany into Scotland, to make warre and to inuade this realme, wherfoze the king of neceſſitie was dziuẽ to warre and defence, whiche in nowiſe could be maintened, without great ſomes xx of money, and he thought no leſſe then. viii. C. M. pounde to be reiſed of the fifth part of euery mans goodes and landes, that is to ſaie. iiii. S. of euery pounde, foz he ſaied that the yere folowing, the kyng and the Em-perour ſhould make ſuche warre in Fraunce, as hath not bene ſene.

Thedemaũde

After that he had declared his matter at length, exhoztyng the Commons to aide their pzince, in tyme of neceſſitie, he departed out of the cõ-mon houſe. The mozow after, ſir Thomas Moze beyng ſpeker, declared all the Cardinalles ozacion again to the commons, and enfozced his demaund ſtrongly, ſaiyng: that of duetie men ought not to deny to pay. iiii S. of the pound. But foz all that, it was denied and pzoued manifeſtly, x xx if the fifth part of ſubſtaunce of the realme, were but. viii. C. M. pounde and if men ſhould paie to the kyng, the fifth part of their goodes, in money oz plate, it was pzoued, that there was not ſo much money out of the kynges handes, in al the realme, foz the fifth part of euery mans goodes, is not in money noz plate: Foz although fiue men were well monied, v. thouſand were not ſo, the gentelman, hath not the fifth part of the value of coyne: The Marchaunt that is ryche of Sylke, Wolle, Tynne, Clothe, and ſuche Marchaundiſe, hath not the fift parte in money, the huſbande man is ryche in coyne and cattel, yet he lacketh of that ſome. Lykewyſe biteilers and all other artificers, be ryche in houſholde ſtuffe, and xl not in money: And then conſequently, if all the money were bzought to the kynges handes then men muſt barter clothe foz vitaile, and bzead foz cheſe, and ſo one thyng foz another: then conſider that after this ba-luacion, the kyng hath had by the waie of loane. ii. S. of the pound whiche is foure hundzed. M. pound, & now to haue. iiii. S. of the pound which a-mounteth

mounteth in the whole. xii. C. M. l. whiche first and last is. vi. s. of the. l. whiche is almost the third part of euery mans good, whiche in coyne can not be had within this realme, for the proofe wherof was alleged, that if there were in Englande, but. xv. M. parishes, and euery parishe should geue a. C. marke, that were but. xv. C. M. marke, whiche is but. x. C. M. l. and how many parishes be in England one with another able to spare a C. markes, out of cities and tounes: and where it is written, that in England there be. xl. M. parishe churches, it was proued that there were not xiii. M. parishe churches at this daie. Then accompt the whole some can x not amounte aboue. x. C. M. l. and the kyng demaundeth. viii. C. M. and he according to this valuacion, hath had. iiii. C. M. pounde, therfore it was thought, the some was impossible to be leuied, & if all the coyne were in the kynges handes, how should men liue: Also the kyng had of ỹ spiritualt men the last yere. iiii. s. of the pounde.

After long reasonyng there were certain appoynted, to declare the impossibilitie of this demaunde to the Cardinall, whiche according to their commission, declared to hym substancially the pouertie and skarcenes of the Realme: All whiche reasons and demonstracions, he litle regarded, and then thesaied persons, moste mekely beseched his grace, to moue the xi kynges highnes, to bee content with a more easier some, to the whiche he curtisly aunswered, that he would rather haue his tongue, plucked out of his hedde with a paire of pinsons, then to moue the kyng, to take any lesse some: with whiche aunswere they almoste dismaied, came and made report to the common house, where euery daie was reasonyng, but nothyng concluded.

Wherfore the Cardinall came again to the common house, and desyred to be reasoned withal, to whom it was aunswered, that the fashion of the nether house was, to heare and not to reason, but emong themselfes. Then he shewed the realme to be of great ryches, firste, because the kyn-xxx ges customes were greater now, then they were before tyme: also he alleged sumpteous buildynges, plate, riche apatel, of men, women, children, and seruauntes, fatte feastes, and delicate dishes, whiche thynges were all tokens of greate aboundaunce: with whiche repetyng of mens substaũce, as though he had repined or disdained, that any man should fare well, or be well clothed, but hymself, the commons greatly grudged. And when he was departed out of the house, it was proued, that honest apparell of the commodities of this Realme, aboundaunce of plate, and honest viandes, were profitable to the realme, and not prodigall.

After long debating, the Commons concluded to graunte. ii. s. of the xl pound, of euery mannes landes or goodes, that was worth. xx. pounde, or might dispende. xx. pound, to be taken for the kyng, and so vpwarde of euery. xx. s. twoo. s. and from. xl. s. to. xx. pounde, of euery. xx. s. xii. d. and vnder. xl. s. of euery hed, xvi yeres and vpwarde. iiii. d. to bee paied in twoo yeres. This graunt was reported to the Cardinall, which therwith was sore discontent, and saied, that the lordes had graunted. iiii. s.

of the pound, whiche was proued vntrue, for in dede they had graunted nothyng, but harkened all vpon the commons.

Then a knight called sir Jhon Huse of Lincolneshire, saied, to please the Cardinall somwhat, let vs gentlemen of fiftie pound lande and vpwardes, geue to the kyng of out landes. xii. d. of the pounde, to be paied in thre yere: with whiche motion diuerse gentlemen were sore discontent. And when the question was asked, ten or. xii. of the gentelmen sayed yea, and when the naie should be asked, the commons saied nothyng, for they would not condempne, nor let the gētelmen to charge themselfes, and so by. x. or. xii. persones the gentlemen were burdened, with. xii. d. more then other, for the whiche graunt, sir Jhon Huse had muche euill will.

After this graūt made the. xxi. daie of Maie, because of Whitsontide, the parliament was proroged to the tenth daie of June: Duryng which prorogacion, the common people saied to the Burgesses, Sirs, we heare saie you will graunt. iiii. s. of the pound, we aduise you to do so that you maie go home, with many euill wordes and threatenynges.

And in this season, the Cardinall by his power legātine, dissolued the Conuocacion at Paules, called by the Archebishop of Cantorbury, and called hym and all the clergie, to his conuocacio to Westminster, whiche was neuer sene before in England, wherof master Skeltō a mery Poet wrote. Gentle Paule laie doune thy sweарde: For Peter of westminster hath shauen thy beard.

When the parliament was begonne again, the landed menne of fiftie pounde and vpward, seyng that they were charged, with. xii. d. of euery pounde of their landes, moued, that all suche as were worth fiftie pound in goodes and vpward, should paie also. xii. d. of the pounde, in the. iiii. yere. At the whiche motion was muche reasonyng, & at the last the. xxvii. daie of June, the question was asked, and doubtfull it was, whether the yea or nay were moste, then was the house deuided, and all the commons seuered themselfes, from the knightes of the sheres, so that one yea part remained onely the knightes of the shire, and the cōmons stifly affirmed that the mocioners of this demaunde, were enemies to the realme. At the last the Speaker called theim all together, and after long perswadyng, and priuie laborying of frendes, it was agreed that. xii. d. of the pounde should be pated the fourth yere, of fiftie pounde in goodes.

After this the parliamēt the. xxi. daie of July, was adiorned to Westminster, and there continued till the. xiii. daie of August, and that daie at ix. of the clocke in the night dissolued. Duryng the tyme of this Parliament the. xxvii. daie of Aprill, was Sir Arthur Plantagenet, bastarde sonne to kyng Edward the fourth, at Bridewell created viscount Lisle, in the right of his wife, wh che was wife to Edmond Dudley behedded.

In this season was true worde brought, that on Christmas daie laste past, the strong toune of the Rhodes was deliuered, to the great Turke called Sultan Soliman, with the whole Iland, to the greate hurt of all Christian nacions: the causes of the losse, was the euill liuyng of the brethren or knightes, and negligēce of prouision for the defence, and the

enule and treason emong themselfes, as it is written and repoꝛted.

This yere Cristierne kyng of Denmarke with his wife, which was sis-ster to the Emperour Charles, and his thꝛe childꝛen, with. xvuj. shyppes arriued in Flaunders, cleane banished out of his realmes and dominions, by his vncle Frederick Duke of Holst, & his awne subiectes, foꝛ his crueltie as is written. Which Cristierne with his wife was well entertained of the Duches of Sauoy, and a pencion assigned to hym to lyue on, in Brabant and Hollande. Duryng the tyme of his there soiꝛnyng, he made muche suite to come into Englande, to see and speake with the kyng, whiche request was to hym graunted, and so he and his Quene, with foure gentlewomen, and a trayne of fourty persones, pooꝛe and euill apparelled, landed at Douer the. xv. daie of June, where he was no-bely receiued, by the erle of Deuonshire, and the byshoppes of Excester, The kyng of Denmarkes commyng ins to Englande. and Rochester, and diuerse knightes and Esquiers, and so bꝛought to Grenewyche: where the kyng and the Quene, standyng vnder their clothes of estate, receiued in the greate hall of Grenewyche, kyng Cristierne and Quene Isabell his wife. And he dined with the kyng, and she with the Quene, both set vnder the clothe of estate, and were sumpteously ser-ued, of all dilicate viandes.

And when he had soiouꝛned there a season, euery daie feasted at the Court, he was conueighed to London, and lodged at Bathe place, where he hearyng of the watche in London, on sainct Peters euen, desired to se it, and so was accompaigned with the duke of Suffolk, the erles of Oxfoꝛd, Essex, and Kent, and diuerse other loꝛdes and ladies, and bꝛought into the kynges hed in Chepe, where the cytie of London made to hym and his wife a costly banket. And when he had sene the watche, he saied, I would to God I had so many Archers, Pikes, and halberders, as I sawe this night, then I trust I would punishe suche, as haue wꝛongful-ly dispossessed me, of my realme and countrey. And after he had solaced hymself in London, he resoꝛted to the kyng, of whom he had many great giftes, and likewise had his wife of the Quene her aunte, and so tooke their leaue, and were conueighed to Douer. And when he had bene in Englande. xxii. daies, he toke shippyng, & sailed again into Flaunders, pꝛaisyng muche the kyng of Englande and his court.

Duryng all this season, and session of the parliament, the warre was fierce, bothe betwene Englande and Fraunce, and England and Scot-lande, in so muche that eche parte, did asmuche as in theim laie, to hurte the other. Foꝛ on the boꝛders of Scotlande, laie the valiaunt Earle of Surrey, greate Admirall of Englande, and the Marques Doꝛset, and his thꝛe bꝛethꝛen, Sir Willyam Compton, and sir Willyam Kyngston, with diuerse other Knightes and Esquiers, sent to theim by the kyng, whiche dayly inuaded the realme of Scotlande, and thꝛewe doune the Castle of Wedoꝛberne, the castle of West Nesgate, the Castle of Blak-kater, the tower of Wackewalles, the Tower of Est Nesgate, and many other, and bꝛent to the nomber of. xxxvii. villages, and haried the countrey from the Este Marches to the West, and neuer had skirmische: but they often times shewed themselfes in plumpes, waiting their auantage howbeit in all this iourney, were fewe Englishemen lost. Wherfore the Lordes perceiuing, that the Scottes entended not to make any armie into Englande, fortified the frontiers on euery parte, with men and all thynges necessary for defence, for stealyng or other small rodes. After all whiche thynges set in a perfectnes, they returned toward the kyng, and came to the ende of the parliament.

A ship sonken with stone in Calice hauen.

In this season, the Frenchemen hauyng a greate desier, to haue the kynges toune of Calice, deuised first to destroy the hauen, by the which they supposed, that Calice might haue been lightly gotten, for faulte of reskewe. Whereupon thei laded an old ship of. iiii. C. tonne, with great Cane stone, in the port of Depe, whiche ship had no mast, but came with a foresaile, as though the mast had bene cut, and cast ouer the bord in the sea in a tempest. And when she came before Calice, euery man that sawe her, thought she had bene wether driuen, and lost her mast by tẽpest, and so aboute. x. of the clocke at night the. xxiii. date of May, thesaied shippe came before Calice hauen, as though she would entre for harborow, and so was enteryng and missed the chanell, & turned to the sandes, towarde Rise banke, and the Frenchemen supposing, that they had bene in the very chanell, launched out their boate, and sodainly set the shippe on fire, and lepte into their boate, and so skaped by the shore. When thei of Calice sawe the fire, they were sore troubled, and at the last when the water was gone, they perceiued the ship consumed, and the goodly Cane stone lyng whole.

Wherfore the lorde Barnes deputie of Calice, the lorde Barkley leuetenaunt of the castle, the lorde Sandes threasorer of Calice, and other commaunded all the labourers that might be gotten, to breake the remnaunt of the ship, and to cary away the stone, and so thesaied stone was brought to Calice: wherupon thesaied Capitaines sent a letter, to the capitayn of Bulleine, by Calice pursiuant at armes, desiryng hym to geue thankes, to Monsire Lodowyke capitayn of Depe, for the sendyng of so fayre a ship, and goodly stone to Calice, whiche stone thesaied lordes sent worde, they had receiued into the toune of Calice, and that it did the muche profite, for the fortificacion of thesaied Toune, desyryng hym to sende more, and they would receiue it on thesame price. To the whiche letter, the capitain of Bulleine aunswered, I haue nothyng lost, nor they haue nothyng gotten of me, tell hym that hath lost, with whiche aunswer the pursiuant departed. Wherupon thenglishemen beyng greued, there issued out of Calice an hundred light men of warre, called auenturers, & al came nere Bulleine, and obteined a greate botte, wherof the garrison of Bulleyn being aduertysed, issued out and folowed the Englishemen, and sharpely them encountered. The Englyshemen shot so, that the Frenchmen whiche were fiue hundred, lighted and fought sore, so that as it appered euidently, that there were dedde on the ground. xlvi. Frenchemen, and.xxii.Englishemen,and the Frenchemen toke.xx.Englishemen pzisoners, the residue of the Englishemen kept them together, and so came to Calice,the capitain of this enterpzise was one Lathebery.

The lozde Sandes thzesozer of Calice, entendyng to be reuenged on the Frenchemen, called the counsaill of Calice to hym, and declared to them how that the Frenchemen, and in especiall Monsire de Becs capitain of Bullein,daily imagened to destroye the Englishe pale, and that they on the Englishe part,had nothyng done yet against them: wherfoze he aduised them all to do some act,and he hymself would be pzesent, and x foꝛmoste man,and their leder and capitain. Whereupon it was concluded and commaunded, that euery man should bee in a readines, at the soundyng of a trompet,vpon whiche warnyng,thesaied lozdes Sandes the.ix.daie of July early in the moznyng, sent furth twoo hundzed lyght hozses,thzough the Englishe pale,to stoppe the people from goyng, the one towarde the other, least his enterpzyse should be askried, and so the people were kept in all that daie, and in the euenyng aboute seuen of the clocke,he hymself with a capitain called Gutot, Thomas Palmer,Ripton,Raufe Bzoke and other, set fozward with light ozdinaunce and bitaile, and embattailed themselfes in good arraie, and marched towarde xi Sandifelde by a.xi.of the clocke, and there refreshed themselfes, and in good ozdze,thei came to the water of Sclaukes,not farre from Bullein, whiche was the tenth daie of July.

When they were askried Alarme, was tong all the countrey, and the capitain of Bullein sent furth.lxx.menne of Armes, and foure hundzed footemen with mozice pikes,crosebowes, and hande gunnes, whereto capitain Guyot was sent with hys bend of hozsemen,to aide thenglyshe footemen, whiche were farre behynde, and Capitain Ripton, was appointed to fyght with the Frenchemen,and Sir Thomas Palmer, and Raufe Bzoke,with the remnaunt of the hozsemen stode foz a stale.Then xii capitain Ripton pzofered fozwarde with the Speres of Calice, and the Frenchmen came on valiauntly,then began a soze skirmishe, the Frēchemen bothe hozsemen and footemen, defended the passage at the water of Sclaukes, whiche is but a gut made by foze of lande water, but after long fyght,the Englyshemen gat ouer the water by pure foze, and toke the Frenchemens standerd, and a gentelman,whiche was a man of Armes of Bullein,called Charles de Maruiell,and euer sir Thomas Palmer and Raufe Bzoke, stode & aided where necessitie was moste. Thus this skirmishe continued, from foure of the Clocke in the mozning, tyll xi.of the clocke,befoze None,and euer the Frenchemen encreased, but at xi the last they retreited themselfes toward Bullein, in whiche returne diuerse of thē were slain. Dz the skirmishe was ended, came the lozd Sandes with the fotemen, with his spere on his thigh, and his helme on hys hed,and greatly encouzaged his compaignie: duryng whiche conflict,diuerse of Picardy had gathered them together,and had taken the church of Odirsaell,whiche was well fozteried,and a strong place: whereof the Lorde Sandes beyng aduertised, he marched thetherward, and in the waie burned all that might be brent, and sent an officer of Armes, to the that kept the churche of Odirsaell, to yeld the churche to hym, whych to hym aunswered, that they would stande at defence: then he commaunded an assault, which quickly was done, and the Frenchemen defended themselfes, with hand gonnes, crosebowes, and pikes, so that the Englishmen could not entre. Then the lorde Sandes commaunded a curtall, whiche he had with hym, to be shotte to the churche, and perced it through: Then they within sawe that their defence could not hold, yelded theselfes body and goodes. Out of the Churche came. lxxii. Frenchemen, whiche were taken as prisoners, and all the goodes whiche they had caried into the churche were taken for a botie. Thus by one of the clocke, the.xi. daie of July, was the churche of Odirsaell taken.

In this while also, had the Frenchemen manned the steple of Odyngham, whiche was a very strong tower, muche like a castle, to whome the lorde Sandes sent an officer of armes, to commaunde them to yelde the fortresse, to whom they aunswered, that they were Frenchemen, and to hym they would none yeld, and if he came tyether, they would withstand hym: wherupon he and his armie marched thether ward, & about foure of the clocke at after none, he assaulted the steple, and the Frenchemen the themselfes valiauntly defended, but sodainly by a chaunce vnknowen, the steple was a fire, and the Frenchemen fled doune to the quire, then the Englishemen lightly entered the body of the churche, & assaulted the Frenchemen, whiche cried mercie and yelded theimselfes, and at twelue of the clocke at midnight the assault ended, and there were yelded out of the churche fortie prisoners.

After whiche tyme the Lorde Sandes encamped hymselfe, and made good watche for feare of enemies, & in the mornyng called to hym all the prestes, whiche were in bothe the churches, and stode at defence, and said to them that they ought not to be men of warre, and notwithstanding he had theim as prisoners, yet for Gods sake he released the, admonishyng the, that if euer after they wer taken at defence, they should be hanged on the next galowes: after whiche motion done, he deliuered them frely.

About. viii. of the clocke in the morning, he marched forward in good ordre of battaill, and came to the Castle of Hardyngham, the whiche he brent and spoyled, and so the. xi. daie of July, he and his cõpaignie whiche passed not. xii. C. men, of whiche he had lost but onely. xii. returned to Calice with greate store of bestiall ond pillage.

This same season, the Frenche kyng sent an armie of. xviii. M. men, towardes the parties of Flaunders, whiche secretly enterprysed ta take yl a place called Newdike, whiche is a strong passage, betwene Fraunce and Flaunders, kept by the Flemynges, wherof they beyng aduertised, arreised a greate power of. xiii. M. and came to the passage, and slewe of the Frenchemen. vi. C. then the Frenche men reculed, and seuered theimselfes: some went to Mount Ozry, and some to sainct Omers and some brent

brent the subbarbes, they within Mount Dzry defended themselfes, and hurte the capitain of Bulleine, called Monsire de Bees, & slew his hozse: wherfoze the Frenchmen went thence, and brent a billage called Arkus: thus was all the frountiers full of Frenchemen, in somuche that in the monethe of Auguste, they bette into the toune of Guisnes, the scouters & the scoute watche, whereof began Alarme, and the Frenchemen whiche were many in nõbze, a lighted as though they would geue assaut maintenant, and fiersly pzoffered toward the diche, but when the ozdinaunce began once to shote, it was no nede to bid theim go. Then the Englishemen cozagiously folowed the chace, but sodainly out came an embushement of Frenchemen, and toke twoo Englishemen, and thus all the armie of Fraunce, remoued to Gyngate beside Tyzwyn.

The Frenche kyng seing the kyng of England, daily moze and moze encozaged to make warre on him and his dominiõs, and that the Scottes did nothyng to his pleasure, foz lacke of the Duke Jhon of Albany, whom the Scottes called their gouernoz. He therfoze caused great pzeparaciõ to be made, on all parties foz men, shippes, harnes, and artilery, foz the sendyng of the duke Jhon of Albany into Scotlande, which duke of a greate pzesumpcion pzomised to the Frenche kyng, to dziue the xx kyng of Englande out of his realme, whiche pzomise was not kept.

The kyng of Englande, hearyng that the Duke of Albany, should passe into Englande, to make warre on his realme thought to haue hym met on the seas, and therfoze he pzepared, a flete of tal and stroõg shippes mete to encounter with thesaied Duke and his power, and made Admirall of that iourney, sir Willyam Fitzwilliam, and with hym sir Fraunces Bzian, sir Anthony Pounez, Seriant Rot, Jhon Hopton, Willyam Gonstone, Anthony Kniuet, Thomas West & other, whiche with greate diligence, laie in waite to mete with thesaid duke of Albany, and as they sailed on the Frenche coast, they determined to lande, to doo some harme xxx to Trey Pozt, and as they houered there, thei were espied: then the capitain of the toune fired the beakes, sent foz aide of al the fozteresses about and strengthed and manned the toune very warlike. This notwithstandyng, sir Willyam Fitzwillyam and other capitaines, left not their enterpzice, and so the.xxiii. date of August beyng Sondaye, at seuen of the clocke in the mozning, they toke lande in the hauen of Treypozt, at whõ the Frenchemen shot out ozdinaunce, quarelles and stones, the Englysh men in the botes shot likewise, and encozaged by their capitaines, assauted the Frenchemen in their bulwerkes, the Frenchemen then valiauntly defended, and thenglische capitaines as men without fere, theim assailed xl and yet the nomber was nothyng egall, foz the Englishemen were but vii.C. men, & the Frenchemen.vi.M. Foz the well fightyng of the Frẽchmen, their bulwerkes were taken, and their ozdinaunce sezed, and all that were about, fled to the toune of Treipozt, and euer thenglishmẽ folowed shotyng arowes at them, and sleyng them, in whiche skirmische Seriant Rotte had his bowe in his hande striken with a Gonne, Then the captaines taines cried sainct George, to the gates of Treyppoyt, then euery man auaunced forward, and as they were goyng, Cristopher Moyres maister Gonner, espied a pece of a Waste, whiche he caused to bee taken vp, and then Anthony Kneuet, and Fraunces Neudigate with their men, ranne with thesaied maste to the gate, but the gate was so strong, that it could not be broken: and also at euery loupe laie a pece of ordinaunce, whiche continually shot at the Englishemen, whiche caused theim to leaue the gate, and then they sette fyre in the subbarbes, whiche was a fayre strete, and all was brent, and while the subbarbes brent, the Englishmen went to the hauen, and would haue had out the shippes, but water lacked, x wherfore they set fyre on theim, and brent there seuen faire shyppes beside other. All this while was there skirmishyng at the gates, and muche murder on bothe sides, for the Frenchemen in flyng from their bulwerkes to the toune, lost. lxxx. persones, and many were hurte with arrowes. The men of the countrey came thether stil, in somuche as the nomber became very great, whiche sir Willyam Fitz Willyam perceiuing, caused his trompet to blowe a retrete, and with suche prysoners, pillage, and ordinaunce as they had gotten, they returned to their boates, and the capitaines sent their souldiers before, the Frenchemen perceiuing the Englishemen returned, issued out and founde on lande, Fraunces Neudigate, xx Thomas Wagham, Seriant Rotte, and other Capitaines to the nomber of twelue, and ran hastely toward theim in great nomber, which perceiuing that, bended themselfes to sell their liues dere: sir Willyam Fitz William perceiuing the great ieoperdy that they were in, turned hys boate toward the lande, and discharged his ordinaunce, and with muche paine saued these gentelmen, and theim toke into boates, not withstanding a great nomber of Frenchemen, which were in the water to let him: and thus the whole armie returned to their shippes, after they had bene v. houres on land, and brought with them. xxbii. peces of faire ordinaũce, whiche were in the bulwarkes, and lost of their men not fully. xx. per- xxx sones, and then euery capitaine toke his awne ship, and coasted the seas, euer lokyng for the duke of Albany, but hard no tidynges of hym.

Iorney of the duke of Suffolke.

In the Parliamẽt (as you haue hard) it was cõcluded, that the kyng of necessitie, muste nedes make strong warre on the realme of Fraunce, wherfore the noble Charles duke of Suffolke, was appoynted as Capitain generall, to passe with an armie royall into Fraunce, in the ende of August, whiche with all diligence, prepared all thynges necessary, for suche a royal enterpryce, and for the furniture of this armie, there were appoynted to geue their attendaunce on hym, the Lorde Montacute, and syr Arthur Pole his brother, the lorde Herbert sonne to the erle of Wor- xl cester, the lorde Ferreis, the lorde Marney, the lorde Sandes, the lorde Barkeley, the lorde Powes, and Baron Curson, and of knightes, sir Richarde Wyngfelde, Chauncellor of the Duchie of Lancaster, Sir Jhon Veer, sir Edward Neuell, sir Willyam Kyngston, syr Richard Weston, sir Andrew Wynsore, sir Robert Wyngfeld, sir Anthony Wyngfeld, sir

Edward

Edward Guyldforde, sir Edward Gryuell, sir Edward Chamberlein, sir Thomas Luce, syr Euerard Dighby, syr Adrian Foscew, syr Willyam Skeuington master of the ordinaūce, sir Thomas Cheiney, sir Richard Cornwell, syr Willaim Cortney, sir Willyam Sidney, sir Henry Owen al these lordes and knightes, with many other knightes and corageous Esquiers, & actiue gentlemen, came accordyng to the kynges commaundemēt at last, with all their people and retinue to Douer, wher thei mustered at seuerall times, as thei passed to the sea, and so the nombre takē, that is to saie, of dimy Lances .vi. C. of archers on horsebacke twoo. C. x of Archers on foote three. M. of bill men fiue. M. of pioners and labo- rers .ii. M. vi. C. and when the viewe was taken on the other side of the sea, there were adioyned to this nomber. xvii. C. whiche might be spared out of the fortresses, and crewes of Hams, Guysnes, and Calice, so that al the army wer. xiii. M. and an. C. well harnesed, and appareled for the warre, the pioners onely excepte: but the duke himself arriued at Calice the. xxiiii. of August, with his retinue and counsaill, abiding the armye, and caused all thynges, as vitaill and other, to be prepared for the same.

Muche commonyng was in Englande, whether this army should go because that no man, except a fewe, knew the secretnes: some said to Bul xx lein, some to Paris, and so euery man iudged, accordyng to his awne opinion, as the common vse is.

In this season, because the mortalitie was greate in Calice, the duke of suffolk caused his armie to be lodged in tentes and pauilions, vpon the faire grene beside sainct Peters Churche, for their more healthe, and he accompaigned with diuerse noble men, the. viii. daye of September rode to Graueling, & thether came to hym Cristerne kyng of Denmark and the lorde Isilsten, capitain generall of Flaunders, whiche amiably entertcigned thesaied duke, and after they had secretly commoned of diuerse matters, concernyng diuerse armies to inuade Fraunce, in sondry xx places, the duke toke leaue of the kyng and other, and came to Calice.

Arriot at Calyce.

While the armie laie without Calice, they daily came into the toune, and so it happened that a symple felow cut a purse, as he made to bie apples, whiche incontinent was taken, and brought to the Maiors house to ward whiche thyng diuers Welshemen perceiuyng, and not knowe- yng what apperteigned to Justice, ranne in greate compaignies to the Maiors house, and would haue broken the house, the Officers of the toune entreated, and Welshemen more and more approched, the nom- bre of the Welshemen were so greate, that the watche of Calice strake Alarme. Then the Lorde deputie and the Lorde Sandes, did all that in xl theim laye, to bryng theim to conformitie, but thei wer so rude that thei nothyng them regarded, the prestes brought furthe the blessed Sacra- ment, whiche also was not regarded, Wherfore the Lorde Ferreis was straightly commaunded to appese their rage, for with him thei came the ther, whiche with greate pain and entreatie theim appesed: and then all the Welshemen were commaunded to the felde, and to depart the toune

& so wer all other capitaines, & after diuerse of ỹ hed rioters wer apꝛehẽded & soꝛe punished foꝛ exãple. And when al thynges necessary were pꝛepared, the duke issued out of Calice & toke the feld, & oꝛdeined his Marshall, & capitain of the vantgard the loꝛd Sandes, capitain of his right wyng sir William Kyngston, and capitain of his lefte wing, sir Guerard Dighby, sir Edward Guyldfoꝛd Marshal of Calice, was capitain of all the hoꝛsmẽ, sir Richard Wingfeld, capitain of the rereward: then ỹ duke with all his army, as capitain of the middle ward, with stãderdes, baners and penons, displaied, marched foꝛward in good oꝛdꝛe of battail & came to a place called Kalkewel, and there lodged the.xix. day of September. & In whiche place diuerse souldiers, of Cariers and vp lande men, whiche were vnmete to the warre, (foꝛ euery thyng to theim was pain) fell sycke and diseased, wheꝛfoꝛe the duke gaue them leaue by paspoꝛt to returne.

And on the.xxii. day of September, he toke vp his campe and came to Hamswell, and there pitched his fielde, he thus lyng in abode foꝛ the armie of Flaũders, which pꝛomised to ioyne with hym, which as then were not come to. S. Omers. He entending not to lye still idely, sent Claren-seux kyng of armes, to somon the castle called Bel castle, to yelde to him, oꝛ els he would destroie it with fire and swoꝛde, the officer of armes dyd his message accoꝛdingly, to whom the capitain answered, that he would deliuer no castle to the duke, and if the duke came thether, he should nothyng get, foꝛ he said he was sure of suche rescues, that should not be to the dukes auantage: whiche with this answer returned toward the duke and in the way he met the loꝛde Sandes, & the loꝛd Ferreis, in array of battail, with.v.C. hoꝛsmen, & .i.M. fotemen, to whom he rehersed the an-the maister of thoꝛdinance was cõmaunded to pꝛepare foꝛ a batrie, which was done, & thether came.v.c. hoꝛsemen of Burgonions, & .v.C. fotemen, then thoꝛdinance with great difficultie was bꝛought nere the castle, & all though it wer night the gonnes cesed not & bet the place soꝛe, they within defended the best that they might, & when the day begã to spꝛing, the loꝛdes caused to blow to thassault, which hearyng the capitain of the castle said to his cõpanions, ỹ they were not able to abide thassault, & that their succoꝛs failed them, wheꝛfoꝛe of necessitie they muste delyuer the castle, wherto they agreed, and so he yelded the castle, his lyfe onely saued, and all other at the mercie of the duke, whiche pardoned theim, and toke thẽ as pꝛisoners, and deliuered the castle to sir Willyam Skeuyngtõ, whiche was shoꝛtly rased doune to the ground, the.xxvii. day of September.

Mondaie beyng the.xxviii. day of September, there was a pꝛoclama-cion made in tharmy, how that Fraunces duke of Burbon, & Constable of Fraunce, was become frend to the kyng of Englande, & enemy to the Frẽche kyng, & was swoꝛne to the kyng of England, & had in his wages foꝛ the kyng of England.x.M. Almaines to inuade Fraũce, oꝛ to let the Frenche kynges purposes, & foꝛ this intent to him was sent money in no litle some, but the common people said, that neuer was Frencheman true to England, howbeit he was true as long as he liued.

To make this proclamacion more apparunt, you must vnderstande that in this season the Frenche kyng was ruled by his mother the Cõtesse of Angulesme and the Admyrall of Fraunce called lorde Bonyuet, whiche as was reported and sayd, loued the sayd lady as his paramor: of whiche all the court of Fraunce spake muche, These two persones so ruled the kyng, that what they sayd was done, and no iudgement nor sẽtence passed in the Parliament at Parys without their assent, so that nothing was done without them, at whiche thing the nobles of Fraũce sore disdained and especially the lorde Fraunces duke of Burbon and x Constable of Fraunce whiche hauing a suite for therledome of Montpelyer could not be heard speake nor his counsail neither. At the last he beyng sore displeased with this vnkynd and vntust handlyng, came to the French kyng besechyng hym of iustice & fauor, whiche flateryng hym sayd, that al that was in his power to do he would gladly accomplish, & other answer had he none, & to encreace his grudge & more, the Frenche kynges mother made a title to the whole Duchy of Burbon & Auerne, and the Admyrall & she so entised the kyng that he sayd openly that the Duke of Burbon shortly should be as poore as the meanest gentleman in Fraunce, whiche wordes reported to hym caused hym to xx hate mortally the Frenche kyng and his mother, and so in displeasure departed into his owne countrey. The kyng of England beyng hereof aduertised, sent to the Duke of Burbon a knight of his Chamber called sir Jhon Russell a man well languaged, whiche wisely and couertly so behaued hymself, that he came to the duke to Molyns and knew all his entent how he would forsake his kyng, and serue the kyng of Englãd & the Emperor agaynst the Frenche kyng, and therupon tooke his othe. The Frenche kyng not mistrustyng the allegiance of the duke of Burbon sent to the Duke to prepare hym to go into Italye, for he had prepared a great army to passe the mountaines agaynst the duke of Mylxxx laine, in which army he had. vi. M. men of armes, and. xv. M. fotemen The duke hearyng hereof fained himselfe sicke, and the Frenche kyng passyng by Molyns visited & cõforted him: to whõ the duke promised to come shortly after to Lyons with all his power, and caused an horselitter to be caried emptie, iii. dayes amongest a certayn of his souldiers as though he were there, but he himselfe fled secretly into the Countye of Burgoyne pertainyng to the Emperor, where he retained. x. M. Almaines to inuade Fraunce assone as the Frenche kyng was passed the mountaines.

When the Frenche kyng heard of this, he sent the Admyrall into Ixi taly with his army, & sent his great Master to seaze al the dukes lãdes. Of all these doynges sir Jhon Russell brought true worde, for he was present with the Duke, and also sawe the Frenche armye, and returned vnespied, wherfore he deserued & had of the kyng and his coũsaill great thankes. Whereupon the kyng caused the proclamacion to be made in the army, that they might knowe that all the power of Fraunce should not trouble them. For what with the warres of Italy and for the duke of Burbons power thei might do what they lust and be vnfought with-al which so proued after. Whiche tidynges muche encoraged thenglishe souldiers.

After this proclacion, there wer tidynges brought to the army for a truethe, that one Hierome Vicount, a great familiar frēde with the duke of Myllayne entised by the the French kyng, had almost slaine Fraūces duke of Myllain with a dagger behynd at his backe, with the whiche doyng the Frenche kyng aboue all persones fained himselfe to be moste displeased. The morowe beyng the.xxix. daye of September the duke with his whole armi remoued to Arde and there lodged, and the last dai of September he remoued to a village called Alrke, and from thence the first day of October he came to a village betwen Tyrwin and saint Omers called Esqwerdes or Cordes, wher the duke lay and encamped himselfe abidyng his enemies.

Nowe must I returne to tell you what was done bewene Englande and Scotland this same season. Whyle the Duke of Suffolke was thus inuadyng the realme of Fraunce. The Scottes thinkyng the war turned into Fraunce, and that nothyng should be attempted against them, began to robbe and spoyle on the Marches of England, whereof the kyng hearyng sent againe thither the valiant erle of Surray treasorer and Admyrall of England, whiche in all hast sped hym to the west Marches and sent for an army of.vi.M. men, & with banner displayed entred by the dry Marches betyng doune castles & fortresses on euery side. And although the Scottes be men of high corage, yet they seyng the wise conduict of the noble erle of Surray and his chosen company, durst not onis encounter with him, and so he passed quietly through the dales, tyll he came to the strong toune of Jedworthe, in whiche lay a great garrison of Scottishmen whiche did al the hurt they could to the Englishmen, and hardely in great nomber skyrmished with thenglishemen, so that on both partes diuers wer slaine, but in the ende the Abbay, Castle, and toune of Jedworth were brent and all rased a sonder in the open sight of the Scottes. And after this he would not returne but encamped hymself in the Scottishe ground abidyng battil, and lay there from the.xvii. day of September to the.xxv. day. Duryng whiche tyme he sent the lorde Daker of Gylderland to a strong hold of Doncar called Fernhurst, the whiche castle stode very euill to come to, for the wayes wer hylly, stony, and full of marishes, and the Scottes had bent their ordinaunce that way: yet for all that the Englishemen so fiersly set on that they gat the castle, notwithandyng that the Scottes fought valiauntly, and many of theim were taken, as Dan Car the lorde, the lorde of Gradon and diuers other whiche was there taken, and so the lorde Daker returned with his prisoners, and then he was ordained to kepe the watche that night whiche set his watches & his wardes surely. In the night sodainly. CCC. good geldynges brake out of a pasture,

whiche were in custodie of the sayd lord Dacres campe,and as beastes wodde and sauage ranne enraged, and notwithstandyng that men dyd asmuche as they might to stoppe them,yet they ranne as thought they were in array of batayll,whereof the noyse in the night was so great, that the armye souned alarme,the hoyse styll in array ranne to the cãpe where the erle lay and bare doune many persones in their waye, and so sodaunly ranne away whether it was vnknowen:the lorde Dacres men sayd that the deuil was sene amongest them:and after the third day the Erle returned into England.

x When the Erle of Surray departed from the borders in August as you haue heard heretofore: The Scottes wrote to the duke of Albany of all their affaires, whiche was commyng into Scotland. But when he heard that the Nauy of England lay in wayte to fight with him, he durst not auenture,but sate styll: And when he heard there was no capitaines of name on the borders of England toward Scotland, he deuised by policie that all his shippes should be remoued to the hauen of Brest,and sayd himselfe and caused it to be noysed that he would not saile into Scotlãd that yere. So tãne the boyce al the coastes of Normandy and Britayne,and so passed tyll the ende of September.

xi The kyng of England was enformed by suche as knew none other, that the Duke of Albany had broken his iorney, and would not passe that yere into Scotland. Wherfore the kyng of England in the middest of September caused his shippes to be layde vp in his hauẽ tyl the next spryng: The duke of Albany beyng therof aduertised boldy then tooke his shippes and shipped his people,and with.lxxii.sayle in sight passed by the West partes of England and coasted Wales, & so with great labor landed at Kyrcowbre in the West parte of Scotland with all his people the.xxi.day of Septẽber whiche were in nomber.iii.M. or there about,and with him was the traytor Richard Delapole.

xii When it was knowen in Scotland that the lorde Gouernor was landed,muche gladnes there was amongest the people. Then the duke was highly receyued and his people wel cherished,and then beganne a Parliament. The kyng of England hearyng that the duke of Albany was landed in Scotlande and was vnfought withall, was not a litle displeased, and suspected that suche as enformed hym that the Duke would not passe that yere,had deceyued him,but there was no remedye: Wherfore he made prouisions and put all thynges in a readynes,yf he would attempt any thyng agaynst hym and his realme.

xiii The Duke of Albany Gouernor of Scotland beyng in the Parliament of the realme,with great eloquence declared to them the loue and fauor that Frãces the Frenche kyng bare to the realme of Scotland, insomuch that he beyng aduertised of the great murders, slaughters & burnynges done by the Englishemen, thought that he suffred no lesse hurt and damage then they did,accomptyng him self one of their membres,and them likewise the membres of him and his realme,and for the reuenging of thesame,he to be partener as their member, & for the more credite he shewed the Frenche kynges fauorable letter, affirmyng his declaracion. When the letters wer red there start vp a Baron of Scotland called the lorde Forbos, whiche sayd: the realme of Scotland for the loue of Fraunce suffereth great paine as daily doth appere, for our nobles be slayn or taken, our comunalte murdered, our lãdes ouertũne, our houses & forteresses brent & rased, the profites of our owne lãdes we lese: which misschief we nede not to haue had, but for the loue of Fraũce, & what helpeth Fraunce? A farre frend is not sone fet: A mightie neighbor may be a cruel enemy. I affirme this, if we would kepe amitie with the realme of England we were out of all these daungers. God forbyd sayd the duke of Albany that Scotland euer should seke a new frende or prefer their amitie, to the destroyers of their coũtrey and nation, but you my lordes of Scotlãd are sufficient of your selfe to maintain your lãdes, libertie, & fredome against your comon enemyes thenglischemen. And therfore now let vs together reuenge the hurtes done to vs & our countrey: And I on myne honor shal go with you, and therfore I haue brought with me bothe treasure, men, and artillerie into this realme. I thinke not but we shall so do that all Christendome shall speake of our noble cõquest. To the dukes request all the court of Parliamẽt agreed and then wer commissions sent through Scotland & crves made that al xx men shuld assemble at Doglas dale with vitaile for .xxviii. daies. The Scotes in al hast prepared, so that the lordes wer come to the place appointed the .xxviii. day of October, with vitaile, gunnes, & all other artillerie, and so came by easy iorneys to the ryuer of Twede on a ground beside Hume castle, & from thence came to Cawdestrene & there lodged.

All this doyng the kyng of England knewe well, wherfore with all diligẽce he caused to be assembled the people of the North part beyond Trẽt wherof there were .xii. M. berying cotes of armes with their power and strength, whiche all wer cõmaunded to resort to the erle of Surray with spede. The noble Marques Dorset Thomas was appoynted to xxx kepe Berwicke with .vi. M. mẽ, lest the Scottes therto would lay siege.

The duke of Albany whiche lay on the frontiers hearing of the Erle of Surreyes preparyng, sent to him an Herauld promisyng him of hys honor to geue him battaill, and yf he tooke him in battail he would put him to curteous raunsome & his body to be safe: To whom the erle answered, that muche he thanked the duke of his offer, and that he would abide battail, promising him that he would geue him battail if he durst abide: & yf that the sayd duke were taken prisoner by hym or his menne he would strike af his head & send it to the kyng of England his Master, and bad that he should trust to none other, at whiche answere the xl duke of Albany and the Scottes toke great dispite.

The erle of Surray beyng at Alnwyke, to him came therles of Northumberland and Westmerland, the lorde Clyfford, the lorde Dacres, the lorde Lumley, the lorde Ogle, the lorde Darcy, and many noble knightes, Squiers and yomen, to the nomber of .xl. M. And from the kynges court was sent to be at the batail sir Nicholas Carew Master of the horse, sir Fraunces Bryan, sir Edwarde Baynton and diuers other. All this armye laye on the borders abidyng the Scottes cõmyng into Englande, whiche lay styll in Scotland and did nothyng till the last day of October beyng Saterday. The night before the Scottes had sent ouer the water into England.iii.or.iiii.M.men, to lay siege to a lytle castle called the Castle of Warke, whiche stãdeth nere the borders the great ordinaũce of Scotland sore bet the castle, and Dan Car and the Frenchemen whiche came out of Fraunce with the duke of Albany gaue to the castle a strong assaut: within the castle was sir Williã Lyle x with a.C.persones, but the Scottes were so many in nomber, that they got the vttermoste warde called the Barnkyns where the beastes and barnes were, whiche seyng, the capitaine sent in all hast to the Erle of Surrey aduertisyng him of their distres, whiche in all hast assembled his capitaines to reskue the castle, therby hopyng that Duke Jhon of Albany would enter into England. The Frenchmen and Scottes lay styll about the castle cõtinually shotyng ordinaunce Sonday & Monday the fyrst and second day of Nouembet, and then the Scottes thin-kyng the place assautable, coragiously set on the castle and by strength entred the secõd warde. Sir Willyã Lyle perceiuyng that the Scottes had gotten the false brayes and that nothyng remained but only the inner warde or dõgeon, sayd to his company, sirs for our honor & mãhod let vs issue and fight with the proude Scottes and stately Frenchmen, for more shall our honor be to dye in fight, then to be murthered with gunnes, to the whiche his company that were left agreed: for of his.C. men he had lost almost.xl.at the other assautes. Then they issued out boldly and shot coragiously as men that shot for a bauntage, and with shotyng and fightyng they draue their enemies clene out of the place & slew of them and chiefly of the Frenchmen.CCC.whiche lay there dead in sight when the Erle came thither, beside suche as dyed of woundes & xxx were drouned. Then the Scottes remoued their ordinaunce, in great hast ouer the water, & by that tyme was the Erle of Surrey come with v.M.men on horsbacke & all his great army folowed & was very sory that his enemies were gone, & muche praysed sir Willyam Lyle for his valiauntnes.

When the Duke of albany & the lordes of Scotland knew that the erle of Surrey approched with his puissant army, they thought it not conuenient to ieoparde all the nobilitie of Scotlande in one felde, consideryng their chaunce.x.yeres before, and therfore they cõcluded to returne, and so on the sayd secõd day of Nouember in the night the duke xl with all his armye retreated more for his suertie then honor.

The horsemen of Scotland kept the fordes that no mã should passe to greue the fotemen as they returned, and when all the baggages wer gone they cast them selfes in a plumpe and returned.

When the day appeared, then the Englishmen might plainly see the Scottes how they fled fiftie mennes thickenes, many a lusty Englishman would faine haue folowed them on horsbacke, and so would therle of Surray with all his heart, but his cõmission was only to defend the realme and not to inuade Scotland, whiche thing hym sore displeased. Thus brake vp the great army of Scotland to the great rebuke of the duke of Albany & the nobles of Scotland whiche.u.yere together had made bragges & assembles and durst not abide battaile. The Scottes made much braggs that they had beaten doune the walles of Warke castle, but they spake nothyng of their men that they left there, nor how cowardly they returned & would not abide. After this returne quene Margaret of Scotland & mother to the yong kyng, sent to her brother x the kyng of England for an abstinence of warre to be takẽ betwene the realme of England and Scotland, to thentent that some way might be taken, that an amitie might be had betwene them: whiche request to her was graunted, and so the great armye of England was dissolued and the Erle of Surrey returned to the coast.

Apresent sent by the Emperor to ỹ kyng

In this season the Emperor Charles sent to the kyng of Englãd.ii. xx Mules trapped in crimosyn veluet curiously enbrodered, al ỹ buckles, stiroppes & all suche other garnishynges were siluer & gilt of meruatlous cõnyng worke. He sent also.xi. Genettes ful goodly to behold trapped with russet veluet richely wrought, and.iiii.speres, & .ii. Iauelynes xx of straunge tymber & worke richely garnished, and.v.brace of greyhoũdes: and to the quene he sent two Mules with riche trappers and high chayers after the Spanishe fashion, all these presentes wer thankefully receiued both of the kyng and quene.

Now let vs returne to the Duke of Suffolke whiche lay at Corbes or Esquerdes the.xx.day of September & thither came to him ỹ army of Flaunders, wherof was capitaine the lorde of Isilsteyne whiche had with him of Spaniardes, Almaines, Cleues and other.iii.M. fotemen and.v.C. horsemen well appareled for the warres in all pointes.

The duke of Suffolke beyng thus furnished passed forward in wete xxx wether makyng bridges & wayes, euer lokyng for battel, & on the.xvii. day of October he sent the lorde Sandes Marshall of his armye, and with him.iii.M. men to a good toune called Anker whiche accompanied with diuers knightes and gentlemen in good order of battail marched towarde the toune. The Frenchemen perceiuyng the Englishmen cõmyng toward their toune, fled out as fast as they might, and left the toune desolate: then entred the Englishmen and had there a great botie and toke the castle called Bone gard and therin put a garrison of Englishemen, whereof was capitaine the lorde Leonard Gray brother to the Marques Dorset to conduict vitailers to the armye, whiche nowe xl was farre from any succours of the Englishe part. In this toune was an abby of Monkes whiche receiued humbly the lordes and nobles of England whiche to theim did no hurt nor dammage, and then they returned to the duke.

After this, the.xix.daye, the Duke with his armye passed to a village called

called Quede:and there, after long coũsaillyng it was determined that the whole army shoulde passe to a strong toune and wel fortefied called Bray, whiche toune was well ordinaunced and had in it.xvi.C.men of warre, the capitaine therof was called Adrian, and for succours to the toune were come Mounsire Pontdormy, the Vicount Larnerdain, the Vicount Turraine, Moũsire Applyngcort, & Mounsire Dãpney, with v.C.horsemen, so that in the toune beside the inhabitauntes were.ii.M. good men. This toune standeth on the riuer of Some.xxiiii.Englishe myle from Arras, and.xiiii.myles aboue Ampas: This toune was well x diched and strengthned on euery syde.

The.xx.day of this moneth the Duke cõmaunded al his great ordinaũce to be brought by.iiii.of the clock in the morning before the toune of Bray, they that had the charge therof so manfully acquited thẽ that notwithstãding al the damage that their enemies could do, brought the ordinaunce before the toune at the houre appointed. Thẽ eche part shotdredfully at other, but the Englishe gũners shot so well, that the walles of the toune were beaten doune & raised with the ordinaunce, insomuche that by.ix.of the clocke the toune was made assautable. Then the duke caused to blow to thassaut. Then the Englishmẽ & Flemynges & Bur-xx gontons lept furth quickely, and notwithstandyng that the diches wer depe, yet they so corageiously entered by the good comfort of the lorde Sãdes & other noble men that they gat the diches. The Frenchemẽ perceiuyng that the toune should be gotten, hastely made traynes of gunpouder from strete to strete and house to house, saiyng that the Englishmen after their entry into the toune would fal to pillage, & thẽ sodainly sodain fyer should destroy them. This was the prouision of the Frẽchmen: by this tyme the Englishmen wer enteryng on the walles, and the Frenchmen stode yet at defence with pikes, crosbowes, handgunnes, & halbardes, but they were to weke, for on all partes entred thenglishmen xxx and sodainly the Frenchmen fledde and the Englishemen folowed and killed and slew in euery part.

Nowe you must vnderstand that this toune of Bray standeth on the riuer of Some whiche is there diuided in diuers braunches & betwene euery braũche is a marishe groũd, where on the farside of the toune was fortefied a Bulwarke ful of ordinaũce to kepe the passage ouer the water, & the Frenchmen had losed the plankes of the bridge nere a myle aboue Bray, & the horsmen of Fraũce passed by a myll which was to the Frẽchfotemẽ a great ayd, for thei stode & kept the passage til the fotemẽ wer come ouer the bridge, & then they plucked away the planckes of the xl bridge, so that nomã shuld folow, but euer thenglishmen folowed & cast plãkes on the bridge & passed ouer the bridge, in whiche passyng diuers wer drouned, but with great trauail al men passed, horsmẽ & fotemen, & fiersly assauted the Bulwarke and toke it with all the ordinaunce, & in it was taken capitaine Adrian and capitaine Ulterlew. The Englishe

horsmen folowed the Frenchemen & diuers of them wer slaine and take, sir Robert Iernyngham brake a spere on the lorde Pountdormy. The lorde Leonard Gray did valiantly that day. You must remember that when the Frenchemen issued out of the toune, they forgatte not to lay a matche to the traine of gunnepouder whiche they had made, whiche in short space set the toune al on fyer, so that when thenglishmen returned again, al was on fyer, so that there they had litle profite but wyne, whiche to them did great pleasure. This was the toune of Bray taken and destroyed the.xx.day of October.

The duke conslideryng that litle succours were for him and his souldiers in the toune of Bray because the sayd toune was consumed with fyer, he therfore cõmaunded the bridges to be wel repayred for to passe ouer the great riuer of Some into the realme of Fraũce: and when the passage was sure, the lord Sandes the.xxi.day of October in the mornyng was prest to passe ouer with the bawarde. Then some gentlemen sayd that they would passe no farther forward, & diuers souldiers were on thesame opinion. It was asked why they should feare, and they answered that if they were past ouer the riuer, they were past all succours and vitail, none could be brought to them. By reason of this noyse the souldiers stayed, which the lord Sandes perceiuing, sayd to the Welshmen which wer euil willyng to passe the riuer: sirs sayd he, behold what I do, and with that he toke a banner of saincte George & sayd, as many as loue the kyng of England & be true to hym and to the croune, folow me, and then he and sir Wylliam Kyngston set forward and passed the water, whiche there tunneth in thre streames, then all other persones corragiously folowed, and the ordinaunce and vitailes.

After the forewarde folowed the duke and al his battail: At this tyme the army was sore minished by reason many wer diseased and from the host departed, so the host was not of that strength that it was at the settyng out of Calayce. When thenglishemem were passed, then folowed the Burgonions in good order, and so that night this army came to a toune called Kappe and there encamped theimselfes, all the inhabitauntes were fled bothe out of the toune and Castle: there thenglishemen found.C.tonne of wyne, & other good pillage. The garrison that lay at Anker knowing that the duke was passed the riuer of Some, rased the toune & castle, & came & ioyned with the dukes army at Kappe.

There the duke caused proclamacions to be made in the armye that all the people of Fraunce that would vitaile the armye of Englande should be well entreated & haue their vitailes well payed for, and safe goyng and cõmyng, by the whiche proclamacion the host was well vitailed, for the people of the countrey resorted with al thinges necessarie.

The Duke thus lyng at Cap sent to the toune of Roy to yeld theim to the kyng of England. The toune perceiuyng that their power was not able to withstand the great armye of the Duke, assented to deliuer the toune to the Duke. This was a strong toune well walled, dyched and ordinaunced but not manned, the Duke sent thither sir Richard Cornwall and other with.iiii.C.men to receiue the toune, whiche went thither in good array and had the toune to theim deliuered and then they sette the banner of sainct George in the highest part of the toune, and full well this garrison kept the toune of Roy til the duke came thither with his whole armye.

The Duke & his armye the.xxb.day of thesayd moneth remoued to a vilage called Lyhome, & had there great pillage: for this toune was muche haunted of marchauntes and there kept great markettes. The x next day he remoued to Dauenker, and the.xxvii.day he remoued and came before the strōg toune of Mountdedier, where for defēce of warre lacked neither diches, walles, nor bulwarkes: The horsemen of the Englishe army rode about the toune to vew it, at whom the capitaines caused diuers pieces to be losed whiche shewed well their strength. The duke sent an officer of armes to somon the capitain to deliuer the toune: the officer departed, & with him a trumpet whiche blew before the gate, but no person would answere, because they would haue no Sommons made to them: the officer of armes returned and made report. Then the Dukes skyrrers made profer afore the toune, out of the whiche issued xx a great compainie of horsemen and skyrmished with the Dukes horsemen and fought valiantly, but at the last.xl.of the horsemen were taken, with whiche the lorde Roche Baron captaine of the toune was sore displeased, yet he thought him able to maintaine the toune agaynst the whole armye. Then the Duke of Suffolke pytched his felde and layd his siege rounde about the toune of Mountdedier and kept good watche and watde on euery side: whiche thing the lorde Roche Baron perceiuyng comforted his menne of warre and bad them not be afrayd but to be of good corage, and sayd that the Duke there should get nothyng. When the Duke had thus planted his siege, he considered xxx that he was farre from reskew, and that lyng still and nothyng doyng was not profitable, he knewe also by report of the prisoners that in the toune of Moundedier were two thousand footemen, and one thousand horsemen, wherfore he sent for all the lordes and capitaines of his army and muche praised their hardynes and sayd that the noble corrage that he sawe in theim did muche auaunce hym to sette forwarde in all thynges, the prayse whetof should be to them and not to him, and therfore nowe he encoraged them againe to continue still in their valiaunt doyng, for with Goddes grace he entended to bend his ordinaunce the xl next mornyng before the toune, to the whiche all the lordes agreed and praysed muche the dukes corage and forwardnes.

Then was sir Willyam Skeuyngton knight, Maister of the ordinaunce cōmaunded to prepare for the battery, whiche with all diligēce made trenches, and prepared all thinges mete for the purpose. In this season sir Jhon Wallop knight had with him almost a.M.proper men and hardy, hauyng litle wages or none whiche liued alonely on their auenture, wherfore of some they were called aduenturers, of some they were called kreekars. These men wer light, hardy, and politike, and by their manhod and hardines had robbed many tounes, taken many prisoners, with great bōties, & daily brought to the army Horses, Mares vitaile, cloth, corne, & other necessaries whiche might not be missed. Of this company the Frenchemen and especially they of villages & passēgers wer sore afrayde, for they were neuer ydle but doyng some thyng in one part or other. The lorde Pountdormy, or Pountreny hearyng Mountdedyer was besieged, called to him diuers great lordes & capitaines to the nomber of .v. C. menne of armes and dimilaunces, and a great nomber of fotemen, entendyng to bryng gunnepouder and other x necessaries to the toune of Mountdedier: & as they wer thither cōmyng by night, Thomas Palmer, capitain of the skout watche of thenglishe army them askried and skyrmished with them although they wer more in nomber: manfully fought the Frenchemen, but for all that they were compelled to flee backe, and then Englishmen theim folowed and slewe diuers, and two speres were broken on the brother of the lorde Pountdorny, but by the swyftnes of his horse he saued himselfe, and in this chase were .C. prisoners taken whiche muche reioysed the Englishmen.

were

When the Master of the ordinaunce had all thinges ready, at the houre of .iiii. of the clocke in the mornyng he discharged the ordynaunce xx continually in suche fashion, that by .vii. of the clocke the .xxviii. day of October the walles were made lowe & the toune assautable. All whiche while, the great ordinaunce shot still out of the toune tyll the walles & toune were beaten doune. The capitaine of the toune perceiuyng this, called to him al the capitaines, declaryng to them that their toune was in .iii. houres made assautable, and that surely the Englishmen would assaute the toune whiche should be to their cōfusion, wherfore he asked their aduise what was best to be done, al they answered, do as you will: Then he went into a tower & caused a trompet to blowe and set furth a banner of truce. Then the duke commaunded the ordinaunce to cease. xxx Then sir Willyā Skeuyngton came to the walles & demaunded what they would, & the lord Roche Baron sayd, that if it pleased the duke for the loue of the kyng of England & his honor, to graūt to him & thother gentlemen that wer there, lycence to depart with life, bagge & baggage, they would deliuer the toune of Mountdedier. Then sir Willyā Skeuyngton made report to the duke whiche therto consented, saiyng: they be men of warre, their riches is not great. Then the lorde Sandes and diuers other wer appointed to receiue the toune, & so they entred & set their stādardes on the top of the gates, & toke the keyes of all the strong houses, towers, and Bulwarkes. The Frenchemen were readye to de- xl part with trussages and cariages, with Crosbowes, Pykes, & Handgunnes, with whiche doyng the lorde Sandes and the Englishemen which wer within the toune wer not content, & sayd that the Frenchmen should passe without weapon: on this point was muche alteracīō and the Frenchemen were stayed, but the lorde Roche Baron gaue many fayre wordes and passed forwarde with a red standard, with a whitte

crosse before him, that seyng sir Thomas Palmer, ranne to the stãdard and plucked it in pieces. Then sayd the Lord Roche Baron that it was vngẽtly done: To whom he answered that he should beare no standard there lyke a conqueror. Then after longe disputacion the Frenchemen sayd, that it was promised theim that they should haue their weapons and baggage, and so vpon that they were suffered to depart. The fotemen likewyse had a standard before theim which was rent by sir Robert Iernyngham. The nomber whyche departed truely accompted, were twoo thousand footemen, fiue hundreth horsemen and odde well and x warlike appointed, and they left muche baggage behynd them because they sawe the Englishemen so fast come into the toune, they wer in feare of losse of all.

When the Frenchemen wer departed, the duke with his whole army entred the toune and there the Englishemen founde fine fetherbeddes, napery, couetinges, and muche houshold stuffe, and especially of wyne greate plentie, and there the armye rested till the laste day of October, and then were all the gates of the toune rased and throwen doune, and all the Bulwarkes likewyse. Then the duke caused all the ordinaunce to be taken and so remoued to the toune of Roye, where he and all hys xx armye rested for a while: wherof they were glad, for they had trauailed sore, and the weather was wette and colde. On the feast of all sainctes called Alhallon Daye, thee Duke in thee chiefe Churche of Roy made knightes thee Lorde Harbart, the Lorde Powes, Oliuer Manners, Arthur Poole, Richard Sandes, Robert Iernyngham, Robert Salisbury, Edmonde Beningfelde, Richard, Corbet, Thomas Wentewoorthe William Stoxton, Water Mantel, George Warran, Edwarde Seymour after erle of Hartfoord, and now Duke of Somerset, and moofte worthy Gouernor of the kinges maiesties persone and Protector of all his realmes, dominios and subiectes.

xxx The morow after, the army remoued to a place called Neele, there the Burgonions beganne to ware wery, and so dyd thee Englishemen, for euery day was foule wether and raine bothe daie and night. Wherfore diuerse compaignies fell to grudgyng saying, now you may see that by our remouing we shall bee ledde from place to place all this wynter, whiche is to thee vtter losse of our liues: for daylye wee see that our company dyeth no smal nombre, (and trueth it was that some dyed but not many) thei saied farther, the Burgonions haue the greate gaine and do least for it, for they haue wagons and cary their booties to theyr countrey: whiche is nere hand, and we go before and fight, and wee haue xl no meanes to conuey any thing into our cõtrey for lacke of carryage, and so we bete the bushe and they take the byrdes. This grudge was ceassed by gentle woordes for a tyme.

In these torneys was cõmonly spokẽ that the duke of Burbon with his .x. M. Almaines would haue inuaded Fraunce and soo ioyned wyth this army, but ẏ truth was contrary, for he turned his host another way

and

and went into Prouince and layde siege to Marcelles, wherof the duke beyng aduertised, not a litle mused, and also seyng his menne daily fall sicke, was sory, and yet he so comforted theim that euery man was glad to folowe his wyll and entent.

On the.vi.day of Nouember the lorde Sandes beyng capitayne of the forewarde, and the duke of the middle ward, and sir Richard Wyngfeld capitaine of the rereward came in order of battaill prest to fight, to a billage called Ueane and there rested for that night, and the morow after the whole army returned agayne ouer the water of Some, & came to a place called Beauffort: At this passage the duke made knightes x Jhon Dudley, and Robert Utreyght esquiers.

The.viii.day ỹ duke remoued to a place called Mount sainct Martyne a very mete place for an armye, and then was the dukes instructions loked vpō by the capitaines, and they perceiuyng that they hard nothyng of the duke of Burbons commyng, ayde nor counsail, all they thought and determined to send the lorde Sandes in post to the kyng, to declare all the case as it stode & their necessitie, accordyng as he hym selfe knew and saw in all pointes: whiche lorde Sandes tooke great paine and made good diligence toward the kyng, and while he was ridyng, the duke remoued his armye to a place called Vermount & there xx lodged for a tyme to rest, and the army was well vitailed, but euer the Welshemen muttered and grudged more and more.

A great frost. After the great raynes and wyndes that had fallen, came a feruent frost so sore that many a souldier dyed for coulde, some lost fyngers and some toes, but many lost their nayles of their handes, whiche was to thē a great grefe. The duke all this notwithstandyng remembryng that he came not thither to lye styl, the.xiii.day remoued to a place two myle from the castle of Bowhen and still it freised, insomuche that the master of the Ordinaunce was compelled of necessitie to set the wheles of his ordinaunce on hardles for sinkyng. In the mornyng the Welshemen xxx set out a shout and cryed, home, home, the krekers hearyng that, cryed hang, hang. For whiche matter deuysion was like to haue fallen, but by policie it was ceased. Sir Edward Gyldford capitaine of the horsmen vewed the castle of Bowhen or Boghan, whiche euer was thought to be impregnable, but he iudged it might be wonne, for the castle was inuironed with Marryses, so that to no mans iudgement it was possible to wynne it: But nowe he perceiued that the frost was so great and strong that it might be beseaged, & all that night it freised agayne: wherfore he desired the Duke to geue hym leaue to assaute it whiche thereto agreed. Then he caused the ordinaūce to be set furth ouer the marrish. xl When they witthin the castle perceiued that the marrishe fayled theim. they were sore dismayed. Then sir Edward Guildeford shot thre great pieces at the castle, and the castilain shot thre pieces agayne. Then as the Englishe gunners wer preparing to the battery, the capitain seyng his castle could not hold, by reason that the marishe failed, and that he could

coulde defende none assault, deliuered the castle to him the behofe of the Emperor and the kyng of Englande, and after a small communication had betwene the sayed sir Edwarde Guylforde and the capitaine, the capitaine with all his retinue departed leuyng behynd the ordinaunce of bombardes, curtawes, & demycourtaux, slinges, cannons, bolgers, & other ordinaūce, there were. lxxvj. pieces, plēnte of pellettes & pouder. The duke of Suffolke perceiuynge that this castle stode on the border of Henaude: Wherfore the more to please ỳ Henawders he made captaine of the same castle of Boghan the Seneschall of Henaude, to the behofe of the Emperor and the kyng of England. In this place the army was euill vitailed, because the Frenchemen had stopped the water of Some, that no vitaile should passe ouer the riuer: wherfore the Duke sent to them of Henaude & specially to theim of Valencien to haue ayde of vitaile, which of their litle sent to the army a litle, but yet it dyd them some seruice, and all this while the feruent frost with bitter windes cōtinued, which caused many people to dye: yet still lay the army abidyng the answer of the lord Sandes, whiche as you haue heard rode in post & so muche trauailed that he came to the kyng of England to his castle of Wyndsore and there declared to the kynge his message, whiche was that his people whiche wer in the Frenche ground abode much misery, for the wether was wet, the wayes depe, long nightes and short dayes great iorneys and litle vitaile, which caused the souldiers daily to dye. Also they trusted when they passed the seas accordyng to their instruccions to haue had ayde of the Duke of Burbon (of whom sith their departyng they neuer heard worde) wherfore the Duke of Suffolke and other nobles of youre army haue sent me to your highnes to declare their state & condiciō, their good will to tary, & the euil chaunces which daily happeneth to them by God and not by their enemies. Well sayd the kyng, all this we knewe before your cōmyng: wherfore we haue appointed the lorde Mountioy with. vj. M. men to passe the seas for the relefe of our army, whiche lorde Mountioy is almost in a redynes: For we will in no wise that the army shall breake.

Then the kyng came to Westminster to the Cardinals place & there receiued letters from the duke of Suffolke by sir Robert Jernyngham of the gettyng of the castle of Boghan or Bowen: wherfore incōtinent it was by the kyng and his counsaill determined that the lord Mountioy shoulde make spede, whiche did suche diligence that many of his souldiers were come to Londō well harnissed & weponed redy to passe the seas. Wherfore the kyng sent in all hast sir Robert Jernyngham again to declare to the duke the kinges pleasure and what ayde was cōmyng towarde him. But or sir Robert Jernyngham could come to the duke the armye was remoued from Boghan and brent the toune, & so came to the citie of Valencine in Henaude, & there layde vp their ordinaunce and from thence came to the citie of Tarnay (whiche then was vnder the Emperor and out of the Frenche kynges handes) and so toke their iorney homeward thorow Flaunders and the army there broken and dispatched. But whē the duke mette with sir Robert Iernyngham at Bridges in Flaunders and knewe the kynges mynde and entēt, he did what he might to retreate the souldiers, whiche could not be, for many Englishemen shipped at Andwarpe, and many at Sluyes, & at Newport and other hauens, and they that were at Calayce were steyed for a tyme, but when the Duke sawe that he coulde not bryng all his army together scarcely the.iiij.part, he then licensed the remnaunt to depart. Of this breakyng vp of the armye were letters sent to the kyng, which incontinent stopped the lorde Mountioy & sent his men into the countrey againe. The Duke & other capitaines hearyng of the kynges displeasure, were sore abashed, & did write to their frendes that they had perfite knowlege that the Duke of Burbon had broken vp his campe for the extremitie of the Wynter, and also shewed that their souldiers dyed, and vitaill failid, whiche caused thē to breke the army, for of truth the souldiers would not abide: with which reasons the kyng was somwhat appeased and so on good hope the duke came to Calayce the.xii. day of December, & there abode long, till their frendes had sued to the kyng for their returne. And when it was graunted and that they were returned, the Duke & the capitaines came not to the kynges presence in a long season, to their great heauynes & displeasure: But at the laste all thinges were takē in good part and they well receiued and in great loue, fauor, and familiaritie with the kyng.

Whyle the Duke of Suffolke was in Fraunce and the Earle of Surrey on the Marches of Scotland, the Cardinall sent out cōmissions in the moneth of October through the realme, that euery man that was worth.xl.l. should pay the whole subsidie before graunted out of hand & before the dayes of payment. This payment was called an Anticipacion, which is to say, a thing taken or a thing commyng before his time or season: This terme was new to ỹ cominaltie, but they payd wel for their learnyng, for their money was paied out of hand wout delay.

An Anticipacion.

The kynge this yere kept his Christmas solempnely at his castle of Wyndsore and thither came to him the third day of Januarye the erle Pountiuer of the royal bloud of Brytaigne and pretēdyng to be Duke of the same, whiche was nere cosyn to the duke of Burbon & banniched Fraunce. This erle came hastely from the duke of Burbon & was well entertained and feasted of the kyng, and after answere made to him by the kyng, he went to the Cardinal to Hamptō court, and so with great spede returned to the sayd duke into the countrey of Prouince.

In the same season was brought to the court a gentleman of Scotland called Andrew Stewart taken on the sea with diuers letters by one Water Jago a yoman of the kynges, with diuers letters from the duke of Albany to the Frenche kyng, by reason wherof the kyng knew muche of their counsaill. This Gentleman payed raunsome and was very sone redemed.

The.xix.day of January.vj.fayre shippes of Fraunce well appointed, mette with a shippe of the kynges of England called the Kateryne Galley a shippe of.xl.tonne, the capitain wherof was one Jhon Mariner, with a small company, for many of his company were a lande: But he so encoraged his menne that all feare was set aside, and euer as the Frenchemen approched, they bet them of with arrowes, pykes, & fightyng, & styll this continued frō.iiij. of the clocke in the mornyng tyll.ix. of the clocke, & euer on the coste of England, & the Englishmen dyd the best they could to saue themselfes: For by that tyme she had spent her pouder, arrowes with shotyng, & her bylles with hewyng, & her pykes with kepyng them of from cōmyng aborde, and all the company almost sore hurte, and the capitaine wounded to the death, so that they had no other remedy but to sayle. This chace was perceiued by one called capitain Markam, capitain of the barke of Sandwyche, which manfully called his men together out of Sandwyche hauen & with good wynd came to reskue the Kateryne Galley. The.vj. shippes perceiuyng that, left their chace & made with the Barke of Sandwyche. The capitaine corragiously comforted his men and made the quarters of his ship defensable. The Frenchmē sette on fiersly, and their toppes were higher then the toppe of the Englishe ship. Out went the ordinaunce, quarels and dartes of the Frenche shippes: the Englishmen shot fiersly agayne and when the Frenchemen profered to enter, the Englishmen bet them of with bylles. The Frenchemen at last with a great gunne bet doune the toppe of the barke & slewe the men in thesame, and lastly thei strake doune his Mast. This conflict continued from.x. of the clocke tyll two at after noone. Then he could make no shift, but to saile: and euer the Englishmen shot arrowes, & while thenglishmen had any arrowes the Frenchemen durst not enter: But when theyr arrowes were spent, the Frenchemen came aborde all at ones & entred the barke. In thys fight were slaine of Frenchmen out of hand.xxvij.and.lxxx.sore hurt, and of the Englishe were slaine.xxiij. What shoulde I saye, the Englishemen fought baliauntly, but they were to weake for.vj.tall shippes. Wherfore they were taken and brought to Depe for a prise, but the Frenchemen sayd they neuer bought prise so dere. After this Jhon Maryner capitaine of the Kateryne galey dyed, and many Frenchemen that wer hurt dyed at Depe, so that neither part wanne greatly.

In the last moneth called December were taken certain traytors in the citie of Couentry, one called Fraunces Philippe scholemaster to ỹ kynges Henrymen, and one Christopher Pykeryng clerk eof ỹ Larder, and one Antony Waynuile gentleman, which by the persuasion of the sayd Fraunces Philip, entended to haue taken the kynges treasure of his subsidie as the Collectors of thesame came towarde London, and then to haue araised men and takē the castle of Kylingworth, and then to haue made battaile against the kyng: wherfore the sayd Fraunces, Chrystopher and Anthony wer hanged, drawen, and quartered at Tyborne the xi. day of Februarye, the residue that were taken, were sent to the citie of Couentry & there wer executed. One of the kynges Henxmen called Dygby which was one of the conspirators fled the realme, and after had his pardon.

The.xvij.day of January there was a Fayer or market at the toune of Marguyson in the French kynges dominions beside Calayce, and for defence of the people and their marchaundise, there wer appointed CC.mē in harnes wel weaponed: The souldiers of Guysnes hearyng of this, departed in the night & came nere to the toune of Marguyson and closly kept themselfes tyll the Market was fayre & at the best, thē the Englishmen which wer.lxx.archers and bylles, set sodainly on the Market, that seyng the Frenchemen stode manfully at their defence w̄ handgunnes and pykes, but the Englishmen shotte so wholy together that they draue the Frenchmen out of the toune, and would for succors haue taken the Churche, but the Englishemen were betwene theim & the Churche, so that thei had none other remedye but to flee and many Frenchmen were slaine. Capitain Jhon de Pound, and capitain Jhon de Babage and diuers other were taken prisoners, and diuers marchauntes that were there to sell their goodes were also taken, and all their goodes brought in Frenchemennes wagons to Guysnes and on Englishman slaine but diuers were sore hurt.

The fyrst day of February the valiant knight sir Robert Jernyngh̄ and with him fifty demylaūces of the garrison of Calayce skoured the countrey to Odirsael & there toke a.C.hedde of beastes, by that doyng an askry rose through the countrey, wherby the Frenchmen gathered together to the nomber of.xij.score, and or Sir Robert & his company came to Houndyngbrige they were beset round about, so that of necessitie thei must fight, the Frenchmē set on with handgunnes, crosbowes and pykes, and for a while there was a strong encountre, but the Englishemen as menne desperate (because of the momber) fought so fiersly that they caused the Frenchmen to geue backe and slewe many of them and toke.xiij.prisoners, & in the chace they toke.vij.more which made vp.xx. Then the sayd sir Robert returned with his botie & prisoners and lost noman, but almoste all were hurt.

The.x.day of Marche the kyng hauyng a newe harnes made of his owne deuise and fashiō, suche as no armorer before that tyme had seen, thought to assaye thesame at the tilte, and appointed a Justes to serue him. On fote were appointed the lorde Marques Dorset & the Earle of Surrey, the kyng came to the one ende of the tylt, and the Duke of Suffolke to the other: then a gentleman sayd to the Duke, sir the kyng is come to the tyltes ende. I see him not sayd the Duke on my fayth, for my head piece taketh frō me my sight: with these wordes God knoweth by what chaunce, the kyng had his spere deliuered him by the Lorde the ieoperdy that ỹ kynge was in at a Justes.

Marques

Marques, the viser of his headpece beyng vp and not doune nor fastened, so that his face was clene naked. Then the gentleman sayd to the duke, sir the kyng commeth, then the duke set forward and charged his spere, and the kyng likewise vnaduisedly set toward ỹ duke: the people perceiuyng the kinges face bare, cryed hold, hold, the duke neither saw nor heard, and whether the kyng remembred that his viser was vp or no few could tell: Alas what sorow was it to the people when they saw the spleters of the dukes spere strike on the kynges hedpiece: For of a fuertie the duke strake the king on the brow right vnder the defēce of ỹ x hedpece on the very coyffe scull or bassenetpece where vnto the barbet for power and defence is charneld, to whiche coyffe or bassenet neuer armorer taketh hede, for it is euermore couered with ỹ viser, barbet & volant pece, and so that pece is so defended that it forseth of no charge: But when ỹ spere on that place lighted, it was great ieopardy of death insomuche that the face was bare, for the Dukes spere broke all to shyuers, and bare the kynges viser or barbet so farre backe by the countre bucke that all the kynges headpece was full of spleters. The Armorers for this matter were muche blamed, and so was the lord Marques for the deliuerying of the spere when his face was open, but the kyng sayd xi that none was to blame but himself, for he entended to haue sayed him selfe and his sight. The duke incontinently vnarmed him, and came to the kyng, shewyng hym the closenes of his sight, & sware that he would neuer runne against the kyng more: But yf the kynge had been a lytle hurte, the kynges seruauntes woulde haue put the Duke in ieopardy. Then the kynge called his Armorers and put all his peces together & then toke a spere and ranne. vj. courses very well, by the which all men might perceiue that he had no hurt, whiche was great ioy and comfort to all his subiectes there present.

In the ende of Februarye foure Frenche shippes chased the Fysher xxx botes of Rye to the verye shore, and when the fludde was gone, would haue taken the botes and came a lond with pikes, but the fishers threw stones, and one archer shotte and slewe a Frencheman whiche helde vp a basket and bad shote Englisheman shote, and the Englisheman shot through the basket and slewe him, and so they saued their botes, and when the fludde came, the Frenchemen sette vp their sailes, and as thei were passyng, the Englishemen of warre mette with theim and tooke two of the sayd shippes, and the other two fled.

In this yere the kynge sent the Lorde Morlay sir Wyllyam Hosy knight and doctor Lee his Almoner to Done Ferdinando archduke of xl Austrice and brother to the Emperour Charles with the order of the Garter which in the toune of Norryngberge receiued the same, where then were all the princes of Germanye assembled at a counsell or Dyet, against the bysshoppe of Rome, against whom the Germaynes put a. C. greues

The.xiij.day of Apryll one Capitain Bzeerton one of the capitaines of the auenturers at Guysnes with.xvj.tall men came to a village called Waste and there toke a bootie of beastes, by whiche takynge an alkry rose, and by chaunce certain of the garrison of Bulleyn were then abzode and by the cry of the people came where the Englishmen were, the Frenchmē wer.CC.hozsmen and with great cryes enuironed the Englishemen about, so that the Englishemen coulde make no defence. Then capitain Bzearton called to the capitain of the Frenchemen and sayd, sir I am a gētleman & this enterpzice was myne, I haue bzought these good felowes to this ieopardy, wherfoze we yelde vs al pzisoners to you, and so thei deliuered their weapons, the capitain was a gentleman and gently them receiued, then to the men of warre dzewe all the peisantz oz chozles of the countrey nye hand to the nōber of.vij.oz.viij. score, whiche desired to bye ỹ Englishmē that wer takē, the Frenchmen were content and toke money, then the Englishmen were deliuered to the vplandishe people, and the men of warre rode away.

Capitaine Bzearton murdered.

When the menne of warre wer departed the rybaudes with pykes, iauelyne, and knyues, fell on the Englishemen whiche had no weapon and them slewe all.xvij.and cutte them in pieces the moste shamefully that euer was sene.

When knowlege thereof was bzought to the capitain of Guisnes sir Jhon Gage, he sent foz the auenturers willyng theim to reuenge their capitaines death. So all the aduenturers the.xiiij.day gathered together to the nomber of.xl.archers and pykes, and by good guide the next day in the mozning they came to thesame village of Walt & there toke.xxxvij.pzisoners and moste part were at the murder of Bzearton and his company, & of the.xxxvij.they slew.xxxvj.and so they left one and caried him with them, but oz they departed they set the toune on fyer and spared nothyng, their ire was so great: the menne of warre of Fraunce costed the Englishmen, but they would not medle with them in that rage.

The murder reuenged.

When they came to Guysnes they sware the Frencheman that was left on liue to declare their message to the capitaine of Bullein, whiche was that after that day they would saue neither man, woman noz child that came to their handes foz the great crueltie that the peysantz had done to capitaine Bzearton and his company, with whiche message the Frenchmen were discontēt & sayd that the villaynes deserued to haue vengeaunce foz their crueltie.

In this yere through bookes of Emphimerydes and Pzonosticacions made and calculate by Astronomers, the people were soze affrayd foz the sayd wziters declared that this yere should be suche Eclipses in watery signes, and suche coniunction that by waters & fludes many people shoulde periche. Insomuche that many persones vitailed themselfes and went to high groundes foz feare of dzounyng, and specially one

one Bolton which was Prior of saint Bartholomewes in Smythfeld builded him an house vpō Harow of the hill, only for feare of this flud, and thether he went & made prouision for all thinges necessarye within him, for the space of two monethes: But the faythfull people put their trust and confidence onely in God. And this raine was by the wryters pronosticate to be in Februarye, wherfore when it began to raine in Februarye the people wer much afrayd, & some sayd now it beginneth, but many wisemen whiche thought that the worlde coulde not be drouned againe, contrary to Goddes promise, put their truste in him onely, but because thei thought that some great raines might fall by enclinacions of the starres, and that water milles might stande styll and not grinde, they prouided for meale, and yet God be thanked ther was not a faiter season in many yeres, & at the last the Astronomers for their excuse said that in their computacion they had mistaken and miscounted in their nomber an hundreth yeres. Bolton prior of sainct Bartholomewes

The Emperor Charles which also was enemy to the French kyng, seyng the great army that the kyng of England his confederate had in Fraunce, thought it was to him honorable to make warre also on that part of Fraūce that ioyneth to Spain, & in especially he imagined how to recouer the toune of Fountraby, whiche the Frenchmen before that tyme had gotten: wherfore he assembled a great puissaunce and made capitain the lorde Barnardine de Belasco Constable of Castyle, which with great diligence came before the toune of Fountraby whyche was strongly fortefied and the capitain therof was a Nauerois: but when the capitaine and his compaigny sawe the toune besieged with suche a puissaunce, and also that the sea was so narowly kept that they coulde not haue vitail nor succour, they determined to geue vp the toune: but yet the capitaine of a high stomacke shotte out his ordinaunce and sent his trompet to the capitain of the Spanyardes to knowe what prisoners he had of his, and for the communicacion thereof he desired abstinence of warre tyll he had communed with the counsail of the Spanish host, whiche to him was graunted. Then was communicacion for fiue dayes and nothyng ended, for the Spanyardes were haute on the one syde, and the Frenchmen proude on the other syde, but on the. vj. daye it was concluded that the toune shoulde be deliuered with ordinaunce and artillery and all the men of warre to depart wyth bagge and baggage, and so the. xxvij. daye of Februarye was the toune of Fountrabye brought againe to the handes of the Emperor, & he that was capitaine of Fountraby was afterwarde restored to his landes in Nauer by the Emperor and became his man.

The bishop of Rome called Pope Clement seyng the great warres that were this yere on all parties and in especial betwene the Emperor

& the kyng of England on the one partie against Fraunces the frēche kyng and his alyes, sent an archebishop of the realme of Naples fyrste to the French kynge, and after to the Emperor, whiche declared to the Frenche kyng the manyfolde mischiefes that ryse by warre, the great stroke of vengeaunce that God will strike for vniuste warre & specially for the death of innocentes and effusion of christen bloude, and shewed farther that the sayd Frenche kyng made daily warre on the Emperor and the kyng of England without cause, but onely because he himselfe would do no right to them nor to their subiectes.

The Frenche kyng after counsaill taken answered, my lord Legate we assure you that we make no warre, but warre is made on vs, & we stande at the defence, notwithstandyng our right is kept from vs both the duchy of Myllain and realme of Naples by the Emperor and the vsurped duke, to the whiche we haue good title, and the kynge of England warreth on vs without cause, notwithstāding that we haue geuē him and many lordes of his coūsaill diuers fayre pentions, not because we be afrayed of him, but because we woulde haue his loue and amitie, & when we perceiued that he toke part with the Emperor our mortall enemy, we withdrewe our penciōs as with right we might, & now with all his power he would conquere our good will, whiche is against reason, and we clayme nothing of him. Well sayed the ambassador, I wyll speake fyrst wyth the Emperor and after with the kyng of England, & then I will declare to you their rightes and demaundes, with whiche the Frenche kyng semed to be content.

Then the sayd ambassadour tooke his leaue and in poste came to the Emperor in Spaine, & there exhorted him to peace with many goodly reasons, affirmyng that the warre was vniust and without reasonable cause made on the Frenche kyng as the sayd kyng affirmed. Then the Emperor like a noble prince answered, that the warres were neuer of his beginnyng: For the Frenche kynge or he wyst had taken the toune of Fountraby, and also had sent an army to cōquere therealme of Nauerne, & not with this contented, reteyned the Swyches which be the Emperors subiectes and caused them to be enemies to thempyre, and he also with helde the duchy of haut Burgoyne, and the countie of Arthoys with diuers other countrys and seignories belongyng to hym: Wherfore his quarel was alway iust, and because the college of Rome should perceiue the whole cause of his warres, he deliuered to the sayd ambassador a scedule, with whiche he departed, refusynge all gyftes which the Emperor offered him, and came againe to the Frenche kyng and rehersed to him all the Emperors saiyng, but the French kyng him selfe highly excused & sayd that he might not lese that his predecessors left him, and so the byshop of Romes ambassodor toke his leaue & came into England.

After

After this Legate was departed frō the Emperors court, ther came thither an Ambassador from Portyngale, whiche highly behaued him selfe, and when he came to the Emperors speche, he proudly sayd: Sir you that are the greatest prince of Christendome ought aboue all men to do iustice and right, and to do wrong to no man, and where it is well knowen that by the labor, studye, and learnyng in Cosmography and Astronomy of vs only Portingales, the trade to the parties of Inde or Indias were fyrst sought and found, and the fyrst labor in that behalfe was ours and the great innumerable riches whiche was spent for the searchyng and findyng of thesame, was employed & spent by the kyng of Portyngale and his progenitors, by whych trauaill we haue wonne straung lādes, wherby all Christendome is greatly enriched w̄ Juels, stones, and perles and other straung commodities. How can it then be thought iust or righteous that any other persone should take from vs that cōmoditie that we haue so derely bought: Yet most puissant lorde and mightie Emperor, your subiectes daily trauaill thither and wrongfully take away our gayne, whiche neuer labored nor toke pain for the findyng or serching of thesame, wherfore of iustice you muste cōmaunde your subiectes not alonely to leue their trade thitherwarde, but also to make to vs Portyngales a sufficient recompence for the harmes that we haue susteined.

The proposicion of a Portingale.

When the Ambassador had sayed, after a lytle deliberacion the Emperor answered. The very pouertie of your countrey of Portyngale is suche, that of your selfes you be not able to liue, wherfore of necessitie you were driuen to seke liuyng, for landes of princes you were not able to purchase, and lande of lordes you were not able to conquere. Wherfore on the sea you were compelled to seke that whiche was not found: And wher you say that you haue fround lādes, I say those landes foūd you by shipwrekes of the sea beyng cast thereon before you thought of any such ground, & so sought farther for suncours in necessitie, yet they say not that you haue them wōne, but they haue wōne you. And where you would that our subiectes should not repare thither, we ascertaine you that no man shal prohibite our subiectes to saile where they lyst for their auauntage. For our subiectes may be warned no place by them w̄ whom I haue peace and amitie: for he is mine enemy and no frend that letteth my libertie: Well sayd the ambassador, and we wil let your subiectes to passe thither. Nay sayd the Emperor, we wil not trye so farre for I am able to disturbe your doynges nerer hande. But for a suertie you Portyngales be enemies to all Christendome, for to the Indyans you cary nothyng but coyne, whiche is hurt to all countreys, wherefore at this time you may depart, till you be better aduysed. After this answere geuen to the Portyngales, they offered great summes of money to the Emperor to leaue hys trade into the Indyans, but he therto in nowyse woulde agree.

The Emperors answer

The

The.xvi.yere.

N the beginnyng of thys.xvj.yere the kynge lay at hys maner of Newhall in Eſſex, and there kept the feaſte of ſainct George and hearynge that the byſhopp of Romes Ambaſſador was commyng into Englande remoued to hys Manor of Grenewyche where the ſayd Archbiſhop and legate came to hym and was highly entertained, whiche declared wiſely and eloquently the meſſage and entent of hys maſter, whyche was to make a peace and concord betwene the princes of Chriſtendome, and eſpecially betwene the Emperor, the kynge of England and the French kyng, and for that cauſe he had been with the Emperor and alſo with the Frenche kyng, whiche as he ſayd affirmed that without cauſe the kyng of England made on hym warre, conſiderynge that he to thentent to haue the more amitie and fauor of you and your nobles hath liberally geuen to you & theim honorable pencions, whiche by no dutie as he affirmeth you can nor may clayme, but of hys benuolence and bountie. Alſo he ſayeth that you clayme his croune, realme, and poſſeſſions, whiche toucheth hym hyghly, and of yours he claymeth nothyng, and therfore he thynketh of right you ought not to make him warre. Wherfore may it pleaſe your highnes to tell me your mynde and I ſhall it declare to the whole court of Rome God wyllyng and forget nothyng.

Then the kyng called to him his coũſaill & after diuers cõſultacions had, the Ambaſſador was ſent for, & there was ſhewed to him many recordes, prouyng the kynge of England to be inheritor to the realme of Fraũce by bloud & alſo ſo cõfirmed by diuers Charters in the tyme of kyng Charles the.vij. And as cõcernyng ỹ pencion, to him was ſhewed diuers Charters, that it was no pencion of frendſhip but due rent for the duches of Normãdy & Guyan & the countreys of Aniew & Maine which are the kynge of Englandes very enheritaunce. Farthermore there wer ſhewed to him diuers bondes of the ſayd French kynges for the payment for the citie of Turnay & other duties whiche he ought to the kyng of England, all whiche articles to fulfyll, the Frenche kynge hath oftentimes been required by Ambaſſadors, & yet he euer diſſẽbled & would not cõforme hymſelfe to reaſon: of all theſe thinges wer notes written & deliuered to the biſhop of Romes ambaſſador, which toke his leue of the kyng & returned in poſt accompanied but with.iij.perſones. By reaſon of ỹ cõmyng of this Ambaſſador men hoped ỹ peace ſhoulde enſue, but it ſucceded not this yere: for the third day of May the garriſon of Bullein with diuers other in the moſte ſecrete wiſe that could be came to a place within the Engliſhe pale called Sentricas & ſodainly ſtrake vp a dr̃me or drounſlade: the people hearyng this in the night were ſore abaſhed, ſome fled naked & ſome clothed, the moſt part fled to the Churche, and the Frenchemen them folowed & toke.xxj.priſoners

and then set fyer on the Churche: By this tyme was all the pale raised which thyng the Frenchmen perceiuyng left their botie and returned in all hast with their prisoners to Bullein.

In this season the lordes of Flaunders lay at the siege before Tyrwyn and were likely to haue taken it by famyne, whereof the Frenche kyng beyng aduertised assembled an armye of.xxij.M. horsemen and fotemen vnder the conduicte of the Duke of Vandosme and the lorde Pountdormy, and the Frenche kyng himselfe came doune to Amyas and there caused it to be noysed that he woulde besege the toune of x Valencyen in Henaude, where the Duke of Suffolke the last yere had left the kyng of Englandes ordinaunce. The kynge of Englande hearyng of this, sayd, that yf the Frenche kynge beseged Valencyen, he in person would go thither for to reskue his ordinaunce. The Lorde Fynes and other lordes of Flaunders whiche lay before Tyrwyn wyth ix.M.menne were aduertised of the Frenche armye, but because of the fame that ỹ host should go to Valencyen, they sent for nomore succors.

When the Frenchmen had all thynges ready, they left the waye to Valencyen and tooke the way directly to Tyrwyn. When the Lordes of Flaunders perceiued that, they were sore abashed & then they knew xi that they were disceiued, and that they were not able to abyde the puissaunce of the Frenche army. Wherefore they raysed their siege, & put thẽselfes in order of battail on ỹ Southest side of Tyrwyn: the French armye passed forward the.vj.day of May towarde Tyrwyn and made no semblaunce to fight: Howbeit some of theim skyrmished with the horsemen of Flaunders, but they at the last entered the toune, wherunto they were welcome, and the lordes of Flaunders departed sore displeased but there was no remedy. Then ranne a brute that the French army would lay sege to Guysnes: wherfore the kyng caused men & all other thynges to be put in a readynes for the spedye reskue thereof yf xii it had so chaunsed. But the Frenchemen toke a better aduice.

In this moneth of May sir Robert Jernyngham capitain of Newnam bridge cõmuned with Christopher Coo, a capitaine of diuers Englishe shippes that kept the sea, whiche then was in Calayce hauen for vitaile and sayd, capitain Coo you know how the Bulleners haue visited nere to Calayce the Englishe pale and haue burned Sentryes. If you will promise to set many of your menne a lande at the hauen of Bullein the.xix.day of Maye, I with as many as I can furnishe wyll mete with you there in baise Bulleine at the tyme and houre betwene vs appointed, to the whiche the said Christopher agreed and faithfully xiij promysed, and so prepared accordyngly euerye thyng necessarye and so sayled towarde Balleyn, Sir Robert Jernyngham sent worde of this enterprise to sir Willyam Fitzwillyam capitaine of Guysnes to know yf he would ayde any part toward this iorney, whiche sent word that he would be at the same auenture himselfe: then all the gentlemen desired him to be capitaine of that enterprise, which he thankefully and wyth heart receiued: then all the men of warre and the aduenturers & the Bayly Marke assembled together, so that when all were come together they wer. CCC. horsemen, & of the coũtrey and Marke. iij. C. and of the auenturers. C. lx. and so one & other they were. vij. C. men. All these persones mette at an houre appointed at Sandyngfelde: the night was short so that it was daye or they came nere Bullein all set in good order of battail, but thei were askried before they came nere Bullein, and so it chaunsed that Christopher Coo with his shippes whiche had winde at will was come with his. iiij. shippes before Bullein somwhat before day, the Bulleners that kept the watche him espied, & then & he manned his boates and with men and ordinaunce stretched toward the land, by that tyme was all basse Bullein in harnes ready to defend the Englishmen from londyng, but capitaine Coo did what he might, and almost all the people of Basse Bullein wer on the shore, that seynge the garrison made them ready and bent their ordinaunce. Sir Willyã Fitzwillyam hearyng the gunnes toward the hauenside knewe well ỹ Cristopher Coo was in his bulines, and so encoraged euery man to do well and marched forwarde wh asmuche spede as might be, insomuche that all the Englishemen were on the hylles before Bullein in sondrye plumpes, then issued out the horsmen of Bullein betwene the castle & & Cardons tower, the light horsmen of the Englishe part theim encountred, there was a good fight, the Frenchemen shotte with Crosbowes, and the Englishemen with long bowes, and the great ordinaunce shot terribly, the Englishemen approched the toune walles, this skyrmyshe was fierse & euer the archers ayded the horsemẽ. While the horsemen were thus skyrmishyng, the. viij. score auenturers which were hardy & valiaunt men cast themselfes about & came to basse Bullein, and there they were hardely receiued of the Frenchmẽ, yet notwithstãdyng they lost their barriers and the Englishmẽ entred, there was shotyng on all sides and a strong fight. The Frenchemen cried Bullein, & thenglishe- & & man sainct George Calayce: but at the last the Frenchmen were driuẽ backe and many slayne, & xliij. takẽ prisoners, and so they returned to their capitaine sir Willyam Fitzwillyam. All this while was Christopher Coo on lond on the sea cost and bet ỹ Frenchmen vp to the toune, and when the tide turned he with all his came agayne in safetie to their shippes. The Englishe horsemen after long fightyng tooke thre of the Frenchemen af armes and the other reculed to the toune. By thys tyme by reason of the Alarme was all the countrey of Pycardye raysed and muche people resorted to Bullein on all sydes, whyche doyng sir Willyam Fitzwillyam wisely perceiuyng, by the sounde of a trumpette cl brought all his menne together in a plumpe, and then sent them hither & thither to fette his driftes of beastes that were nere in the countrey on euery side, whiche was quickely done, for the aduenturers brought Oxen, Kyne, Horses, and many other pillages, and brent the granges

and billages,and so mette together, and wyth their botie returned in sauetie.

The Tewsday folowinge,beyng th laste day of May, sir Wyllyam Fitz William,wyth a.C.and fiftie horsemen,and the auenturers,and a hundred other persones mo,came to a place called Samer de Boys, ỹ sayd captain wisely considered,that in that place the Frenchemen had diuerse times lurked, & taken at auantage the Englishmen,wherefore he laied his horsemen,and his archers on horsebacke in a woodde, in a waite if the Frenchmen folowed the stale: then he sent furth his auen-x turers,which passed farther,then ỹ captain wold that thei shulde haue done,and sodenly they wer askryed:then on came the Frenchmen, the auenturers sware,that they would not flie,but bent them selfes to defend their enemies,which wer.iij.C.horsemen. The Frenchmẽ knew well their hardines,but yet they called them Crakers, whych by missounding,was commonly called Krekers,for a suretie these men were hardy,and full of pollicie,and very far would ieoperd,the Frenchemen sent about a valey.i.C.of the best horsemen, and.ij.hundred footmen then were ỹ Krekers betwene.ij.bẽdes of the Frẽchmẽ: sir Williã Fitz Wylliam beyng assured of the conduyt of the Frenchmen, much doubxx ted the chaunce of the auenturers, wherfore in great hast sent for hys stale of horsemen, that he had left couered: and the Frenchmen ỹ were before the Krekers,came and set on very fast,in hope of their horsemen that were gone about an hil in the valey. The Englyshmen them valiantly defended,then as the horsemen had compassed the hill, the auenturers were come on a plain: then the horsemen that were come to syr Williã Fitz William,set on the French horsemen, ther was a hard and a fierce encounter, for the Frenchmen fought sore, but at length they fled, & in the chace were taken.lvj.horsemen,and.xliij. slain one and other, & many Englishmen sore hurt and diuerse slain,thus the Krekers xxx scaped a narowe hasard.

In thesame season on the second day of maye,sir Thomas Palmer one of the Captains of the Frontiers,was ridyng to his frend,maister Jerome of Burgon,captain of Turnahan,and wyth him.xx.Englyshe men on lyght horse,and as he roade, he sodainly espyed.xxx.horsmẽ of the garrison of Tirwin and Bullein,thei wer nere together or the Englishmen espyed them:then there was no remedy,but to encounter,sir Thomas Palmer comforted hys compaignye, and then the Frenche men set on wyth great force,and truly they fought long,wythoute one hauing any auauntage of the other, but at last the Frẽchmen began to x faint, & a lytle wythdrawe themselfes, that perceyuynge the Englyshe men,set to them coragiously,and so they slew thre out of hand,and.vj. men of armes taken prisoners, & eight dymy lances, with whiche pry-soners the Englishmen returned to Guysnes, and kept not their purpose to Turnahan,for all were hurt or wounded.

In June,sir William Fitz William, captain of Guysnes,Sir Jhon

Walop,and sir Jhon Gage,secretly called to them.ix.C.men,of warre such as they trusted,and on Midsomer day,passed the lowe coũtrey of Picardy, vnto the castle of Hardinghã,or Rigsam & they caried wyth them but one pece of ordinaunce called a Curtal, this gonne they bent against the Castle, whych was well furnished with harnes, ordinaũce, and all other artillerie,and thinges nedeful, and the captaine also was a baliant and hardie gentleman. The Englishmen euer shot that pece and remoued it from place to place with great pain, and in conclusyon made a batery of the walles,so that they myght assault it,then ỹ trompet blewe to assault,and the capitain with hys compaignie stode at defence:then syr Jhon Wallop,and sir Jhon Gage wyth the auenturers or krekers entred the diche,& the archers shot at euery loupe arrowes & the Frenchmen likewyse shot quarelles: the Englishemen set vp laders to the walles,but the Frenchmen threw thẽ doune,at this assault was slain a gentlemã called Butler,and.xv. other Englishmen,but for all that,the assault was not lefte,for some climed by pykes,and some amended the ladders,and cryed againe to the assault:but sir Williã Fitz William chiefe capitain of this enterpryse, perceiued ỹ they lacked engynes and other thyngs,for the spedy assault of the castle,and not willing to lose his men without cause,caused them to stay,whyle he and other capitaynes counsayled together,& as they wer concluded once again to attempt the assault,they hearde newes ỹ two thousande horsemen,and two thousande footmen,wer at hãde to fight wyth them,thei then perceiuing that.ix.C.men beyng wery, wer no power to encoũter with foure thousand Frenchmen,they in good ordre returned to ỹ Englyshe fortresses.

Monsire de Bees Capitain of Bullein,well considered al the enterprices,that the Englishmen had done in Picardy and Fraunce, now of late:he determined to requite theim,to hys honor and fame, & for that purpose,sent for the Erle of Damartyne, the lord Pontremie, and the lorde Chastillion,whych concluded to entre into the Englysh pale,and to shewe themselfes before Calice. Wherfore they assembled all the mẽ of armes & souldioures,of the garrysons aboute,& so they wer.viij.C. good horsemen,and wyth pykes,gonnes & crossebowes.viij.C. footemen,and when all thys compaygny was assembled,Monsire de Bees as capitain of this iorney,wyth the other lordes,the fourth day of August w̃ banner displayd,came toward Calice in the eueninge: and the nert day in the morninge,by syre of the Clocke,they came to a village wythin the Englyshe pale,called Bonynghes. Then the Alarme rose through all ỹ English pale,& so came to Calice. These lordes of Fraũce sent out their forriders,to serch & ouerse the coũtrey, & then they layd an embushment of.iij.C.horsemen at thesaid toune of Bonynges and with that bend abode Monsire Pontremie,& Monsire de Bees rode to Kalkewel wyth.iij.C.horsemen,& there taryed wyth them,ỹ earle of Dammartine wyth.iij.fresh horsemen, and all the footmen with bã-

ner displaid, rode and forraged all the Countrey, of whyche thre hundred speres, thei let one. C. go at large, & kept the residue wyth them.

When the Alarme came to Calice, euery man made to horse & harnes. Then sir Robert Jernynghã wyth. lxxx. horsemen with all spede rode out of Calice to behold the compaignie of the Frenchmen. And he sent furth his lyght horsemen, which met with the skourers of ỹ Frẽch men, and because the Frenchy men semed a few in nombre, the Englyshe forriders proferred toward them, which fled toward Sandiffeld, and the Englyshmen chased after, not beyng of knowelege of the embusshexmentes, that laye at Bonynges and Kalkewel.

When sir Robert Jerninghã saw his light horsemen chace, he folowed after softly, to kepe his horse in brethe. Then sodainly the Frenchmen that were in chace returned, for some of their ayde was nere thẽ. When the Englishmen whych passed not. xvi. horse, sawe the Frenchmen returne, thei encountered wyth them mãfully, but to the Frenchmen came still mo and mo, so that the Englyshmen wer constrayned to flie another waye, to the hie lande in great ieoperdy, for the Frenchmẽ them pursued, but by the helpe of the light geldinges, the Englyshmen gat the sea side, or sea sandes beyõd Skales: then wer the Englishmen xx glad and returned, and fought wyth the Frenchmen hand to hand, for the Frenchmen behinde folowed not the chace, but only twenty horsemen, and wyth pure fyghting the Englyshmen toke one of the Frẽch horsemen, and came with him to Calice, and so were saued.

When sir Robert Jerningham sawe hys men in chace (as you haue hard) & saw that thei were in great ieoperdy, he auaunsed for their rescue all that he might, which was the sauing of the lyght horsemen, for the Frenchmeu left theim, to encountre wyth sir Robert Jernynghã, and so it was that he went so farre forward, that the Frenchmen were betwene him and Calice. And when he saw al the bendes, and embushxxx mentes breake out, he sayd to hys compaignie: sirs, S. George to borowe, lette these Frenche galantes knowe what we Englyshemen be: Sir sayed his compaigny, they shall bye vs dere. Then he marched towarde the hyghe lande: Then approched a great nomber of horsemen of Fraunce, the Englishmen theim valiauntly receiued, and manfullye defended, but euer the Frenchmen came freshe and freshe, so ỹ the Englishmen beyng wery, and oppressed with multitude, wer faine to flye: and in this chace was taken Thomas Cheiney an Archer, whose horse was tiered, and two other archers on horsebacke, one called George Kar & the other Rowlande Atkynson, ỹ thre other of the English pale, sir Robert and the remnaunt, saued themselfs the best that thei could.

When sir Robert was returned, the Frenchmen soumed their trõpet and reculed to Bulleyn, and sent worde to Calice, that they would visite thẽ oftener. Sir Robert Jernyngham remembring this chaũce thought to be reuẽged of the same, & so aduising himself, to what place he shonld repaire, he remẽbred that whensoeuer the Englishmen made any ioyney to Margyson, the Frenchmen would flie ouer the water or creke, to a high ground by boates, and there as it wer in an iſland, ſaue thẽſelfes, becauſe on that ſide thei might euer haue ſuccors, for ỹ creke or water, is beyond the toune frõ Calice. Therfore the ſayd ſir Robert cauſed fyue great boates to be caryed in wagons, and ſo he with other capitaynes of Calice and Guyſnes, to the nombre of .iij. C. fotemẽ with the Krekers, & .lx. horſemen the .xij. day of Auguſt, with bãners diſplayed toke their way to the toune of garriſon, and in the nyght the light horſemen gaue Alarme to the toune of Bullein, and toke two ſouldiers priſoners, and brought with them certain cattaill to their compaignie. x Then thenglichmen marched forward, towarde Margiſon, that ſeing the Frenchmẽ toke their boates in truſt of the water, and paſſed ouer: the Englyſhmen perceiued that, and lanched their Boates, and ſo lyke auenturers entered, and by force paſſed, and ſo mo & mo, til. C.lx. wer paſſed ouer: the countrey began to gather, ſo that the Frenchmen wer thre hundred, which fought with the Engliſhmen, and would haue letted the boates to lãd, but the archers on the other ſide draue thẽ back, and the Englyſhmen ſlew at the firſt encounter .lx. men, and toke fortie priſoners, yet the Frenchmen that fled met with newe ſuccors, & then began a new battaill, and the Frenchmen fought hardely, but at thend xx they fled, the moſt poreſt of the people, on the other ſyde of ỹ water fled to the Churche, and abode at their defence, then was there fire ſet in ỹ church, then the Frenchmen lept out of the church, to their deſtruccion for of thre hundred there was ſaued but ſixtie on lyue.

The whole power of Bullein was come doune, nere to ỹ place: but when they perceyued that it was to late, and the Englyſhemen were returned, they came no farther. This was ſir Robert Jarninghã euen with the Frenchmen, and brought a good botie, and many priſoners to Calice, which ſore greued the captain of Bullein.

The Frenchmen perceiuing, that they gat lytle at the Englyſhmẽs xxx handes, thought to take their auauntage of the Flemmynges, wherfore they aſſembled of the garriſons, of Bullein and Tirwin, v. C. fotemẽ, and thre hundred horſemen, and ſo in good ordre marched toward ſainct Omers, and thei ſent to go aforraging .i. C. fotemẽ, and as many horſemen, and the reſt kept themſelfes in a ſtale. Theſe Frenchmen came by Arkus, nighe to ſainct Omers, and forraged all the countrey, ỹ Alarme ſprang all the countrey to Turnahan, the captain of Turnahã ſent worde to ſir William Fitz William, cappytayne of Guiſnes, that the Frenchmen were abroade, whych made anſwere, that if the Frenchmẽ came nere to him, ſurely he would ſpeake with thẽ, with which anſwer xl the cappytain of Turnahã being encoraged, ſent furth. C C. Flẽminges on foote, ſtill the Frenchmẽ marched toward Turnahã, the Flemminges that were ſent from Turnahan, marched toward the waye, wher the Frenchmen ſhould come, thinking that when ỹ captayn of Guiſnes had ſet on them, that then they would haue lyen in ỹ chace at ỹ receipt

Theſayed

The sayd capitain of Guisnes valiantly marched forwarde, wyth a C. horsemen, and.iiij.C. fotemen, entending to mete w̄ the Frēchmen and sodaynly as he was passing forward, word was brought him that the erle of Damarten, with the garrisons of Mustrel and Abuile, to the nomber of.vj.C. horsemen, were comming forward toward Guisnes. This hearyng sir William Fitz Willi̅, sware that the erle shoulde not take paine to come to Guisnes, for he would mete him on the waye: by this meane he left his first enterprice, & marched toward the erle of Damartin. The Frechmen of Tirwyn, beyng therof aduertysed by a spy x called al the people together, and with their botie came on forward toward Turnahan, & sodainly they askryed the poore Fleminges, which wer sent out of ȳ castle of Turnahan, & whē they perceiued the Frēchmen comming toward them, thei turned their backes, & fled like shepe: the Frenchmen folowed a pace, and slewe the moste part of theim, for fewe escaped.

The capitayn of Guisnes came to a faire grene, fiue mile from Guisnes, and there in good ordre of battayl, tareid for the Erles comminge, whych hearing that the capitain of Guysnes, was redy to receiue him, made his returne backward, without any thing doyng: when the capixx tain knew the trueth of the erles returne, he then with al hast sped him to mete with the Frenchmen, that were comminge to Turnahan, & in the meane way he hard tidinges of the chaunce of the Fleminges, and how the Frenchmen were reculed toward Tyrwyn, whych auenture sore him displeased, but there was no remedy, wherfore he returned to Guysnes again, very sory that the Frenchmen, went away vnfought wythal. The Frenchmen litle medled after this time, wherfore lett vs now returne, & shew what warres were kept on the frōtiers, betwene Englande and Scotlande, in thys ceason.

The.xxj.day of May beyng Trinite Sondaye, v.C. Scottes in ȳ xxx morning by seueral fordes, entered into Englande, and laye couertlye by the high waye, to distresse merchauntes and merket men, that shuld passe to Berwike, that day to the fayre: for euery Trinitie sonday, ther is kept a great fayre: whych the Scottes knewe wel, and as they laye thus lurking, thei robbed many merchauntes, and toke rich prisoners, but at the last they wer perceiued, then the Alarme rose, & people begā to gather, the Scottes drew together toward Branxston, & thenglishmen them assailed, which so manfully them defended, that yf the yonge lorde of Fulbery, had not come with one.C. lyght horsemē, ȳ Scottes had gone away with their botie, but then began a sore fight, many wer hurt on both sydes, and som slayn, and at the last the Scottes fled, and in the chace ther were two hundred Scottes taken prisoners, and the residue fled and saued them selfes.

After this the.v.day of July, sir Jhon a Fenwicke, Leonard Mulgraue, & Bastard Heron, & diuerse other, gathered together.ix.C.mē, and entred into Scotland, in the countrey called the March, & robbed and spoyled al the countrey,and by chaunce thesame season,the Scottes had assembled two thousande men,to inuade Englande, and none of these knew of other, til they by auenture met together: Then begā a strong medley,for the Scottes fought valiauntly a great while,and the Englishmen them hardely assailed,and at the last by fine force, caused theim to leaue the ground and flie,and in the flight wer takē. CC. Scottes,and many slain,of the which prisoners diuerse wer gentlemē sir Raufe of Fanwycke. Leonard Mulgraue,and bastarde Herō,with xxx.other Englyshemen wel horsed, folowed so sarre the chace, ꝯ they were paste rescues of their compaignie,which perceiuing the Scottes ꝛ sodainly returned,and set on the Englishemen, which oppressed wyth multitude,were sone ouercome,and there was taken sir Raufe a Fanwicke,Leonard Mulgraue,and syxe other,and Bastarde Heron, and seuen other slain, the remnaunt by chaunce escaped:the other Englishmen with their two hundred prisoners, returned sauely into Englād: the slaiyng of the Bastard Heron,was more pleasure to the Scottes, then the taking of the two hundred was displeasure,thei hated him so.

The.viij.day of July,the lorde Maxwel of Scotlande, and sir Alexander Iorden,with banners displayd,and Scottes to the nombre of four thousand,entered into England at the Westmarches by Carleile, xx and began to burne on euerye syde: then the Englyshemen assembled on euery syde,and so they were in nombre.ij.M.men, and fiercely set on the Scottes,there was a great fyght,for the space of an houre,at ꝯ last the Englishmen brake the array of the Scottes,and them discomfited,and toke.CCC. Scottes prisoners,the Englishmen that had taken prisoners,went away wꝺ their prisoners: For Sir Alexāder Iorden,and his sonne and diuerse other were taken prysoners, & by their departyng, the compaigny of the Englyshemen was muche mynished.

The Lorde Maxwell beyng a politique man,perceiued that, & sodainly called his people together,and them encoraged,and begā a new xxx skirmysh,and recouered al the prisoners almost, & toke diuerse Englishmen prysoners, this was the chaunce of warre.

After thys iorney,in the Court of Parliament of Scotlande, was much commonyng of the warres,whiche were betwene England and Scotland: some of the nobles sayed, that Fraunce neuer dyd so muche good to Scotlande in.xx.yeres,as Scotlande had lost by Englande, in one yere,for ꝯ loue & cause of Fraūce:wherfore they thought it cōueniēt to make a perpetuall league of amitie, with ꝯ king of Englande, & to leaue the French kinges parte. Other nobles whiche had pencyons in Fraunce,declared the old amitie betwene Fraunce and Scotland, xl and how the French kyng,brought vp many gentlemen of Scotlande in his Courte,geuinge them greate luuynges, whiche the kinge of Englande would not do:thei also alleged the franches,and priuileges that the Scottes haue in Fraunce, & specially they shewed,that yf the king of Scottes shoulde breake with Fraunce, & then if it happened ꝯ kyng of Englande, to inuade Scotlande, whiche beyng wythout aide of any frend, myght wel by the power of England be conquered. After many long reasons it was thought expedient, to sue to the king of England for a truce, which was done, & a truce graunted, til S. Andrewes day.

This yere the first day of Septēber, was doctor Thomas Hanibal Maister of the Rolles, receiued into London, with erles, and bysshops, and diuerse other nobles and gentlemen, as Ambassador from Clemēt bishop of Rome, which brought wyth him a rose of golde, for a token to the kynge: the people as he passed, thought to haue sene the rose, but it x was not shewed, til he came to the kyng to Wyndsore, on the day of the Natiuitie of our Lady, on which daye, after a solempne masse songe by the Cardinall of Yorke, the saide presente was deliuered to the kynge, whiche was a tre forged with fine golde, and wrought with braūches, leaues & flowers, resemblyng Roses: this tree was set in a pot of gold, whiche had thre fete of antyke fashyon: the pot was of measure halfe a pinte, in thy vppermost Rose, was a faire Saphier loupe perced, ỹ bignes of an Acorne, the tre was of heyght halfe an English yard, and in breth it was a fote. The sayd Ambassador in deliuering the same Rose, made an oracion, declaryng the good mind, loue & fauor, that the bishop xi of Rome bare to the kynge, in token whereof he sent hym that present, which the kyng thankefully receyued, and deliuered it to him again, & so he bare it opē before the kyng, from the College to the great chāber, and there deliuered it to the Mayster of the Juell house, and so there ended his legacion.

A Rose brought frō Rome.

Before this time in the moneth of July, lord Archebalde Douglas erle of Anguishe, whych had maried the Quene of Scottes, sister to ỹ kyng of Englande, and was sent into Fraunce by the Duke of Albany, and there kept, contrary to his wyl and pleasure, and from thence hardely escaped, and came to the kyng of Englād, to hys maner of Grenexxx wiche, and there besought him of his aide & comfort, to whom the king made a gentle answer. This Erle was not in the fauor of hys wife the Quene of Scottes, wherefore she caused hym to be sent into Fraunce: some said that she loued the duke of Albany, better then hym, but what soeuer the matter was, she wrote to the Frēch king, that yf therle euer came again into Scotlande, that the French kyng should haue no pleasure in Scotlande, that she might let, so that the Erle beyng in Fraūce, was in ieoperdie of his lyfe. Wherfore secretly he fled & came into Englande, as you haue hard, and one day at the Castle of Windsore he declared that in the counsail of Fraunce, when he was there, they happe-xl ned in communication, to talke of ỹ warres that were then, betwene ỹ Emperor and the French kyng, and betwene the kyng of England and the French kyng: there was a Lorde of the counsayl, that stode vp, and sayd, it were better that one person suffered, rather then al the realme should be dayly in this mischief. Then was it asked, what he meant by hat one persone, he answered, that yf the French Quene, whiche was lame and vgly were dedde, that then wayes might be founde, that the French kyng should mary themperours sister, and to haue wyth her the Duchy of Millain, and then wyth the money of her mariage, the kyng of England should be payed, and so a peace might be concluded: to this no answer was made, but whether this were true or false, for a truth ỹ Frẽch quene was ded the.xxvj. day July, & was buried at s. Denyse.

The Duke of Burbon this sommer, made sharp war on the Frẽch kynges dominions, and dyd hygh enterprises: wherfore the kynge of Englãd sent his letters, to diuerse lordes and gẽtlemen in this season, the tenor wherof ensueth. Trustie, &c. For as muche as (our lord God be thanked) our army, vnder the leading of our cosin the duke of Burbon, hath not onely entered the realme of Fraunce, gaining and attaynyng many tounes, cities, castles and places, with the whole countrey of Prouince, wythout any resystence, of our auncient enemie the Frẽch kyng, but also goeth dayly marching, and continually doth chace, and dryue before them such men of war, as our sayed enemy hath prepared for his defence, in the resistence of our cosin the Duke of Burbon, & our sayd army. In such wyse that it is thought vndoubtedly, nowe to bee moste conuenient tyme and season, either in our persone (although the yere be somwhat past) or by a liuetenaunt, wyth a puissant army to inuade Fraunce, on the other syde, both for the recouerynig of the croune and to compell our sand enemie, to knowlege his obstinate, wylful, and erronious demeanure, wherefore we wyll and commaunde you, to be redy with such power as you be able to make, vpõ the next Proclamacion to bee made, dated the tenth day of September.

After which letters sent furth, euery man made preparacion accordyngly, and the people murmured and sayed, that it were much better that the kyng should mainteyn his warres, with his owne subiectes, & spende his treasure on them, then to trust the Duke of Burbon, beyng a straungier to spend hys money.

The king beyng at Windsore, to him came sir Anthony Fitz Herbert one of the Justices of the common place, a man of excellent lerning in ỹ law, as appereth by his workes, sir Raufe Egertõ knyght, Doctor Dẽton Deane of Lichsele, whych in the beginning of thys yere, wer sente as Commissioners into Irelande, which so wisely endeuored thẽselfes that thei reformed many iniuries done in the coũtrey, and brought diuerse of the wilde Irishe, by fayre meanes to a submission, and made by the kynges authoritie, the Erle of Kildare deputie of the lande, before whom the greate Oneele bare the sworde: and the lord Piers Butler, called Erle of Ormound, whych was deputie of Irelande, was by the sayd Commissioners, made hygh threasorer of Ireland. And whẽ they had set al thynges in good ordre, in the moneth of Septẽber they toke shyppyng, and in thesame monethe came to the kinge, which gaue thẽ hys harty thankes, for their good doynges.

In thys moneth the king sent Maister Thomas Magnus Priest, &

Roger Ratcliffe Esquier into Scotlande, for the suretie of his nephew the kyng of Scottes, for diuerse lordes of Scotland, wrote to ỹ kinge that they doubted the suretie for their kinge, because ỹ duke of Albany which was heire apparant to the realme of Scotlande, had the kynge in gouernaũce, & also they thought, he beyng a Frenchmã borne, shuld not rule their realme: wherfore thei emõgest thẽselfes, murmured sore in this matter. The Duke hearyng, that the Lordes of Scotland, had written to the kynge of Englande, and also that they reppyned & grudged at his doynges, sodainly with al the threasure that he could make,
x departed from Scotlande, and sailed into Fraunce, with which departyng the commõs were nothing sory, and sone after his departing, the Ambassadors of England, were ioyously receyued into Scotland, and there thesayd Ambassadoures taried, till Marche twelue monethe, in which tyme there were many conclusions driuen, betwene the two realmes: now let vs returne to Fraunce.

The.xxiiij. day of September, thre horsemẽ of the garrison of Bullein, whych well knew the hauen of Calice, came at a nepe tide, and passed ouer Calice hauen, by Ryse banke in the nyght, and went behind ỹ Est Wyndmill, and then tooke lande, and wente to a litle byllage called xx Middilwaye, and passed the Turne Pikes, and entred into a Whelers house and toke the man and the wyfe, and.xx.l. in money sterlyng, and went away clere wythout askrye of perceyuing of the watch of Calice and no man wyst where they were become, til the Trompet of Bullein brought worde, and demaunded the raunsome.

The last day of September, fyfty lyght horsemen of Calice, apperteignyng to sir Robert Jerningham, rode toward Bullein, and passed the water of Margison, & came to the water of Sclakes nere Bullein where sodainly thei encountered.lx. frẽchmen, of the garrison of Bullein, there was shotyng wyth long bowes & crosebowes, on euery side xxx strong was the fyght, but at the last the Frenchmen fled, the Englyshemen folowed, and toke thre lyght horsemen, and when they perceyued the Alarme on euery side, they put themselfes in array, and with their botie came to Calice.

The same daye sir Thomas Palmer, with.xl. horsemen of Guisnes encountered with ỹ captain Bertrain, leader of the horsemen of therle Dammartin, with.lx. horsemen, there was a strong fyght two houres together, but in the ende the Frenchmen fled, and the Englishemen folowed, and toke.xviij. pysoners, and.xvi. good horse, and wyth thys botie they returned to Guysnes.

xl In this busie season, the auẽturers hearing what the horsemen, on their parties had done, and in especial perceiuyng that thenglish horsemen had taken good prisoners, commoned emongest themselfes, what was to be doue, then one of their capitaynes said opẽly: sirs you se how long we haue bene here, and wages we haue none, our liuing riseth on the gaine of our enemies, and syth our beginnynge, we haue had good chaunce in all our enterpzises, God be thanked: nowe the Winter dza-weth nere, let vs now auenture to get som good botie, to make vs me-ry with, in ỹ cold wether, & yf you wyl, we shall enterpzyse a thing that I truste to vs shalbee pzofitable. Then all the compaignie cried furthe furth. Then wyth a banner of sainct George, they marched toward a byllage, liyng towarde Mustrel, hauing onely. xxb. light horsemen, to be their skourers, & they were not fully two hundzed men. This compaigny folowing their skourers, went farre on, and had gotten a faire botie, of Oxen, Kine, & other beastial, and were here at their returne & by chaunce thesame day, was the erle of Dammartin, and the captayn of Mustrel, with the power of the duke of Uandosme, goyng towarde sainct Omers to burne and destroy that coũtrey, and for that purpose thei had gathered together. xb. C. horsemẽ, and. biij. C. footmen, how be it, the footmen were a large myle behind the horsemen.

The Frenchmen on horsebacke, espyed the English horsemẽ, which perceiuing the great nomber fled, and as the said Frenchmẽ marched forward, they espyed the auenturers on foote, & made toward them: thenglishmen seing the great nomber of ỹ horsemen, studied to get som hedge or stronge place to fortifie theim, but there was no suche place in sight, and also they had no suche tyme so to do, wherefore the captayne sayed: Good felowes and brethren, we haue of long time bene called auenturers, now is the tyme come of our auenture, the Frenchmẽ wyll not raũsome vs for nothing, we be emongest thẽ so feared: if any thing saue our lyues, it must be God, and our hardines, and therfore sayd he if you se me begin to flie, slaye me out of hande. Then euery man cryed God mercie, and kneled doune and kissed the earth, and strake handes eche wyth other, in token not to depart, and then made themselfs prest to the defence.

The Frenchmen came on, on euery syde, thenglishmen shot their ar-rowes, & defended thẽ aswel as they could. The Frenchmẽ perceiuing that the Englishmen kept them selfs so close, caused diuerse of the horse men to lyght a fote, and so they dyd, & fought wyth their speres against the pikes, and shote wyth Crossebowes on euery syde. Alas, the while for while the Englyshmen had arrowes to shote, they were not brokẽ, but close wythout peryl, but when their arrowes were spent, the Englyshmen fought valiauntly, and slew many Frenchmen that lyghted on foote, but in the conclusion the horsemen entered, and killed them all fewe of them prisoners. This was thend of these compaignions, called the krekers or auenturers, which were as hardie men, as euer serued

The duke of Burbon, wyth the Marques of Picardy, in ỹ moneth of October, wyth a great puyssaunce, layed siege to the strong toune of Marcel in Prouince, and laye there a great space. The Frenche kynge reised a great armye, and sware that he would reise the siege, whereof hearynge the Duke of Burgon, sent for the Marques of Piscare, and hys other captains, and declared to them that hys intēt was, to geue ỹ French king battayl: the Marques of Piscare sayed that the Frenche kynges puissaunce was greate, and theirs smal, & sayde: although the Duke of Burbon, whych was a banished mā from hys countrey, had no other remedy to reuenge him, but by battail, yet he sayd, he would not put al the Emperors men, of the whyche he had the guide, in such a hasard, till the remnant of the Emperours power were come. Wel said ỹ Duke of Burbon, then you do not as you haue written, both to the Emperor and to the king of England, whych shalbe a reproche to your honor: Nay sayd the Marques, I wil kepe me from reproche. Then said doctor Richard Pace, Ambassador to the kyng of Englande: my lorde you haue had the king my maisters wages, I woulde be glad to heare what way you woulde take: I wol tel you said the Marques, ỹ Frēch kyng hath a great armie gone into Italy, & he him selfe followeth with another, not to come to fight w̄ vs I dare assure you: but only to take the Duches of Millain vnprouided, whiche shal do him more pleasure then he had slain all vs. Also the Emperor shal lese, more then. x. Marceles be worth, and the French kinges power shalbe more elated, that he wil not set by the Emperor, nor the kyng of England. Therfore my aduise is, to breake vp thys siege, and with all spede to preuent hym in Italy, and yf we be entered the tounes, and put municions in the same, he shal lye a colde in the feldes, and then you shal se what shal become of hym, when hys beastes dye, and his vitail spente. To thys counsail the duke & all the Capytaynes agreed, and so brake vp the siege, and wyth al hast departed into Italy, and fortified all the tounes in the Duchie of Millein and other necessaries.

The French kynge hearinge of this, wyth al hys armye passed the Mountaignies, and Cāped nere to Millain. It chaunced in this monethe of Nouember the. xiij. day aboute the toune of Calice, there fel a great mist, in which mist the Frenchmen came to a village called Kause beside Newnā brydge, & toke. xl. beastes, then ỹ Alarme was brought to Calice, whiche hearing the Marshal of Calice, called to hym sir Robert Jerninghā, & they had with them. i. C. xx. horsemen, and sent syr Anthony Browne, to tel the capitain of Guysnes, what they entended to do, but they taryed not for the company of Guysnes, but marched so far forward, ỹ they came to the water of Sclaukes, which is nere Bullein, & there they set their stale. And in the morninge betime, they sent furth a gentlemā called Richard Lambert, wyth. xx. light horsemē on swyfte geldinges, and they came by Moone light nere Bullein, & then they saw the men of Bullein & other there about, put out their beastes into the feld. Then the Englyshmen wyth great diligence brought all the beastes together, & so began to driue theim together, toward their embushement. Then the Alarme began at Bullein, and the men of war issued out of the toune, & fought wyth thenglyshmen, their horses wer

freſh,wherfore they had a great auauntage,but in cõcluſion thre Frẽch menne were ſlayne, and their horſes taken , and ſo the lyght horſemen came wyth their catail,nere to the embuſhment, and the Frenchmẽ fo= lowed,that ſeyng the Englyſhmen that kept the ſtale,came in al haſt & reſcued their light horſemen, and drawe the Frenchemen backẽ,& then made returne to their beaſtes,and as they were returnyng, they had worde brought to them,how that ſyr Wylliam Fytz William captayne of Guiſnes of his retinue , were beſiegyng a pile called the caſtle of Ca= pel,wherefore they ſped them thether in all haſte,and when they were come thether,the captain of Guyſnes them hartelye welcomed,& then they concluded to geue an aſſault to the caſtle, & ſo wyth good courage ſet on,the Frenchmen defended it very valyantly a great whyle,but at the laſt the Englyſhmen gat ouer the diches, & ſcaled the walles,but ỹ Frenchmen ſtyl them defended,till the Engliſhmen had gotten to the higheſt of the dongion,& then was there ſlaiyng a pace. For there wer liij.perſones ſlaine out of hande,in reuenginge the greate obſtinacie of the Frenchmen , and the caſtle was raſed and brent. Then ſir William Fitz William wyth hys boty , and ſir Jhon Wallop Marſhal of Calyce and ſir Jhon Jernyngham returned,he to Guiſnes,and thei to Calice The ſame day. xiiij. Burgonyons and. xiiij. Spanyardes, al horſemen of Guyſnes,came to the Church of Falſke,not farre from Durnam at high Maſſe tyme,and there drew their ſwordes,and ſo much dyd that al the men in the church, to the nomber of fyftie,yelded them ſelfes pri= ſoners,of whiche nõber they toke eyght perſones wyth them, whyche ſhuld be gages for the rẽnant, & with theſe. viij. thei came to Guiſnes.

The. xix. day of Decẽber were receyued into London , lorde Gilbert Keuet Erle of Caſtelles,ſir Robert Cockburne biſhop of Dunkell, and the Abbot of Campſkenel, Ambaſſadors from James the fyfth kyng of Scottes,by the byſhop of Lyncolne,the lorde of ſainct Jhones,and di= uerſe other nole men, and wer conueighed to their lodgynges at Tai= lers Haule.

The. xxiij. daye of December , theſayd Ambaſſadors were cõueighed to Grenewiche,accompaignied with theſayd lordes by water,& when they came to the vtter gate , they were receyued of the offycers of the houſe,& ſo paſſed throughe the haule,whych was wel furniſhed w̃ peo= ple,& ſo through the vttermoſt chamber,into the great chamber of pre= ſence,where they were receiued & welcomed,of al the princes & nobles of the realme,and within a ſhort ſpace the king came furth, and ſet him ſelf in a throne of thre ſteppes hyghe,vnder his clothe of eſtate,whyche was very rich,but his apparel was exceding rich,both of goldſmithes worke and perle & ſtone which ỹ Scottes wel auyſed , & then they wi= ſely & hũbly made their obeyſaunce,and the byſhop in good plaine latin made a ſolempne Oracion , in the which he declared, that although the realme of Scotlande and he,had often times hard the renoune & fame of him and his Courſe,both for the gyftes of grace and nature , whych

wer in his persone, yet he saied that his princely countenaūce, his louely fauor, which he hymself did se, did muche surmount the fame & name, which he hath hard of reporte. He declared further, that although fortune had hym fauored, in conqueryng of regions, and vanquishyng of battailes, yet that thyng was not so honorable to him, nor profitable to his realme, as was a good peace, whiche pleaseth bothe God and man, and for that cause he shewed, that kyng James the fifth his nephew, & felowe to the kyng of England, had sent them his Ambassadors, to entreate a peace, so that a conuenient mariage might be made, betwene x hym & the lady Mary, doughter to the kyng, whiche should be a lincke necessary, to knit together the realme of Scotlande and Englande, in perpetuall loue and amitie.

To whiche Oracion, the bishop of Londō doctor Tunstall answered and saied: that the kyng was at their desire, content to haue peace vpō reasonable condicions, and as touchynge mariage of his daughter, he would so answere theim, that thei should be contented. Then the kyng rose from his place and welcomed theim, and all the honest persones of the train, and after communicacion had, thei tooke their leaue for that tyme, and so toke their barge and came to London.

xx Before the feast of Christmas, the lorde Leonard Grey, and the lord Jhon Grey, brethrē to the Marques Dorcet, sir George Cobhā sonne to the lord Cobham, Willyam Cary, sir Jhon Dudley, Thomas Wiat, Fraunces Pointz, Fraunces Sidney, sir Antony Broune, sir Edward Seimour, Oliuer Manners, Perciual Harte, Sebastian Nudigate, and Thomas Calen Esquires of the kynges housholde, enterprised a chalenge of feactes of armes, against the feast of Christmas, wherefore they sent Windsore herault, on sainct Thomas day before Christmas, into the Quenes great chamber, the kyng being present, which herault had a coate of armes of red silke, beaten with a goodly Castle, of foure xxx Turrettes siluer, and in euery turret a faire lady, standyng gorgiously appareled: the herault after that the Trumpet had blowē, saied where the kyng our souereigne Lorde, of his bountifull goodnes, hath geuen to foure maidens of his Court, the castle of Loyaltie, to dispose at their pleasure, the saied maidens haue geuen the custodie therof, to a capitain and fiftene gentlemen with hym, whiche capitain sent furth me his Herault called Chasteau Blanche, to declare to all kynges and princes, & other gentlemen of noble corage, that the saied capitain wil nere to his Castle raise a Mount, on whiche shall stande an Unicorne, supportyng foure faire shildes.

xl The firste shilde shalbe White, and whosoeuer toucheth that shelde shalbe answered sixe courses at the Tilt, by them of the Castle, with hosting harnes and double peces.

The second shilde, Red, betokenyng the Turnay, & whosoeuer toucheth that shild, shalbe answered tenne strokes at the Turnay, with the sworde, edge and poynt abated.

The third shild yelow, signifiyng the Barriers, and he that toucheth that shilde shalbee answered twelue strokes at the Barriers, wyth the swoꝛde, edge and poynt abated.

The fourth shilde blewe, betokenyng the assaulte, with such wepons as the capitain of the Castle shal occupie, that is, Moꝛrice pike, swoꝛde, target, the poynt and edge abated.

Also thesaied capitain and his compaignie pꝛomise, to defend thesaid Castle against al commers, beeyng gentlemen of name and armes, and the assaulters to deuise, all maner of engynes foꝛ the assaultyng, edge tole, to bꝛeake the house and ground, onely except, & also that no other weapon shalbe vsed, but suche as the patron shalbe sette vp, by thesaied Unicoꝛne, and that no manne medle with fire within oꝛ without, but ỹ matches foꝛ gonnes, and euery pꝛisoner taken on either partie, to paye foꝛ his raũsom. iiij. yeardes of right sattẽ, & euery capitain. xiij. yardes.

Accoꝛdyng to this Pꝛoclamacion was the Mounte, and al thynges deuised sumpteously, with a greate craggy bꝛaunche, on which wer hãged the shildes of the armes of the capitain, and all other of the Castle. Foꝛ this enterpꝛise there was set vp, in the Title yard at Grenewiche a castle square euery waye. xx. foote, & fiftie foote on heigh, very strong and of great timber, well fastened with yꝛon, the embatelmẽtes, loupes and euery place where men shoulde entre, wer set with great rolles, & turned assone as theiwer touched, so ỹ to semynge no man could entre the towers, noꝛ embatilmẽtes. On the Noꝛth and South sides, were two greate diches. xv. foote depe, from the bꝛinke to the botome, & thei were very stepe, and betwene the diche & Castle, was set a pale, whych was rampaired with yearth so stepe & thicke, that it was not likely to begotten. On these diches were twoo dꝛawe bꝛidges, on the West side was a greate rampire oꝛ banke, very stepe without and within, and like to a bamure of a foꝛtresse, by the bamure ỹ diches wer. xxiiij. fote depe

When the strength of this castle was well beholdẽ, many made dangerous to assault it, and some sayd it could not be wonne by spoꝛte, but by ernest. The kyng mynded to haue it assaulted, and deuised engins theꝛfoꝛe, but the Carpenters wer so dull, that thei vnderstode not his entẽt and wꝛought all thyng contrary, and so foꝛ that tyme the assaulte was pꝛolonged, and all the other poyntes of the chalenge held, foꝛ ỹ moꝛow after sainct Jhon the Euangelistes daye in Chꝛistmas, came out of the castle, sixe men of armes of the castle, on hoꝛsebacke armed at al pointes with their speres ready to discharge, & so came to the ende of the Tylt, abidyng al commers. Then sodainly entered into the feld, twoo ladies on twoo palfreis, in great robes of purple damaske leadyng two anciẽt knightes, wyth beardes of siluer, in thesame apparell, and when they came befoꝛe the Quene, thei put vp a bill to her, the effect wherof was, that although youth had left them, and age was come, and would lette theim to do feactes of armes: Yet courage, desire, and good will abode with theim, and bad theim to take vpon them to bꝛeake speres, whiche they they would gladly do, yf it pleased her to geue them license. When the Quene and the ladies had seen the byll, they praised their corage, and gaue them licence.

Then the knightes threw awaie their robes, & then it was knowen that it was the kyng, and the Duke of Suffolk, whose bardes and bases were gold, embraudered with purple, siluer, and Blacke, very curiously. After them folowed the Erle of Deuonshire, the Lorde Montacute, the Lorde Roos, sir Nicholas Carewe, sir Frances Bryan, Henry Norreis, Anthony Kneuet, and fiue other, euery mā ran eight courses, x in which courses the kyng brake seuen speres. Euery man that day did well, so that the Scottes much praised the men of armes of Englande, but moste of all thei preised and marueiled at the kynges strength, for thei saw his speres wer brokē with more force, thē ỹ other speres wer.

When all the courses wer ronne, the kyng and al the other disarmed them, and went to supper, and after supper the kyng hauyng with him, the Ambassadors of Scotland, came into the Quenes chamber, where after that the Lordes, and diuerse Ladies had daunced, there came in a Maske of .xvj. all appareled in clothe of Golde, riche tynsell & crimosyn veluet, cut, slit, and tied very curiously, their buskins and shoen wer xx gold, cappes and whoddes all gold, riche and not counterfected: of this nomber the kyng and the Duke of Suffolk wer twoo, then the Maskers toke Ladies, & daunsed a greate season, & that doen was brought in wyne and spices, and the straungiers wel cherished, & after that conueighed toward their lodgyng. And as thei went thei asked a gētlemā which accompaignied theim, yf all the warre tyme the kyng & the lordes were so mery, or had suche ioyous pastyme, or kepte suche Royall housholde, or were so well appareled: for in their countrey they sayd, in tyme of warre, was nothyng but wailyng and mournyng, and also thei thought that the realme of Fraunce, is not a realme to sport with, nor xxx Maske with. The gentleman answered, that the kynge & his courte, vsed them still al the warre tyme, as thei dooe now, for thei set not by ỹ French kyng one bene. For the kyng of England maie sit in his chaire and dammage the French kyng, for the Lordes & comminaltie of England, praie for the continuance of warre, for by the warres of Fraunce they wynne, and lese not, at whiche saiyng the Scottes muche mused.

Fridaie the .xxx. day of December, therle of Castels one of the Scottishe Ambassadors toke his leaue, & departed toward Scotlande: for to common with the Counsaill of Scotland, for thynges whiche were not in their commission, and left behynd hym the Bishoppe of Dunkell, xl & the Abbot of Campskenell: some saied tharticle was, that the Scottes should forsake the French kyng, & that the kyng of Scottes should come into Englande, but whatsoeuer it was, euery man knewe it not.

The second daie of January, there was much talkyng of the assault of the Castle, and so after long debate, sir Frances Bryan, and Fraunces Poyntz, enterprised to defende the West braie of the Castle, with Pike

Target,and Swoꝛde, poynt & edge abated, againſt ſir Geoꝛge Cobham Geoꝛge Harbert, Jhon Poyntz,and Willyam Kneuet, and when thei were al armed,the Trumpettes blewe,thē toward the bꝛaie marched the foure genlemen, with pikes and ſwoꝛdes, and cried harr, harr, there was foynyng, laſchyng, & ſtrikyng,they within fought mightely and when any without clymed vp the banke, thei within bet thē doune thei within were ſometyme beten doune almoſt:but ſurely thei fought valiantly,and then they ſeaſed foꝛ a while.

Then began the aſſaulte againe, and Geoꝛge Harbert and Willyam Kneuet,helde them twoo within ſo hard,that thei could ſcant put their & heddes ouer the bꝛaye,oꝛ bulwerke. While they two thus ſtill fought, their two felowes,ſir Geoꝛge Cobham, and Jhon Poyntz, with their ſwoꝛdes digged holes in the banke to clyme vp, but oꝛ they had dooen, their twoo compaignions were fought out of bꝛethe,then ſir Fraunces Bꝛian and Frances Poyntz, fought with the other two that digged, & then on came thother two,that had bꝛethed themſelfes, thē fierce was the fight,and Jhon Poyntz gat footyng in the banke aboue, and toke holde of the pale, & fought hande to hande,with Fraunces Poyntz hys bꝛother,and euer Geoꝛge Harbert ſuſtened him,at the banke with his pike,ſir Edwarde Cobham gat the banke, & fought hardely,but at the & laſt he was ouerthꝛowen,but vp he gat again,and coꝛagiouſly gat the pale:they two within fought valiantly,but they wer ouer matched,foꝛ they that fought at ỹ pale without, by aide of their felowes gatte ouer the pale, & then was the battaill ended. I thynke that there was neuer batt aill of pleaſure,better fought then this was.

The next day after was another fight, of foure & eight whyche was ſoꝛe foughten,and at laſt the bꝛaye taken,and when the combates were diſarmed,ſodainly all the younge perſones without, thꝛewe ſtones at them within the caſtle,and they at theim, and many honeſt men whiche thꝛewe not wer hurt,and with muche peyn they without wer apeiſed, & and no man knewe how noꝛ why,this hurlyng began.

The fifth daye of January,all the knightes of the caſtle, came to the barriers to abide all men, thether came the kyng & many other loꝛdes and gentlemen, & that daye by them of the caſtle, were deliuered.lviij. gentlemen, & .lviij. battailes fought valiantly, the kyng himſelf fought coꝛagiouſly, & ſo did all ỹ other. The eight day of Febꝛuary,the gentlemen of the caſtle folowyng their chalenge,came into the felde, ready to anſwere al commers. To this turnay came the kyng,his baſe and bard wer cloth of ſiluer, and blacke veluet ruffed and not plain, & ouer that was a woꝛke of purple veluet,embꝛaudered richely with gold,cutte in & knottes oꝛ foldes faſtened, ſo that it boſſed out & frounced very ſtately to behold. After the kyng came .xix. other richely apparelld, the kyng and Sir Anthony Bꝛoune Turnaied together,and the kyng with his ſwoꝛd,poynt and edge abated,had almoſte cut his poldꝛon,his ſtrokes were ſo greate. Then euery man turnaied as his courſe came, & in any

a swoꝛde was bꝛoken, and many a good stripe geuen, and when euery man had strikē the full nomber of twelue strokes, thei wer seuered and then they disarmed.

In this mone the the Cardinal as legate, by hys power Legantyne, would haue bisited ỹ Friers Obseruauntes, but they in nowise would there in condiscende, wherefoꝛe. xix. of thesame religion, were accursed at Paules Crosse, by one of thesame religion called Frier Foꝛest. Of this Frier Foꝛest ye shall bere more here after, in the thirti yere of this Kyng.

The Obseruaunt ffriers would not obeye the Cardinall.

In this season the French kyng was in Italy, with all his nobilitie, x and to hym was Millain yelded, but because of pestilence he would not entre, but departed & laied siege to the strong toune of Pauia, whereof was capitain a valiāt Spanyard, called Antony de Leua. The frēch kynges mother beyng Regent of Fraunce, perceiuyng that ỹ kyng her soonne, with all his good Capitaines were in Italy, doubted that the kyng of Englande, in the nexte Spꝛyng tyme would inuade Fraunce. Wherfoꝛe she by the aduice of the counsaill of Fraūce, did so much with the kyng of England, that her Stuard of houshold called Jhon Jokin, had a sauecondiit to come into Englande, whiche was kept close in the house of docter Larke, a Pꝛebendary of sainct Steuens, & euery daye xx pꝛiuely spake with the Cardinal, & so secretly he remained, til the. xviij day of January, at whiche day came to London, the pꝛesident of Roan called Monsire Bꝛynyon, as an Ambassadoꝛ from Frances the French kyng, and was lodged with Jhon Jokyn: this Jhon Jokyn was kept pꝛiuie, because that no man shoulde knowe, that there was any man of Fraunce, here to sollicite any cause foꝛ the frenche kyng, whiche after grewe to greate trouble. Foꝛ he shewed hymself to straungiers, which fauoꝛed the frenche partie, and so at last it was openly knowen, to the kynges counsaill, and almoste to all men: but when the Emperoꝛs Ambassadoꝛ knewe this darke dealyng, he mused not a litle and saied, that xxx the Cardinal did dꝛiue pꝛiuie dꝛiftes, & that by his meanes onely, Jhon Jokyn was come into England, to entreate a peace in secret maner, oꝛ the kynges frendes might knowe it, and all people saied that Jhon Jokyn was but a caste away of Jeane, and had no liuyng to liue on, but of the lady Regent, and marueiled why he should be kept close, & so much cherished of the Cardinall. Foꝛ this keppyng close of this Jokyn, Englishemen wer rebuked at the Marte in Flaunders, and Bꝛabant. The Emperoꝛs Ambassadoꝛ and the bishop of Romes Ambassadoꝛ also soꝛe murmured, why this Jhon Jokyn should bee kept as a spirite in close, considꝛyng that there was open warre betwene the twoo kynges, & xl feared that the kynges counsaill should be coꝛrupt. This Jhon Jokyn was muche with the Cardinall, but neuer was seen with the kyng noꝛ his counsaill, but foꝛ all the secretnes, Monsire Pꝛatt themperoꝛs Ambassadour, knewe all the offers that he made foꝛ peace (whiche in deede wer very greate) & how he had offered pencions, to diuerse young men aboute the kyng, of the which some wer very glad, & so the noyse by re-son of suche offers ran, that a peace was likely to ensue in shorte space.

Monsire Pratt wrote of this matter, in all hast to the Emperor, in ỹ which letters he highly commended the kyng of England, for his stedfastnes; but he sayed some of ỹ kynges counsaill, loued neither the Emperour nor the kyng of England, and wrote to hym farther, all the maner of ỹ secret kepyng of Jhō Jokyn. These letters at last wer brought to the Cardinall, by what chaunce it was not openly knowen, and so he sent for Monsir Pratt, and declared to hym the matter, which answered him, that he was counsailer and Ambassador to the Emperour, and that it was his parte, to assertein ỹ Emperor of euery thyng, that was or might sound prejudicial to his maiestie, but howsoeuer that his answere was taken, he was not fauored with the Cardinall, but he sayed openly, that it was not well ment to the Emperor, to stoppe his packet with letters & to open them, & the Spanyardes saied, that ỹ Emperor sent them not into England to slepe, but to do him seruice. The byshop of Romes Ambassador wrote to his master, that peace was likely to be concluded, betwene Englande and Fraunce, and willed hym to bee the firste frende to the Frenche kynge, rather then the seconde. Of whiche writyng came harme after, as you shall heare. x

In this moneth tidynges came to the kyng, howe the Marques of Piscaire in Italy, had gotten from the Frenche kyng, a castle called the castle. s. Angell, which was a greate fortificacion, of his siege at Pauie. xx

There was in this moneth a Flemyng in Heddyng Castle, whyche came often tymes to sainct Omers, & promised thē yf they would come to Heddyng, he would deliuer the castle. Upon his worde thei of sainct Omers, gathered together seuen hundred footemen, and fiue hundred horsemen, and poynted with the spie, that the fourthe day of Februarye, thei would come thether, & when the false knaue knewe the day, he told Monsire Pontdormie, Capitain of Heddyng, which incontinent filled the castle with men of warre, and laied bussheméntes on euery side, and had laied the ordinaunce, all on the one side of the Castle, that way that the Flemynges should come. The men of warre of sainct Omers, were cōueighed by their spie, mistrustyng nothyng, to a posterne, which was litle vsed, and when there were as many in, as the Frenchmen thought sufficient, thei let fal the Portcolis: Then Monsire Pontdormie cried, slaie, slaie, then the Flemynges wist that they wer betraied, & put them selfes to fight for their liues, that seyng Monsire Pontdormie, cōmaūded to fire the ordinaunce in suche haste and fury, that the flame was so greate and fierce, that it brent thesaied Lorde Pontdormie, & .xxvij. of his compaignions all gentlemen, the trayne was so hastely fiered, that thei had no leasure to auoyde. In the fight tenne of ỹ Flemynges wer slain, & thirtie kept thēselfes so hardely together, that their liues were graunted them, & so was taken as prisoners, the remnant that entred kept ouer the castle wal, and so saued themselfes, & tolde newes to their horsmen, which wer without, which hearyng the mischaunce, returned Sundaie the fifth day of March, wer receiued into London, Monsire de Beuer lorde of Champhere, Admiral of Flaunders, & the Presi- Ambassadors of Flaūders. dent of Malynes, called Maister Jhon de la Coos, & Maister Jhon de la Gache, as Ambassadors from the lady Margaret, in the name of the Emperor, for causes of the lowe countreis, of Brabant, Flaunders, and Zelande: and on Tewesday thei wer brought to the kyng to Bridwel, whiche nobely theim entertained, & then thei shewed how themperors maiestie, had commaunded theim to obey the kyng of England, as pro-x tector and gouernor, wherfore thei & all theirs, wer at his cōmaunde-ment, & yf thei had doen other wise, & not obeyed hym as their gouernor, thei asked him mercy, thē the kyng & thei talked together secretly, and then they departed. These Ambassadors demaūded thre thinges.

First, thei demaunded the ladie Mary the kynges onely daughter, 1 to be deliuered to theim out of hande, & she to be named Empriss, & to take possession of all the lowe countreis, and to be gouernor of thesame, this article was not agreed to, for causes.

Also that all suche sommes of money, as the kyng should geue with 2 her in mariage, for a dower to be made to her, shoulde be paied inconxx tinent, this article was also denied.

Thirdly, that the kyng of England hymself, should passe the sea and 3 make warre in Fraunce, the next Sommer, to this the kynge saied he would take aduisement.

Thursday the.ix. day of Marche, at. viij. of the clocke in the mornyng there came a gentleman in poste, frō the ladye Margaret gouernesse of Flaunders, & brought letters, shewyng how that the.xxiiij. daie of February, the siege of Pauia, where the Frenche kyng had lien long, was raised by force of battaill, and the Frenche kyng hymselfe takē prisoner, xxx and how by the Duke of Burbon, the Viceroy of Naples called Mygnouale, and the Marques of Piscaire, and other of the Emperors capitaines, the whole power of Fraunce was discomfited, & how the duke of Albany with seuen thousande men, was goyng to Naples, and how the bishop of Rome was become French, against the Emperor, and had sent his cosyn in aide of the Frēch kyng, with a great power. Thesame daie the president of Roan & Jhon Jokyn, wer goyng to ỹ Court (for they had not yet spokē with the kyng) & in Holburne in their way was tidynges brought them, of the takyng of the kyng their Master, and of the losse of the feld, which hearyng this misauenture, returned to their lodgyng sorowfull, and within shorte space, returned to the Regent of xl Fraūce. It was thought surely that the kyng of England, would haue had peace with the French kyng, yf this chaunce had not happened, for all the people of Englande, grudged against Flaunders, for their euill entreatyng, in the tyme of warre, & also the kynge was displeased with theim, for enhaunsyng his coyne there, which was a cause that money was dayly conueighed out of the Realme, and many other causes ther were of grudge.

A triūph for the taking of the ffrenche kyng.

Saterdaye the.xj.daie Marche, in the citie of London for these tydynges, wer made greate fiers and triumph, & the Maior and Aldermen road about the citie with Trumpettes, and much wyne was laied in diuerse places of the citie, that euery man might drynke, and on Tower hill the Ambassadours of Rome, of Flaunders, and Uenice, had a greate banket made in a goodly tent, whych pleased theim well, and as thei returned homewarde, all the stretes were full of harnessed men & Cressettes, attendyng on the Constables, whiche they preised muche.

Sonday the.xij. of Marche, the kyng accompaignied with the Ambassadors, of Rome, of the Emperor, of Scotland, of Uenice, of Millam and Florence, road in his estate to Paules churche, and there the Cardinall sang Masse, & a.xj. prelates waited on hym in pontificalles, and after Masse was doen, the quere sang Te deum, & the mynstrelles plaied on euery side, and when all was doen, the kyng returned to Bride wel, and there kept a solempne dinner. The bishop of Scotland was muche marked this day, for whēsoeuer he came to the Court, before this time his apparell was sumpteous, his whodde was euer beluet or crimosyn Satyn: but after the takyng of the French kyng, he ware onely blacke Chamlet, by whych token men iudged his Frenche harte.

The true report of the takyng of the frēch kyng.

From the.ix.day of Marche to the.xvj.day, the kyng had no moletters, of the maner of battaill of Pauie, and that day he receiued a letter from the Duke of Burbon, by a gentleman called Gropayne: when the kyng had redde the letter, he came into the Quenes Chamber, & there the saied Gropayne declared the maner of the siege, & how well it was planted, and how themperors men entered the French campe by force, and threwe doune their bastiles, & fought with the Frenchmen, within their Campe, and tooke their kyng prisoner in the same, & many other whiche was marueil. For when the French kyng entered Italy, he had in his gard.xj.C. men, and of speres furnished twoo.M.iij.C.l. and of light horsemen eight hundred and.xx. and of footemen.lxij.M. and of these the duke of Albany had but eight thousande, so that there remayned with the Frenche kyng.xlix.M.ix.C. and fiftie men, wherof was taken.xiiij.M. and mo, beside the great riches, & the goodly ordinance which were.xij. greate Bombardes of brasse, and.xxiiij. greate Canon peces.xxiiij. double Curtalles, foure double Canon peces, two middle Canon peces, & eight other peces. After the feld was doen, the French kyng was put in the custodie of the Uiceroy of Naples, whiche muche comforted hym, and preised his valiauntnes, and praied hym to be content, for he should haue a gentle ende, thē he desired to write to his mother, whiche was to hym graunted, the very wordes wer these.

" To aduertise you of my infortunate chaunce: Nothyng is left but ỹ " honor, and the life that is saued, and because some other newes shal re-" comforte you, I haue desired to write to you this letter, the which libe" rally hath been graunted to me: besechyng you to regard ỹ extremitie of your selfe, in ensuyng your accustomed wisedome. For I hope that at length God will not forget me, to you recommendyng your litle enfantes, and myne, supplyng you to geue sauecõduite, to passe and returne from Spain, to this berar that goeth toward the Emperor, to know in what wyse I shalbe intreated, & thus right hũbly to your good grace, I haue me recõmended: This subscribed by your humble and obediẽt sonne Frances.

This season the Cardinal beyng in the kynges fauor, obteined licẽce to make a College at Oxforde, and another at Ipswyche, & because he would geue on landes to the sayd Colleges, he obteined of the bishop of Rome, license to suppresse and put doune diuerse Abbayes, Priories, & Monasteries, to the nomber of wherfore sodainly he entered by his Cõmissioners, into the saied houses, and put out the Religious, and tooke all their goodes, moueables, & scarcely gaue to the poore wretches any thyng, except it wer to the heddes of the house, & then he caused therchester to sit, and to finde the houses voyde, as relynquished, & founde the kyng founder, where other men wer founders, & with these landes he endewed with al his Colleges, which he begã so sumpteous and the scholers wer so proude, that euery persone iudged, that thende would not be good, as you shall heare, fiue yeres hereafter.

The Cardynal first begã to suppresse Abbeies.

The Erle of Castelles which was sent into Scotlande, returned into England, the.xix. daie of Marche, but because the French kyng was taken, his commission for the moste part was determined, and so he and all his compaignie toke their leaue of the kyng, & without any reward returned into Scotlande, the fourth daie of Aprill.

The Scottes returned into Scotlande.

In this monethe of Marche, the kyng sent Cutberd Tunstall Bishop of London, and sir Richard Wyngfeld, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancastre, and Knight of the Gartier, into Spain to the Emperour for greate causes concernynge the takyng of the Frenche kyng, and in especiall for warres to be made on Fraũce, on euery side. For so ỹ kyng of England and his counsaill, were agreed & determined: and thesame moneth the Ambassadors, departed again into Flaunders.

The counsail remembryng that it was determined, that the kyng in proper persone should passe the sea, they cõsidered that aboue all thynges, greate threasure and plentie of money, must nedes be had in a readines: wherefore by the Cardinall were deuised straunge Cõmissions, and sent in the ende of Marche to euery shire, and Commissioners appoynted, which wer the greatest men of euery shire: and priuie instruccions sent to them, to saie and ordre the people, and the tenor was, that the first part of euery mannes substaunce, should without delaie bee payed in money or plate, to ỹ kyng, for the furniture of his warre: wherefore the Cardinall, as chief Commissioner for London, sent for sir Wilyam Bayly knight, then Maior of the citie, and the Aldermen, and diuerse hedde Commyners, and sayd to them in maner folowyng. Your ỹ kynges welbeloued frendes & subiectes, of the citie of London, I must Cõmissions.

The proposition of the Cardynall.

Declare

declare to you, how the kyng contrary to his awne mynd and will, but compelled of verie force, is determined to entre into a new war, for the more explanacion of the truthe, you shall vnderstande, that after that Fraunces the Frenche kyng that now is, had obteigned the Croune & scepter of the realme of Fraunce, he moste humbly sued to the kyng our Master, for peace, loue, and amitie, promisyng vpon the Euangelistes, to kepe the league then concluded, and also to paie to lady Maryquene dowager of Fraunce, her due pencion and doware, to her graunted by kyng Lewes her husbande. After this he by his Ambassadors, humbly desired the citie of Turnay, which kyng Lewes before tyme had loste: & the kyng which would that the citie of Turnay, shoulde bee no cause of grudge, betwene hym & the Frenche kyng, consented that for certaine sommes of money, it should be deliuered. And farther the more to bynd amitie betwene theim, the kyng was content, that a communicacion of mariage should be had, betwene the Dolphyn of Fraunce, and the ladie Marie Princes of England, yet for to entreate more loue, familiaritie, and acquaintance, the king to his greate cost and charge passed the sea, and met in persone with the Frenche kyng, thynkyng that by reason of personall sight and actuall communication, that more stable and ferme loue should growe betwene them, thē by writyng, at which time it was & vndoubtedly thought, that there could be no more loue be knit, betwen two persones. There were couenauntes made and swore, & the kyng our Master saied to the French kyng: Brother now that you and I be this knit, I require you to kepe ferme peace, & amitie, with my nephew themperor: and also suffre not Duke Jhon of Albany, to go into Scotlande, for puttyng the young king my nephewe, in ieoperdie of his persone, wherfore if you loue me, in especiall kepe these two articles: if you obserue these articles, and al other couenauntes betwene vs agreed, I assure you there had neuer prince a surer frende, then you shall haue of me. Then the French kyng laied his hand in myne (said the Cardinall) & and sware by the othe of a kyng, he would obserue & kepe fermely, these poyntes with many mo, and after the kynges were departed, and that the Emperoure was come to the kyng to Calice: the French kyng sent Monsir dela Roche baron with letters, declaryng that he was in perfecte league and amitie with the Emperor, and this not withstandyng, he within lesse space then halfe a yere, sent Robert de la Marche, to inuade the Emperors lande, & made warre in Nauerre & other places. The kyng our Master hearyng this, of his mere charitie sent me, and other nobles with a greate trayne to Calice, to knowe by whom ỹ war began, for he promised to be enemie to hym that brake first. To which & place came from the Frenche kyng, his Chanceller, and Monsire de la Palice, and many other noble men. And from the Emperor came his Chanceller, and the lord Cheuers, and there in open counsaill, the Emperors Ambassadors, did shewe the French kynges letters, signed and sealed, by the which he enforced and began the warre: to which poynte

the Frenche Ambassadours could not answere. What should I saie, the warre was open on bothe parties, I sent to the French kyng Ambassadors, to entreate peace, but in nowise he would consēt, wherfore I with my compaignie returned. In ỹ meane season (although I doubted nothyng, the Frenche kynges faithe toward our Maister) yet for a more suertie, I obteigned a saueconduit for the English Merchauntes, that thei should go to Burdaux, and vpon suertie of that oure Merchantes passed, yet he contrary to his saueconduit, toke ỹ Merchantes goodes, & put their bodies in prison, whiche the Turke woulde not haue doen.

The kyng sent gentely to him, his herault Clarenseux, desiryng him to redresse all these enormities, and to paie him his sommes of money, due to hym and to the Quene his sister, for her dower, which to do he refused and denied, whiche thynges you knowe, ỹ kyng of his honor might not suffre. Wherfore mightely he hath these three yeres, kept warre cōtinually bothe on lande and sea, and inuaded Fraunce with two armies royall, and bet their tounes, castles, & fortresses, destroyed the people, and passed the water of Somme, and proffered battaill to the Frenchmen, in their awne countrey, and hath brought the countrey, in such penury and wretchednes, that in many yeres it wyll not be recouered.

And the more to hurt & damage the Frenche kyng, the kyng hath in wages the Duke of Burbon, whiche was the greatest strengthe on the Frenche part: by whose power and aide of other, which had great sommes of money, of the kyng our Master, the Frenche kyng in persone is now taken, and all his nobles in effect, before Pauia, and kept as prisoner to the Emperor and the kyng our Master, & that for great reason: for our Master sent sir Gregory de Cassado his Ambassador, to the Viceroy of Naples, and to the Duke of Burbon, & the Marques of Pescaire, with a hundred thousand Crounes, so that thei would fight with the Frenche kyng: For the which money they assented, and so gaue battaill, in the which they slewe. xij. thousand men, and drouned. vij. thousande, and. xiij. thousande taken prisoners, & now sithe God hath geuen vs victory, the kyng remēbryng the saiyng of the Poet that saieth: It is more mastery to vse victorie gotten, then to get, thynketh it necessarie now in all hast, to make an armie royall, and he in person to passe the seas, & to recouer his right inheritance, bothe of the Croune of Fraūce as of Normandie, Guyen, Gascone, Aniowe & Mayne, the writynges whereof cōprehendyng the very title, you maie se here present yf ye list, but I doubt not but you knowe them wel inough. And now I aske you this questiō, wheter that you thynke it cōuenient, that the kyng should passe with an armie or not, for the kyng will do by thauise of his subiectes: to the whych many sayed yea, yea.

Wel saied the Cardinal, thē must he be made able to go like a prince, which cannot without your aides, & for to shewe you what the Archebishoppe of Cantorbury and I, which bee primates of the realme haue doen, we haue geuen of our landes, and al landes apperteignyng to the churche the third parte, and the tempozall lozdes, haue geuē of landes and goodes, the sixt parte, and to ieopard their bodies in pain and trauaill, and now sithe they which shall auēture their lifes, doth prefer the sixt part, what should thei geue which abide at home? For soth I thinke that halfe your substaunce were to litle, not meanyng that the kyng so asketh. For he demaundeth onely no more, of fiftie.l. the sixt part, & so vpon euery.l. aboue fiftie.l. to what some soeuer it amounte to, the sixt part that is.iij.s.iiij.d. of the.l. and from.xx.l. to fiftie pounde, & so vpward.v.s. and.viij.d. of the pounde, & from.xx. pounde to.xx.s.xij.d. of the pounde, and this to be leuied accordyng to the first baluacion, as x appereth by your awne baluacion, whiche is but a small matter, to the thing that is meant. Thē they beyng astonied, at last ỹ one said, my lord sithe the last baluacion, diuerse Merchantes be decaied, by the seas, & suertiship, and other waies, so that baluaciō cannot bee had. Then answered the Cardinal, sers, speake not to breake that thyng that is concluded, for some shall not paie the tenth parte, & some more, it wer better that some should suffre indigence, thē the kyng at this tyme should lacke, and therefore beware and resist not, nor ruffill not in this case, for it maie fortune to cost some their heddes. But I will speke to the kyng, to bee good to you, so that yf he go not ouer the sea in persone, then you xx shall haue your money redeliuered, but firste let the money bee gathered, and laie it where you wyll, & yf the kyng nede it not, you maie take it agayn.

The Cardinalles threatenynges.

When the Cardinall had thus perswaded the Maior, & hys brethrē and other hedde Cominers, they toke their leaue, & euery day after by the space of fortenight, he sent for a certain nomber of Compyners, and tolde theim like tale, but some spake suche woordes to him, & some goyng from hym, that they were sent to ward.

The saiyng of ỹ clergie.

Now were Commissioners sent to the clergie, for the fourth part of their landes and moueables, and in euery assembly the priestes answexxx red, that thei would pay nothyng, except it wer graunted by Conuocacion, other wise not: for thei saied that neuer kyng of England, did aske any mannes goodes, but by an ordre of the lawe, and this Commission is not by the ordre of the lawe: wherfore they saied, that the Cardinall and all the doers thereof, were enemies to the kyng, and to the commō wealthe. This infamie was spoken in preachynges, and euery where.

The grudge of the cōmō people.

When this matter was opened through Englande, howe the great men toke it it was maruel, the poore cursted, ỹ riche repugned, the light wittes railed, but in conclusion, all people cursted the Cardinal, and his coadherentes as subuersor of the Lawes and lybertye of Englande. xl For thei saied, yf men should geue their goodes by a Commission, then wer it worse then the taxes of Fraunce, and so England should be bond and not free.

It happened at Redyng in Barkeshire, that the Cōmissioners satte for this money to be graunted, and the people in no wise would consent to the sixt parte: but of their awne mere mynde, for the loue they bare too the kyng, they graunted the twelueth parte, that is xx.d. of the pounde, the commissioners hearing this, sated they would sende to the Cardinal, desiryng hym to be content with this offre, and so the Lorde Lisle wrote the letter, so that sir Richard Weston would beare it, the whiche letter at the request of the gentelmen of the coũtrey, the said sir Richard toke vpõ him to cary, & roade to the Cardinall: whiche therewith was sore greued and said, but because that the lorde Lisle wrote, that the matter was but communed of, and not concluded, it should cost the lorde Lisle his hedde x and his landes should be sould to paie the kyng the values, that by hym and you folyshe commissioners he had lost, and all your liues at the kynges will: these wordes sore astonied sir Richard Westõ, but he said litle.

to

Then the Cardinall wrote letters, to all commissioners of the Realme that they should kepe their first instrucciõ, and in no wise to swarue one iote, vpon paine of their liues, and euery man to be valued, according to the valuacion taken in the.xiiii.yere. This laste poynte sore touched the citie of London, for the Cardinall in the.xiiii. yere, sent one Doctor Tunes his secret Chapelein, to the Chapter house of Paules, promysyng to the Londoners, that whatsoeuer they valued themselfes at, that no man xx should knowe it, but the kyng, the Cardinall, and he, vpon whiche promesse, many persones for their more credite, and to be the higher estemed valued theimselfes at a greater substaunce then they were worthe: thynkyng neuer to lende or paie by that confession, for the loane and the subsidie were paied, accordyng as men were sessed, and not by Master Tunes boke, whẽ men valued thẽselfes, not knowing what should succede.

Now in this tyme was that subtile valuacion, laied to their charge, which when they perceiued, they murmured muche and said, they would paie nothyng, except the kynges lawes, vnder whiche they were borne, so determined it: But this notwithstanding, cõmissioners went out to euery xxx shire, for the leuie of the said money, but for al that could be perswaded, saied, lied, and flattered, the demaunde could not bee assented to, saiyng, that they that sent furthe suche Commissioners, were subuerters of the lawe, and worthy to be punished as traitours. So that in all the realme were billes set vp, in all places: Some billes said, that the kyng had not paied that he borowed: Some saied that the Subsedy amounted treble, more then he had bestowed: Other saied whatsoeuer was graunted, no good came of it: And other saied that the Cardinall, sent al the money to Rome, thus was the mutteryng through all the realme, with curses and weppynges, that pitie it was to beholde. The mutteryng of the people. f xl Duryng this season that the Commissioners sat, and that the byshop of London, and other the kynges Ambassadours, were abidyng wynd to saile into Spaine to the Emperor (as you haue hard rehersed) Monsire Pratt, the Emperours Ambassadour, whiche was sore angrie for Jhon Jokyns commyng into Englande, as you haue heard before, departed priuely out of the Realme of Englande, the nyne daie of Aprill, without speakyng with the kyng, or the Cardinall, and so muche did by saueconduite, that he passed throughe Fraunce in poste, and came to the Emperour, before the Ambassadours of Englande came thether, and whether it was by his report or otherwise, the accustomed fauour that the Emperour and his counsail shewed to the Englishemen, began then to decaie, and to shewe themselfes vnkynde to the English nacion, without cause, as you shall here after perceiue.

The icoperdy the kyng was in.

In this yere the kyng folowyng of his hauke, lept ouer a diche beside Hychyn, with a polle and the polle brake, so that if one Edmond Mody, a foteman, had not lept into the water, & lift vp his hed, whiche was fast in the clay, he had bene droned: but God of his goodnes preserued him.

This yere at Whitsontyde, died Thomas Duke of Norffolke, and was honourably buried at Thetford in Suffolke.

¶ The. xvii. yere.

The. xvii. yer.

In the beginnyng of this. xvii. yere, the Commissioners in all shires sate, for the leuie of the sixt parte of euery mannes goodes, but the burden was so greuous, that it was denied, and the commõs in euery place were so moued, that it was like to haue growen to a rebellion. When this mischief was shewed to the kyng, he saied that he neuer knewe of that demaunde, and therefore with greate diligence, he sent his letters to the citie of Londõ, and to al other places, in the which the kyng gently wrote, that he would demaunde no some certain, but suche as his louyng subiectes would graunte to hym of their good myndes, toward the maintenaunce of his warres: wherfore the Cardinall, the twentie and sixt date of Aprill, sent for the Maior of London, the Aldermen and counsaill of the same, with the moste substanciall persones, of the common counsaill, and when they were come to his place at Westminster, he saied: the kyng our soueraigne lorde, moste graciously considereth the greate loue, zeale, and obedience, whiche you beare vnto hym, and where like louing subiectes, without any grudge or agaynsaie, of your louyng myndes you haue graunted the sixt parte, of all your goodes and substaunce, frely to bee paied, accordyng to the firste valuacion, the whiche louyng graunte and good mynde, he so kyndly accepted, that it was maruell to se. But I my selfe do cõsider the great losses, and other charges that daily hath, & doth to you growe, and that notwithstanding, any losse or charge that happeneth to you, yet you neuer withstode nor againsaied, any of the kynges demaundes or Commissions, as it appereth now of late, of whiche dooynges, I haue highly the kyng enformed, for the which he gaue you hartie thankes. Then I kneled doune to his grace, shewyng hym both your good myndes to warde hym, and also the charges, that you continually susteyn, the whiche at my desire and peticion, was content to call in, and abrogate thesame commission, & where he by reason of your awne graũtes, might haue demaunded thesaied somme as a verie debte, yet he is content to release and pardon the same, and wil nothyng take of you, but of your beneuolence: wherfore take here with you the kynges letter, and let it be redde to the commons, and I doubte not but you will gladly do, as louyng subiectes should do.

Here note, that if the Cardinall had not said, that the kyng had released and pardoned the first demaunde, the citezens would haue answered the Cardinal, that they neuer made no suche graunt, and for a surete no more they did not: and so they helde their peace, & departed toward London, sore grudgyng at the lyng of the Cardinal, and openly saiyng that he was the very cause, and occasiō of this demaunde, and would plucke the peoples hartes from the kyng.

The. xxviii. daie of Aprill, in the common counsaill of the cytie, was redde the kynges letter, according to the effect aboue rehersed, wherfore the citezens sent foure Aldermen, and. xii. Cominers to Hampton courte to geue thankes to the lorde Cardinall, whiche for busines as was saied could not speake with hym, wherfore they returned not content. Then euery Alderman assembled his ward, in their places accustomed, & gently moued them of a beneuolence, to be graunted to the kyng, the which they openly denied, saiyng, that they had pated inough before, with many euill wordes. The common counsaill.

The, viii. daie of Maie, the Cardinall agayn sent for the Maior and his brethren, whiche shewed thē what they had done: then saied the Cardinall, you haue no suche commission to examyne any man, I am youre Commissioner, I will examyne you one by one my selfe, and then I shall knowe the good will that you beare to your prince, for I will aske of you a beneuolence in his name. Then was it answered to the Cardinall, by a counsailer of the citie, that by the lawe there might no suche beneuolence be asked, nor men so examined, for it was contrary to the statute made in the first yere of kyng Rychard the thirde, also some persones commyng before your grace, maie for feare graunte that, that all dates of their lyfe they shall repent, and some to wynne your fauour, wil graunt more then they bee able to paie of their awne, and so ronne in other mennes debtes, so that by dredfull gladnes, and fearefull boldnes, men shall not be masters of themselfes, but as menne distraied, shall graunte that that their wifes and children shall sore rewe. The Cardinall hard this saiyng bety paciently, and answered: Sir I maruell that you speake of Rychard the third, whiche was a vsurper and a murtherer of his awne nephewes: then of so euill a man, how can the actes be good, make no suche allegacions, his actes be not honorable. And it please your grace said the counsailer, although he did euill, yet in his tyme were many good actes made not by hym onely, but by the consent of the body of the whole Realme, whiche is the parliament. Then sir Willyam Bayly lorde Maior, kneled doune and besought his grace, that sithe it was enacted, by the common Counsaill of London, that euery Alderman should sit in his awne ward, for a beneuolence to be graunted, which he perceiued to be against the lawe, that thesame acte by thesame common counsall, might be reuoked and no otherwise: well saied the Cardinall, I am content. But now will I entre into the kynges Commission: You Maior, and you Master Aldermen, what will you geue? my lorde saied the Maior, I praie you pardon me, for if I shoulde entre into any graunt, it might fortune to cost me my life: your life saied the Cardinall, that is a marueilous worde, for your will toward the kyng, will the citezens put you in ieopertie of your life, that were straunge: For if they would that waie, then must the kyng come with strong power them to oppresse, wherfore speake no more such wordes, and with that he studied a litle and saied: My lorde Mayor, let you & your citezens, if you be greued with any thyng, in this demaunde, humbly and after a good fashiō come to me, and I shall so entreate you that you shalbe content, and no displeasure arise, & so I praie you shew your neighbours, and so the Maior for that daie departed.

The Maior did wysely not to assent to graunt to any thyng, for although he and the Aldermen had assented, the common counsaill would neuer haue assented. So on the next morowe, it was declared to the commen coūsaill, that their act that was made that euery Alderman should sit for a beneuolence to be graunted, was against a statute lawe: wherevpon thesaid act was anulled: and then was it declared, that euery man should come to the Cardinal, and to graunt priuily what he would, with this saiyng the citezens wer sore greued, then the Maior gentely shewed them, how he durst warrant, that they should bee entreated gentely, and exhorted theim to go thether when they were sent for, whiche saiyng nothyng pleased theim: and then in a furie they would haue had Rychard Gresham, and Jhon Hewster Mercers, and Richarde Gibson Seriant at armes and Merchant Tailor, bantshed out of the common counsaill, and so without answere made, what they would do, they departed home.

In thesame season through all the realme, this demaunde was vtterly denied, so that the Commissioners could bryng nothyng to passe, and yet they assaied bothe by faire waies and foule: some spake faire and flattered, other spake cruell and threatened, and yet could not bryng theyr purpose aboute. For in Kent the lorde Cobham was commissioner, and handled men roughly, and by reason one Jhō Skudder answered hym clubbishly, he sent hym to the Towre of London: For whiche doyng the people muttered, and grudged against the lorde Cobham, and saied expresly, that they would paie no money, and then they began to accōpt the loanes and subsidies graunted, so that thei rekened the kynges Tresure innumerable, for they accompted that the kyng had takē of this realme, twentie fiftenes, sithe the.xiiii. yere of his reigne, and in this grudge, they euill entreated sir Thomas Bullein at Maidestone.

In Essex the people would not assemble before the commissioners in no houses, but in open places: and in Huntyngdon shire, diuerse resisted the commissioners to sit, whiche were apprehended, and sent to the Flete.

Insurrection in Suffolke.

The Duke of Suffolke, sat in Suffolke this season in lyke commission,

tion,and by gentle handlyng,he caused the riche Clothiers to assent, and graunt to geue the sixt parte, and when they came home to their houses, they called to them their Spinners,Carders,Fullers,Weuers, & other artificers, whiche were wont to be set a worke and haue their liuynges by clothe makyng,and saied, sirs we be not able to set you a worke, our goodes be taken from vs, wherefore trust to your selfes, and not to vs, for otherwise it wil not be.Then began women to wepe,and young folkes to crie, and men that had no worke, began to rage, and assemble themselfes in compaignies. The Duke of Suffolke hearyng of this, x commaunded the Constables, that euery mannes harnes, should be taken from them,but when that was knowen,then the rumor waxed more greater,and the people railed openly on the Duke of Suffolke, and lyr Robert Durie,and threatened them with death, and the Cardinall also, and so of Lanam, Sudbery, Hadley, and other Townes aboute, there rebelled foure thousande men, and put themselfes in harnes, and rang the belles Alarme,and began togather still more:then the duke of Suffolke perceiuyng this, began to raise men, but he could get but a small nombre, and they that came to hym saied, that they would defende hym from all perilles,if he hurte not their neighbours, but against their neyxr ghbours they would not fight: Yet the Gentelmen that were with the duke did so muche,that all the bridges were broken, so that their assemble was some what letted.

The duke of Norffolke,high Threasorer and Admirall of Englande hearyng of this,gathered a greate power in Norffolke, & came towarde the commons, and of his noblenes he sent to the cõmons, to knowe their intent,whiche answered:that they would liue and die in the kynges causes,and to the kyng to be obedient: When the duke wist that,he came to thé,and then all spake at once,so that he wist not what they meant.Then he asked who was their Capitain,and bad that he should speake: then a xxx well aged manne of fiftie yeres and aboue, asked licence of the Duke to speake,which graunted with good will.My lorde saied this man,whose name was Jhon Grene, sythe you aske who is our capitain, for soth hys name is Pouertie, for he and his cosyn Necessitie, hath brought vs too m. Lep. this doyng, for all these persones and many mo, whiche I would were not here, lyue not of our selfes,but all we lyue, by the substanciall occupiers of this countrey,and yet they geue vs so litle wages,for our worksi manship,that scarcely we be able to liue, and thus in penurie we passe the tyme,we, our wifes and childré,and if they by whom we liue, be brought in that case, that they of their litle, cannot helpe vs to earne our liuyng, then must we perisshe,and die myserably.I speke this my lorde,the cloth makers haue put all these people,and a farre greater nomber frõ worke the husbande men haue put away their seruauntes,and geuen vp housholde,they say,the kyng asketh so much,that thei be not able to do as thei haue done before this tyme, & then of necessitie, must we dye wretchedly: wherfore my lorde,now accordyng to your wisedom, consider our necessitie.

sitie? The Duke was sory to heare their complaint, and well he knewe that it was true: then he saied, neighbours, seuer your selues a sonder, let euery man departe to his home, and chose furthe foure, that shall answer for the remnant, and on my honor I wil sende to the kyng, and make hũble intercession for your pardon, whiche I trust to obtein, so that you wil depart, then all they aunswered they would, and so they departed home.

At the twoo dukes requestes, commissioners of great authoritie were sent to theim, then the Duke of Norffolke, and the Duke of Suffolke came to Bery, & thether came many people of the countrey, in their shirtes, and halters about their neckes, mekely desiryng pardon for their offences: the Dukes so wysely handeled themselfes, that the commõs were appeised, & in especiall one Master Jermyn, toke muche pain in tidyng and goyng, betwene the lordes and commons: then the demaunde of money ceased in all the realme, for well it was perceiued, that the commons would none paie.

After this, the twoo dukes came to London, and brought with theim the chief capitaines of the rebelliõ, which were put in the Flete, and then the kyng came to Westminster, to the Cardinals place: Whereupon this matter, he assembled a great counsaill, and openly he said, that his mind was neuer, to aske any thyng of his commons, whiche might sounde too his dishonour, or to the breche of his lawes, wherfore he would know of whom it was long, that the commissions were so straight, to demaunde the syxt parte of euery mannes substaunce: The Cardinall excused hymself and said, that when it was moued in counsaill, how to make the kyng ryche, the Kynges Counsaill, and especially the Judges sated, he might lawfully demaunde any some by Commission, and that by the assent of the whole Counsaill it was done, and toke God to witnes, that he neuer maligned nor desired, the hynderaunce of the commons, but lyke a true counsailer, deuised to enriche the kyng: And the spirituall men saie, that it standeth with Goddes lawe, for Joseph caused the kyng of Egypte, to take the fift parte of euery mannes goodes, but because euery manne laieth the burden from hym, I am content to take it on me, and to endure the fame and noyes of the people, for my good will toward the kyng, and comfort of you my lordes, and other the kinges counsailers, but the eternall God knoweth all. Well said the kyng, some haue enformed me that my realme was neuer so riche, and that there should neuer trouble haue risen of that demaunde, and that men would paie at the first request, but now I fynde all contrary, then euery man helde his peace.

The foure wordes of ỹ kyng

The excuse of the Cardinal.

The kyng was sore moued, that his subiectes were thus stirred, and also he was enformed of the deniall, that the spirituall men had made, and of their saiynges, wherefore he thought it touched hys honoure, that his counsaill should attempt, suche a doubtful matter in his naine, and to bee denied bothe of the spiritualtie and temporaltie, for although some graunted for feare, before the commissioners, yet when they wer departed, they denied it again. Then the kyng sated I will no more of this trouble:

trouble: Let letters bee sent to all shyres, that this matter maie no moze bee spoken of, I will pardon all theim, that haue denied the demaunde, openly oz secretly: Then all the Lozdes kneled doune, and hartely thanked the kyng. Then letters were sent to all commissioners to ceasse, with instruccions how to declare the kynges pardon. In whiche declaracion, was shewed, that the Cardinal neuer assented, to the first demaunde, and in the instruccions was compzehended, that the lozdes and the Judges, and other of the kynges counsaill, diuised thesame demaunde, and that the Cardinall folowed the mynd of the whole counsaill, these two poyntes were contrary one to another, whiche were well marked. And farther the instruccions were, that at the humble peticiõ, and supplicacion of the Cardinall, thesaied greate sommes, whiche were demaunded, by the kynges aucthozitie royall, were clerely pardoned and remitted, wherfoze the Commissioners willed the people to pzate foz the Cardinal: but the people toke all this foz a mocke, and saied God saue the kyng, foz the Cardinal is knowen wel inough, the commons would heare no pzayse spokẽ of the Cardinall, they hated hym so muche.

The pardon of the greate demaunde.

The.xix. daie of Maie, the Cardinall sent foz the Maioz and his bzethzen, and certain commiuers, and made the Maioz to sit doune by hym, and then declared, that where the kyng was determined, in pzoper persõ to passe the sea into Fraunce, foz whiche cause he asked of the Cytezens of London, and his other subiectes, an aide toward his charges, to whiche requeste (he saied) that the Londoners were at al tymes confozmable lyke louing subiectes, but sythe the kyng consydereth, the greate fall of the Frenche kyng, whiche is yet pzysoner, and that dayly he hath suite made to hym foz peace, greatly to his honoz and pzofite, foz I truste that all his ryght and title, shalbe to hym deliuered, which thyng once agreed I truste you shall haue peace, and therefoze at my humble requeste, the kyng hath pardoned you, of all the sommes of money, that of you were demaunded: and if his grace had not passed the seas, although the money had bene gathered, surely it should haue bene restozed again, and cõsequently the kyng thanketh you as hartely, as any pzynce may thanke his subiectes: and foz asmuche as peace, is not yet concluded, I counsaill you to shewe your selfes, enemies to the Frenchmen, and to say that your bodie and goodes at his will and pleasure, so that youre louyng myndes towardes hym, maie to the Frenchmen appere, you wot well what I meane saied the Cardinall. Then the Maioz and his compaignie kneled doune, and most hartely thanked the kyng and hym and so departed. The next daie, all this was rehersed to the cõmon counsaill, whyche humbly thanked the kyng foz the pardon: but two thynges them soze displeased, one was that the Cardinall bad theim saie, they were the kynges body and goodes, they saied that they vsed no dissimulacion, foz they would not saie they were the kynges, but they thought and were the kynges in deede, and not in saiyng: the seconde was, that the Cardinall excused hymselfe, that he was ignozant of the first commission: foz al they knew and were pzèsent, when he himself made to them the first mocion, & whatsoeuer was saied by the recozder, in his excuse, was taken as a cloke foz the rain, & a dissimulacion oz a mocke. Foz wisemen perceiued all the handelyng of the matter: after the kyng had pardoned euery offendour.

The. xix daie of Maie the lozdes sat in the Starre chamber, and thes ther were brought one Deuereux, a gentelman of Huntingdō shire (whi che would not suffre the commissioners to sit, as you haue hard) & Ihon Scudder of Kent, these twoo were brought from the towze, bare foote in their shirtes thzough Londō, to the Starre chamber, and there the Cardinall shewed them their offences, with terrible woozdes: and after that he shewed the kynges mercie, extended to them and declared their pardon, and so they were deliuered.

The mozowe after beyng the. xxx. daie, were the chief of the rebelles of Suffolke, brought to the Starre chamber barre, and there the kynges counsaill learned, laied soze to theim their offence, but the Cardinall declared foz thē the kynges pardon: then the kynges Attozney, asked suertie foz their good abezyng, they answered that they could finde none, thē saied the Cardinall I will be one, because you be my countrey men, and my lozde of Nozffolke will be another, and so they were discharged, and had money to bzyng them home: Now here is an ende of this commissiō, but not an ende of inward grudge and hatered, that the commons bare to the Cardinall, and to all gentelmen, whiche vehemently let furth that commission and demaunde.

In this troubelous season, the vplandischemen of Germany, called the bowzes, rose in a greate nomber, almoste an hundzed thousande, and rebelled against the pzinces of Germany, of whiche a great nomber were slain and destroied.

In Apzill last past, the Tyndale men, with the aide of the Scottes, to the nōber of eight hundred, did daily greate robories in Englande. Foz to repzesse this nest of theues were sent, sir Rychard Bulmer, and sir Cristopher Dacres, with a greate compaignie of Englischemen, and to them xxx diuerse men came, and submitted themselfes, but the great theues kept them in the mountaignes of Cheuiot, and daily skirmished with thenglischemen, and could not sone be taken: but after long lyng abzode, they scuered and many of them were taken.

In this very season the Frenchemen, kept a greate nomber of men of warre, at Bullein and there aboute, and the. v. daie of Maie foure hundzed hozsemen, embushed themselfes in the Fozest of Guysnes, and the same daie. lxxx. hozsemen of the Crewe of Guysnes, roade furthe seekyng auentures, the Frenchemen let theim passe, till they had theim at auauntage then they issued out and cried, kill, kill, then Englischemen them vaxx liauntly defended, almoste twoo houres, but at the last the Frenchemen, oppzessed theim with multitude, and brake their arraye, and slewe fiftie of them, the remnant saued themselfes: this chaunce was nothyng pleasant to the Englishe capitaines. But the Frenchemen were so surmounxxi ted ted by this iourney, that the. xx. daie of Maie, the men of warre of all the garrisons in Picardy, assembled together, and came within the English pale to Aunderne, and so to Calice: the Frenchmen were of suche nombre that all the Englishe pale was spred ouer: At Balyngham the Frenchemen drawe awaie the catell: the Englishmen thought themselfes to weke to encounter with them, whiche were the whole strengthe of all Picardy. And so on the Assension daie, there came to Newnam bridge, three hundred horsemen, and there set a stale, but with ordinaunce they were made to go backe. Then came foure hundred Frenchemen to the Turne pike, and they had gotten all the cattell together. The bend of sir Robert Jernyngham, seyng the Frenchemen so nere Calice, set forward not past ix. horsemen, and they fiersly set on the Frenchemen, whiche fledde, and they chased them, and reskued all the catell, that the Frenchemen had taken, and with greate difficultie, brought them to the Marshe beside Calice.

The. xxviii. daie of Maie. v. C. horsemen and. xvi. C. footemen, came to a village called Froyton, within the Englishe pale, and many auentured ouer the Water to haue taken all the cattell in the Marryshes, of Hamnes, Guysnes, and Calice, whiche were of greate nomber, but the Frenchemen that made the auenture in the night, were askried and slain all saue two. Then the Frenchemen returned in a great furie, and sware that they would once robbe the Marrisses or els they would dye for it, and so returned to Bullein, whether were come of newe, fiue. C. horsmen called Stradiats, whiche fortified well the Frenche parties, in so muche that they passed in nomber fiue tymes the Englishemen.

You haue hard before, how the Cardinall suppressed many monasteries, of the whiche one was called Beggam in Sussex, the whiche was verie commodious to the countrey: but so befell the case, that a riotus compaignie, disguised and vnknowen, with painted faces and visures, came to thesame Monasterie, and brought with them the Chanons, and put them in their place again, and promised theim that whensoeuer they rang the bell, that they would come with a great power, and defende the. This doyng came to the eare of the kynges counsaill, whiche caused the Chanons to be taken, and they confessed the capitaines, whiche were emprisoned and sore punyshed. Riot at Beggam.

The Cardinall aboute this season, by his power Legantyne, sent a Chappelein of his, called Doctor Jhon Allein, a man of more learnyng then vertue, or good conscience, to visite all places religious: this priest roade in his goune of veluet, with a greate trayne, and was receiued into euery Religion with Procession, as though the legate had bene there, and toke suche greate sommes for his visitacion, that the religious sore were greued, and murmured muche against it, and in especiall, for they were charged with greate sommes of money to the kyng, and now thys sodayn visitacion or †predacion, cleane shaued them. The commō people spake muche againit this, and also they saied, that the Cardinall by Visitacions, makyng of Abbottes, probates of testamentes, grauntyng of faculties, licenses, and other pollynges in his courtes legantines, had made his threasoze egall with the kynges, & yet euery yere he sent greate sommes to Rome: this was their communication, euer against the Cardinall, and his high aucthozitie, & the spirituall men moste disdained it.

You shall vnderstande, the kyng in his freshe youth, was in the cheynes of loue, with a faire damosell called Elizabeth Blunt, daughter to sir Jhon Blunt knyght, whiche damosell in syngyng, daunsyng, and in all goodly pastymes, exceded all other, by the whiche goodly pastymes, she wan the kynges harte: and she again shewed hym suche fauour, that by hym she bare a goodly manne childe, of beautie like to the father and x mother. This child was wel brought vp, like a Pzinces child, and when he was .vi. yere of age, the kyng made hym knight, and called hym lozde Henry fitz Roy, and on Sondaie beyng the .xviii. daie of June, at the manoz oz place of Bzideweli, thesaied Lozde ledde by twoo Erles, was created Erle of Nothyngham, and then he was brought backe again by thesaied twoo Erles: then the Dukes of Nozffolke and Suffolke, led hym into the great chamber again, and the kyng created hym, Duke of Richemond & Somerset: and thesame daie was the lozde Henry Courtenay Erle of Deuonshire, and colyn germayn to the kyng, was created Marques of Excester, and the lozde Henzy Bzandon, sonne to the Duke xx of Suffolke and the Frenche Quene the kynges sister, a childe of twoo yere old, was created Erle of Lincolne, and sir Thomas Manners lozde Roos, was created Erle of Rutlande, and sir Henry Clifford, was created Erle of Cumberlande, and the lozde Fitz Water sir Robert Radclif was created Viscount Fitz Water, and sir Thomas Bullein, treasozer of the kynges housholo, was created Viscount Rochefozde, and at those creacions, were kept greate feastes and disguisynges.

The creacion of the duke of Rychemond.

After this the Cardinall toke vpon hym, as the kynges chief counsailer, to se a refozmacion in the ozdze of the kynges houlholde, wherin he made certayn ozdinaunces. He also made all newe officers in the house xxx of the Duke of Richemond, whiche was then newly begon: Also at that tyme he ozdeined a counsail, and stablished an other housholo, foz the ladie Mary, then beyng Pzynces of the realme, so that all thyng that was done, was done by hym, and without his assent, nothyng was done: He toke so muche vpon hym, and made the kyng beleue, that all thynges should be to his honoz, and that he neded not to take any pain, so that to hym was the charge of all thynges committed, at the whiche wisemenne becked, and light men laughed, thynkyng great foly in his high pzesũpcion. And at this tyme, thesaied Cardinall gaue to the kyng, the lease of the Manoz of Hampton Court, whiche he had of the lease of the lozde of xl Sainct Jhones, and on whiche he had done greate coste. Therefoze the kyng of his gentle nature, licensed hym to lie in his Manoz of Richmõd at his pleasure, and so he late there at certain tymes: but when the common people, and in especiall suche, as had bene kyng Henry the seuẽthes seruauntes, sawe the Cardinall kepe house in the Manoz royal of Richmond mond, which kyng Henry the seuenth, so hyghly esteemed it, was a maruel to here, how they grudged and said, Is a Bochers dogge lye in the manor of Richemond: These with many approbrious wordes, were spoken a-gainst the Cardinal, whose pride was so high that he nothing regarded, and yet was he hated of moste men.

In this season the Frenche kynges mother, Regent of Fraunce, and the thre estates of the realme, assembled together, cõcernyng the estate of their realme: First, they sent a solempne Ambassador to themperour, with articles (as they thought reasonable) for ỹ deliueraũce of the Frẽch king x and also for a peace, they sent also a messenger to the kyng of Englande, for a sauecondutte for an Ambassadour, to be sent into Englande, for a treatie of peace, whiche to the messenger, was graunted and deliuered.

Then came ouer as Ambassadour from Fraunce, Jhon Jokyn now called Monsire de Vaux, whiche as you haue hard in the last yere, was kept secret in Master Larkes house, and when he came into Englande, he was welcomed of the Cardinall, and there betwene theim were suche communicacions, that at the sute of the saied Jhon Jokyn, a truce was concluded, from the.xiii. date of July for fortie daies, betwene England and Fraunce, bothe in the sea and beyonde the sea. Full well wist Jhon xx Jokyn, what he meant, when he desired peace for fortie daies, for in that season the Pikardes, might haue a quiet haruest, to cary in their Corne, whiche they should not haue, if the garnisõs of Calice and guysnes: and other within the Englishe pale, had not bene restreined from warre, and also the Fishermen of Depe, Bullein, and Traport, had quiete fishyng, by this truce, for the naule of England, was come home to harborough, this truce greued the men of warre on both parties, it was so sodain that they wist not well what to do.

When the Flemynges hard tell of truce, and that they were not com-prehended in the same, they began to rayle and said, that the kyng of Enxxx glande, had not done truly with thẽ, to take a truce without their know-lege: the Englishemen answered, that they had no Ambassadour in En-gland, and if that they had had any, they should haue bene made priuie, but the kyng would sende theim no worde of his affaires, if they would not sende to knowe, for he ought their master, nor yet them suche seruice.

The Frenchemen in this season, enterprised to enter into Flaunders, by Newe dike, but they were manfully defended by the Flemynges, and because the Frenchemen passed by the Englyshe pale, and had nothyng done to them, the Flemynges were sore displeased, with the Englishmen of Calice.

xl In the latter ende of July came into Englande, Monsire Bryond chief President of Roan, and was brought to the Cardinalles presence, at the Manor of Richemond, and when his Commission was shewed, it was doubted whether the auctoritie wer sufficiẽt, because the kyng his Master was prisoner in Spain: but then he shewed auctoritie, geuen to the Lady Regent, and certain nobles of the realme of Fraunce, by the

Frenche

Frenche kyng in open Parliament, before his goyng into Italy for all thynges that did or myght concerne his Realme, duryng his absence. When the commission was thought reasonable, then was reherſed to the Frencheimen their doublenes, their vnſtedfaſtnes, and how they had behaued theimſelfes toward the kyng of England: then they aunſwered if we haue offended, you haue vs punished, for you haue brent our tounes, ſlayn our people, deſtroyed our countrey, ſo that you haue brought the lowe parties, to a long miſerie without recouery, and therfore ſithe we be the leſers for our offence, yet we ſue for peace, leaſt we be more punished. After long conſultacion, they offered many offers: firſte, to pay all ſuche ſomes of money as were due, both for the yerely tribute, and alſo for the citie of Tournay, and the Frenche Quenes dowar, and farther to recompence the kyng of Englande his expences done in the warres.

Duryng this treatie, woorde was brought to the kyng of Englande, that there was a truce ſodainly concluded, betwene the realme of Fraũce and the ladie Margaret, Duches of Sauoy, and Gouernour of Flaunders and the lowe countreis, for the ſpace of. v. monethes, ſo that no entercourſe ſhould be betwene them for marchantes, but by ſaueconduite, and that this Proclamacion was proclaimed at ſainct Omers, the firſte daie of Auguſt, wherupon the kyng was contented, that a peace ſhould bee taken from the. xiiii. daie of Auguſt, to the firſte daie of December, whiche was proclaimed in London: and by this truce euery Engliſhmã without ſaueconduite, might paſſe into Fraunce, & thei likewiſe into Englande. When this truce was proclaimed, the people murmured & ſaid, now hath the Frenchemen gotten their fiſhyng quietly, and if they had bene kept from that, they had bene vndone, and ſo with faire wordes thei helpe themſelfes, whiche if we haue warre again, ſhall hurte vs, for this Herryng ſhall vitaill their tounes the next yere. This the common people talked, but it was to no purpoſe.

Ambaſſadors into Dẽmark

This yere the kyng ſent Doctor Henry Standiſhe, Byſhop of ſainct Aſſe, and ſir Jhõ Baker knight into the realme of Denmarke, to comen and entreate with the nobles of the Countrey for the reduccion of kyng Criſtierne, to his realme, Croune, and dignitie, but all that could be ſaid or perſwaded, could not bryng the Danes to any reſon, they hated hym ſo for his greate crueltie, and in eſpeciall for the greate tiranny that he committed at Stokeholme in Swethen, where he deſired a greate nomber of his nobles to a banket, and after the bãket, ſtrake of their heddes. When the Ambaſſadours of Englande ſawe that they could not bryng hym in agayn: they then began to require, that his ſonne might haue the croune and dominion, whiche neuer them offended, and was of progeny borne of lady Iſabell, ſiſter to the Emperour Charles the. v. which alſo made great labour and inſtaunce for the ſame: but the Danes anſwered they would none of his procreacion, for they ſaid, the ſonne would folow the father, or els at the leaſt he would reuenge his fathers wrong, and ſo with this aunſwere they departed.

So

So muche did the Ambassadors of Fraunce, bothe by offers and entreatyes, that the king of England and his counsail, did condiscende to a peace, and the more sonet because thei sawe yf warre should continue, money must be demaunded of the cõmons, whiche had leuer rebell then pay any more money, as you haue hard in the last yere. Whẽ peace was concluded, then were Proclamacions of thesame, sent to euery citee and good toune, and the.viii.daye of September, thys peace was proclaymed solemply with a Trompet through the citee of London, the effecte wherof was, that vpon humble suite and large profers, made by the lady Regent of Fraunce, & the three estates of thesame, a peace, league, & amitie was concluded, betwene bothe the kynges of England & Fraũce, and their countreys and subiectes, so that the subiectes of either realme mate lawfully passe and repasse, into the others realme and dominions, to bye and sell frankely and frely, without let or interruption, and that this league in no wyse, was a breche of the league taken with the Emperor and the lady Margaret, gouernesse of Flaunders in no point, but that thesaied Emperour and lady Margaret, and all other the kynges old and auncient confederates and alies, wer comprehended in thesame, and for due restitucion to be made to the Frẽchmen, there was appoynted the reuerẽde father, Cutberd bishop of Lõdon, and for restitucion to be made to the Englishmẽ, was appoynted the chief Presidẽt of Roan.

And on the.xi.daie of September, was a truce proclamed in Spain, in the toune of Vale Dolito, betwene themperor and the Frenche kyng, from that daie to the ende of December next ensuyng, at which time the Emperor had not seen the Frenche kyng, whiche was conueighed by sea out of Italy into Spain, to a Castle called Madrill, and there remaygned: and shortly after fell sore sicke, and was in greate ieoperdy, for the whiche the Frẽchmen cared litle, for thei saied that if he died, thei should paye no raunsome, and then their realme shoulde be quiet.

This peace betwene Englãd and Fraunce, nothing pleased the Flemynges, wherefore when they had dronke well, thei spake largely, and bosted how they had victailed the English armies, and found them cartes and cariages, and thought it not kyndly doen, to refuse them as old frendes & make peace wyth old enemies, but they did not considre what money the Englishemen left in their countrey, nor how the Frenchmen for dred of the Englishemen, would not inuade Flaunders, so that thei lyued quietly, all this they considered not.

In thesame moneth this peace was proclamed, in Paris, Liõs, Roan and Amias: by this peace the kyng of Englande, should receiue at certain dates.xx.hundred thousande Crounes, whiche then was foure hundred thousand pound sterlyng, of the whiche one paiment of fiftie thousande pounde was paied in hande. After this peace taken, all the men of warre, that were aboute the retinue of Calice, Hammes, and Guysnes, wer called home, and the shippes brought into the hauens, and many a Kreker wist not how to lyue.

In the moneth of October wer sent into Fraunce, sir Willyam Fitz-Willyam Threasorer of the kynges house, and docter Taylor, as Ambassadors from the kyng of England, & wer receiued through Fraunce very honorably, and by long iorneis at the last, came to the citie of Liõs the .xxiiii. daie of Nouember where to them wer presented, Wine Fishe, Flesshe, and Ware, and thei wer visited with diuerse noble men. And on the .xxvi. daie they wer conueighed to the Courte by twoo Erles, and at the gate receiued with two Cardinalles, and so brought to the lady regent, whiche with muche honor them receiued, and then they delyuered the kynges letters, whiche she tooke in great reuerence, and so with her counsail, departed into her priuie chamber, and there taried almost two houres and then came out again, to whom Docter Tailor made an eloquent Oracion in Latin, of the commodities of peace, and declared that the kyng his Master for very loue, and not for no dred nor nede did cõdiscend to peace. To whom the bishop of Besanson, Chauncellor to the Lady Regent made answere, and that doen, the Ambassadors were feasted, and serued with mẽ of greate estate, and after that thei wer conueighed to their lodgynges.

The league sworne.

And on Sondaie next ensuyng, the Ambassadors wer conueighed to the Courte, and from thence the lady Regent and all the Court, rode solemply to the Cathedrall churche of Lions, and there a Cardinall sang a solempne Masse, and after that Masse was dooen, the Lady Regent toke the twoo Ambassadors, the one on the right hande, and the other on the left hande, and so went vp to the high aultar, and there she layed her hande on the Canon and Crucifix of the Masse boke, and there sware to obserue, fulfill, and kepe, all the articles and agrementes, concluded in the league and treatie of peace, by her commissioners. And whẽ this was doen, the bishop of Bisanson made an eloquent sermon, takyng for his antitheme. Quis est homo qui vult vitam, diligit dies videre bonos, Inquire pacem. &c. In this sermon he muche praised the kyng of Englãde, whiche assented to peace and lauded the Cardinall, whom he called the Legate of God, for counsailyng hym to peace: for now was Fraũce free, and all hostilitie ceased, and when this sermon was doen, Te deum was song, and then the Trumpettes blewe, and all other instrumentes Musicall, and then the Lady Regent, with all her trayne returned to the palace, & there were the Ambassadors highly feasted, and then sir Willyam Fitz William toke his leaue, and came shortly into Englande, leauyng behynde hym Doctor Tayler, whiche taried there till the Frenche kyng was deliuered.

When the articles of peace, wer knowen to themperor and his counsaill, full well wist they that the kyng of Englande now would be frend to the French kyng, wherefore he and his subiectes, shewed themselfes more straunge and vnkynde to the Englishemen, then they had been accustomed. In somuche that the Englishe merchauntes, put vp a supplicacion to the Emperor, shewyng hym how their goodes were taken, by letters of Marke, their shippes restrained, newe impositions taken of them, theim,and moste of all thei complained,that by an ācte made in Spain called Premetica whiche ozdeineth that euery cloth,should bee of a certain nombet of thzedes,the clothes of Englande there could not bee solde,to the great hynderaunce of the Englishe Marchauntes:Foz the clothiers of England,knowe not the nombet appoynted by the statute,and when thei make cloth,thei knowe not to what countrey that cloth shalbe sold, of these thynges the Englishe Marchauntes desired a redzesse.

At a daie appoynted the Englishmen had an answere deliuered them in wzityng,conteignyng certain articles.The firste if any wzonges bee x dooen vnto you,our Justice is open in euery place.The second, as touchyng letters of Marke,we will be auysed by our counsaill. The third, as touchyng your shippes, we frely graunt that you shal haue our frēd ship liberally,so that with your awne shippes and goodes,you maie go at youre pleasure,passyng oz makyng abode. And as touchyng customes,oz Jmposicions of newe:The accident maie cause vs so to doo,but that shalbee in suspence.And finally as touchyng our Premetica, made by the lozdes of our counsaill,and by vs affirmed,wee will not bzeake,but wee will suffre to the intēt that you Englishe Merchauntes,maie bzing true & well made clothe, foz the whiche you shal bee the better welcome:
xx this was the very answere that the Englishe Marchauntes had, of the Emperoz and his counsaill.

Jn this Wynter was greate death in London, wherefoze the Terme was adiozned,& the king foz to eschew the plague, kept his Christmas at Eltham with a small nomber, foz no manne might come thether, but suche as wer appoynted by name:this Christmas in the kynges house, was called the still Christmas.But the Cardinall in this season,laye at the Manoz of Richemond,and there kept open housholde,to lozdes,ladies,and all other that would come,with plaies and disguisyng in most royall maner:whiche soze greued the people,and in especiall the kynges xxx seruauntes,to se hym kepe an open Court,and the kyng a secret Court.

The Cardinal came to Eltham the.viii.daie of Januarp, and taried there till the.xxii.daie.Jn whiche season the Cardinall, and other of the kynges coūsaill,sat foz a direccion to be taken in the kynges house,and first it was considered,that the greate nombet of the yomen of the gard were very chargeable,and that there were many officers farre striken in age whiche had seruauntes in the Courte, and so the kyng was serued with their seruauntes, and not with his awne seruauntes, whiche was thought not conuenient.Wherfoze first the officers seruauntes,wer put out of the Courte, and many old officers were put to liue in their coun-xl treys,but the kyng of his bountie enhaunsed their liuynges, foz he that had three pound wages,had sixe pound annuitie,without attendaunce, and he that had.xl.s.had foure pound, and so euery man after the rate, and young men were put in their romes . Then was there .lxiiii. of the gard whiche had.xii.d.the daie checked,put out of that wages,and they had.vi.d.a daie vnchecked,and should dwell in their countries & come not at the court, til thei wer sent for, except it wer for suites: in the which the Cardinall promised thē, to be their helper: Alas what sorowe, & what lamentacion was made, when al these persones should depart the court Some saied that poore seruauntes wer vndoen and must steale: Some saied that thei wer found of the reuercions of the officers seruice, so that for them was nothyng more set out at the dresser, and it was greate charitie to fynde them. Other saied that the yomen of the gard, whiche were put out, wer now not able to fynde themselfes and their horse, to doo the kyng seruice. Other sayed, that now they would polle and pill in their countreys, & oppresse the poore people, thus euery man had his saiyng. x

At this season the Cardinall made many ordinances, concernyng the kynges house, whiche bee at this daye called the statutes of Eltham, the whiche some saied wer more profitable then honorable.

This monethe of January was a peace concluded, betwene the realmes of Englande and Scotlande, for three yeres and sixe monethes, of the whiche the Scottes wer very glad, and especially the borderers, for they wer sore hurt by this warre.

This yere the kyng on Shrouetewesdaie, kept a solempne Justes at his Manour of Grenewiche, he hymself and .xi. wer on the one part, and the Marques of Excester with .xi. were on the other parte: the kynges xi barde and base and all his bende, wer of cloth of gold and siluer, richely embraudered, with a mannes harte in a presse, with flames about it, and in letters were written, Declare Ie nose, in Englishe, Declare I dare not, the Marques and his bend wer in Grene Veluet, & crimosin sattin embrodered with hartes burnyng, and ouer euery harte a Ladies hand commyng out of a cloude, holdyng a garden warter pot, which dropped siluer droppes on the harte: At this Justes was many a spere broken, and by chaunce of shiueryng of the spere, sir Frances Brian lost one of his yes. After these Justes, the king made to the Quene, and lordes and ladies a costly banket, and did seruice to the Quene and ladies hymself. xx

Sir Frances Brīā lost one of his yes.

In the monethe of Februarye the .xi. daye beyng Sondaie, the Cardinall with greate pompe came to the Cathedrall Churche of Paules, on whom Bishoppes, Abbottes, and a great nomber of doctors, gaue their attendaunce, and there he sat in pontificalibus, vnder his cloth of estate of riche clothe of Golde: and there one Frier Barnes a Frier Augustyne bare a fagot, for certain poyntes of heresie, as the Bishoppes saied: and twoo Merchauntes of the Stilierd bare fagottes, for eatyng flesshe on a Fridaie, and ther the bishop of Rochester Doctor Fisher, made a sermon, reprouyng Martin Luthers opinīō, a Frier of Germany, whyche wrote against the power of the Bishoppe of Rome, and in his sermon he xl spake so muche honor of the Pope and his Cardinalles, and of their dignitie and prehemynence, that he forgat to speake any thyng of the Gospell, whiche he toke in hand to declare, which sermō was muche praised of the Cardinall and bishoppes, wherfore the Cardinall gaue to all the people his benediccion, and then departed.

The abiuracion of docter Barnes, of whom ye shal heare more in the .xxxii. yere of this kyng.

All

All this yere was continuall suite made to the Emperor and his cou-sail, by the Lady Regent of Fraunce, and al the realme there, for the de-liueraunce of Fraunces the Frēche king, and after many communications whiche toke none effect, was sent into Spain of Ambassade, the noble lady Margaret, late duches of Alaunson, sister to the French kyng, with a greate compaignie of nobles and honorable personages. Them-peror Charles met thesaied lady in the Market place of the cite of Toleto, and her right hartely welcomed, and after that the Duches and her compaignie, had refused to agree to certain articles, whiche the Frenche x kyng had offered hymself, thesaied Duches had license of the Emperor, to go to Madrill, where the Frenche kyng was kepte as prisoner, and there to knowe his mynd. When she was there, she & other deuised suche a waie that the Frenche kyng should haue scaped, and poste horses wer laied euery where: this was not so secrete, but the Emperor was thereof enformed, and toke certain Frenchemen, whiche confessed how all thyn-ges should haue been brought to passe. The Duches of Alaunson heatyng that this priuitie was opened, on post horses with all spede returned into Fraunce, leuyng the whole matter at large.

Lady Margaret Duches of Alaunson deuysed wayes for the Frēch kig to escape

But for all this the lordes of Fraunce, ceased not daily to sue, for the xx deliueraunce of their souereigne lorde, and at last to the Emperor was deliuered a boke for the Frenche kynges deliueraunce, for the Emperor saied he would nothyng demaund of hym, for hauyng hym he had more then he could geue hym. Then the Frenche kyng and his counsail, offered a boke conteignyng many articles to the Emperoure: and when the Emperor had well vnderstande the contentes of thesame, he saied to the Frenche Ambassadors, is this the full will and agrement of your Master, they answered yea: wel saied the Emperor, if this be his awne offre, I truste that he will kepe it. Then the emperor thought best to bryng the Frenche kyng to more libertie, and to visite hym hymself, whiche he had xxx not doen but in the tyme of his sickenes. Where the.xiiii. date of February, the Emperor accompaignied with the greate Constable of Fraūce, the Duke of Enphantaso, the Duke of Ciuill, the Duke of Nasso, the Duke of Aluoy, the Duke of Albertkirke, the Duke of Medena, the Duke of Massedonia, the Marques of Aguler, the Marques Villafrā ca, the Marques of Sturgus, the Erle of Barselona, the Erle of Boni-uent, the erle of Jeniuer, the Erle of Selenas, the Erle of Arrowsse, the Erle of Saluator, and.xii. Bishoppes, and a greate nomber of nobles, came to the castle of Madrill, to whom was the Frenche kyng brought with a noble repaire, to whom the Emperor made lo reuerence, and de-xl clared to hym how all victories, consist in the hande of God, and where greate debate, warre, and strief, had long continued betwene thē, he said it was the very hādy worke of God, to deliuer hym to captiuitie, so that by his restraint of libertie, a generall peace should be cōcluded through all Christendome, and now sithe you haue offered vs reasonable condi-cions, we entendyng not your punishement, nor restraint of your libertie haue gently receiued your offers, signed with your awne hande, whiche all your nobles shall heare redde.

1. In primis, the Frenche kyng sware to kepe peace, bothe by land and by water with the Emperor and his subiectes, of all landes, territories, or dominions, be longyng to the Emperor or the Empire.

2. Item, the saied Frenche kyng clerely renounced, all the right, title, or interest whiche he had or pretended, to the realme of Napels, or the kyngdome of Scicile.

3. Item, the saied Frenche kyng clerely renounced his right and title, to the Duchie of Millain, and the Countie of Ast.

4. Item, the same kyng surrendered into the emperors handes the whole Duchie of Burgoyn, the Countie Charoloys, with all castles and lordshippes apperteinyng to the same, with al maner of soucreigntie, apperteignyng to the croune of Fraunce by reason of the same. x

5. Item, the saied kyng surrendered & relased, all the soucreigntie whiche he claimed of the Counties of Flaunders and Arthoys, and thother lowe countreys, so that they from thence furthe should neuer sue to any Parliament of Fraunce by appele, or resorte, the Counties of Guysnes, Arde, and Bullonoys alwaye except.

6. Ite, he released all the right & title, that he had to the citee of Tournay and Turnesyns, and to the tounes of Hedyng and Arras, with all Castles and dominions apperteignyng to the same with the title of the souereigntie and resort of the same, to the Parliamentes of Fraunce. xx

Aod. 162. 116

7. Item, he sware and promysed, neuer to helpe nor aide the Lorde Dalybrethe, called the kyng of Nauerr by couyn or other wise, against themperor or his heires nor successors.

8. Item, that he nor none other by his assent, should maintein, aide or cõfort Charles Duke or Geldres, nor maintein sir Robert de la Marche, by no meanes against the Emperor or his countreys, or dominions.

9. Item, he promised at his awne costes and charges, to finde fiue hundred men of armes, and tenne thousande footemen, to do the Emperour seruice, whensoeuer that he toke his iorney toward Rome, for the obteignyng of his croune and scepter Imperiall, and to paie their wages for fyre monethes. xxx

10. Ite, he promised to be enemie to all persones, whiche would go about or entend in any wyse, to let or disturbe the saied iorney to Rome.

11. Item, he promised to discharge the Emperor against the king of Englande, for the somme of twoo hundred thousande Crounes whiche he ought then to the kyng of Englande, and to deliuer the Emperor a sure acquitaunce for the same, whiche amounteth in starlyng money .xl. M.l. xl

12. Item, he released all the pencions, whiche he claimed of the realmes of Napels & Scicile, whiche was yerely a hundred thousand dukattes.

13. Item, for the surer performaunce of all these articles, it was agreed that the Frenche kyng should at his departyng, deliuer into the Emperors handes, the Dolphin of Vien, and Henry Duke of Orleaunce, his twoo

twoo elder sonnes, which should remain in Spain, till that all these articles wer perfourmed: and if after he came into his realme, the three estates of Fraunce, would not condiscend and agree to these articles, which he had offered & sworne, then he should shortly come again into Spain, and yeld hymself prisoner again, and his children then to be redeliuered into Fraunce.

Item, for the more fortification of this concorde, and for the more a- 14 mitie to be had betwene the twoo princes and their realmes, the Emperor offered in mariage to the Frenche kyng, the noble princes lady Elix nor late Quene of Portyngall, with a greate dowar, and offered to hym with her in mariage three faire lordeshippes, called Inslames, Waconoyes, and Barsur, the whiche the Frenche kyng ioyfully accepted: But this offre was condicionally, so that the whole agrement toke effecte, or els not. Some saied as you heard before that the Frenche Quene was poysoned for this intent: but euill tongues neuer saied well. To al these articles and many mo, the Frenche kyng swate before the Emperor, and all his nobles the.xiiii. date of Febzuary.

In the tyme of this entreatie came into Spayne, Charles Duke of Burbon whiche appelled the Frenche kyng, that he contrary to al right xv and Justice, had procured and imagened, the death and destruccion of thesaied Duke without any cause, but onely to possede his soueraignecties and dominions, by reason whereof, thesaied Duke was compelled to liue in exile, out of his countrey, and that the Regent of Fraunce, contrary to Justice had proclaimed hym a traitor, and seazed all his goods and landes, wherefore he desired that the Frenche kyng, might to hym make a condigne recompense: to whom the Emperour answered, that a prisoner might not bee appeled: but yet for his good seruice, the Emperor did so muche, that an article was concluded, that the duke of Burbō should bee restored to his firste title, state, honor, and dignitie, and to all xvi his other Duches, Counties, seigniories, and Dominions, and there the Frenche kyng frely pardoned to hym al offences, and swate that al proces, proclamacions, impeticions, had or dooen against hym should bee voyde, annulled and repeled, and farther the Frenche kyng in recōpence of al wronges doen to him, and for the restitucion of his goodes, promised and swate to paie thesame duke. CC. thousande crounes, with al the rentes, and profites receiued of the landes of thesaied duke, in the tyme of his exile. When al these articles wer concluded, sworne, and appoynted, the Emperour iudged that the Frenche kyng, would neuer loue the Duke of Burbon, and that by some newe found faute, or by some priuy xvii enemie, he might bee brought to confusion: wherefore of his noble liberalitie, consideryng the good seruice that the duke had doen to hym, and might do if he were of possessions and dominions gaue vnto the Duke the whole Duchie of Millain, so that thesaied duke should finde yerely foure thousande footemen, and fiue hundred men of armes, and paie to the Emperor yerely foure thousande Ducates, but he neuer obteigned the possession, for lacke of the inuesture or creacion: also the Emperoure gaue to the Uiceroy of Napels, the Duchie of Boylee, and the Countie of Ast, and many greate rewardes for his good seruice.

This peace thus concluded betwene the Emperour and the Frenche kyng was openly proclaimed through all Spain, Fraunce, Flaunders and the Emperours dominions, whereof their subiectes were glad, and made fiers & triumphes through all their countreys. The kyng of Englande like wyse, whiche was included in thesame League, was very glad of the peace, and caused the Cardinall and all the nobles and prelates, to assemble at the Cathedrall Churche of saincte Paule, and there x was Te deum song, and the Cardinall gaue benediccion to all the people, and that night fires was made through all London. The common people said as thei thought: some saied the peace was honorable to the Emperoure, and other saied, the Frenche kyng would not kepe his promise, when he was once deliuered, and so it proued.

The kyng of Englād hearing that the Frenche kyng was at a poynt to be deliuered, sent a knight of his chāber, called sir Thomas Cheyney to the French kyng, certifying him of the great gladnes that he had of his deliuery, & also the cōfort that he had for the conclusion of peace: of whiche kynd remēbraūce, the French kyng muche reioysed. The French xx kyng toke his leaue of themperor, & toke his iorney into Fraunce ward, and came to Victoria, in whiche season the fame went, that the Dolphin whiche should haue been deliuered as one of the hostages for the Frēch kyng his father was disseased, and so the Frenche kyng was stayed for xb. daies, till the truth was knowen: other saied that the cause was that there wer betwene Fontrabie and Bayon. xxx. M. men, and doubted lest if he had been brought doune to Foūtraby, he might haue been rescued: but whatsoeuer the cause was, he was restraigned as you haue harde.

The deliuerie of the French kyng.

And at the last when the daie came of his deliuery, and he was discretely moued, that he should not speake to his children, for feare that la- xxx mentacion and sorowe might in suche wise rise, that hurte might ensue of it. Whē the daie was come that he should be deliuered, there was betwene the borders of Fraunce and Spain, a Lake of no great depenes, in the middes whereof was laied a greate emptie boate at an anker, and at euery shore was another boate, and when the French kyng was come to the banke, he entered the boate on the Spaniche side, and sixe Spaniardes with hym, and like wise on the Frenche part, the twoo Princes sonnes to the Frenche kyng, entered the other boate and sixe Frenchmen with them, and so bothe the boates came to the boat lyng in the middes. The Frenche kyng entered at the one ende, and his children at the other, xl and passed through the great boate, and euen in the middest of the boate thei met, and he with his hande blessed theim, without speakyng of any wordes, but sadly regarded theim, and so he entered into the boate with the Frenchemen, and his children into the boate with Spaniardes, and eche of theim were shortly at the shore, and mounted on horsebacke, and

the Frenche king rode to Bayon, where he was nobely receiued, almost of al these nobles in the realme, and in especial of his mother: and his.ii. childzen were conueighed to Fountraby and so vpward, and were well cherished in al thynges, by the great Constable of Spain and his wife.

Thus was Frances the Frenche kyng, cõueighed into his realme the xxi. date of Marche, whiche was taken the.xxiii. date of Febzuary, the yere last past.

After that themperoz had concluded, & taken his leaue of the Frenche kyng, he rode to the faire citee of Ciuill, and there he with greate triũph x maried lady Isabell, daughter to kyng Emanuell of Poztingall, with whom he had greate threasures and sommes of money, and great frẽdship of the Poztyngalles, foz he had.xi. hundzed thousande Ducates with her mariage. When this mariage was knowen in Englande, the Englishemen soze murmured, that the Emperoz beyng at Wynsoze, in the.xiiii. yere of the king, had faithfully pzomised to mary, the lady Mary, daughter to the Kyng of Englande. But foz a verie truthe the Emperoures counsaill was not content with the answere made to Monsire de Beuers the last yere, and so counsaled the Emperouz, not to tary foz the lady Mary whiche was young: and also thei saied that she was be-xx gotten of the kyng of Englande by his brothers wife. And also an acte was made in Spain, that he should not depart the countrey, till he had issue. All these thynges were laied to hym, whiche caused him to encline to mariage, and seyng the greate offer that the kyng of Portyngal mad to him, he was there to agreyng, and so maried the lady Isabell, sistez to kyng Jhon of Portyngall.

xxi  Thy E. xxviii. date of Apzill, in the beginnyng of this.xviii. yere, came to the Court to Grenewhice, Monsire Bzenion chiefe pzesident of Roan, & Jhon Jokyn now called Monsire de Vaux, whiche Pzesident of Roan befoze the kyng sette in a Thzone, and accompaignied with all his nobles, and the Ambassadozs of Rome, of the Emperoz, of Uenice, and Flozẽce, beyng there pzesent, made in the Latyn toungue a solempne ozacion, the effect wherof was that he shewed, how dzedfull the warres had been be-twene the realmes of Englande & Fraunce, what greate losse the realme of Fraunce, had susteigned by the saied warres: He declared farther of what power the kyng of Englande was of and what conquest he might haue made in Fraunce, the kyng beyng pzisonet, & knowleged the kyng xl of Englandes right in the warres, and their wzonges, where he humbly thanked hym, of his pitie and cõpassion that he had on them in their necessitie and affliccion, that he would concent to peace. To this Ozacion the Chancellor of the Duchie of Lancastre, by name sir Thomas Moze made answere saiyng: that it muche reioysed the kyng, that thei first cõsidered, how by his power he might haue oppzessed, and how by his pi-tie he had releued them: wherfore he would here after that for kindnes, they should shewe hym none vnkindnes, but inuiolatly kepe that league whiche was concluded.

The peace sworne.

The next daie after beeyng Sondaie, the Cardinall song a solempne Masse, in the kynges chapell of Grenewiche, and after Masse the kyng swate before the Frenche Ambassadors, the foure Ambassadors aboue rehersed being present, that he should kepe the peace and league concluded, betwene hym and his brother and perpetuall alie the French kyng. duryng his life and a yere after, and after Masse to all Ambassadoures was made a greate feast.

In the moneth of Maie was a proclamaciō made, against al vnlawfull games, accordyng to the statutes made in this behalf, & commissiōs awarded into euery shire, for the execution of thesame, so that in all places, Tables, Dice, Cardes, and Boules, wer taken and brent. Wherfore the people murmured against the Cardinall, saiyng: that he grudged at euery mannes pleasure, sauyng his awne, but this Proclamacion smal tyme endured: and when young men were forbidden Boules and suche other games: some fell to drinkyng, and some to ferettyng of other mennes Conies, and stealyng of Dere in Parkes, and other vnthriftines.

Because all this Sommer the kyng tooke his pastyme in huntyng, and nothyng happened worthie to bee written of: I will returne to the Frenche kyng, now come again into his realme.

When he was at Paris he saied and wrote to the Emperour, that he would obserue & kepe his promises in euery point, but what he thought I will not iudge: For shortly after he set furth a boke, called the apologie or defence against the conuencion or agrement made betwene the Emperor and hym at Madrill, allegyng that he was cōpelled to make that agrement, or els he should neuer haue been deliuered: He alleged farther that the Lawyers of his realme clerely determined, al promyses and couenauntes made by any persone to his awne hurt, with hym that is more of power then he, to be made by compulsiō, and so of none effect and not to be performed. He also sayed that the gouernors of the Lawe, determined that no othe or promise is of any effecte, wher a manne is in ieoperdie of life, or of perpetuall imprisonement or bondage, and moste in especiall when it is doen by compulsion or threteneyng. Moreouer he saied that he might geue awaye nothyng apperteinyng to his Croune, without thassent of his peeres, and the three estates of his realme (to the whiche he was sworne at the time of his Coronaciō) whiche would therto in no wise assent, and therfore he saied that his othe and promes was voyd, and so he declared to the Viceroy of Napels beyng then with him as Ambassadour for the Emperor, and offered for his raunsome to paye asmuche money as euer Frenche kyng paied, with diuerse other articles of newe deuised.

When these articles came to the Emperor, he them refused and saied, that he had desired nothyng impossible of the Frenche kyng, and if he might might not or would not kepe,the appoyntemēt betwene theim made,yet he bad hym kepe that poynt of couenaunt,whiche onely depended in his will,that was that he should yelde hymselfe prisoner againe, and so he should haue his childzen deliuered:and then he would reasonably commen with hym, of newe articles of agremēt,and as to the appollegie set furthe by the Frenche kyng,that his othe and promesse was voyde,and made by compulsiō and threatenyng,it was answered by another boke called the Refutacion or Ouercommyng of the apollogie,of the conuēcion of Madrill. Whiche twoo woorkes were so eloquently set furth, x with suche and so many perswacions and allegacions,bothe on the one part and the other,that it would comber a wise man(except he were perfectly indifferent) to iudge to whiche parte he should moste encline,and geue credence,therfore I leaue it at large.

After that the Frenche kyng was deliuered,and the peace concluded, the Emperor was fully determined to passe the seas into Italy, and so to Rome,and there to be crouned Emperor,wherof hearyng the bishop of Rome,called Pope Clement the seuenth,a man of great wit and vice, and of litle vertue or learnyng:much doubted in himself what damage might come to hym,if the Emperor had bothe Naples,Sicill, and the xx Duchie of Millain,and also wer crouned Emperor. Wherefore he sent to the Venicians,and to the Florētines,and to Fraunces Sforce duke of Millain,whiche had committed treason against themperor,and was depriued by iudgemēt of his name & dignitie,and thesame geuen to the Duke of Burbon,but yet by power he kept muche of the possession:and declared to them,by what puyssance the Emperor would come into Italy,and what greate possessions he had there at euery ende of Italy, so that if he wer once crouned Emperor,he would loke to haue the seignirie of all Italy: wherfore they consulted and debated for their awne suretie,how to banisshe him and his all Italy by power:and as thei wer xxx debatyng of this matter,thei hard worde how the French kyng was returned into Fraunce,and sought all waies and meanes, how to breake with the Emperour. When they sawe so open an accion offered to them, with al diligence thei sent their seuerall Ambassadors,that is to saie, the Pope twain,the duke of Venice called Andrew Gritty,one (which was his secretorie) and the Florentynes one, and the Duke of Millain one, these fiue Ambassadours came to the Frenche kyng,and declared what ioye and gladnes their masters had of his safe returne into his realme, and then thei shewed to him how thei by the Bishop of Romes exhortacion had deuised a league,whiche should set a perpetuall peace betwene xl all princes Christen,and for the more expedicion they had set furth and agreed vpō articles,for the whole league. When the Frenche kyng saw the articles it was as he would haue it,for he thought by the whole power of the confederates,his childzen should be deliuered,& he yet again once to haue a medelyng in Italy: wherefore with greate gladnes and solempnitie,he entered into the league,and sware to kepe it,and gaue to the Ambassadors great rewardes.

1. The first article of this league was, that themperor, the kyng of Englande, and all other kynges and princes, might entre into thesame, and if the kyng of Englande would, he should bee admitted as protector of thesame league.

But yet the Emperour should not bee admitted, till he had deliuered the Frenche kynges chyldren, hauyng a resonable somme of money for thesame, nor before he had restored the Duke of Millain to his whole Duchie franckly and frely, and all other persones of Italy, in like maner as thei wer before the last warres began: Nor he shal not once come into Italy for his Coronacion or other wise, but with suche a traine as the Pope & the Duke of Uenice shall thynke conuenient, and that with in three monethes after he had entered into this league, he shall paye to the kyng of England, al suche sommes as he ought him before tha time x

2. Item, if themperor would not entre, then thesayd cõfederates should assemble a greate armie in Italy, accordyng as euery one should bee assessed, and this armie to be mainteigned, till the Emperors power were driuen out of Italy.

3. Item, that the Emperor shalbe warned, to deliuer the Frẽche kynges children, and to fall to a resonable poynt with hym, whiche thynges yf xx he deny to dooe, then the confederates certifie hym, that they shall neuer cease till he be brought to reason.

4. Item, that a greate nauie should be prepared on all the coastes of Italy at the common costes of the confederates.

5. Item, that Fraunces Sforce shall enioy the Duchie of Millain, paiyng yerely to the Frenche kyng fiftie thousande Ducattes, & the Frẽch kyng neuer to claime thesame.

6. Item, the Frenche kyng or the Duke of Orleaunce hys sonne, shall haue the Countie of Ast.

Item, if the Emperour bee expelled oute of Napels and Sicill, then xxx

7. the realmes to be at the gift of the Pope, paiyng yerely to the French kyng. lxxv. thousande Ducattes.

8. Item, yf the kyng of Englande wyll take vpon hym as Protector of this league, then he or his sonne (the Duke of Richemond) to haue a duchie or a principalitie in the realme of Napels, to hym & to his heires, to the somme of thirtie thousande Ducattes at the least, and the Cardinal of Yorke to haue a yerely pencõ of. x. thousand Ducates. This league was concluded at Cogmace or the. xxii. daye of Maye in this yere.

When this League was thus concluded, it was sent to the kyng of Englande, whiche with greate deliberacion like a wise prince, consulted xl muche with his counsaill of this waightie matter, & whẽ al thinges wer fully perceiued, he answered to thambassadours, that he thanked muche the confederates of their good will, but he would not entre into the league, because he would be an indifferent entreator betwene bothe parties and a meane for a peace: and so he wrote to the Emperor, whiche hartely

thanked hym, and toke it for greate kyndnes: this league was called the holy league of Clement When the Bysshop of Rome sawe that this league was concluded, because he would shewe that he and the confederates, had iust cause of warre against the Emperour, for thinges done in Italy, he sent to hym a letter, dated at Rome the. xxiii. daie of June: in the whiche letter he moste craftely laied to the Emperours charge, what he had done for hym before he was Pope, & sithe he was promoted to that dignitie, he left nothyng vnremembred, that either he had frendly meant or actually done to the Emperor: and accused hym of muche vnkindnes, and in especiall that he would not pardō Frances Sforce duke of Millain, at his request. He accused hym also of the couetous desire which he had, to haue or obtein the whole Monarchie of Italy, with many other pretie inuencions: For whiche causes he saied he was compelled, for the suretie of all Italy, & in especiall for the churche of Rome, to ioyne hymself with greate Pryuces, and to make warre for the defence of thesame. This letter was deliuered to the Emperour with all spede, to whom the Emperour answered by a letter, dated the. xiiii. daie of September, conteinyng. xxiiii. shetes of paper, in suche wyse that all wyse men maie se by thesame, that the Romyshe byshop accused themperour, where he should haue blamed hymself, for the Emperour laied a greate nomber of ingratitudes and vntruthes to hym, and clerely auoyded all thynges, that he laied to his charge. The Pope sent his Ambassadour another letter, that if the first letter were not deliuered, then he should retaine it, but as God would, for manifestyng of the truthe, the letter was deliuered tenne dayes before.

After the first letters writtē, the holy father of Rome raised in all hast an armie of eight thousande footemen, with a valiaunt compaignie of horsmen, whiche passed the riuer of Poo, and ioyned themselfes with the power of the Venicians, wherof was capitain Frances duke of Urbine, and so they all together marched toward Millain: and in the meane season they had sent Octauian Sforcia Bysshop of Aretyne, whiche for the Frenche kyng should retaine. xiiii. M. Swisses, and they were comming out of Swyserlande, to ioyne with the armie of Italy. Thyntent of this armie was to driue al the Emperours power, out of the Duchie of Millain, but all their deuises proued cōtrary, as you shall after plainly perceiue. For you shall vnderstande, that although the Frenche kyng was taken before Pauia, a yere & more before this tyme, and all the Frenchemen driuen out of the Duchie of Millain, yet the Emperour left not the duchie without an armie, for he left there Anthony de Leua, whiche was capitain of Pauia, at the siege laied by the Frenche kyng, and Fernando Dauall and Alphons his brethren, two valiant capitaines, but Fernando died, the more pitie: these capitaines had with them Spaniardes and Almaines and other, to the nomber of eight or tenne thousande, and laie still till the newe confederacie set forwarde, and especially they were sore moued with Frances Sforce duke of Millain, whiche had the possession of the moste part of all the fortresses of the duchie, that he would be one of the cõfederates: wherfoze they thought best to begyn with hym and to get the possession out of his hand. Wherefoze Alphons Dauall sent foz all themperozs armie together, & they came al togethet to warre, and when he was there, he sent foz Mozon chief counsailer with the duke of Millain, whiche mistrustyng nothyng came to hym, & there he laied to him how the duke his master was false to the Emperour, and Mozon it denied, then he was kept there as a prisoner, whether it were by cautele oz no I cannot tell, but he wzote to the Duke, that he perceiued that the Emperoure was lyke to preuayle, and aduysed him foz auoydyng of all mistrust, and also to shewe hym self the very frende of the Emperoz, and his obedient subiect, to delyuer all the strong holdes into his capitaines handes: The Duke heatyng this counsaill, and willyng not to haue the enmitie of the Emperiall Capitaines, assented and deliuered to Dauall all the foztresses that he had, except the castelles of Millain and Cremona, whiche he saied he kepte onely foz the healthe of his body, because he had bene long sicke.

Then Dauall with his power of Almains & Spaniardes came to ỹ citie of Millain & lodged his people in euery house, & feating ỹ the duke imagened some thyng by keppng of the twoo strongest castels, foz if he delyuered these two castelles to the armie of the confederates, the Emperouzes capitaines and people should be in great daunger, wherefoze he gentely with greate perswasion desired to haue the keppng of the castell of Millain, whiche the Duke would in nowise assent, mistrusting, that then he shoulde lese the duchie and all, wherefoze Dauall with all spede layed sege to the castell, the duke being within. During the tyme of this sege, the capitaines euer toke money and other thinges from the citezens whiche soze therat grudged and saied that they would suffer it no moze, and so as an Almain came to a smith foz a docate, the smith cried helpe, and with that the toune rose: then the capitaines came into the citie to se what was done, the souldiers that kept the sege seing that, ranne into the citie and there was muche entretyng on both partes.

The duke hering the noies in the citie & seing the besegers gone, came out of the castle, thynkyng that his frendes had come to his reskue, but when he sawe no succour, and harde the noyes seased, he entred the castell agayne. When the Capitaynes had long intreated the people were ones contented, but by meanes of one seditious felowe they began again, and there was a soze fight, but the night came so faste on, that both the partes seuered them selues.

The citezens soze greued with the Spaniardes said ōpēly that shortly they trusted to se all themperours frendes dziuen out of Italy, & with many yll woozdes rebuked the souldiers: and when they came into thee citie they hurt them.

Anthony delaua and Dauall, perceiuyng this, deuysed how to be reuenged, wherfoze in the euenyng they entred with a. M. Spaniardes & other, & slewe one citizen & set his hed on a polle & caused it to be bozne afoze thē & set iii. oz. iiii. houses a fire, which whē the citizēs perceiued they were wer greatly aferd and ran to harneſſe, and caſt doune ſtones and barres, but the hand gonnes ſhot ſo faſt at them, that thei durſt not loke out: the Almaines ſet fire in many houſes, leaſt they ſhould haue leyſet to fyght, and ſome of the Spaniardes that kept the towers, ſlewe the citezens. Alas the citie was in greate perill, and that well perceiued Leua and Dauall, for if the remnant of the Spaniardes had come in, the whole cytie had bene burned or vtterly deſtroied: wherfore they cauſed the ſouldiers to ceaſe, whiche were content, for they had bene in harnes from the ſunne ſet, tyll nyne of the clocke the next daie.

x In this ſeaſō tharmy of the cōfederates, made haſt to help the duke of Millain, & in the meane waie the citie of Lawde was yelded to the duke of Urbin: Dauall wēt thether with a ſmall cōpaignie to reſkew the citie and when he ſawe that it was paſt reſkew he returned, ſayyng: it wer better to leſe Lawde, then Millain, & ſo brought all his people to Millain.

The Emperour from tyme to tyme was aduertiſed, of all thynges done in Italy, wherfore with great diligence he ſent the duke of Burbon thether, with ten ſaile, & landed at Sauona, & brought with hym. x. M. men, wherof the Millaners were very glad, & beſought hym to be good to them, to whom he gaue many good woordes & ſwete, and prayed God xx that his braynes might be ſtriken out with a gōne, except he did deliuer them ſhortly of their great burden and oppreſſion of the Spaniardes, ſo they would deliuer hym. xxx. M. ducates, for the wages of the ſouldiers that he had brought with hym, whiche wilfe was thought to haue happened to hym at Rome, for breakyng of his promes: for after he had receiued the money, for a litle ſpace the Millaners were in good quiet, but ſhortly after they were worſe then afore, in ſo muche as ſome ſubſtancial men, for feare of their liues, hanged themſelfes.

When the Millaners hard how the citie of Lawde was taken, and the Spaniardes put out, they thought that. v. M. Spaniardes and. iii. M. xxi Almaines, and no great nomber of horſemen, beyng without wages and vitaile, could not defende ſo great a citie long, againſt the whole power of the princes confederate. While the power of ỹ confederates, wer ſlowly commyng to Millain ward, the duke and his compaignie lacked victaile, wherfore of neceſſitie, when they ſawe the watche negligently kept, they ſent out of the caſtle. CC. men, whiche with ſtrength paſſed the ſiege, and came to the armie of the confederates, and ſhewed them in what caſe the caſtle was in, whiche bad theim be of a good chere, and ſo they marched forwarde towarde a gate of Millain, called Rome gate, and Jhon de Medices whiche led the forward, ſhot ſixe gonnes at a tower to haue xl ouerthrowen theſame, and ſo to haue entered in by that waye. The Emperors men came to the place, and not onely defended theſame, but valiauntly ſet forward to fight with their enemies, and ſkirmiſhed with them very ſore. The Italians ſeyng that the Spaniardes wer ſo fierce, thought it not beſt to fight with them, but to tary tyll the Swyſſes were come, and then they thought thēſelfes ſure of victory: and ſo with ſhame inough, they returned to Veligia.

After this returne, the Imperialles fortified the citie in many places. The duke of Millein seyng that he lacked victaile, and that his succors had failed hym, sent to the duke of Burbon, worde, that he would deliuer the castle, so that he should be bound to no farther inconuenience: so thei agreed that he and his, should haue their bagge & baggage, and should haue the citie of Come for his abode, til he wer tried of the emperor, of the accusacions against hym alleged: vpon whiche condicion he yelded the castle, & went directly to tharmy of the confederates. And after ỹ he went to Come, accordyng to his appoynctment: but the Spaniardes whiche kepte the toune, would not suffre hym to entre, wherefore of necessitie he was compelled to returne, to tharmy of the confederates; & there became enemie to themperours meny. All this sommer tharmie of Italy gat nothing, but the citie of Lawde, and thei durst not fight with the Spaniardes, wherfore they went & besieged Cremona, in the which were. i. M. Almaines, and. v. C. Spaniardes. Al the Swisshes and. viii. M. of the Popes men, & all the horsemen of Malatesta, were sent to the siege, whereof was capitain thelated Malatesta Ballio Perusine, whiche, as he would haue entered the castle was slain, and. i. M. men and more of his behalf wherfore the duke of Urbyne, and the whole army of the Venicians wer sent for, whiche made so great a nomber, and had suche ordinaunce, that they within began to treate, and by appoyntment deliuered the citie.

The castle of Millain yelded to themperours vse.

After this, the whole army of the Italians or confederates, determined clerely to besiege Millain, but sodainly the byshop of Rome sent for his army (for what cause you shal here after) and also thei hard say, that George Fronsberge a valiant capitain an Almain, which serued themperor in his last warres: was comming with. xiiii M lanceknightes, which were paied their wages afore hand, for. iiii. monethes, to aide themperors part. When the confederate army hard this, thei wer astoned, and durst not enterprise the siege, but at a certain Abbay, two myle from the citie of Millain, they made a fortification for. iii. M. fotemen, and fiue hundred horsemen, to lie surely al wynter, to suffre no recourse to come to the citie, whiche citie was all Sommer season well fortified and victailed.

After the Popes army was departed at Cremona, as you haue hard, there came to tharmy of the confederates, Michael Anthonio Marques of Saluce, as capitain generall for the Frenche kyng, and brought with hym. iiii. M. Galcons, and. v. C. men of armes, and. xv. C. light horses, according to the league. Then this whole army hearyng that ỹ Almaines were comming forward with great ordinaunce, and a great nomber of horse men, and had passed the straightes of the mountaignes maugre the Venicians, and that contadine Lepontine, whiche had deliuered vp Cremonā with. i. M. Almaines, was ioyned with capitain George. Whē tharmy of the confederates were well informed of this greate armie, that was cōmyng toward Millain, the capitaines clerely determined to mete with thē, and by battaill or otherwise, to let them from passyng the ryuer of Poo, or to ioyne with themperors armie, wherfore they marched forwarde, and founde that the Almaines were come into the territories of Mantua: then the duke of Vrbyn, & Jhon de Medices cosin to the Pope thought to wery the Almaines with light skirmishes, but Jhon de Medices skirmished so nere tharmie, to get hym a name aboue other, that he was hit with a gonne, and so shortely died. Then the Almaines came to Florentiola and there toke counsaill, & thought it not best to soiorne all wynter in the Duchie of Millain, because all thyng there was scace, by reason of the continuall warres: wherefore they determined to take the x Popes tounes, as aucthor of all the mischief and warre, and surely they had taken the toune of Plesance, if tharmie of the confederates had not strongly, both with men and artillary, fortified the toune.

While all these thynges were a doyng, there continued a greate hatered betwene the bishop of Rome, & the noble family of Colume in Rome all whiche famely was Imperiall, in so muche that the Byshop saied to Pompey Cardinal of Colume, that he would take awaie his Cardinalles hat, and thother answered if he did so, that he would put on a helmet to ouerthrowe his thre crounes. When this malice had long continued, the Byshop of Rome began to lacke money, to maintein his warres, and xx fore he fered the Columes his domesticall enemies, & so of his awne motion began to breake the matter with Ascayn Colume, sonne to Prosper de Columna, in name of the whole bloud of the Columes, saiyng: that it were more conuenient for both parties to agree, then to abide the chaũce of battaill, to the whiche they bothe were parties (for the Columes had men of warre in themperors battaill, as the byshop had in tharmy of the confederates) then euery daie to retaine souldiers at home, eche for feare of other, to their great charges and losse. Ascaine hearyng this saied he would speake with his kynred, and so did: and this communicacion had take effect, and Hugo de Moncado had not bene. For this Hugo was a xxx litle before sent from themperor to the Pope, with certain articles to cõclude a peace, to the whiche the Pope would not agre, saiyng he came to late, & when he sawe the byshops proude aunswer, & perceiued him enemie to his master, he then sought an occasion, to oppresse, the bishop & his power, and so moued the Cardinall of Colume, and Ascain Colume, to inuade Rome with a sodain fraie, & to take Pope Clement or he wer ware xl it to late to sende for aide, fled by a secret bawte to the castle Angell, and with hym fled Cardinalles, Bishoppes, & other of his palace, to a greate nomber, so that there was not victaile inough, for theim all. The byshop Clement sawe that shortly he and they, should be famished in the castle, sent to Hugo de Moncado, whiche had declared that he was thauctour of this act, not mindyng to hurt the Pope, but to make hym themperors frend,or els to cause hym to surcesse, for doyng the emperor any damage, and to the said Hugo he offered,to kepe peace with the Emperor and his confederates for foure monethes,& in the meane season to treate a peace, and also to call his armie again ouer the Poo,and for the performaunce of this,he deliuered to the Columes good hostage, and returned his armie from Cremona,as you haue hard before,and so he was deliuered at large: Now will I leaue the Emperors armie lyng in Italy,and speake of a greate mischef that fell in Hungary.

The greate Turke Sultan Soliman Pac,hearyng of the strief and watte that was betwene Christen prynces, imagened that his tyme was come,to do some great act in Christendom,wherfore he assembled a puis sant armie of.C.xx.M.men,and entered into Hongary,fore destroiyng ỹ coũtrey.Wherof hearing Lewes kyng of Hõgary,a courageous knight of.xxvi.yere of age,with a small nomber marched forward in June, and was on the greate army of the Turkes or he wist, and so with good courage toyned battail,but he was oppressed with multitude,and was compelled to flie into a marreis, where he horse and man were drowned and many other with hym,his body was found after and buried. The saiyng was that he was betrayed, by an Erle of his awne, called Jhon de Voa- The kyng of Hõgary drowned. da,& so it was likely,for the Turke afterward made hym kyng of Hon- xx gary,but he enioyed but one part of it called Transiluania: for Fernando the emperors brother, whiche had maried the sister & heire of kyng Lewes that was slain,kept the chief part of Hongary. The greate Turke hymself was not at the fight, but when he hard that the kyng was slain, he retoysed much,& spoyled the countrey, and brought many a Christian soule into captiuitie to Turkey. Of this victory he wrote to the Venicians, as to his frendes, whiche letter was red openly in Venice, before Doctor Pace Ambassadour there for the kyng of England,but whether they were ioyous or sorowfull of the tidynges, I cannot well tell you.

This sõmer was great grudge against merchant strãgers in Londõ xxi in somuch ỹ if ỹ matter had not bene well pacified, much busines might haue followed,the cause of the grudge was this,ther was an act made in the.xii.yere of king Henry,that no stranger should bring in no wine nor woade in aliens ship:so ỹ thenglishmen after ỹ went to Tholose, and brought much woade to London,& serued all the clothiers repairyng to London:& now in this yere by meanes of gentelmen about the kyng,the strangers had license to bring in woade in strãgers bottomes,so that all Londõ was ful of their woade,& also they sent their woade into the coũtrey, so ỹ thenglishmens woade in London lay vnbought: wherfore sir Jhõ Allen knight beyng Maior, sent for a great sort of strangers,which were the chief merchantes of all,& shewed vnto thẽ what gaines they had gotten in the citie, by reason wherof they should auaunce the citie, & not hurt it,wherfore he willed thẽ to sel their woade to the merchãtes of Lõdon,& they should be paied in continent,& not to resort to other places in the countrey with their woade,to the hinderance of the Londoners.The straungers proudely answered the Maior, ỹ thei would seke euery place for their auãtage, & so in mockyng maner departed. The Maior perceiuyng ỹ, called a cõmon counsail in the moneth of August, and there were many billes laied against the strangers, & at last it was enacted, that no citezen nor freman, should bie nor sell in no place, nor exchange nor medle with certain strangers, called Anthony Bonuice, Laurence Bonuice, Anthony Mualdo, Anthony Caueler, Frances de Bard, Thomas Calnecant, and a great sorte mo whose names I let passe, and if any person did meddle or occupie with them, contrary to this acte, he should lese his fre-

In this season the angel noble was iust the sixt part of an oũce Troy so the six Angels wer iust an ounce which was .xl. s. sterlyng, & the Angel was worth .u. ounces of siluer, so the six Angels were .xu. ounces, whiche was but .x. s. in siluer: but in Flaunders, Braband, and Zeland, the Angel was worth .vii. s. iiii. d. so ỹ marchantes daily caried ouer much money, to the great hindrance of the merchandise of this realme, for moste men caried gold, & when it was there, it was losse in euery noble, viii. d. to bryng it hether again: & when thenglishemen spake to the rulers there, to

The kyng & his counsaill perceiued to what end this enhauncemẽt in Flaunders, if it wer not met with shortly would bryng ỹ riches of this realme: wherfore in the moneth of September, he by Proclamacion, enhaunced the Angell to .vii. s. iiii. d. and the Royal to .xii. s. and the croune to .iiii. s. and .iiii. d. and this Proclamacion was made through all England: and to bryng out of Flaunders the great nomber of Englishe golde whiche was there, the kyng by Proclamacion again, the fift date of Nouember, enhaunced the Angell to .vii. s. vi d. and so euery ounce of golde should be .xl v. s. and that an ounce of siluer should be .iii. s. ix. d. in value.

xxi This yere on Michaelmas euen, Thomas Hynd whiche was chosen shrife before, was called to take his oth, but he made defaulte, wherefore on Simõ Rice was chosen which refused, then was one George Robynson Mercer chosen, whiche toke his oth not to be able. The cõmons were in such a fury, ỹ they sware ỹ thei would haue a Mercer. Master Nicholas Lãbert an Alderman & Grocer, whiche had a dispensacion for ỹ shrialtie for ỹ yere, seyng this discord, said to the cõmõs. masters, although my tyme be not come, yet to appease your strief, if you wil chose me, I wil take it, & so he was chosen with great thãkes. In this season a sodam rumor began in Spain, that themperor would haue war with the kyng of xl England, wherof hearyng thenglishe merchantes, which lay in Spayn at diuerse portes, cõcluded to sende to doctor Edward Lee, Ambassador for the kyng of England in thẽperors court to knowe ỹ certentie, whiche gently answered thẽ, that he trusted ỹ there was no such cause, of ỹ which they should be aferd, for the kyng his master & themperor, wer yet in perfite loue & amitie, and farther he sent them worde, ỹ the kyng of England was not entered into the league of Italy with the confederates, as they would haue hym, for he laboured to make a vniuersall peace, whiche he could not cõueniently do, if he were protector or a cõtractor in ỹ league, this answere he sent to them from Granado, the.v. daie of September.

In the moneth of December, the kyng kept a solempne Christmas, at his manor of Grenewyche, with greate plentie of victaile, Reuels, Walkes, disguisynges, and banquettes: and the.xxx. daie of December, was an enterprise of Justes made at the tilt by sixe gentelmen, againste all commers, whiche valiantly furnished thesame, bothe with spere and sworde, and like Justes were kept the third daie of January, where were.CCC. speres broken. That same night, the kyng and many young gentelmen with hym, came to Bridewell, & there put hym, and.xv. other all in Waskyng apparell, and then toke his Barge, and towed to the Cardinalles place, where wer at supper a great compaignie of lordes and ladies, and then the Maskers daũced, and made goodly pastyme, and whẽ they had well danced, the Ladies plucked away their visors, and so they were all knowen, and to the kyng was made a great banket.

The.xiii. daie of January came to the court, Don Hugo de Mendosa, a great man borne in Spaine, of a noble famely, this person was sent as Ambassador from the Empẽrour, to the kyng of England with large commission, for themperor put it to the kyng of Englandes determinaxx tion, whether his demaundes whiche he required of the Frenche kyng, were reasonable or not, and for the declaracion thereof, and for to knowe the kyng of Englandes request and entreatie concernyng the peace, was this noble man sent into Englande, whiche many tymes consulted with the kyng and his counsaill, and he taried here two yeres full.

A plaie at Grayes inne.

This Christmas was a goodly disguisyng plaied at Greis inne, whiche was compiled for the moste part, by master Jhon Roo, seriant at the law.xx. yere past, and long before the Cardinall had any aucthoritie, the effecte of the plaie was, that lord gouernaunce was ruled by dissipacion and negligence, by whose misgouernaunce and euil order, lady Publike xxx wele was put from gouernance: which caused Rumor Populi, Inward grudge and disdain of wanton souereignitie, to rise with a great multitude, to expell negligence and dissipacion, and to restore Publike welth again to her estate, whiche was so done. This plaie was so set furth with riche and costly apparell, with straunge diuises of Maskes & morrishes that it was highly praised of all menne, sauyng of the Cardinall, whiche imagined that the plaie had bene diuised of hym, & in a greate furie sent for thesaied master Roo, and toke from hym his Coyfe, and sent hym to the Flete, & after he sent for the young gentelmen, that plaied in the plaie. and them hyghly rebuked and threatened, & sent one of them called Thoxl mas Moyle of Kent to the Flete, but by the meanes of frendes Master Roo and he were deliuered at last. This plaie sore displeased the Cardinall, and yet it was neuer meante to hym, as you haue harde, wherefore many wysemen grudged to see hym take it so hartely, and euer the Cardinall saied that the kyng was hyghly displeased with it, and spake nothyng thyng of hymselfe.

In this yere the second day of Marche were receiued to London, with a great compaignie of noblemen, the byshop of Tarbe, Frances viscoũt of Toraine, & master Anthony Uesey, second president of Paris, as Ambassadors from the Frenche kyng, & so brought through London to the Tailers hal and there lodged, and afterward were cõueighed to Grenewiche to the kyng, where thei were right hartely entertcined, & after their letters red & their requestes hard, they departed for a season to London. Ambassadors frõ the Frenche kyng.

On shrouete wesdate, the kyng himself in a newe harnes all guilt, of a xxiiij. strange fashion that had not bene sene, and with hym eight gentelmen al in cloth of golde of one suite, embrodered with knottes of syluer, and the Marques of Excester, and eight with hym in blewe veluet and white saten, lyke the waues of the sea, these men of armes came to the tilte, & there ran many freshe courses, till two hundred and.lxxxvi. speres were broke, and then they disarmed and went to the quenes chamber, where for them was prouided a costly banket.

The Frenche ambassadours hauing their retourse to the kyng & hys counsail, muche laboured to haue in mariage the Lady Mary daughter to the kyng, and after long counsailyng, that matter was put in suspẽce xx because the president of Paris, doubted whether the mariage betwene ỹ kyng and her mother, beyng his brothers wyfe were good or no: of this sir stinocion grewe muche bulines or it were ended, as you shall here, afterward. The common people repugned sore against that demaunde, for they said that she was heire apparant to her father, and if she should die, they would haue no Frencheman to be kyng of Englande, and thus the common people spake, as their myndes serued them.

While the Frenche Ambassadours late thus in London, it happened one euening as they were comming from the blacke Friers, from supper to the Tailers hall, two boyes were in a gutter castyng doune rubbyshe, xxx whiche the raine had driuen there, and vnwar hit a lackay belongyng to the viscount of Tourain, and hurt hym nothyng, for scantly touched it his cote, but the Frecnhe lordes toke the matter highly, as a thyng done in dispite, and sent worde to the Cardinall, whiche beyng to hastie of credence, sent for sir Thomas Seimet knight, lord Maior of the citie, and in all hast commaunded hym vpon his allegeance, to take the husband, wyfe, children and seruauntes of the house, and theim to emprison, tyll he knewe farther of the kynges pleasure, and that the.ii. boyes apprentices should be sent to the Tower, whiche cõmaundement was accomplished without any fauour; For the man and his wife, and seruauntes, wer kept xl in the Counter till the fyrst daye of Maie, whiche was six wekes ful, and their neighbours of gentlenes kepte their house in the meane tyme, and one of the apprentices died in the tower, and the other was almost lame: of the crueltie of the Cardinall, & of the pride of the Frenchemen, muche people spake, and would haue bene reuenged on the Frenchemen, if wyssemen in the citie had not appeased it with faire wordes.

On

Ambassadors frō the kyng of Hongerie.

On the. xiiij. date of Marche wer conueighed from Lōdon to Grenewiche, by therle of Rutlande and other, the lord Gabriel de Salaman-ka Erle of Ottonbzough, Jhon Burgraue of Siluerberge, and Jhon Faber a famous clerke after byshop of Wien, as Ambassadors frō Don-Fernando, bzother to the Empezoz, newly elected kyng of Hungary and Beame, after the death of his bzother in lawe kyng Lewes, whiche was slain by the turke the last Sommer, as you haue hard befoze: this compaignie was welcomed of the high Officers, and after bzought into the kynges pzesence, all the nobilitie beyng pzesent, and therafter great re-uerence made, the said Clerke Master Faber made a notable Ozacion, x takyng his ground of the Gospell, Exiit seminare semen suum, and of that he declared how Chziste and his disciples went furthe to sowe, and how their sede was good that fell into the good ground, and bzought furth good fruite, whiche was the Chzistenfaithe: and then he declared how contrary to that sowyng, Machomete had sowen seede, whiche bzought furthe the euill sede, and shewed from the beginning, how the Turke haue encresed in power, what realmes they had conquered, what people they had subdued euen to that daie: he declared farther what actes ỹ great Turk then liuyng had done, and in especial he noted the gettyng of Belgrade, and of the Rhodes, and the slaiyng of the kyng of Hungary, to the great xx rebuke (as he said) of al the kynges chzistened: he set furth also what power the Turke had, what diuersities of cōpaignies, what armure, what capitaines he had so that he thought, that without a marueilous greate nomber of people, he could not be ouerthzowē: Wherfoze he moste humbly beseched the kyng, as sainct Geozges knight, and defender of the faithe, to assist the kyng his Master, in that Godly warre and verteous purpose. To this ozacion the kyng, by the mouthe of sir Thomas Moze answered, that muche he lamented the losse that happened in Hongarie, and if it were not foz the warres, whiche were betwene the ii. great pzin-ces, he thought that the Turke would not haue enterpzysed that acte, xxx wherfoze he with all his studie would take pain, first, to set an vnitte and peace throughout all Chzistendome, and after that he bothe with money and men, would be ready to helpe toward that glozious warre, asmuche as any other pzince in Chzistendom. After this done the Ambassadours were well cherished, and diuerse tymes resozted to the Courte, and had greate chere and good rewardes, and so the third daie of Maie next en-suyng, they toke their leaue and departed homeward.

An Oracion made by Master Faber.

Themperozs letter to the Frēche kyng.

This season the fame went, that themperoz had wzitten to the French and his honoz and fame toward the wozlde, allegyng that if he kept his xl

Fraunce should reioyse of it, & if he would not kepe his fozmer pzomes, which he made and sware at Madzill, he toke God to witnesse, that he

with

wyth strength and puissaunce, whiche letter the Frenche kyng nothyng regarded saiyng that the Emperoure the nexte yere shoulde haue warre inough.

The fame went and letters came to London, that the Emperours army in Italy the. xii. day of Apzil had met with ỹ Venicians as they were goyng homeward, and that betwene them there was a cruell fyght and by fyne force the Venicians were put to flight, and no maruel as the Venicians aunswere, for they say that by cause there was a peace concluded for sixe monethes betwene the byshop of Rome, and Hugo Demountcado, and that the vicetoy of Naples was come to Rome to cõfirme thesame truce, therfore thei sent their ordinaunce and harnes and loked for no warre, but onely taried together till they were paied there wages, and so vnprouided they were set on and ouercome.

In the ende of this yere the people were sore troubled with pouertie for the great paymentes of money that were past, and also in wynter in the seade season fell suche abundans of rayne in Septembze, Nouembze and Decembze, and on the. xvi. day of Januer fell suche a greate rayne that thereof ensued greate fludes whiche destroied corne, fieldes, and pastures: and drouned many shepe and beastes: then was it dry tyll the xii. day of Apzill and from thence it rayned euery dale or nyght tyll the third day of June. and in May it rayned. xxx. houres continually wyth out ceasyng whiche caused greate fludes and did muche harme, so that corne sore fayled the next yere as you shall perceiue hereafter.

This tyme a bil was set vp in Londõ much contrary to the honor of the Cardinall, in the whiche the Cardinall was warned that he should not counsaile the king to mary his daughter into Fraunce, for if he did, he should shewe hymselfe enemy to the kyng and the Realme, with many threatenyng wordes: this byl was dexxx liuered to the Cardinal by sir Thomas Seymer Maior of the citie, whiche thanked hym for thesame, and made muche serche for the author of that bill, but he could not be founde, whiche sore displeased the Cardinal, & vpon this occasion the last day of Apzil at night he caused a great watche to be kept at Westminster & had there cart gõnes ready charged and caused diuerse watches to be kept about London in Newington. s. Jones strete, Westminster. s. Gyles, Iseldon, & other places nere Londõ, whiche watches were kept by gentelmen & their seruauntes, with householders & all for feare of the Lõdoners because of this bill. When the citezens knew of this, they said that they marueiled why the Cardinal ha-xl ted thẽ so for they saied that if he mistrusted thẽ, he loued not thẽ, & where loue is not, there is hatred, & they affirmed that they neuer entended no harme toward him, & mused of this chaunce, for if. v. or. vi. lewde persons had made Alarme in the citie, then had entred all these watchemen with there traine whiche might haue spoiled the citie without cause, wherfore they muche murmured against the Cardinall & his vndiscrete doinges.

Monday the fyft daye of Maye was a solempne Masse songe at

Grenewich

Grenewyche the Cardinall and the Archebyshop of Canterbury with.x prelates mitered beyng present, and there the Frenche Ambassadours, in the name of the Frēche kyng there Master, sware to observe the peace & league concluded betwene thē for the terme of two princes liues, & there openly the byshop of Terby gaue to the kyng hartie thākes for the great fauor he shewed to the kyng his master, in the tyme of his bisitation (as he called it) that is to wete when he was in prison, for he said the kyng by his mercy had conquered the whole hartes of the realme, which he could not do by strength, the Ambassadours also desired as you haue harde, the marriage of the lady Mary for the duke of Orleance. ii. sonne to the Frenche kyng. Some said she was mete for hymselfe: but many a man marueiled why she was denayed for the second sonne, seyng that in the.x yere of this kyng it was concluded that she should mary the Dolphyn beyng the first sonne: but this demaund was not concluded nor aunswe-red but deferred because of her tendre age, til another time. For the more entertaynyng of the Frenche Ambassadours the kyng caused a solempne Justes to be done by sir Nicholas Carew, sir Robert Jernyngham, syr Anthony Broune, and Nicholas Haruy, the valiaunt esquier as chalengers: whiche were apareled in bases and bardes al of one suite, the right side was riche tyssue embaudered with a compasse or roundell of blacke veluet and in the compas a right hand holding a sworde, and about the sworde were pennes and peces of money of diuerse coynes, all embrawdered, vnder the hand was embrawdered Loiaulte, & on that side of the bard was writtē in embraudery By pen, pain nor treasure, truth shall not be violated. The other side of the bases and bardes were of cloche of golde and cloth of syluer. When these foure chalengers were come to the tilt, then entered the Marques of Excester and.xiii. with hym al armed and barded and based of one suit: that is to sate, the right sides cloth of golde cut in cloudes en-grayled with damaske gold, the other side cloth of syluer set with moun-taynes full of Olyue braunches, made of gold all mouyng. These men of armes ranne many a faire course with littell missyng, for within twoo houres and a halfe, notwithstandyng that it rayned apace, they brake.iii hundreth speres at the least, and when nyght approched they disarmed and went to the coutte.

The kyng against that night had caused a banket house to bee made on the one syde of the tylt yarde at Grenewyche of an hundreth foote of length and.xxx. foote bredth, the roofe was purple cloth full of roses and x the third for the princes: the fyrst bourde had.ix. greate ewers, and basins all gilt, and playne, the seconde bourde had seauen greate gilt basins chased, and thre paire of couered basyns, chased all gilt with Cuppes of assaie, they were so greate that euery Lorde grudged to beare theim, the third ewery had.ix. basins and two payre of couerid Basines and cuppes of assate, thys ewery was all of gold, and the Basins were so massye that thei troubled sore the bearers: The hole supper was serued in vessel of gold: to reherse the fare, the straungenes of dishes, wyth deuises of beastes and fowles it were to long, wherefore I will let passe ouer the supper with songes and minstrelsie. When supper was done, xx the kyng, the quene and the ambassadors washed, and after talked at their pleasure and then thei rose and went out of the banket chambre bi the forsaied Arches, and when they were betwene the vttermoste dore and the Arches the kyng caused them to turne backe and loke on that syde of the Arches, and there they sawe how Tyrwin was beseged, and the very maner of euery mans camp, very conningly wrought, whiche woorke more pleased them then the remembryng of the thyng in dede. From thens they passed by a long galerie richely hanged into a chambre faire and large, the dores whereof was made with masonrie, embatailed with Jasper, and within that a porche with a tipe, & crokettes gilt, thys

When the kyng and the quene, were set vnder their clothes of estate which were rich and goodly, & the ambassadours set on the righte side of the chambre, then entred a person clothed in cloth of golde, and ouer that a mantell of blew silke, ful of eyes of golde, and ouer his head a cap of gold, with a garland of Laurell set with beries of fyne gold, this per-

A rich mount Thē at ỹ nether ende, by lettyng doune of a courtaine, apered a goodly mount, walled with towers and bamures al gilt, with all thinges necessarie for a fortresse, and all the mount was set full of Christall coralles, & rich rockes of rubie curiously conterfaited & full of roses & pomgranates as though they grewe: on this rocke sat eight Lordes appa-

Then sodenly the kyng and the viscount of Tozayne were conueighed out of the place into a chambze thereby, & there quicklie they .ii. and six other in maskyng apparell of cloth of gold and purple tinsell sattin,

Then the kyng quene and the ambassadours, returned to the banket xx chamber, where thei found a banket ready set on the bozde, of so many & marueilous dishes, that it was wonder to se, then the kyng sat doune and there was ioy, myzth and melody: and after that all was doen the kyng and all other went to rest, foz the night was spent, and the day e-uen at the bzeakyng.

The mozowe after the ambassadours toke there leaue of the kyng, and had greate rewardes geuen them and so came to London, and ther rested two dayes and so departed in hast homeward.

These two houses with Cupbozdes, hãgynges and all other thynges the kyng commaunded should stand still, foz thze oz foure daies, that al xxx honest persones might see and beholde the houses & riches, and thether came a great nombze of people, to see & behold ỹ riches & costely deuices

After that the ambassadours of Fraunce were departed the kyng sẽt an other ambassade into Fraũce (that is to say) Sir Thomas Boleyne knight, viscoũt of Rochfozth, and Sir Anthony Bzoune knight, which came to Paris to the bishop of Bathe, whiche lay in Fraunce as ambassadour foz the kyng of Englãd, and then these thze went to the court and saw the Frenche kyng in persone swere to kepe the league & amitie concluded betwene hym and the kyng of Englande, and there they had greate chere and maskes shewed vnto them, but lit̃le rewardes were ge-

In this moneth of Maie ỹ .x. day the kyng sent sir Fraũces Poynes knight, as ambassadout frõ ỹ kyng of Englãd, to Charles themperoz & with him he sẽt Clarenseaux, kyng of armes, to demaũd the one halfe of the treasure & ozdinaũce which was takẽ at Pauia, foz so much as that war was made as well at the kynges charge, as at thẽperoꝛs charge: he demaunded also the duke of Oꝛleaunce, to be deliuered to him, & also it was demaũded that thẽperour should deliuer ꝧ bishop of Rome which was takẽ this moneth as you shall here, & also should bꝛing his armie out of Italy, and if he refused to do any of these poynctes, then Clarẽce aux in the kynges name of Englande should make to him defiaunce.

When it was knowen that warr was like to be betwene the Empe- tour and the kyng of England, the commons of Englande soꝛe lamen- tyd the chaũce, foꝛ all marchandise were restrayned to passe in to any of themperours dominiõs, & the marchaũtes wer desired by the Cardinall to kepe ther martes at Caleis, to the which in nowise thei would assent. x

Shippes sent to seke straũg Regions.

This same moneth the kyng sent two fayꝛe shippes, well manned and vitailed, hauing in theim diuers conning men, to seke strange regi- ons: and so furth thei set, out of the Thamis, the twentie day of May, if they sped well you shall here at their retoꝛne.

The .xxii. day of May cam in post to the kyng out of Fraunce the bi- shop of Tarbie, whiche was here in the beginnyng of this moneth, this bishop bꝛought to the kyng of England, the articles which the Frenche kyng now offered to the Empetour, which wer contrarie to the articles swoꝛne at Madꝛyll in the .xxvii. yere of the kyng, and fatther he moued xx the kyng of Englande to be enemy to themperour, which requeſt (as all men say) was muche furthero by the Cardinall, because of the warre in Italie, betwene the Pope & thẽperour: this bishop made shoꝛt tariyng with the kyng, foꝛ in post a gaine he returned to Paris, to sir Frances Poynes, & Clarenseaux, whiche taried ther foꝛ him, and so they all toke ther Joꝛnay toward Spayne.

Now will I retoꝛne to the duke of Burbõ, and themperours armie, which al the last winter liued in great pouertie, without clothes, victaile oꝛ wages, so that they were in manet desperat, & so went toward Parme & Bononie, belongyng to the Sea of Rome. The bishop of Rome hea- xxx ryng this sent a messenger to the duke to redeme the Popes townes, so that they shoulde not be spoyled noꝛ hurte: the duke and the capitaine ared thꝛe hundꝛeth & fiftie thowsand Ducates, foꝛ sauyng of the Popes land, & if thei might haue so much money, thei would depart to Napels: but when thei sawe that thei coulde haue no money, they with all spede turned toward Flozence the .xxii. of Apꝛill, whereof hearyng the Ro- maines thei wer glad, foꝛ thei thought that the Flozentines would hold good war with them, & than the Pope and the Romaines woulde geue the lokyng on: but the chaunse turned, as you shall here after.

Foꝛ a suertie the duke of Burbon thought to haue gon to Flozence xl foꝛ this cause, foꝛ ther was a gentlemã in Flozence called Peter de sal- uiata which had a bꝛother that serued themperoꝛ in his warres, whiche pꝛomised to deliuer the citie, foꝛ he determined to cause the commons to rebell in the citie against the heddes, & in the meane seasõ ꝧ dukes cõ- pany shoulde scale the walles: when this Peter knew the themperours

Armye was come to a place called Le Chase, within twelue myle of the Citie, to bryng his purpose to a conclusyon. he with suche as he had trayned to him, cryed in the Citie libertate de populo, that is in English Libertie of the people: with which voyce the people styrred and came to the Palace in great nomber, and there they tooke the .vi Lordes of the counsell which had the rule of the Publyke welthe of the Citie (as they call it) and slew one of them: The Familie of Medices, whiche wer the Popes kynred, were at this tyme sore a fraied. Thus this Peter de Saluiota, with the Commons gate the Palace and rang the commen bell.

x In this season was in Florence a Capitayn of the Frenche kynges called Frederico de Bodsoo, he had with hym.iii.C.men: and when he saw this rebellyon, he came to the Commons and sayde: Syrs, if you continew in this case, your fayre Citie is lyke to be subuerted, for your enemyes be at hande: which notwithstandynge that you beare some fauoure to themperour as appeareth, yet their needinesse and pouertie is soch, that without mercy thei wyll robbe, murder and sley you, your wyfes & chyldren, and sette fyer on your beautifull Citie.

This Capitayne moche steyed the Citie, notwithstandyng that. xx. or moze persones were sleyne in the tuffle, yet they were well auoyded, and xx sodeynly entered into the Citie the Duke of Urbyne, whiche lay but.vi. myle from Florence, and.xviii.myle from themperours armye whom he had coasted, but he thought no aduantage to medle. This Duke brought with hym.v.M.footemen, and.vi.C.horsemen, and when he was entered the Citie, a crye was made that all thinges was pardoned, so that euery man departed home and delyuered his weapon, whiche was dooen: and thus the Citie was appeased, the.xxviii.day of Apryll.

All this doyng within the Citie was vnknowne to themperours armye, for it was begonne and ended in.iiii.or.v.houres, and so for lacke of knowledge, this enterpryse was lost, whiche was happye for the Floxxx rentynes. Sore displeased were themperours Capitaynes when they knewe of this chaunce, and also how the Duke of Urbyne was entered into the Citie of Florence for their defence, but they coulde not doo with all. And so shortly thei departed and came to the Citie of Seynes.xxx. myle of and there they lost their great ordinaunce, and tooke counsell to go to Rome (notwithstandynge the trewce concluded betwene the Pope and the Uiceroy of Napels, & Hugo de Moncada, as you haue hearde) and so moche they traueyled by nyghtes and dayes, commenly passyng.xl.myle, day and nyght (Their good wyll was suche) that the vi.daye of Maie, with banners displayed, they came before the Citie xl of Rome beynge saturdaye the same day: and sonday the Romaynes made Bulwarkes, Rampiers, and other defences, and layde ordynaūce on the walles, and shot at them without fearcely.

The Duke of Burbon determyned that it were not best to lye styll without, and be slayne with ordinaunce, consideryng that they were all naked people, and without great ordinaunce: wherfore he determined to take the chaunce & to geue the assaute, & so manfully they approched the walles betwene the Burgo nouo & olde Rome. But the Romayns valiauntly defended them with handgūnes, pykes, stones, & other weapons, so that the enemyes were fayne to retreyte. Then the Romaynes were glad, & sette many faire banners on their Towers & Bulwarkes, and made great shewtes: Whiche seeynge the Duke of Burbon cryed to a new assaute. Then the Drumslades blew, & euery mā with a ladder mounted: & at the fyrst encounter, agayn the Romayns put them a litell backe: Which perceiuyng, the duke of Burbō cryed: God & thēperour. Then euery man manfully sette on, there was a sore fyght, many an x arrow shot, and many a man felled: but at the last the Emperours men gotte the wall: & betwene euery assaute fell a myst, so that they within coulde not see what parte they without would assayle, which was profitable to themperours partie: At the three assautes were sleyne. iii. C. Swysshes of the Popes Garde. In this last assaute was the Duke of Burbon stryken in the thygh with a handgōne, of the whiche he shortly dyed in a chapell of s. Syst, whyther his Souldiers had brought hym, And this chaunce notwithstandynge, the Armye entered into Rome, and toke the Popes Palace & set vp themperours Armes. The same daye that these three assautes were made, Pope Clement passed lytell on the xx Emperours Armye: for he had accursed theim on the saturday before, and in his curse he called the Almaynes Lutheranes, & the Spaniards Murreynes or mores: and when he was hearyng of masse, sodeinly the Almaynes entered the Churche, & slew his Garde & dyuerse other. He seeyng that, fled in all haste by a preuye way to the Castell s. Angell: & al they that folowed hym that way & coulde not entre, were sleyne, and yf he in that fury had ben taken, he had ben sleyne. The Cardinals & other prelates fled to the castel of s. Angel, ouer the bridge, where many of the commen people were ouerpressed and drowned as they gaue way to the Cardinalles & other estates that passed towarde the castell for succour. xxx

Curse of the Pope.

The Cardinall of Senes, of Selaryne, of Tudertine, of Jacobace & of the Valle, taryed so long, that they coulde not get to the castell for multitude of people: wherfore they were compelled to take a nother house, called the Palace of s. George, where they kepte theym selfe for a whyle, as secretely as they might. You must vnderstand, that thorough the Citie of Rome, ronneth a famouse Ryuer, called Tyber: and on the one syde of the Ryuer standeth the Castell s. Angell, or the Borough of s. Angell: & the other side is called Burgo Nouo, or the New Borough. This Bridge is called, the Brydge of Syxte, whiche lyeth directly before the Castell. At the ende of this Brydge was a wonderous strong xl Bulwarke, well Ordinaunced & well manned. The Emperours men saw that they coulde do nothynge to the Pope nor to that porte of the Citie but by the bridge, determyned to assaute the Bulwarke: and so as men without feare, came on the bridge: & the Romayns so well defended them, that they slew almost. iiii. M. men. That seyng the Prince of Orenge renge, & the Marques of Gnasto, with all spede gaue assaute, and notwithstandyng that the Romaynes shot great ordinaūces, handgonnes quarrels, and all that might be shot: yet the Imperiall persones neuer shranke, but manly entered the Bulwarke & slew & threw downe out at the loupes all the Romains that they found, & after rased the bulwarke to the grounde. The Pope was in the Castell Angell and beheilde this fyght, & with him were.xxiii. Cardinalles, of whiche one called the Cardinall Sanctorum quatuor, or the Cardinall of Pouche was slayne, & with hym were a.M. Prelates and Prestes, v.C. gentlemen. v.C. souldyers: wherfore immediatly the Capitayns determined to ley Siege x to the Castell of Angell, lest they within intght issue out & turne theym to dāmage: wherfore sodeinly a Siege was planted rounde about the Castell. In the meane season the souldyers fell to spoyle, neuer was Romespoiled Rome so pylled neither of the Gotes, nor Vandales, for the souldiers were not content with the spoyle of the Citizens, but they robbed the Churches, brake vp the houses of close religious persones, & ouerthrew the cloysters and spoyled virgins, & rauyshed maryed womē: Men wer tormented if they had not to geue euery new asker or demaunder: some wer strangeled, some wer punyshed by the pryuey mēbers, to cause them xx to confesse their treasure. This woodnesse continued a great whyle, & some man myght thynke that when they had gotten so moche, then they would ceasse & be quyet, but that was not so, for they played cōtinually at dyce, some.v.C. some a.M. ducates at a cast: and he that came to play laden with plate, went away again almost naked, & then fel to ryfelyng agayne. Many of the Citizens whiche coulde not paciently suffre that veracion, drowned themselues in Tiber: The souldiers daily that ley at the siege, made Jestes of the Pope, sometyme they had one ridynge lyke the Pope with a whore behynde hym, sometyme he blessed, & sometyme he cursed, and sometyme they woulde with one voyce call him Anxxx techrist. And they went about to vndermynde the Castell, and to haue throwen it downe on his head, but the water that enuironeth the castell disapoynted their purpose. In this season the Duke of Vrbyne with xv.M. men came to ayde the Pope: but hearyng that Rome was taken he taried.xl. myle frō Rome tyl he heard other word. The Marques of Saluce, & sir Frederico de Bodso with.xv.M. footemen & a.M. horsemen wer at Viterbe the.x. day of Maye. Where thei hering that the citie of Rome was taken also taried: the Cardinal of Colume came with an army of Neapolitans to helpe themperours men: but when he saw the crueltie of the souldiers, he dyd lytle to helpe thē, but he hated thē moch xl The bishop of Rome was thus besieged tyl the.viii. ides of Juli, at which day he yelded him selfe for necessitie & penury of al thinges in the castell. And then he was restored to geue Graces & graunte Bulles as he dyd before: but he taryed styll in the Castell saynt Angell, and had a great nombre of Almaynes and Spanyardes to keepe hym: But the Spanyardes bare most rule in the Castell, for no man entered nor came out of the Castell but by theim. When the moneth of July came, corne begā to kayle in Rome, & the pestilence beganne to ware strōg: wherfore the great Army remoued to a place called Naruya, xl. mile from Rome, leauyng behynde them suche as kepte the bysshop of Rome.

When they were departed, the Spanyardes neuer were contented tyll they had gotten the Almaynes out of the Castell of S. Angell, and so they had the whole custodye of the Pope. Thus Rome continued in peace tyll Septembre, tyll the Armye came agayne from Naruya: for then the Almanyes sware, that they woulde set the Citie and all on fyer, excepte the Pope woulde pay them their full wages.

The bisshop of Rome was sumwhat astonyed, and sent to commen with them, onely two Archebisshops & two Bysshops & two Gentlemē: These syxe persones, the Almayns tooke as pledges, contrarye to the Popes meanyng, and sayde they would keepe them there tyll they were payed, & so to put them in a strong chaumbre, in the Palace of S. George: and euery day almost they woulde bryng them furth openly, and scolde and chyde with theim, & make them beleue that they woulde hang them if they were not payed. And so they kepte them emprysoned in a chaūbre and. xxiiii. watched euery nyght without the chaumbre dore, & .xiiii. all day lykewyse: and yet for all that watche, they got out at a chymney, on xx sayncte Andrewes eue, and were no more seene of theim.

An Escape. This escape was sooner knowen of the Spanyardes that kepte the Pope, then of the Almaynes that watched the dore. The Almaynes were so woode with this chaūce, that thei came to the Prince of Orenge their generall Capitayne, and demaunded money of hym, in suche rigorious manier, that he was fayne secretely to flee to Senes: & then for hym they chose Capitayne, the Marques of Gnasto, whiche gouerned theim tyll Frebruary, that he brought theim to Napels.

Aboute the. xxviii. daye of Maye, there were letters brought to the kyng of Englande from the Frenche kyng, of parte of this troble: but xxx sonday, the second day of June, the kyng receyued letters at the Castel of Wyndsore, by the whiche he perceyued all the ordre & manier of the sackyng of Rome, & taking of the Pope, in manier & forme as you haue hearde: Wherfore the kyng was sorye, & so were many Prelates: but the Communaltie lytle mourned for it, and sayde that the Pope was a ruffyan, & was not meete for the roume: wherfore they sayde that he beganne the myschief, & so he was well serued. But the Cardynall which tooke this matter highly, called to hym the Prelates & the Clergy, and muche mourned the fall of the bysshop of Rome, and saw how the people grudged agaynste the Spiritualtie, for their greate Pride, & Pompe, and yll lyuyng: Wherfore he came to the kyng, & sayde: Sir by the onely callyng of God, you be made Defendor of the Christian faith: Nowe consydre in what state the Churche of Christe standeth: See howe the head of the Churche of Rome is in captiuitie: See how the holy fathers be brought into thraldome, and be without comforte:

fort, now shewe your selfe an aide, a defendour of the Church, and god shall reward you.

The kyng answered, my Lorde, I more lament this euell chaunce then my toungue can tell, but where you say that I am defendor of the faith, I assure you, that this war betwene the Emperor and the Pope, is not for the faith but for temporal possessions and dominiõs, and now sith bishop Clemẽt is takẽ by men of war, what should I doo? my persõ nor my people cannot him reskue, but if my treasure may help him, take that which to you semeth most conuenient: for the which offer the Cardi-

The threasor gathered.

Then the Cardinal sent cõmissiõs, as legate to al bishoppes, cõmaũdyng that they should cause in euery parish Churche, solempne processious to be made for the releuyng of the Pope, and moued the people to fast. iii. dates in the weke, but few men fasted, for the preistes saied, that their commaundement was, to exhorte the lay people to fast and not to fast them selfes: & the lay people saied, that the preistes should first fast, because the verie cause of the fastyng, was for a preist, but none of bothe

This seasõ begã a fame in Londõ that the kinges cõfessor, beyng bishop of Lyncolne, called doctor Lõglãd, & diuerse other great Clarkes had told the kyng that the mariage betwene him & the Lady Katheryn, late wife to his brother prince Arthur, was not good, but damnable & the kyng there vpõ should mary the dutches of Alansõ, sister to ỹ Frẽch kyng at the toũe of Caleis this sõmer, & that the viscoũt Rochfort had brought with him the picture of the said Lady, & that at his retorne out of Fraũce ỹ Cardinal should passe the Sea to go into Fraũce, to fetch her

This rumor prãg so much, that the kyng sent for sir Thomas Setxxx mer maior of Londõ & straightly charged him to se that ỹ people should cease of this cõmunicacion, vpõ payne of the kynges high displeasure.

But whatsoeuer the Commons talked, it was concluded by the kyng and his counsaill, that the Cardinall should passe into Fraunce, as his high ambassadour, but for what cause no persone knewe but the king til his retorne.

Then was much preparacion made at Caleis, for the receauyng of the Cardinall, but the common saiyng was that the kyng would come to Caleis and meet with the Frenche kyng, and for that cause such preparacion was made, but he came not there at al, and alwaies the people Whẽ the Cardinal was lãded, there were set on lande .xvi. barrelles al ful of gold of the kynges money, which wer deliuered to the capitain of the castel in charge: of this money the people muche grudged, & saied this money shalbe spẽt out of the realme, & yet Englishemẽ shal haue no parte noz pzoffit of it, but only it shalbe spẽt foz ỹ Cardinalles pleasure and the Frenche kynges, and the Popes pzoffite.

The Cardinal was so soze displeased with the Emperour foz keppng the Pope in pzysõ (although it wer agaynst his wil & knowlege) that he imagened al the wayes and meanes possible how to hurte & dommage themperour & therfoze he sent foz thẽglish marchaũtes, willing them to kepe ỹ marte at Caleys, but thei ãswered, that ỹ towne of Caleis, was a towne of warre, & al marchaũtes must haue libertie at all houres of the night, in the marte season, whiche they coulde not haue at Caleis: also the hauen is not able to receiue greate Hulkes, and Carikes that come

While the Cardinall lay in Caleis, the Frenche men daily resozted to Calleis, to welcome the Cardinall, and sodenly there vpon a noyse sprang that Calleis should be deliuered, to the Frenche kyng, whiche vayne saiyng, made many men muse,

But the .xxii. day of Juli, the Cardinall departed oute of Calleis, and with hym was the lozde Cutberd Tũstal bishop of London, the Lozde Sandes, Chamberlayn to the kyng, the Earle of Darby, sir Henry Guildfozde, sir Thomas Moze, with many knightes and squyzes, to ỹ numbze of .xii. And at the gate was made a pageaunte in the whiche was a Nonne called holy churche, & thze Spaniardes & thze Almaynes had her vio-lated, and a Cardinall her reskued, and set her vp of newe agayne.

Another Pageaunte, was a Cardinall geuyng a Paxe to the Kyng of England and the French kyng, in token of peace, a nother Pageant was the Pope, lyng vnder, and the Emperour sittyng in his Maiestie, and a Cardinall pulled downe the Emperoure, and set vp the Pope.

When wise men sawe this Pagiaunt, thei smiled & saied, well, can the Frenche kyng flatter, for harde it were for one Cardinall to subdue him that hath pulled downe the master of all Cardinalles.

Many wordes wer spoken in reproue of this pageaunt, but stil with great triumph rode these.ii. Cardinalls together, to the Abbey vnder a

The morow beyng the thre & twêtie day he with al his traine remoued toward Muttrel, & .ii. mile without the towne ther met with him the baylies, ther to him was made a solempne oracion, and when he came to the towne he was receiued with the Clergie, and ther the Englishmen had strayt lodging, the nombre was so great, and so the morowe he remoued toward Abbeuil wher he was receiued of the Baylife and aduocates of the towne, and then of the garison of mẽ of warre of the towne, and there was he receiued with procession, and Pageauntes to his praise vnder a Canapie, and so brought to the Church, and after to his lodging, and al

The third day of August in the Citie of Amias, came the Frenche kyng in a cote of blacke Veluet vpon whyte Satin, and tied with laces agglated with golde, and with him, the kyng of Nauer, and the Cardinall of Burbon, the greate master, the Duke of Vandosme, Monsir de Guise, and Monsir Vaudemount his brother, and the Frenche kynges mother, with many Lordes and Ladies, which were there solemplie receiued.

And on Sõday the.iiii.daie of August, the Cardinal came fro Pickxx queny toward Amias, in which towne he lay the night before, and in the way he was receiued with the prouost of the Citie, and many honorable personages of the citie, and after them came the Justices and aduocates and with an eloquent oracion saluted him, and when he was with in halfe a myle of the towne, the Frenche kyng hym selfe with all his Nobles mette with him, and louinglie embraced him, and welcommed hym and after toke all the Nobles of England, by the hand, and so brought thesaied Cardinall to Amias: where for hym were deuysed many Pagiauntes, to his prayse, and euer he was called Cardinalis pacificus the Cardinall pacifique, and so was writen at the gate of his lodg-xl ing.

The Frẽche kyng brought the Cardinal to his lodgyng, & he would haue brought the kyng to his Courte agayne, but he would in nowise suffre him, but left him in his lodgyng, and thesame night the Cardinall rode to visit the Frenche kynges mother, & there he had long communicacion and so departed to his lodgyng.

The

The.v.day of August the Cardinall with the great estates of Fraũce was conueighed to the ffrenche kynges Courte, where he was receiued of the Frenche kynges garde, and in the first Chambze he was receiued of Knightes and gentlemen, In the secound Chambze, of Earls Barõs and bishoppes. In the third of Ladies, in which chambze the kynge lay on a bed, and his mother sate by him, because he had a soze Legg. Then the Cardinal shewed his commission, which was very large, and in that was none but he alone: the Bishop of London and the Lozde Sandes, were in another commission, but that was not shewed than, noz they called to counsail. There was the Cardinall highly thanked of the greate loue that he bare to the house of Fraunce: Then he & the Frẽch Lozdes fell to counsail, fyrst concernyng the Articles of peace, and foz the suerty of perfozmaunce of the same, and so that day they sat foure houres, and so euery day was the Cardinall in Counsaile with the Frenche kynges Counsaile, tyll the.xviii.daye of August, at whyche daye was made in the Cathedzall Churche of Amies, foz the Cardinall of Englande a place on the Nozth side of the Churche foz hys Trauers, and directly in the middes of the quere was a curious chappell wzoughte of carued wood al gilt set foz the Frenche kyng and his mother, which was couered wyth Crimosyn beluet, richely embzodered & hanged wyth clothes of Antike makyng, set with pearle & stone, very curiously: The Masse was song, by a Cardinal, and after Masse, the French kyng and diuers of his Lozdes, wer swozne to kepe the league, & then was a great Charter sealed on the high aultare, & diliuered to the Cardinal by the kinges awne hand, and then the Cardinal of England gaue to theim all (as he saied clere remission) and then was Te deum song, and so they all departed.

Now will I leaue the Cardinall styll at Amias in counsaill, and retozne to Sir Fraunces Poynes, & Clarẽceaux which ware at this tyme arriued in Spaine, in the towne of Uale Dolise the third day of July, where thei found Doctoz Lee the kynges Almoner there ambassadour foz the kyng of Englande, & with hym taried till the sixte day of July, & then Sir Fraunces Poynes was bzought to his pzesẽce, and deliuered the kyng his masters letter, and beside that pzaied his Maiestie to consider what the king of England had doen foz hym sence his tendze age, how that he holpe him at all times with money and treasure, and howe that at suche tyme as the Lozdes of Spayne would not receiue him as there kyng duryng his mothers life, yet by the kynges meane and hys greate labour and cost, he was to that Realme receiued: And also howe the kyng of England had alwaies defended and pzotected the contreys of Flaunders, Bzabant, and Zeland, against all persones, and in the quarel of themperoure he had strongly inuaded the Realme of Fraũce so that by his inuasion at home, themperour had obteyned great victozie in fozein places, which he could not haue done, if al the whole realme of Fraunce had ben without any enemies at home: wherefoze the kyng

him as reason would, the one halfe of the profite of the battail of Pauy and also for his parte he required the duke of Orleaunce to bee delyuered to him, and also to paie to the king, fourtie thousand pownd, which he ought to him as money lēt, towardes his charges: and farther that he should deliuer the Pope, and make him a reasonable amendes, & no farther to make warre on him or his dominions. The Emperor after this demaunde, answered, sir we assure you that the loue of our vncle of England, toward vs and the manyfolde benefites that we haue receiued by him and his meanes we shal neuer forget, & althoughe oure x power be not able to recompence thesame, yet our good wil shall neuer fayle, to endeuer vs to do him pleasure: and as concerning his letters we with oure counsayle shal take aduice, and we trust you shall haue a reasonable answere, duryng which time, you may repose you, & althinges necessarie shalbe at your commaundement: with this answer, Sir Fraunces departed at this tyme. Whē it was knowen in Spain, ỹ the kyng of England was alied with the Frenche kyng, the Spanyardes spake largely and said that thei cared not for the king of England, and said farther that all this was the dryft of the Cardynall, and by reason hereof the Englishe marchauntes wer euyl entertained in Spain, but xx the Emperour perceiuyng this, gaue a generall commaundemēt, that al Englyshmen shoulde be ordered and reputed as his louing frendes.

Thēperours answere.

In this very moneth, tidinges was brought to the Emperour, how the inhabitauntes of Turney cōspired to destroy Monsire Delanoies their Capitayn, and deuised to bid him to a banket, & so to sley him & al that loued the Emperour, but as God would, he had knowlege of this treason, and toke the chiefe Capitaynes, and dyd on them sharpe execucyon, for feare whereof many fled into Fraunce.

The Emperor within a day or twayne called to him Doctor Lee, & Syr Fraunces Poynes the kyng of Englands Ambassadors, & sayed:
xxx my lordes, we haue perceiued the king your maisters requestes, which be great and of a waighty Importaunce, wherfore we entend wyth al spede to wryte to the kyng our vncle, and when we haue receiued answere frō him, we shal delyuer you of suche thinges as you demaunde, prayng in the meane season, to take pacience, and so for the tyme they departed.

By this tyme was it knowen that the Cardinall of England was wyth the French kyng, & ful wel knew the Emperour that the Cardinal woulde do all for to ayde the Frenche kynge and to domage hym yet had he a great pencion of the Emperour.

xl The Englyshe Marchauntes fearynge the sequele of this matter, conueighed away their goodes daily out of the Emperors dominiōs. but still the Englyshe Ambassadours came to the Emperours Court, and one day the Emperour sayed to them, my lordes, I maruell howe the kyng my vncle is moued agaynste me & my subiectes, I assure you

I wil no war with him, I truste in hys faythfull promes, & his accustomed goodnes, & his people I take as my frendes. If he loue ỹ Frenche kyng I may not so do, for he to me is vntrue & kepeth no iust promyse, and we neuer compelled him to make any offer, but his offer was of his owne mocion, and he also swore to mainteine the same, which he now refuseth, & to our great preiudice hath perswaded against vs our dere vncle of England by peruers Imaginacions, which I trust wyll neuer be our enemy. This many times the Emperor would comen with the Englyshe Ambassadors whiche lay in Spayne.

But now must I returne to the Cardinal of England which lay at x Amyas: there was great counsayling from day to day: First, how the Pope should be deliuered, and the sea of Rome brought to a quietnes: Secondarily, how to bryng the Emperor to some reasonable agremēt so that the French kynges chyldren might be deliuered. It was well consydered that the Emperor had a great forfel by reason of the sayde ij. hostages, which forfel might perchaunce so stomacke him ỹ he wold agre to no new condicions nor agremente. Then it was answered on the otherside that yf a great army were sent into Italy whych might driue the Emperors power out of Italy, then that army should set the Pope at libertie & also dryue the emperor to come to their purpose, or els xx he should lese both the realmes of Napels and Scicille, and the duchy of Millayn and other dominions, wherefore the Frēch kyng determined to send an army royal into Italy, vnder the conduict of Mounsire Odyt de Lawtryck erle of Foys, which was appointed afore in June to go to the borders of Italy with a smal nombre, but now to him was assigned viij. M. Bretons wyth notable capitaines of the same coūtrey and. viij. M. Normans wyth like capitaynes, and. viij. M. Gascoines, and. vj. M. Burgonions. iij. M. Sauoyns. viij. M. Swyches & Almaines, and vi. M. Picardes, of which men were. v. M. horsemen vnder the conduict of Mounsire Galias, & in thys army were syr Robert xxx Jernyngham & Jhon Carew of Hakam, and. lxxx. other English gentlemen, which were sent thyther by the Cardinall from Amias. When thys army was assembled, the Cardinall deliuered the kyng of Englādes money, ỹ he had broughte of out England in barrels as you haue heard, wyth which money was this army paied two monethes before hand, and the remnaūt was deliuered to sir Robert Jerninghā which was called treasorer of the warres. In this army were. iij. M. cariage men, and aduenturers. iij. thousand, so that when they were ouer the mountaynes they were. lix. M. men, & som writers say. C. thousand. This army was called in Latin Exercitus Angliæ & Gallorum Regum, pro Pontificio Romano liberando congregatus, that is to say, the armye of the kynges of Englande and Fraunce gathered for the delyueraunce of the byshoppe of Rome, and so was thys armye reputed. Although few people knewe at the beginninge in Englande of the conueiynge of the moneye ouer xl

the sea, yet when the Englysh coyne was the common payment of the armie, it was then openly knowen: then many men sayde alas, so much money spent out of the realme, and of this charge the realme shall not be one peny the better, the kynge hathe had of vs a loane and that is not payde, and the great subsedy was graũted to make the kyng riche and now is that money to helpe our old enemies, and the Pope which neuer shall do vs good, this the people spake and muche worse. While the Cardinal was wyth the Frenche kyng, the Pope sent to him a bul, and made him Vicar general vnder him through all the kyng of Englandes dominions, and there by a bull he created Anthony de Prato bishop of Sens and Chauncelor to the French kyng a Cardinall wyth great solempnitie. The Cardinall for hys solace rode with the French kynge to Compeygne and Mountdedier, and was euer highly feasted of the kyng and hys mother and of the Chauncellour of Fraũce, and of al the nobilitie. Then was it concluded by the Cardinal & the Frenche kynges counsayll what articles of offer should be sent to the Emperor, which yf he refused, then open defyaunce to be made to him in the name of both the kynges: The profers were these.

¶ First that the French kyng shoulde paye for his raunsome. xxv. M. xx crounes, which amounteth to. v. M. pounde sterlynge, one wryter calleth it two Millions of Crounes. m. marb. 6 129.

The second to release al the pencion that he had in Napels with al the ryght of thesame.

The third, that he should neuer clayme title to the Duchy of Millain.

The. iiij. that he should release the superiorite of Flaunders for euer & the ryght that he had to the citie of Turnay. m Dod. 162

The. v. to release al the homages of al other persones wythin thesayd countreyes.

The. vj. to wythdrawe hys army out of Italy.

xxx The. vij. to forsake the ayde of the Swyches against the Emperour.

The. viij. to take no more the part of Robert de la Marche against the Emperor.

The. ix. neuer to ayde the kyng of Nauerne against hym, although he had maried the kynges sister.

The. x. neuer to ayd ỹ duke of Gelder nor to chalenge thesame duchy.

The. xj. to ayde the Emperor wyth shippes and men to hys coronaciõ.

The. xij. to mary ladye Elianor the quene of Portingale syster to the Emperor.

The. xiij. that the Dolphyn should mary thesayd quenes daughter.

xl The. xiiij. that yf the French kyng had any childzen male by thesayde quene, then the duchy of Burgoyne to remayne to thesayd child being a male.

The. xv. that the French kyng should be frende to the Emperor & his frendes, and enemy to his enemies.

These with many other articles which wer not openly knowẽ wer sent to the bishop of Tarby and the Vicount of Thorayn ambassadors to the Emperor from the French kyng. And other articles wer sent to the kynge of Englandes ambassadors beyng in Spayne: firste to moue the Emperor to take a reasonable peace wyth the French kyng.

Also that the kyng of England would release to him all the sommes of money due to him aswel by themperor Maximilian his graūdfather as by hym selfe, and take the French kyng as detter for thesame.

Item yf the Emperor would not therto agre, then the French king should mary the lady Mary doughter to the king of England and thei both to be enemies to the Emperor. x

When all these thinges wer concluded, the Cardinal toke his leaue of the French kyng and his mother (which tolde hym that a noble ambassade shoulde be shortly sent again into Englande from the realme of Fraunce for fortefiynge of all conclusyons) and so thesayde Cardynall wyth great rewardes returned wyth al his trayne & by iorneys ỹ last day of September, he came to Rychmond to the king of England and there assertayned the kyng of all his doynges, but so could no lord that then was in Cōmission with him, for they knew nothing of all his doynges, whiche sore greued their stomackes.

The Cardinal which much reioysed in this peace, came the first day xx of the terme into the starre chamber & there by his cōmaundemēt wer presente the lordes spirituall and temporall of the kinges counsaill, and the Maior and Aldermen of the citie of London, and the iudges of the law and al the Justices of peace of al shyres then beynge at Westmynster. And then he sayd, how much is the realme of Englande bounde to God for the hygh peace that now is concluded? A hygh peace, yea such a peace as was neuer concluded betwene no realm, for by my labor and industry I haue knit the realmes of Englande and Fraunce in suche a perfyt knot, ỹ it shall neuer fayle, for the thre estates of Fraunce (which here we cal a Parliamēt) haue affirmed thesame, and therfore now my xxi lordes be mery, for the king shal neuermore charge you with warres in Fraunce, nor the Mayer and other marchaūtes shal neuer be charged farther wyth expences, so that wyth exaccyons for warres of Fraūce you shall no more be charged, for the kynge shal haue no nede, because ỹ he by this league shalbe the rychest prince of the world, for I assure you he shall haue more treasur out of Fraūce yerely then al his reuenewes and customes amount to, yea and count his wardes, forfeytes and all such casualties. Now syth you haue such an honorable peace and suche a profitable peace, how much be you bound to him which hath brought this peace aboute, for this is a peace in secula seculorum. And because thys xxii peace is so noble, it is sealed wyth a seale of golde, and so he caused all there present to looke on the seale, which was the verye greate seale of Fraunce, printed in fine gold: at this tale many a man after laughed to thinke how the Cardinall lyed, for they knew, that he sayd was for his owne glory, and nothing should folowe as he sayd.

The

The Frenche kynge accordinge to his appoyntment sent the lorde Annas of Momorancy great mayster of his house and after that hygh Constable of Fraunce, and the bishop of Bayon, the chiefe president of Roan and Mounsire de Hunyers, as his Ambassadors to the kyng of England accompanyed with.lx. gentlemen wel appointed, whiche the xiiij. day of October lãded at Douer, whose seruauntes demeaned thẽ selfes so passing through Kent, that much busynes was to lodge them in Londõ, but the Cardinal cõmaunded corporaciõs of the citie to provide lodgyng for them, which was neuer sene before, wherat ỹ people murmured sore, saiyng that the Cardinal was al Frenche. So on the xx. day of October, thesayd Ambassadors were met on black heth by ỹ marques of Exceter, the bishop of London, the Vicoũt Rocheford and lord Mountioy wyth many men of honor & gentlemen to the nõber of v. hundred horses and more. The Maior and Aldermen of the citie of Londõ & the chiefe comminers on horsebacke in their gounes met the said Ambassadors at S. Georges bar, & there was made to them a solẽpne oracio, & so frõ thence they were conueied through Londõ to ỹ bishop of Lõdons palais, & ther & nere ther aboute thei wer wel lodged.

The citezens of London presented them with. v. fat orẽ. xx. shepe. xij. xx Swannes. xij. cranes. xij. Fesantz. iiij. dosin Partriches. xx. loaues of Suger, Comfettes and other spyce and waxe, and. viij. hoggesheades of wyne wyth many other thynges, whych I cannot reherse. A present geuen by ỹ city to the ffrech ambassadors

On Tewday being the. xxij. day of Septẽber, thesaid ambassadors wer conueyed by water to Grenewiche, where before the kyng sitting vnder his clothe of estate, the forsayed Mounsire Bayon presydent of Roan made an eloquent proprosicion, in the which he much thanked ỹ kyng for sendynge so high an ambassador as the Cardinall was, a man of such prudence & wit, as it appeared by ỹ knitinge of the league, that like to him could none be found, for by his onely mediacion, the. ij. prin-xxx ces wer accorded so surely as neuer wer princes before that tyme, so ỹ by this confederacion the pope & his cardinals which wer in captiuitie & thaldrome should by the power of these. ij. princes be deliuered & al ỹ Emperors power should be clene banished & driuen oute of Italy, and the Pope shoulde be restored to his olde estate and dignitie agayne.

When this Dracion was done & an answere made to thesame, the kyng welcomed al the gentlemen of Fraunce, & then they had wyne & spyce brought to them, wherof they toke part and drãke & so departed to their barge. Dayly these ambassadors repayred to ỹ cardinals place and ther wer highly entertained, & the morow after S. Simons day xl & Jude the bishop of Bayon & a great nomber of the French gentlemẽ dyned at the Maiors feast, & so they taryed in London til Alhalonday on which day the kyng accompanied with the Ambassadors of Fraũce & all his nobilitie rode to the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul, wher the Cardinall sang Masse, & after masse done, ỹ people wer desired to pray that by their praiers Pope Clemẽt might the soner be deliuered out of captiuitie: and when that was done the kynge of Englande before the aulter ſware to kepe and performe the league. The cõmon people ſayd what nede al this ſwearyng, the French kyng was once ſworne and al his nobilitie, yea & al hys good tounes, but yet they brake with vs, and ſo wyl they agayne when they ſe an auauntage.

The French kyng knyght of the Garter

For the more loue to be engẽdered betwene theſe two princes it was concluded ẏ the kyng of England ſhould elect the French kyng knight of the noble order of the Garter, and that the French kyng ſhould elect the kynge of Englande companion of his order of S. Michel, whyche eleccions paſſed on both parties. Wherefore in all ſpede the kynge ſent & ſir Arthur Plantagenet Vicoũt Liſle & baſtard ſonne to king Edward the fourth, Doctor Tailor Maiſter of the Rolles, ſir Nicholas Carew knight maiſter of ẏ kynges horſes, and ſyr Anthony Broune knyght, & ſir Thomas Wryotheſley knyght beyng Garter kyng of armes of the order, with the whole habite coller and habilimentes of ẏ order, which order he receyued on ſonday the .x. day of Nouẽber in ẏ citie of Paris & rode in the ſayd habit frõ the houſe of S. Poule to our ladye churche and there heard a ſolempne maſſe, & dyned in his robe of the order, hauyng wyth him thambaſſadors of Englãd, and the ſame night he made to them a banket, & ſo the next day thei departed. In likewyſe the ſelfe ſame ſonday, the king at Grenewiche receiued ẏ order of S. Michell by the handes of the great mayſter of Fraunce and Mounſire Huniers compaignions of the ſayd order: and they al there ware the mantles of the ſayd order which were of cloth of ſiluer embrodered with Fraũces knottes & kocle ſhelles, & the collor was of the ſame deuiſe hauing hangynge before the breſt the image of. S. Michel, and in theſe Mantels they went doune to the chaple to Maſſe, and there heard maſſe, which was ſong by a biſhop, & after maſſe they returned to the kynges chamber, wher was made a great feaſt, and after diner which was late they were conueyed into the tyltyard, and ther wer Juſtes of pleaſure. xii. againſt. xij. whych valyauntly furniſhed their courſes, til they had broken. C. ſtaues, and then they departed, for nyght was ſodainlye come. Then the kyng brought the Ambaſſadors to the new banket chamber, which was hanged wyth a coſtly verdor al new, the groũd therof was all gold and the flowers were all of Sattyn ſyluer ſo that by ẏ bryghtſomenes of the gold, the flowers appeared ſo freſhly that thei ſemed as they wer growyng in dede, the cupberdes of gold and gylt plate with the eweryes, the ſame Jouerpaſſe, becauſe you haue hearde thereof in the beginnyng of this yere. Then the kyng, quene & ambaſſadors ſatte doune to ſupper & were ſerued with .lxxxx. diſhes, al the galleries and chambers were ful of lordes, knyghtes & gentlemen, & the garrates aboue ful of French lackeys & verlettes, which wer plẽteouſly ſerued.

The kyng of England knight of the order of ſaint Michel.

The banquet houſe.

After ſupper was done, the king led the ambaſſadors into the great chamber of diſguyſinges, and in the ende of the ſame chãber was a foũtayne, and on the one ſyde was a Hawthorne tre al of ſilke wyth white flowers flowers, and on the other syde of the fountayne was a Mulbery tre ful of of fayze beryes all silke, on the toppe of the Hawthoyne was ỹ armes of England compassed with the coller of the garter of S. Michel, & in the toppe of the Moulberie tree stode the armes of Fraunce wythin a garter. This fountayn was al of whyte Marble grauen & chased, the bases of thesame were balles of golde supporzted by rampynge beastes wounde in leaues of golde. In the first worzcke were gargilles of gold fiersly faced with spoutes running. The second receyt of this fountain was enuironed with wynged serpentes al of golde, which gryped the x second receit of the fountain, & on the sõmit oz toppe of thesame was a fayze lady, out of whose brestes ran aboundantly water of merueilous delicious sauer. About this fountayn wer bẽches of Rosemary fretted in braydes layd on gold, all the sides sette wyth roses in braunches as they wer growyng about this fountayne. On the benches sat. viij. fair ladies in straung attier, & so rychly apparelled in cloth of golde embzodered and cut ouer siluer, that I cannot expzesse the conning worzkmãship therof. Then when the kyng and quene were set, there was playd before them by childzen in the Latin tongue in maner of Tragedy, the A play.

effect wherof was that ỹ pope was in captiuitie & the church brought xx vnder the foote, wherfoze S. Peter appeared and put the Cardinal in authozitie to bzyng the Pope to his libertie, and to set vp the church agayn, and so the Cardinall made intercession to the kinges of England and of Fraunce, that they toke part together, and by their meanes the Pope was delyuered. Then in came the French kynges chyldzen, and complayned to the Cardinal, how the Emperour kept thẽ as hostages and wold not come to no reasonable point with their father, wherfoze thei desyzed ỹ Cardinal to helpe foz their deliueraũce, which wzought so wyth the kyng hys mayster & the French kyng that he bzought the Empezoz to a peace, and caused the two yong pzinces to be delyuered. xxx At this play wisemen smiled & thought that it sounded moze glozious to the Cardinall, then true to the matter in deede.

When the playe was done, and. iiij. companies of maskers daunsed, the king, the great maister of Fraunce, the duke of Suffolke, the marques of Exceter, sir Edward Newel, and other thze apparelled in cloth of gold and purple Tynsyl sattyn set wyth cut warkes of clothe of sylner plyghted goozd fret and folded eche cloth vpõ other, and one plucked vnder another verye rychely: they had also mantels of Crymosyn Sattyn cast about them Bauderike wyse, so that the other garmẽtes myght largely appeare, and then thei entered with noyse of minstrelsy xl and toke the ladies that sat about the fountayne and daũsed wyth thẽ very lustely, and when they had daunsed ynough, then thei put of their vysers, and were knowen, and so wyth disport al this night passed.

The next day the greate maister and al his company toke their leaue of the kyng (except the bishop of Bayon which abode as Ambassadoz in England) and were hyghly rewarded, and so passed to Douer, & toke The Ambassadors departed shippe there and landed at Bulleyn.

After that the Frenchmē wer departed, ỹ cōmons spake sore against the Cardinal & sayd, that the Frenchmen did neuer good to England, and for the Cardinals pleasure we should forsake our old frendes, and receiue our olde enemies. When the Cardinal heard of these sayinges he was not content, wherfore he sent a Cōmission to the Maior of Lō-don to cōmaunde al men not to talke of ỹ kynges affaires & busynes or of ỹ quene, or of the kynges counsail. And yf any person spake or talked of any of these matters, then he to be taken & brought to the Cardinal. When this commaundement was once knowē, euery man mystrusted other, and noman durst breake his minde to other.

In this moneth of Nouember the Cardinal as legate called ỹ whole clergie before him at Westminster & there he saide that all the abusions of the church should be amended, but he did nothinge therto, but abiu-red, Arthur, Bylney, Geffery Lome, and Garret that spake against ỹ Popes auctho*r*itie and hys pompe and pryde.

Arthur, Bil-ney Geffrey Lome and Garret.

By reason of the great raynes, which fel in the sowing time & in the beginning of the last yere, now in the beginning of thys yere corne be-gan sore to fayle throughout the realme, in so muche that in the citie of London, bread for a whyle was bery skant and people did starue daily for bread, for wheat so fayled that none could be gottē for money. Sa-uyng that the king of his goodnes sent to the citie of his owne prouy-sion. vj. C. quarters, or els for a weeke ther had ben litle bread in Lon-don, yet was the scarcitie more then ỹ derth: For then wheat was only at. xv. s. the quarter, & frō thēce it rose to. xx. s. & after to. xxvj. s. viij. d the quarter. Men sayd that the negligēce was in sir Thomas Seimer knyght then Maior. Many substanciall men would haue made prouy-sion for their houses, but they feared lest the cōmunaltie would haue ta-ken it from them. Then were cōmissions sente into all shires and com-missioners appoynted to se what wheat was in the realme, and the cō-missioners ordered that no wheate should be conueyed out of one shire to another, which cōmaundement had lyke to haue raysed trouble, and specially the citie of London wher the same was sore agreued, for thei had no arable ground to sowe, but must make prouision with money, which prouision was them denied in diuerse shires by that commaundement, wherat the citezens grudged, so the Maior and Aldermen seyng that the people began to murmure, came to the Cardinall & moued him of ỹ mischiefe that was like to ensue: either the people must dye for famyne or elz they wyth strong hand wil fetche corne from them that haue it. To whō he answered ỹ they should haue wheat ynough out of Fraūce for the French kyng sayd to me quod the Cardinall that yf he had but three bushels of corne in all Fraunce, Englande shoulde haue twayne so muche he loueth & regardeth this realme: with this answer thei de-parted & euery day loked for Frēch wheat, but none came: and farther such wheat as ỹ Marchaūtes of England had brought and shipped in

A great derth of wheate.

Nor-

Normãdy, and other places wer ther restrained, so that the relefe ther failed, but the gentle marchauntes of ỹ Stylliard brought frõ Danske, Breme, Hainbrough and other places great plẽtie, also did other marchaũtes from Flaũders, Holand and Frisslande, so that wheat was better chepe in London, then in all England ouer. Then the people sayd, se how we had bene serued by the Frenchmen in our necessitie if thẽperors subiectes had not holpen vs. For this kindnes the cõmon people loued themperor the better & al hys subiectes. The kyng of hys goodnes hearyng that ỹ wheat in Fraunce was stopped, mused not a litle, & so for comfort of thys cyty of Londõ he lent. M. quarters, for ỹ whych thy y both thãked him and prayed for hym. Thẽ wythin short space the marchauntes of London so diligently made prouysyõ in all places for Wheat and Rye, that after Christmas they lacked none, and al the parties adioynyng to them wer fain to fetch wheate of them and none to them was denied, notwythstanding their vnkynd cõmaundement geuen that the Londoners should none haue of them.

xx Now let vs speake of the army ỹ the lord Lawtrick had into Italy at ỹ charges of the king of England & the Frenche kyng for the deliuerãce of pope Clemẽt. The lord Lawtrick after that hys whole army was come to hym to Liõs, & that al thynges necessary wer in redines, then he set forwarde wyth great diligence: but or he had passed ỹ moũtaines, ỹ Uenicians army was come into Lõbardy abydyng ỹ cõmyng of the Frenchmen, and in the meane season they marched toward thẽperors army which lay at ỹ citie of Millain. Wherof hearyng Anthony de Leua wyth. viij. C. Almaines and Spanyardes on fote, & as many Italians marched forward to mete wb thẽ, & by force caused thẽ to take the toune of Meligna for refuge, where he hearing ỹ Jhõ de Medices with a great nomber wer cõming toward the Uenicians, he in the euenyng or his enemies were aware sodainly set on the sayd Jhõ de Me-xxx dyces, whiche began to set his men in an order, but he was so enclosed that he could do nothing, but tooke his horse and fled and left his company alone, which were slayn almost al, and lost four great pieces of ordinaunce, whych Anthony de Leua caried with him to Millayn. In which season the lorde Lawtrick with his army was passed the mountaines and was come to the citie of Aster abyding the Swiches, wher he heard tell how that Lewes Erle of Lodrõ with a great crew of Almaines was come to the toune of Boske nye Alexandry with money & vytail to ayde the Almanies that kept Alexandry: wherfor he sent hys horsemen to stoppe them that they should not passe to Alexandry, and xl after thẽ he folowed wyth his whole army, and besieged thẽ in Boske which a certain daies defended, but at the last they yelded the toune & became souldiers to the Lord Lawtrick. In this same season Andrew Dorie Admyral of the French Nauy lay before the hauen of Gene and kept the Genowayes from al marchaundise and vytailes which to the cyty might repaire, & in especiall he letted certain shippes of corne whiche lay at Pōt de Ferry betwene Gene and Sauona to come to Gene. The Genowayes which lacked cozne and were on the land side beſieged by a citezen of their own which was on the French part called Ce-ſar Fulgoſus, imagined how to bzing the ſhippes of cozne into the citie, and when they ſawe that Andzewe Dozy had but. xvij. Galeys. They pzepared. vj. Galeys to fyght with Andzew Dozye. Durynge whyche fight the ſhippes with cozne ſhuld entre ẏ hauen. When the galeis wer abzode, a ſodain tempeſt roſe wyth ſuch a violence, that Andzew Dozy was fayne to take the pozt of Sauona foz his ſuccoz, and ſo the ſhippes of cozne came ſafe into the hauen of Geane, & all the Galeys in ſafetie: x this good was foztune to Geane at this tyme.

When the citezens of Geane were thus vitayled, they toke to them good courage, & in warlyke maner iſſued oute againſt Ceſar Fulgoſus which knew wel that thei had litle mozе then. iij. C. Spanyardes that could ſkill of the war, and as foz the remnant were neither of ſtomacke noz of experience in warre, wherfoze he boldely ſet on them, and whyle they were fighting wythout, ẏ citezens wythin which be euer mutable ſodainly cried Fraunce Fraunce, whiche clamour came to the eares of Adurnus which was imperial, wherfoze he retyzed backe into the citie to appeace the rumoz, but their enemies folowed them in ſuch haſt that xx both entred together, and ſo Geane was become Frēch. Then thither came the lozde Lawtrick, and put there a capitaine wyth a retinue foz ẏ ſafe keping of the citie. Then Adurnus duke of Geane whych was in the caſtle with diuers of the Emperozs frendes and lacked vitail & ſaw no comfozt of reſkew, yelded the caſtle vpon condicion to departe wyth bagge and baggage, & ſo they dyd. In the meane ſeaſon certain Frēch-men which were left at Boſke defaced the toune, and then came befoze Alexandzie, & there kepte a ſiege volant that no ayde oz ſuccoz ſhoulde come to the toune, til the whole army wer aſſembled to beſiege ẏ toun.
But foz al that purpoſe, by the Dounes of Alexandzie, Albericke Bar- xxx bian wyth. v. C ſouldiers came into the toune, whych much comfozted the garryſon there which was in maner diſmayed becauſe their aid at Boſke had fayled them. The Frenchmen beſieged the toune and bet it wyth ozdynaūce, and they within manfully defended it, and made new coūtermures, ſo that their enemies could not enter without ieoperdy.
But at the laſt ẏ Uenicias bzought thither great pieces of ozdinaūce. whych ſo ſoze bet the walles that Baptiſt Lodzyn the capitayn ſaw ẏ he was not able to defende it & ſo he delyuered ẏ toune vpō thys cōpo-

Fraūces Sfozcia accozding to ẏ league, whych Fraūces put there a cō-ueniēt garryſō. Thēce ẏ army remoued to Belgraſſe which to thē was yelded & alſo deliuered to ẏ duke of Millain, & frō thence thei remoued toward ẏ citie of Millain, wherof hering Anthony de Leua fozteſied ẏ caſtle

of Millayn and sent Lewes Barbyan to defende the city of Pauy.

When the Lorde Lawtryck was within.viij.mile of Myllayn, he sodainly returned toward Pauy, which men iudged to be done for the displeasure ẏ was done there to ẏ Frenchmen, whē their king was taken, & so the.xix.day of Septēber thei besieged Pauy, & daily betwene them wer great skyrmisches, but at last they bet the walles so w̄ greate ordinaunce, that they made the toune assautable. Then the Frenchmē threwe into the dyches fagottes and emptye pipes, and shortly entred the toune. The capitayn perceiuing the toune entred, opened the gate x and yelded himself prisoner. Then the Frenchmen slewe and kylled on euery syde, robbed and spoyled houses & churches, & spared no person nor place, and of crueltie raūsomed one man.v.or.vj.times, & the Gascoynes, which were most cruel, set fier in the fayre houses, & had brent the whole citie if the lord Lawtryck after.vij.dayes spoilyng had not commaunded them to cease. When Pauye was thus taken & spoyled, the Lorde Lawtrick determined with the Cardinal Innocent legate of Bonony, which was come for the deliueraunce of the pope incōtinēt to passe to Rome and to dryue away al the Emperors power frō thence and to restore the Pope to libertie.

xx Fraunces Sforcia duke of Myllayn hearing of this determinacion came to the lord Lawtrick to Pauye, and required him first to rid the duchy of Millayn of themperors souldiers, rather then to go forward and leaue his enemies behynd him. The Lord Lawtryck answered ẏ he was of thesame opinion, but the cōmission that he had of the French kyng, and the kyng of England was, that with all spede he shoulde go forward to delyuer the bishop of Rome, which done, he faythfully promised that he would returne and expulse all the Emperors powr out of Lombardy, and in the meane ceason he woulde that the duke & the Uenecians shoulde besiege Anthony de Leua in the castle of Millayn.

xxi Duke Fraunces semed to be content with this answer, but yet he perceiued, that the French kyng cared not for his restorying, lest he should be emperiall. So for that tyme the duke dissembled the matter & toke possession of the citie of Pauye. When the Lorde Lawtrick had layen xvj.dayes at Pauy, he dismissed the Swiches which in no wise would go with him to Rome, wherfor he marched forward w̄ his owne army & came to Pleasance, where he cōcluded a league with Alphōs duke of Farrer, & Frederycke marques of Mantua, so ẏ then he knew wel that he might wel passe in safetie: & then in good ordre of battail he marched toward Rome for ẏ finishing of this enterpryse. But or he was passed xl out of Lōbardy thēperor had sent letters to the B. of Rome & excused him self, that he neither willed nor commaūded such mischief to be done & straightly cōmaunded his captaynes to delīuer him. The Prince of Orēge & other captayns of thēperors hearing his cōmaundemēt, toke agremēt w̄ ẏ pope & his Cardinals, & so he & .xij. cardinals wer bound to performe certen articles to ẏ nōber of.xi. & thē he was deliuered out

the Castle sayncte Angel the.x. day of December and was conueyed to Clemẽt pope delyuered. Oruyet. wherafter he had payed certayn money for the souldiars wages he was put at full libertie & the Emperors people departed from him, and thence he remoued to Ancona. When tydynges was brought into Englande of his deliuerannce, the Cardinall in greate hast caused Te deum to be song on Newyeres day in the kinges Chapel and declared openly that he was escaped & sayd not delyuered, whyche made manye men to muse: & on sonday the.x. day of January the Cardinal w great triumph came to the church of S. Paule in London, and on him attẽded diuers prelates and the Clergy, and there Te deum was song againe and after that doctor Capon openlydeclared howe ỹ byshop Clement had ben long kept in distres by faulte of tyrannes and infideles, and so kept as prysoner to the behofe of Charles the Emperor, til now of late through the prayers of good Christen people he was escaped the handes of hys enemies, for whych cause he wylled all men to geue thankes to God. That nyght were great fyers made in the kynges courte and in al London. Shortlye after this trueth was knowen, that the Pope was delyuered by composicion, and not frely escaped as the Cardinall had blowen abroade, but men sayd that he coulde not leaue his liynge.

xx Whyle the lord Lawtrick was cõtinually goyng forwarde to delyuer pope Clemẽt, he was credibly enformed at Bonnony, that he was delluered and at his libertie, wherfore he thought his iorney voyde to go to Rome to do nothing, he therfor determined to turne toward Napels and to take the citie, yf it were not fortefyed or replenyshed wyth men of war, & so according to this purpose he iornied forward w great dilygence. The Emperors capitaynes perceyuyng the Frenchemens entent, caused al their souldioures to depart out of Rome in the beginnyng of Februarye (which was against the mynde of the souldiers) and so came into the realme of Napels and fortefied certain tounes as thei passed, and so came to a toune called Troy and there they taried: This xxx remouing was to thẽ very profitable. For yf thei had taried at Rome they had bene set on wyth the Italians on the one syde, & the Frẽchmẽ on the other syde, that by euery mans iudgemente they should al haue bene taken or slayne. The lorde Lawtrick departed from Bonnony to Inmole and so to Fayance Forlicke, Pezere, Senegal, Ancone, Rauẽna, Loret and to Ferne, which was at the foote of the mountaynes of Sybylles in the Duchie of Bresse percell of the realme of Napels, in whiche were certain nobles of that coũtrey whiche seynge the armye so puyssant departed thence to Napels. As the armye passed the moũtaines in the Lent season, there died of very cold .v.C. Gascoines and xl mo, and so wyth much payne they came nere to Troy in Puylle the.xv day of Marche, where the Spaniardes, and the Emperors army lay. Sir Robert Iernyngham of Englãd which was captain of the lyght horsemen, knowing their enemies so nere, desired the Lord Lawtrick that he wyth hys company might assay the Spaniardes. The Lorde

Lawtrick

Lawtreck(whether it was for lacke of corage, or ỹ he were corrupted by money)in no wise would suffre sir Robert Jerningham to fight,but saied he would take theim at a more auauntage shortly, which answere sore greued sir Robert,in somuche he said he would accuse hym,to both the kynges their Masters.

The Spaniardes which laie at Troy,thought to entre Naples before the Frenchmen,and so on the.xxi.daie of Marche beeyng Saterdaie,they remoued & came to Naples,& fortified the citie, whyche was happie for the Emperor,for surely yf ỹ Frenhemen had come first, they x had been Masters of the citie. After ỹ Emperors people were departed from Troy,as you haue hard,the Frenchmen besieged it,and within a xi.daies it was to them yelded,& from thense thei remoued to Melphe a strõg litle toune,wher thei slewe & put to slight.iiij.M. Spaniardes but thei lost many of their men ther,so that this toune was not to them very profitable:Sith ỹ armie was entered into the realme of Naples there was euer some sickenes emongest them,and in especial there raygned emongest thẽ a sore hote feuer,of the which many gentlemen died or thei came to Naples,for at the toune of Uerse there died sir Richard Jernyngham,& Jhon Carew of Hackam, two valiant capitaines, sent xi thether by the kyng of Englande and diuerse other,whiche two gentlemen be there buried.

When the Frenchmen had takẽ Melphe, thei remoued to Boniuent and from thence to Magdelon,where thei laye all Easter: & after Easter thei came before the citie of Naples, & firste they tooke the Palace that standeth without the citie,very pleasant to beholde,and after that was takẽ,thei planted their siege round aboute the citie, and cast trenches,& made forcifications, for the defence of sodain inuasions of their enemies:all the whole armie laie in an open plaine ground,without couerture very nere the citie,by reason whereof, thei wer sore cũbered wͤ xxx hete and drouth, whereupon ensued greate mortalitie & death, for yf thei had lien on the hill side nere couerte,thei had liẽ more whole somly, but their intent was to lye nere the citie,to the intent to kepe their enemies straight,and therfore thei planted their siege in the playne,which turned them to muche displeasure & disease. Thus was the siege planted before Naples,in the beginnyng of Aprill, & cõtinued till the.xxvj. daie of August next insuyng, and then by meane of mortalitie they remoued as you shall here.

When the lord Lawtreck was thus passing toward Naples,sir Frãces Poynes Knight,which was sent with Clarẽseaux kyng of Armes xl into Spain to the Emperor,returned into Englãd before Christmas, in thende of December,and left Clarenseaux behynd,to bryng farther answere frõ themperor of thynges demaũded,wherof he said he would take lõger aduice or he would answere. This sir Frances reported that the Emperor so muche fauored and estemed the kyng of England,that at his onely request and contemplaciõ, he had released and discharged thelue artícles, which wer moste greuous & dispzofitable to the frēche kyng, not foz the French kynges sake, but at the intercessiō of the kyng of Englande: yet this notwithstandyng, the Cardinall so inuegled the kyng, that he so highly fauozed the French kyng, that all his causes he tooke and reputed as his awne, and did all that he might, to bzyng the Frenche kynges purposes aboute.

The Emperoz before this time had wzitten to the Frenche kynge, & also aduertised thereof the French Ambassadozs, that laye in Spaine, that he would that the Frenche kyng should sende to hym a diffinitiue answere, yf he would withdzawe his people out of Italy oz not, and let & the Duchie of Millain alone, and to cease of all Inuasions oz not, and this answere to be geuen the last day of January folowyng, and yf the sayd French kyng answered not by that day, thē the lacke of answer to be taken foz a defiaunce. Then the French Ambassadozs before the day, shewed to the Emperour, the pzoffer which the French kyng offered to hym in articles, as you haue harde before, in the conclusion taken at Amias by the Frenche kynge and the Cardinall in August laste passed.

Thēperozs answere to the foresaied Articles.

Which pzofers when the Emperoure had hard and seen, he saied to the Ambassadours, we thought surely that our cosin the French kyng and we, had been at a full conclusion, when the league and appoyntmēt was & agreed at our toune of Madzill: foz when he sued foz his deliueraunce to vs, he and his counsaill offered vs certain pzofers, whiche we neuer demaunded, but we of pitie hauyng compassion of his affliccion, accepted the saied offers, and agreed to his deliueraunce, whiche Artícles he pzomised in the othe of a kyng, & also on the holy Euangelistes, to perfozme to the vttermoste, & theim inuiolatly to obserue and kepe. Wherupon wee clerely remitted, and deliuered hym into his countrey, of all which pzomises he hath perfozmed none, wherfoze we take him as periured, and not wozthy to be trusted, and nowe he offereth newe offers, which he cannot perfozme, as foz the money we beleue he is able to pay, & but as foz money dewe foz the kyngdō of Naples, we knowe not suche dutie, foz it is our inheritaunce, although kyng Charles ỹ seuenth, by sotletie once vsurped thesame, which he longe not enioied: as to release his title to Millain, that release is voyde, foz ỹ Duchie is Imperiall, & in our gifte as many other seigniozies be: and as touchyng Tournay, ours it is of right and now in our possession: So that in all these thynges he would release and rendze thynges that he hath not: & as to the withdzawyng of his armie out of Italy, he shall not nede, foz we truste that our armie shall expell them al Italy, maugre their hartes. And as touchyng the kyng of Nauerr, the Duke of Gelder, and Robert de la & Marche, we of pitie let them alone till we se our tyme, & then they shall knowe our puyssaunce: And as touching his offre to aide vs wt a nauie, we trust we haue such a nauie pzouided, that we shal nede none of his: & where he saith he will mary our sister quene Aelienoz, daughter to ỹ kyng of Poztyngal, if he had been true, ỹ he might haue doē oz this, but

nowe wee entende not to geue her to our enemie: and as touchyng her daughter to bee maried to the Dolphyn, that wee leaue in suspence for this tyme. But wher he saieth that he wil defend vs, that toucheth our honour, for well knoweth he that our awne myght & puyssaunce, hath euer defended vs, and hym & his power hath defaced and vanquished wherefore we nede not of his defence, which is not able to defend hym self: & as touchyng the kynge of Englandes debt, we shall reasonably answere his Ambassadours, for that toucheth not the Frenche kyng: But now my Lordes Ambassadours, sayd the Emperor, let the French x kyng your Master, fulfull the promise that he was sworne to, as a true Prince ought to do, & then he shall haue his children deliuered, or els accordyng to his othe, let hym yelde hymselfe prisoner agayn, & so shall his honor and truthe be saued, or els not: so with this answere the Ambassadors departed. Neuertheless thei daily sued to the Emperour & his Counsaill to take the offers whyche were profered by the Frenche kyng, & emongest other thynges, the warre was fore laied to the Frenche Ambassadours charge, for that that the Frenche kyng made warre on the Emperours possessions, without cause and without defiaūce, to whiche accusement they answered that that armye was procured by ỹ xx Cardinal of Englande, when he was at Amias, for the deliuery of Clement Bishop of Rome, and that the kynge of Englande bare the moste charge. When the Emperour hard this answere, he sent for ỹ Ambassadoure of Englande, and to hym saied: My Lorde Ambassadoure, I muche maruaill why the kyng your Master, hath so great loue to the Frenche kyng, his newe reconsiled frende, & withdrawen his loue from me, that am his cosyn & alye: How fortuneth this, that your olde auncient enemies bee now in fauoure, and your olde frendes cast out of fauoure. I se well there is indignaciō had at our estate, and waies sought to greue vs, whiche wee hope to wythstande: But who woulde haue xxx though that our Uncle of Englande, would haue made warre on vs: How would he haue vs graunt his requestes & desires for the Frenche kyng, seyng he sheweth hymself our open enemy: Then the Ambassadoure discretly answered, that he neither heard nor knewe of suche doynges, on his faithe and honoure. Well saied the Emperoure, yf it bee true that is reported, myne Uncle is not the Prince that I haue taken hym for, and yf he be myne enemye, I muste withstande hym, and in a greate fury, the Emperoure withdrewe him from the Ambassadour, to his priuie chamber.

Daily the Ambassadours, bothe of Englande and of Fraunce, sollixl cited themperor and his counsail, to accept the French Kynges offers, which made euer answere, that thei would not truste to the newe promise, seyng that the olde promise which was sworne, was not obserued and kept. Nowe whosoeuer indifferently shall consider, the Articles which were offered in the treatie of Madrill, and the Articles offered now at Amias shall openly perceiue, that the greatest thyng which the Frenche kyng refused to do, was the deliuery of ỹ Duchie of Burgoyn and the Countie Charoloys, for declaracion whereof, the French kyng sent for all the nobles of bothe the countreys, and declared theim thys promise and concord, takē wyth the Emperor, which answered that no realme or dominion could be transferred to any forrein prince or person without the sentence, agrement, and submission of the nobles, and commons of thesame countrey, and therefore they would neuer assent to ỹ alteracio: This answer was deliuered to lorde Charles de la Noa Uiceroy of Naples, then Ambassador for the Emperor in Fraunce, which thereof certified the Emperours counsaill. But the Emperoure & hys Counsaill thought this to bee but a deceipte, in so muche as the French kyng had onely called suche of Burgoyne, as hym pleased, and not the substanciall of the countrey. And farther the Emperor so much desired the Duchie of Burgoyne, because he was the very heire there of bloud discended from duke Philip, soonne to kyng Jhon of Fraunce, that by no meanes he would haue that article broken, but he would haue that Duchie. The French kyng perceiued his mynd, & offered to hym great sommes of money for ỹ redemyng of that article, the kyng of England also offered to be suretie for the paiment: but all this could not moue ỹ Emperour, but he would haue Burgoyne, and all thesaied treatie and agrement performed.

The kyng of England considerynge how muche he had doen for the Emperor, and callyng to his remembraunce, bothe that the Lordes & Commons of Spaine, would not haue taken hym as kyng his mother liuyng (although she wer Lunatike) because she was heire, without his greate labour and intercession, and also that he holpe hym to be elected Emperour, which the Frenche kyng had obteigned, yf he had not put thereunto his aide, and sent Docter Richard Pace his Secretory to ỹ Electors to Franckeford, and moste of all that he at all tymes, had succoured thesaied Emperoure with money, and was not paied, wherfore he was not alitle displeased with the Emperours wilfulnes, but more with his vnkyndnes, and perceiued clerely, that sith by his meanes he was so exalted, that now he had forgottē al the kyndnes to him shewed wherfore he thought to make him to knowe hymself by warres, the soner to bryng hym to accomplishe his request, & to make him to remember his olde kyndnes, & so by the auise of the Cardinal of Yorke (which loued not the Emperoure, for the Bishoppe of Romes case) and other of his counsaill, he sent wooyde to Clarenseaux knyg of armes, to make defiaunce to the Emperour, and so Guyau Herault for the French kyng and thesayd Clarenseaux for the kyng of England, the. xiij. day of January, in the citie of Burgues in Castle, came before the Emperour beynge nobly accompaignied with Dukes, Marqueses, Earles, and Barons, in his greate hall, and there made their defiaunce.

Defiaunces made to the Emperour.

When the defiaunces were made by bothe the Kynges of Armes, as you haue heard, all the nobles which were present, as the Constable of

Castell,

Castell, the Duke of Malledonia, the Duke of Inuancalo, the Duke of Alberkirke, the Duke of Ciuill, the Duke of Nassaw, or Nazareth, the Duke of Aluoy, the Marques of Sturgus, the Marques of Agular, the Marques of Ullafranca, the Erle Barcelon, the Erle of Salamatero, the Erle Boniuent, the Erle Arowen, the Erle Agulard, the Erle Salienas, the Erle Geneuer, with sixe great Lordes Cõmendatories Crossed, and many other noble menne and gentlemen, for a truthe to ỹ nomber, of seuen hundred at the least: all these drewe out their swerdes and sware that the defiaunces then made should be reuenged, & sayed x to the Emperour: Sir, yf the dispite of this defiaunce be vnreuenged, the infamy & rebuke thereof, shall remain to vs and our heires for euer wherfore our landes, lifes, and lordshippes, shalbe at your commaundement, and while any lyen of your succession remain, thys ignominie shalbe euer newe and not dye, till you haue obteigned the double honor against all your enemies.

When the Emperor was thus defied, the warre was Proclaimed in Ciuill, in Valedolite, in Burgus, & in other places through all Spain: But when the commen people heard of this defiaunce, they wrong thẽ selfes by the berdes and sware, that all their landes and goodes should xx be spent, for the honor of the Emperor, & to be reuenged on the French kyng, whom they called periured Prince, and so the common people cried in ỹ stretes, now is come the tyme, that Spain shalbe renoumed, and reuenged on the Frenchmen, for their falsenes & wrong doynges. But alas saied they, why should we make warre with the Englishe nacion, whiche euer loued vs, & neuer offended vs: but this defiance procedeth not of them, but onely of the French kyng, and of the Cardinall of Englande, whiche is sworne French: thus the Spanyardes talked, and euer excused the kyng of Englande, and accused the Cardinall and saied, that he had a greate pencion out of Spain, and that notwithstã-xxx dyng, because he might not haue the bishoprycke of Toledo, he caused al this warre. This Proclamacion of warre, was proclamed with baners displaied, in the which were painted a redde swerde, and a Cresset burnyng, against the French kyng and his parte takers, not meanyng the kyng of Englande, by expresse name, but it was rehersed in the Proclamacion, that the kyng of England had manaced, and defied the Emperour, in the French kynges querell. Then wer the Englishe Merchantes in Spain attached, and their goodes put in safe custody, and to thẽ was saied that they were staied onely, till ỹ Emperour was aduertised how his subiectes were ordered in England.

The Englishe Merchantes arrested in Spain.

xl Tidynges of this was first knowen in Fraunce, and from thence letters were sent to the French Ambassadours in Londõ, how bothe the Ambassadors of Fraunce and of Englande, beyng in Spaine, & Guien and Clarenseaux officers of Armes, wer retained by the Emperor as prisoners, which report was false, for thei were at libertie, and wel cherished, and in especiall the Englishe Ambassadors and Clarẽseaux wer frendly enterteined in all places. When the Cardinal hard this repoꝛt he was to light of credence (which he foꝛthought afterward) and was soꝛe there with moued, and in his fury the.xij. day of Febꝛuary, he caused Don Hugo de Ꝛ̄dosa, the Emperoꝛs Ambassadoꝛ, to be taken out of his house, in sainct Swithines lane in London, and to be bꝛought to sir Jhon Dounces place in Marke lane, as a pꝛisoner, & his house with his goodes were kept by the Cardinalles seruauntes, till the kynges plesure wer farther knowen.

The Cardinalles saiyng in the Starre Chamber.

The moꝛowe after beyng the.xiij. day of Febꝛuary, the Cardinal beyng in the Starre chamber, called befoꝛe hym al Justices of the Peace & and other honest personages to a greate nomber, & to them sayed: My loꝛdes and all you the kynges louyng subiectes, his graces pleasure is that I should declare to you, howe that his highnes, not of his awne seking, but rather against his will and intent, is entered into warre: foꝛ the electe Emperoꝛ Charles the fifth, hath hym so handeled & moued, that he must of necessitie with him make war. First, it is not vnknowen to you all, how good the kyng hath been to hym, sithe his infancie, how he hath defended his lowe countreis duryng his noneage: Ye what payn ꝑ kyng toke by his Ambassadoꝛs, to sollicite the loꝛdes of Spayn, which refused to take him as their kyng, while his mother liued, & by ꝑ & kynges onely laboꝛ, he came to the kyngdom of Spain, what it cost the kyng to helpe him to be Emperoꝛ, we that be his counsailers can tel, foꝛ yf the kyng had not been, surely ꝑ Frēche kyng had been Emperoꝛ. Beside all these kyndnesses, he hath lent to the said Emperoꝛ, diuerse great sommes of money, to defend his countreys, & what pꝛofite his coūtreis haue by the resoꝛt of Englishmen thether, ye that be Merchauntes can tell: foꝛ these thynges with many mo pꝛoffites, cōmodities, and gratuities, the kynge of him is so litle regarded, that I am halfe asshamed to repoꝛt it. True it is that Frances the Frenche kyng, was to hym pꝛisoner (which chaunce hath happened to many high pꝛinces) the kyng our & & master, highly regardyng the peace of Christen pꝛinces, by which peace God might the moꝛe be gloꝛified: desired the Emperoꝛ to take some resonable ende foꝛ his deliueraunce and foꝛ that purpose hath sent to him sondery Ambassadoꝛs, which gaue them eares, but dalied with them, & nothyng would do at all, and regarded no moꝛe his requestes, then I would the desire of my seruaunt (and perauenture not so much) so that foꝛ all gratuities and frendshippes to hym, by the kyng our souereigne loꝛde, at all tymes shewed, he sheweth himself ingrate and vngentle, & foꝛ kyndnes rendereth vnkyndnes: as foꝛ the Frenche kyng I assure you, he hath hūbled hymself asmuche as a pꝛince maie, his honoꝛ saued. & He hath offered hym so great offers, that excepte he shoulde geue hym his realme and Croune, he can offer no moꝛe larger, which offers I assure you, soꝛe minishe the beautie of his Croune, whiche I shall bꝛeuely declare vnto you. Foꝛ he offereth to paie fiue hundꝛed thousand pounds sterlyng, whereof thꝛee hundꝛed thousande, to be paied in hand, foꝛ the remnaunt sufficient Bankers to be bound, and farther to discharge the Emperoure, of all suche sommes of money, as he oweth to the kyng of Englande, and to deliuer hym a sufficient acquitaunce for thesame. Also where the French kyng should haue, out of the kyngdome of Naples an hundred thousande Crounes yerely, the Frenche kyng will release thesame pencion, with all the arrerages whiche are no smal some. Also he will release his whole title and right, which he hath to the Duchie of Millayne, hys very enheritaunce, and he neuer to chalenge or claime thesame nor his posteritie. Also where the Countie of Flaūders x maye lawfully appeale to the Parliamentes of Fraunce, from iudgementes geuen by the Emperour or his Justices, he is contēt to release thesame superiorite and resorte, which is a greate minishement to the prerogatiue royall, of the Realme of Fraunce, for whiche of you (sayed the Cardinal) would consent that the kyng should release his Seigniorite or superiorite of Wales, Irelande, or Cornewall, I dare saie you would rather spende your liues and goodes.

Farther where the Frenche kyng bought of the kynge the Citie of Tournay, for sixe hundred thousande Crounes and odde, yet he is content to yelde and release thesame Citie to the Emperoure for euer, yea, xi and beside this he offereth to take to wyfe, Elianor quene Dowager of Portyngall, without any dower, yea, in her kirtel, & to endowe her with tenne thousande Markes sterlyng by the yere, and farther that the child yf it be a male, whiche shalbe gotten of theim two, shalbe duke of Burgoyne, and be partetaker of all the honours of Fraunce, whiche is a greate thyng: Also that ỹ Dolphyn his sonne and heire, shall mary the daughter of thesaied Ladye Elianor, without any treasure to bee receiued for thesame, whiche proffer is worthe two hundred thousand Markes sterlyng.

Farther more, he wol lende the Emperour Shippes and Mariners xii to conueigh hym to Rome, and also defende him against all menne, yea, what woll he doo more, although the kyng of Nauer haue maried hys awne sister, whose Kyngdome the Emperour kepeth by force, yet he offereth neither to ayde nor comforte hym against the Emperour, but in his querel to be against him: Also he offereth to forsake his old and approued frendes, Sir Robert de la Marche, and the Duke of Gelders, whiche faithfully hat serued the realme of Fraunce, and al for the Emperours sake. But the Emperoure saied he, is so indurate, so vnkynde and wilfull, that he neither regardes the reasonable requestes, nor yet the kynges praiers nor requestes, but answered and sayed: that yf the xi Frenche kyng can dooe all this, he shall haue his children. So that the Emperoure woll truste no manne, but euery manne muste truste hym: Yet the French kyng offereth farther, to withdrawe the puyssaun armye of the Lorde Lawtrecke in Italy, and yet thesame passeth prosperously forwarde, and is like to doo the Emperour more disauauntage, then I wyll now reherse: but the Emperour is so proude, & his people so cruell, ȳ he nothyng regardeth these offers: for what a crueltie was this, to pull doune Goddes Uicar of Rome, and persecut the holy fathers by extreme tyranny, violated the holy Sacrament, and threw ȳ hostes doune on the aultar, and like robbers toke the Pixe: & farther in the Churche, they violated Uirgins, and stupred matrones, and dispoyled the holy Reliques of the citie of Roms. And like as the kyng in huntyng tyme hath slain. iij. C. dere, and the garbage & paunches bee cast round about, in euery quarter of the Parke, so (saied the Cardinal) euery strete laye full of the priuie members and genitures of the Cardinalles & holy prelates: the whole history were to abhominable to tel. x Yet notwithstandyng al these offers mocioned, & nothyng regardyng this detestable tyranny, the which euery good Christē man abhorreth, he will encline to no reason, I am sure that I could shewe you. xx. articles of promises, which he hath broken with the kyng: so that I assure you, he kepeth no promise with our souereigne lord, also contra ius Gencium, which I am sure the greate Turke woulde not doue, he kepeth prisoner the kynges Ambassador Docter Lee, the French Ambassador, and the Ambassadour of Uenice: and for asmuche as the Emperor refuseth these offers, which amount to eight kynges raunsomes, I trust by this warre we shall bridle hym, & bryng hym to peace, and this occasion of xx warre, I would al I you should declare in your countrey.

The murmor of the people

When the Cardinal had saied, some knocked other on the elbow, and sayd softly he lieth, other sayd, ȳ euill wil sayd neuer well, other saied ȳ the French crounes, made him speake euill of themperor, but thei that knewe all that you haue hard before saied, that it was shame for hym to lie in suche an audience. The common people much lamented, that war should arise betwene the kyng and themperor, and especiall their consideration was, because the Emperors dominions, had holpē them with corne, and releued thē with grain, whē thei could haue no corne, or litle out of Fraunce. And in this rumor wer diuerse ships come out of Flaū xxx ders and that parties, ladē with Heryng, Sturgion, & all other victale necessary, beside eight faire shippes, which wer laden with corne, all the saied shippes, and all the shippes of Spain, wer staied and arested, and their sailes taken from them, and put in safe custodie. This doyng was muche talked of by Merchantes, which frequented the Emperors dominiyns, for thei knewe and openly sayd, that the let of the entercourse of Merchantes, should turne to the greate losse of the Princes, but yet Englishemen were content, to obeye their kyng and his counsaill.

Shippes cu rested.

The declaracion of warre in Englande against the Emperoure, and the restraint of Shippes of the Emperoures Subiectes, were shortly xl knowen to the Lady Margaret daughter of Sauoy, and aunte to the Emperour, which was gouernor of Flaunders, Brabant, and Zelande and of all the Lowe Countreis: wherfore she by the auice of the Emperoures Counsaill to her associate, caused all the Englishemen and their goodes and Shippes to be restrained, and thei and their goodes were put put in safe keppyng. Thus the poore Merchantes suffered greate losse, for the doynges of their Princes, as Horace saieth: Quicquid delirant Reges, plectuntur Achini: what soeuer kynges do, the Commons be punished. Now after this sodain storme, which the Cardinal had moued openly against the Emperour, for euill entreatyng of the kynges Ambassadour, he had perfect knowlege that the Emperor, bothe did the kynges Ambassador greate honour, and also that he neuer restrained hym from his libertie, wherupon he caused the Emperors Ambassador, which before was rex strained of his libertie, to bee sent to his awne lodgyng again, and saied that by the reporte made by the French Ambassadours, he him restraygned, and now sithe he knewe the truthe, he mocioned the kyng for his deliueraunce.

The Emperours Ambassadour, called Don Hugo de Mendosa, dissimuled the matter by apparant signes: and the Cardinall the more to auoyde suspicion on his behalfe, towarde all the worlde, saied: the kyng was enformed by the French Ambassadours, that the Ambassadours of bothe Princes were put in prison, and farhter he saied that Clarenseaux had made the defiaunce to the Emperoure without the kynges commaundement, but onely did it by the mocion of the French Ambas-xx sadours, to accompaignie the Freneh Herault, and for this presumpteous act, he should suffre death at Calice at his returne: all these excuses the Cardinall shewed to the Emperors Ambassador, which certified ỹ Emperour of euery poynt, and sent the letter by poste into Spaine, which letters were opened & copied, by ỹ capitain of Bayon, as ỹ poste passed that waye. And when Clarenseaux returned homeward out of Spain, the Capitain gently shewed to him the copie of the letters, that the Emperours Ambassadoure had written. Thynke you not but Cla- Clarenseaux made a feard renseaux was dismaied, to here his daies so shorte: yet he trusstynge in his truth, and grace of his Prince, passed forward and came to Bullein, xxx where he hard worde again of the danger that he was in, wherfore like a wise man he left Calice, and tooke a Ship at Bullein, and landed at Rye, and came secretly to Hampton Court, where the kyng, laye, & by frendeship of sir Nicholas Carew, one of the kynges priuie chamber, he was brought to the kynges presence, or ỹ Cardinall wist of his returne and to hym shewed the three Letters, whiche the Cardinal had sent to hym, chargyng hym to make the defiaunce, or he did intimate the war. He declared farther, that neither the Ambassadours of the kyng, nor ỹ Frenche kyng, nor he wer neuer sequestered frō libertie, but gently entertained, and to the kyng he shewed a chayne, to the value of seuē hun-xl dred Ducates, which the Emperoure had geuen hym, and shewed also the copie of the Emperoures Ambassadoures letters, whiche he had at Bayon. When the kynge had heard all the circumstaunce of his decla- The wise saiyng of the kyng. racion, he mused a greate while, and saied: O Lord Jesu, he that I trusted moste, tolde me all these thynges cōtrary, well Clarenseaux I will be no more of so light credence hereafter, for nowe I see perfectly, that

I am made to beleue the thyng that was neuer doen.

Then the kyng sent for the Cardinall, and priuily talked with hym, but whatsoeuer he saied to hym, the Cardinal was not very mery, and after that tyme, the kyng mistrusted hym euer after. When the kynge and his Counsaill, had well digested the Emperoures answere, and his gentle demeanor toward the kynges Ambassadors, & also had pondered that the lowe countreis of ỹ Emperor, wer glad to please the kyng of Englande and his Subiectes: wherefore the kynge commaunded, sir Jhon Stile knight, to discharge all the Duchemen and their Shippes, and deliuered their Sailes, and gaue thē license to returne: Naye said the Duchmen, the Spanyardes and we be the Emperours Subiectes, why should not thei be also discharged: sir Jhō Stile answered thē, that his Commission was onely to discharge them. The Duchmen fearyng that the Frenchemen would take the seas before them, & so to stop thē, departed hastely, cursſyng ỹ Cardinall as aucthor of this war.

When the Lady Margaret heard tell, howe the Duche naciō with their Shippes & goodes were released, and not the Spanyardes, she sent for the Englishe Merchauntes, and to theim sayed: Sirs, sithe the kyng your Master, hath deliuered onely the Duche men, and not the Spaniardes, we relese your bodies free, to go at your libertie, but your goodes shall remaine, till we knowe what shal become of the Spaniardes, and when they be deliuered, come for your goodes, and you shall haue theim deliuered, thus the Englishemen departed, and came to the kyng, and declared to hym and his counsaill, how thei were entreated.

Cōplaynt of ỹ Clothiers.

This warr with the Emperor was displeasant, both to Merchātes and Clothiers, for the Merchauntes durste not auēture into Spaine, sithe Apryll last past, & now was come the.xj. daye of March, wherfore all brode Clothes, Kerseis, & Cottons, laye on their hādes. In somuch as whē the Clothiers of Essex, Kent, Wilshire, Sukfolk, & other shires which vse Clothmakyng, brought clothes into Blackewel hall of London, to be sold as thei wer wont to do: fewe Merchātes or none bought any cloth at all. When the Clothiers lacked sale, then thei put frō theim their spinners, carders, thickers, & such other ỹ liue by clothworkyng which caused the people greatly to murmor, and specially in Suffolke, for yf the duke of Norffolk had not wisely appeased them, no doubt but thei had fallen to some riotous act. When the kynges counsail was aduertised of this inconuenience, the Cardinall sent for a greate nōber of the Merchantes of London, & to them saied: Sirs the kynge is informed, that you vse not your selfes like Merchantes, but like Grasiers & artificers: for wher the Clothiers do daily bryng clothes, to your market for your ease, to their greate cost, and there be ready to sell thē, you of your wilfulnes will not bye thē, as you haue been accustomed to do: what maner of men be you sayd the Cardinall: I tel you that the kyng straightly commaundeth you to bye their Clothes, as before tyme you haue been accustomed to do, vpon payn of hys high displeasure.

The

The Merchantes answered, my lord you knowe well, that we haue had no trade outward this twelue monethes paste, & we haue so many clothes in our handes, that we knowe not how to vtter thē, therfore it were greate losse to vs to bye any more: wherfore we trust you wil not moue vs to bye the thyng, whiche we cannot vtter, for in all places our vent is stopped and forbidden. Well layed the Cardinal, yf you will not bye the clothes at Blackewell hall, they shall be brought to the White Hall at Westminster, and so you of London shall lose the libertie, and the kyng shall bye them all, & sell them to Merchant straungers. Then & answered a wise Merchant, my lord, the kyng maye bye them aswel at Blackewell hall, yf it please him, & the straungers wyll gladlyer receiue theim there, then at Westminster: You shal not ordre that matter, saied the Cardinall, and first I will sende into London, to knowe what Clothes you haue in your hādes, and that doen the kyng and his counsaill shall appoynt who shall bye the Clothes I warrant you, with this answere the Londoners departed.

When the Clothiers hard that the Cardinall toke their part, they waxed proude, & spake euill of the Merchantes, & when the Merchantes came to bye Clothes, ỹ Clothiers set thē hire, then thei were accustomed to be solde: but at length thei were fain, bothe to abate the price, & also to seke of the Merchant men, for all the Cardinalles layinge.

If this warre was displeasaunt to many in Englande (as you haue hard) surely it was asmuch or more displeasant, to the tounes and people of Flaunders, Brabant, Hollande, and Zelande, and in especiall to the tounes of Andwarpe and Barrow, where the Martes wer kept, & where the resorte of Englishmen was, for thei saied that their Martes were vndoen, yf the Englishemen came not there, and yf there were no Marte, their Shippes, Hoyes, and Waggons might rest, and all artificers, Hostes, and Brokers might slepe, and so the people should fal into miserie and pouertie, of these thinges daily complaintes were made to the lady Margaret, and the Emperors counsail, whiche wisely pondered the complaintes, and after long cōsultacion had, thei appoynted certain Ambassadors to go to the kyng of England, and to entreate for a truce, or abstinence of warre, which Ambassadors came into Englād, and associated themselfes with Don Hugo de Mendosa, Ambassadour there for the Emperor: the one Ambassador was Prouoste of Cassell, & the other Master Jhon Lay souereigne of Flaūders: these. iij. Ambassadors came to the kyng, the. xxix. day of Marche to Richemōd & after reuerence doen, the lorde Hugo de Mēdosa laid to ỹ kyng, sir thempe- & rours Maiestie so much knowlegeth hymself bound to your grace, for manifolde kynde actes and beneuolences, doen and shewed to hym sith his tendre age, that he in no wise wold take the defiaunce, doen by your Herault as a peremptory intimacio of warre, tyll he had heard farther of your pleasure, and therfore his counsaill hath sent hether these twoo noble personnes and me, to knowe your determinate answer, and finall resolucion resolucion in that behalfe. The kynge after a good auisement had, answered and saied: Of warre I am nothyng ioyfull, and of warre I am lesse fearefull, I thanke God I haue no cause to care for warre, for I haue bothe men and money, and all thyng ready prepared for the same, (whiche thynges I knowe ỹ other princes lacke, for all their high wordes) and therfore to that question of warre, I could sone agre, but or I make you a determinate answere, some part of my mynd I will declare to you, and I tell you although your Master be a greate Emperor, and a mightie Prince, I cannot nor maie not suffre hym, to bere doune and destroye the realme of Fraunce, which is our true inheritance & for the which our brother and alie the French kyng, paieth vs yerely a great pencion and tribute, wherefore we of Justice & equitie, muste maintein that lande, out of whiche we haue so faire a rent and suche a profite.

Then saied the Prouost of Cassell, yea sir, and it please you to call to your remembraunce, the olde and auncient loue & familiaritie, whiche hath been betwene youre Realme, and the houses of Burgoyne and Flaunders, and the lowe countreys, I assure you the people of all those countreis will liue & dye with you, aboue all men next their souereigne Lord, wherefore moste noble Prince neuer consent, that olde loue that hath so long continued, be now broke and seperated: we saie this for no feare, for we be well furnished for war, bothe of men and strong castles, all whiche before this tyme hath been at your cõmaundement, & therfore the loue that we haue euer borne you, we cõtinue & offer you nowe to cõtinue: and where we offre you choyse of war or peace, at your pleasure, surely ỹ Emperour meaneth that for youre honor, as though you should commaunde which you would: and yf you chose warre, we haue commissiõ to entreate for peace, and you chose peace, we haue like commission to thanke you, and to offre vs and ours at your cõmaundemẽt.

The kynge of Hugo de Mendosa.

Then saied the Lorde Hugo de Mendosa to the kyng, sir of very right the Emperor and his countreis, ought to haue your loue and fauor, before the French kyng and his nacion: for the Frenchmen in the tyme of their affliccion, made humble sutes and requestes to your grace, which they neuer would do in the tyme of their prosperitie, but the Emperour hath euer continued one man at all tymes, wherefore he is better to be trusted, then they which neuer wer long true to you. Wel laid the kyng sithe I haue well perceiued the intent of your commyng, I woll be auised, and then I will make you an auised answere, and in the meane season I am content, that there be an abstinence of warre for a tyme, so the Ambassadours departed for a season, and the Prouost of Castelles, departed to the lady Margaret with this answere.

After this the kyng which was wise, well learned, and a farre castyng prince, consulted with his counsaill of this matter, and there after long debatyng it was considered, that the kynge was riche, strong, & puyssant inough to make warre with any prince Christẽ, and that no prince could hurte hym by warre or inuasion, therfore some thought it best to

haue warre, but the king & the wiser sort cõsidered that yf he had war with the Emperor, that his marchauntes should lese mnche, and if thei lost, the clothiers and the clothworkers, of which were a great multitude should lese and be brought to extreme pouertie. For it was considered, that the Emperor was Lord of all Spayne, Napels, Sardinia & so southward to Epuskaia, and likewise northest ward frõ Graueling to Rye and Reuel, so that Englysh marchauntes passyng on those coastes were euer in daũger. Also no Alame could come into England but through hys dominions, by reason wherof cloth making should decay.

x Wherfore the kyng considered if the marchauntes lost, the poer sorte should lese, and at length he should lese in his customes. Wherfore leauing the glorye of warre he tooke mercy on hys subiectes and concluded to take peace for a tyme, til farther communicacion myght be had betwene hys coũsayl & the Emperors. And vpõ this point letters wer sent into Spayne, Fraunce, and Flaunders, and so this matter continued vndetermined til answeres wer brought from outward partes.

In this season the bishop of Baion whiche afterward was bishop & Cardinall of Paris beyng ambassador from the French kynge & soiornyng in Londõ, heard tel how the Empetors ambassadors made much xx suite to the kynge and his counsayll, wher he came to ỹ court & desyred to speake wyth the kynge, and so was brought to the kinges presence, to whõ he sayd: pleaseth your hyghnes to consyder the great and high peace, that is concluded betwene you and your louinge brother & perpetual alye the French king my maister, which is ratefyed and confirmed by the thre estates of the realme of Fraunce, by ỹ whych you haue yerely. xx. M. pound sterlyng, which realme you haue promised to defende against al persones: Nowe in shewyng your loue that you beare to the Frenche kyng & his subiectes. If you would make sharpe warre on the Emperors subiectes, I assure you the whole realme of Fraunce xxx would take it so thankefullye that it should neuer bee forgotten. Well sayd the kyng, as touching the league and amitie betwene my brother of Fraũce and me it shalbe inuiolately kept for me, but sir to enter into warre it nedeth no counsayl, but how to end war with honor & profyte men must nedes study. As touchyng ỹ defence of the realme of Fraũce, I assure you it shalbe defended to my power thoughe it bee to my losse, and my studie is no lesse to haue a peace whiche myght be honorable to your mayster, then to myne owne selfe. With which saying the Ambassador held wel contented. So that you may perceyue that the greate pencion and profyt that the kyng of England had out of Fraunce with xl the great league and amitie concluded and sworne, was the very cause why the kyng of England so much helde wyth the French kyng & not for mere loue. For thys matter was dayly great counsayles, & one day the Emperors ambassador was present, another day the French kings ambassador was present, but ỹ Cardinal was euer on the French part. So thus contynued this dayly counsayles wer great study.

The supte of the ffrenche ambassadors

The kynges answere.

In thesame season a Frenche Crayer of. xxx. tonne manned wyth xxviij. Frenchemen lay at Margate to wayte for a pray for some Flemyng that shoulde come out of the riuer of Thames, and by chaunce a Crayer of Armew which was appointed to waft the fisher boates betwene Graueleyn & Ostend, was come by North of Goodwyn sandes to Northland head and so came to Grauesend and toke in bread: This Crayer was of. xxviij. tonne and had in her. xxiij. Fleminges: When she was victayled she made to the sea warde, and sodainly he espyed the Frenchmen whyche houed vnder a saile. The Flemynges mystrusted and incontinent put themselfes in a readynes and came so nye that he hayled the Frenchman, the Frenchman shot a piece of ordinaunce and with that layde the Fleminge aborde, there was sore fightinge, for the Frenchman had crosbowes and the Fleminges had handgunnes. The Frencheman fell of & would haue bene gone, that seyng the Flemynge whysteled and after the Frenchman made sayle. Now the winde was so straynable East that the Frenchman could saile no whither but into the Thames, and so he did and the Fleming folowed, and before Grauesend the Flemyng borded the Frenchman, and there they fought again, but away again went the Frenchman and the Fleminge after w all his sailes, and so farre sailed the Frenchman that he ranne a longe xx the Tower wharfe, as though he should haue reuen hys shyppe, the Flemyng set on and entered the shippe for anye thinge the Frenchman could do and cryed I haue taken the these. Sir Emond Walsingham Liuetenaunt of the Tower was on the wharfe & saw thē fight called his men vnd entered the shippes and toke bothe capitaynes and their men. The Fleming boldlye chalenged his pryse, for he sayde that open warre was betwene Fraunce and Flaūders, and sayd farther that the Frencheman was a Pyrate: The kynges counsail toke vp the matter, and made an ende betwene them. Thys chaunce was much talked of, that twoo shippes shoulde sayle in chase from Margate to the Tower xxx wharfe because that before time such a like thing had neuer ben hard.

A ship chased to the Tower wharfe.

Froissart de gestis. fol. 409.

Now let vs returne to the lord Lawtrick which had gotten many tounes in Italy, and had with his great army besieged the citie of Napels and so it happened that the Prince of Orenge and other captaynes the. xix. day of Apryl set on a great part of the Frenche army, and notwythstādyng their hardines the Emperors army obteyned the victory, so from that tyme forth the Frenchemen lost, what by pestylence whyche then was great in Italy, and what by sodaine skirmyshes. Thys yere the. xxij. day of Februarye the kynge created at Windsor Sir Pierce Buelar of Ireland, erle of Osserey. xl

The

The.xx.yere.

He kyng kept the day of sainct George with the companions of the order of the Garter wyth great solempnitie at his manor of Richemond, where to him came tidynges from the army of the lorde Lawtrick in Italy, which letters shewed that the lorde Lawtrick had sent the Lorde Peter de Nauarro the third day of Marche last past to a great toune called Melffe with.x.M.Frenchmen, & within the toune were.viij.C.Spanyardes good men of warre, the lord Peter de Nauarro besieged ẏ toune, & after gaue to ẏ same a great assaute, but the Spaniardes so defended them with ordinaũce & resistences that they slew.v.or.vj.M.Frenchmẽ & caused them to retrete. The lord Lawtrick hearyng this came in person with a great nomber to the toune of Smel & merueilously bet the toune with ordinaunce and then gaue to it a great and fierse assaut, and so sore that ẏ Spãiardes were put back, yet they defended them, so ẏ it was meruail to beholde, for they slewe & destroyed.iiij.M.Frenchmen. The Frenche kyng entered the toune on all sides, & yet the Spãyardes kept ẏ market with their ordinaũce, as long as they might, but at the last beyng oppressed wyth multitude xx they al were slayne without mercy, so cruell were the Frenchmen: In this toune was taken the prince of Melff a noble man perteignynge to the Emperor. Thus was the toune of Melffe taken and spoyled, not greatly to the Frenchemennes profyte, for they lost almost.x.M. men which sore diminished their power.

Although that this season was an abstinẽce or war taken betwene the kyng of Englande & the lady Margaret so that the dutche nacyon might safely come & go into Englãd, and the Englishmen might safely repaire thither, yet betwene the Frenchmen and ẏ Flemings was hot warre on the frontiers, and many a prisoner was taken, & manye men xxx slain, & like wise the one part toke ẏ other on the seas, and sometime the Frenchmen woulde spoyle Englishe shyppes, saiynge that they hadde Flemynges goodes or Spaniardes goodes, and likewise the Flemynges would enter the Englyshe shyppes, and say they had Frenchmẽs goodes, so the Englishmen lost til the kyng sent shippes to kepe the sea: But for a trueth the Spanyardes were stronge on the sea, and to the Frenchmen dyd much harme. The kynge perceiuinge that there was nothing concluded betwene thẽperor & him, thought not to be behinde hand, wherfore he ordayned that the lord Sandes shuld passe to Guisnes with a.M.souldiers that was.v.C.archers and.v.C.horsemen xl & that the duke of Suffolke should passe ouer after wyth a great army to inuade Flaunders. These lordes made much preparaciõ & mustred their men at ẏ Mantels beside S. Jhones & was redy to departe, but the Emperors ambassador & thambassadors of Flaunders so much did with the kinge & his counsail (& ẏ Frẽch king also assented) that truce was taken betwene England, Flaunders, & the coũtreyes of Picardy on thys syde the water of Some for. viij. monethes, ỹ peace to begin ỹ first day of May, and to endure to ỹ last daye of Februarye. Thys peace was proclaymed in London the. xix. daye of June, so that now al Englishmẽ myght lawfully passe into ỹ low coũtreis, but not into Spain, which sore greued marchauntes that haunted that parties. In ỹ same proclamacion was farther conteined, that yf a final peace wer not fully agreed betwene the said thre princes wythin ỹ sayde. viij. monethes, ỹ then al marchaũtes should haue two monethes after to passe into their owne countreyes with their wares & marchaundyses in safetie. The Emperor sone enclyued to thys peace, for he saw that by ỹ Wart many of his frendes in high Dutchland and other places toke greate profite and especially his own low coũtreys, wherfore he thought not to hurt his frendes for the displeasure he bare to hys enemies of Fraunce, and also to shew him self louing to the king of England he was content to take this peace. x

In this season the duke Charles of Gelders perceiuing ỹ Emperor was at war with Fraunce, raised a great power of horsemen & came to a great toune of Holland called the Hage where the lawe and iustice is kept for that coũtrey, by reason wherof the toune was very ryche, and sodainly he entred the toune without resistẽce and spoyled and robbed the toune, and slew diuerse persons and with much riches laded their wagons, and so departed and caryed with him diuers rich prysoners. The lady Margarete gouernesse of the low countreis hearing of this raised a great power vnder the conduict of ỹ lord Jselsteinge, whych lord with a great puissance entered Gelderland and gat the toune of Hatton, the castle of Howtyng, and forrayed and destroyed ỹ coũtrey: lastly on Whitsonday beynge the laste day of Maye the Gelders gaue battel to the lord Jselsteinge, and fought valiauntly as any mẽ coulde do, but yet by fortune of warre they were ouercome and fled, and wer chased a great way & many slayn. This chaunce was while the treatie of peace was in England. xx xx

The swea-tyng sicknes

In the very ende of May began in the citie of London the sicknes called the sweating sicknes, and afterwarde went al the realme almost of the which many died within. v. or. vj. houres. By reason of this sicknes the terme was adiorned and the circuities of Assise also. The king was sore troubled with this plage, for diuers dyed in the court, of whõ one was sir Fraunces Poynes which was Ambassador in Spayne, & other, so that the kyng for a space remoued almost euery day, tyl at the last he came to Titynhangar a place of the Abbotte of S. Albones and there he with a few determined to byde the chaunce that God wouldè xl send him, whych place was so purged dayly with fyers and other preseruatiues, ỹ neither he nor the quene nor none of their cõpany was enfected wyth ỹ disease, such was the pleasur of God. In this great plage dyed sir Wyliyam Compton knyght & William Cary esquyer whyche wer of the kinges priuy chamber, and whom the kyng hyghly fauored

and

and many other worshipful men and women in England.

By reason of this plague the watches whiche were wont to be kept yerely in Londō on saint Jhons euen at Mydsommer & saint Peters euen were by the kyng & hys counsaill commaunded to be left for that yere, wherfore the Armores made great suite to the Kynge & declared their great hynderaunce, whiche was not so muche considered as the mischief that might haue ensued yf that so great a nomber should haue assembled together in that hote time & the plage of sweatyng rayning. Now let vs leaue England all this Sommer season troubled & vexed x with this sweating sickness, and let vs returne to the affayres of Italy.

The Emperor whiche knew how ỹ lord Lawtrick was in Italy wt a great army, thought it not for his profite to leaue his army there vnsuccored, wherfore he sent ỹ lorde Henry the yonger duke of Brūswike with a great cōpany of Almaynes both on fote and horsebacke. Wherfore the Uenitians set Fraunces Duke of Orbyne to kepe the straytes and to stoppe him the passage: But when he heard of the puissaunce of the duke of Brūswycke and the great municions & prouisiōs of warre that the Almaynes brought, he turned his iorney, and by aduise of the Uenicians determined to fortifie the tounes & to defende them against xx the Almaynes, and so the duke of Brūswyke with his armye passed the mountaines & entered Italy burnyng, ralynge & raunsomyng tounes as he passed, & euer he marched toward Myllain, wherof hearyng the Mylleners which were brought to extreme pouertie by these warres beganne to lament and waile for the great tyranny that they iudged to folowe whiche folowed in dede. For when the Almaines came to Mylayn and demaunded money of the Citezens, they that had nothyng to paye, were tyed in chaynes and kept miserably in prison tyll they had made some prouision for the payment, whyche caused the Citezens to flee out of the citie and to leaue it in maner desolate: whiche thyng Anxxx thony de Leua perceiuyng, moued with great compassion for the desolacion of the citie called the Citezens together and promised them that yf they would paye the wages of the souldiers for.xx.dayes onely, he would cause all the whole army to remoue out of the citie, the poore citezens made shyft and payed the souldiers, and so they all departed frō Myllayne and came to the citie of Pauye and toke it with litle labor & after that tooke diuers other tounes.

Anthony de Leua knewe well the Duke of Brunswycke woulde in the spryng of the yere set forward towarde Naples to ayde the Emperors armye against the lorde Lawtrick, therfore he desired the Duke xl that or he passed out of the duchye of Myllayne, he woulde put all the Frenchemen out of suche fortresses as they kept, whiche thyng he sayd might be easely done considerynge the great puissaunce of the Almaynes and the debilitie and lacke of power of the Duke of Myllayne, and in especiall consideryng that the Uenicians kept their tounes and wold not ayde the Frenche parte, to the whiche persuasions the Duke agreed and went toward the citie of Lawde to the which thei gaue the assaut, but they within so well defended it that the Almaynes lost moze then they wanne, wherfoze the duke determined to famishe thē within foz he knewe by their great nomber that their vitaile must nedes fayle and so it did in dede, so that no creature but men of war had any vitaile and therfoze the pooze Citezens were compelled either to go into the handes of their enemies oz to dye foz famyn.

In this season was throughout all Italy a vniuersall warre, famyn and pestilence oz a mozreyn wherof the people died in euery place, & in especially in the Dukes armye whiche caused the moste part of the Almaynes to returne into their countrey, wherfoze the duke wisely cōsidered the chaūce and saw that his army was greatly minisshed by death, and saw farther that foz lacke of vitaile and money he was not able to conuey the remnaunt of his armye to Naples, by the aduise of Anthony de Leua concluded to returne and so shoztly after in good ozder returned and lost moze by the pestilence then by his enemies.

The Frenche kyng was aduertised by the lozde Lawtrick how his people decayed soze before Naples, and how the Duke of Bzunswyke was commyng to raise the siege & reskue the citie, wherfoze the French kyng sent lozde Fraunces erle saint Poul bzother to the duke of Uandosme with .viij. M. men to folowe the duke of Bzūswyke to Naples, and yf he went not to Naples, then he should ioyne himselfe with Fraūces Sfozcia duke of Myllayne and the Uenicians and so to expel Anthony de Leua and all the Emperozs souldiers out of Lombardy.

The Spaniardes within Naples were aduertised that new succozs were commyng to the Frenchmen, wherfoze they determined to fight with them oz their new ayde came, and so one day they issued out of the citie and fought with the Frenchemen and slewe many of them, but by xxx foze they were compelled to returne. The lozde Lawtrick knew well that the citie could not holde long foz lacke of vitaile (foz a suertie yf vitaile had not come by sea, the toune had been yelded) wherfoze the lozd Lawtrick suffered his armye to lye still in the plaine fielde all the heate of the Sommer and brought theim not to the shadow, by reason wherof there fell suche a disease amongest his armye that they dyed daily in great nomber and he hymselfe fell sicke and lefte the Armye and lay at Uerse, of the whiche moztalitie there dyed in the Frenche campe aboue xxiiij. M. men besyde the moste parte of all their hozses and beastes, of whiche nomber as diuers wzyters do agree there dyed aboue .b. M. gentlemen, amongest whom there dyed the lozd Uawdemont bzother to Anthony duke of Lozraine, the lozde of Grauntmount, the capitain Molyac, the lozde Lauall of the Dolphenye, the capitaine Luper, the lorde Charles Uyuone lorde of Chataygneray sonne to the Lord Andrewe of Uyuone Seneschal of Poytew, and many other noblemen of name.

Duryng whiche plague the toune of Cappe (whiche moste of all the tonnes in the realme of Naples helde on the Frenche part) became imperiall and turned to the Emperors part. Whereof hearyng the lorde Lawtrick made therfore great sorowe, & beyng some what amended of his disease, tooke his horse and came to visite the Campe, and when he sawe his nomber so minished and his Campe so desolate of people x that he perceiued that his enterprise could not be performed, he fell into suche a malencoly ỹ his sickenes toke him more feruẽtly then before, so that within two daies after, which was ỹ. xxj. day of August he died at and hys body was sered and conueyed after into Fraunce.

The Marques of Saluce which was Liuetenaunt vnder the lorde Lawtrick called to counsel the erle Guy of Rancon and Peter de Nauer and other capitaines that wer left, and after long cõsultacion they cõsidered their nomber to be to small either to kepe ỹ siege or to abide battell, for they passed not. v. M. in all. Wherfore they cõcluded to leue the siege and to returne, and so the. xxv. daye of August they brake vp xx their Campe and returned toward Fraũce, in which returne the Spaniardes euer costed them, and when thei tooke any Frencheman at aduauntage, they either slewe or tooke them. Thus was the ende of this iorney by reason of the great mortalitie, which yf it had not happened, the citie and the whole realme of Naples had been recouered: For the citie of Naples could not haue holden. x. daies, after the army remoued as they confessed after.

The Erle of saint Poul (whiche was appointed to passe into Italye as you haue heard before) knew nothyng of the mortalitie at Naples. Wherfore with all spede he passed the mountaines thesame season that xxx the duke of Brũlwyke returned & came into the duchy of Myllain and tooke certaine fortresses which the Emperors power had wonne, and after that the aydes of the Uenicians and Duke Fraunces Sforcias were ioyned with him, he besieged the citie of Pauye and within a fewe dayes the citie was taken by force and the walles beaten doune to the ground for dispite that the Frenche kyng was taken before the toune. These doynges were not so muche pleasaunt to the Frenche kynge as the losse of the citie of Geane was to him displeasaunt. For the same season Andrewe Dorye whyche was all the doer for the French kyng on the sea, & had before tyme in the Frenche kynges quarel vanquished xl the lord Hugo Uiceroy of Naples, & had takẽ the Marques of Gnasto & Alcayne de Columna & other capitaine belongyng to the Emperor, whiche prisoners the French kyng cõmaunded hym to deliuer into his hãdes, which thing Andrew Dory thought not reasonable, cõsideryng that that he tooke him, and for that cause and because his wages was not payed, he tooke his Galeys and sayled to Geane where he was borne and also was there of great authoritie and estimacion, and there he so persuaded the people that they became imperiall and toke Trenulsius the Frenche kynges frende and put him in warde, and prepared to defende the citie against the French kynges power, whereof hearyng the Erle of saint Poule sent in all hast his light horsemen to succor the citie but or thei came the citezens wer so furnished that the Frenchmen had no hope of recouery, wherfore thei returned to Alexandry, & there thei counsailed together how to take the citie of Myllayne which was sore desolate of people and brought to greate mischiefe by the crueltie of Spaniardes and Almaines, but whē they heard tel that the Emperor had sent .iij. M. Spaniardes to ayde Anthony de Leua, thei chaunged their purpose & determined to recouer the citie of Geane againe. For which purpose the Earle left the Uenicians at Calyan, & the power of duke Fraunces Sforcie he left at Paupe to kepe the passages that the Spaniardes should not stray farre abrode, and also to kepe the passages that no vitayle should come to ỹ Spaniardes whiche at that tyme had onely the citie and castle of Myllain and none other fortresse to resorte to. And therle hymselfe lay at a byllage called Landryan, and for ỹ more spede of his enterprise he sent his forward with all his artillery before toward Geane, hauyng with him his middle warde and rereward. Of all these doynges Anthony de Leua lyng at Myllayn by his espyals was truly from tyme to tyme aduertised, wherfore he lyke a politike capitaine considered how the erle had done folishly to sende his ordinaunce and forward before, he therfore determined to take the auauntage of the Frenchemen yf he might, and so called to him all hys capitaines and to theim sayd: Felowes in armes and souldiors to the Emperor our master, see and consider what a great occasion of victory is offered to vs this present day, for the Uenicians and the Sforcians be seuered from the Frenchemen, and therle of saint Poul with part of his army lyeth at Landryan & hath sent his forward & his ordinaunce forward Geane, wherefore we wil set on him sodaynly if you agree, and if we ouercome him the prayse shalbe ours, and if he flye at our cōmyng yet folowyng hym we shall get a great pray and botie. To this entent all the other souldiers agreed (for thei wer very nedy and glad to haue somewhat) and so he caused it to be proclaymed that all his men should be redy at an houre, and that euery man shoulde haue a white shyrte aboue his apparel that one in the darke might know another, and when euery man was ready and the euenyng approched, Anthony de Leua according to his enterprise set forwarde and was all armed and satte in a chayre caried by .iiij. strong persones.

Anthony de Leua encorageth his souldiers.

When ỹ citezens of Myllain saw him thus armed & borne in chayre

and

and knew wel that he had a ronning gout and could not stirre him self, they meruayled much of his audacitie, but by ỹ experiẽce of other thinges by hym done, they iudged that he entended some great enterpryse, but because the nomber of his people was so litle, they doubted the sequele of hys aduenture. But for all theyr imagynacyons he wyth hys people secretely issued out of Millain and passed forward without any noyse, and in the mornyng sodaynly set on therle of S. Poule and hys army, so that the erle had no leysure to send for hys ordinaũce, and forward, but was fayne to trust to such as were then wyth hym. And at ỹ x fyrst brunte the Almaynes fled, and the Frẽch horsemen also, and with a litle fight al the other fled, and as the Erle him self was flyenge ouer a great diche on horsebacke, he with the erle Guy of Raucon & the lord Castyllyõ and many other lordes and gentlemen wer taken prisoners and al their vitail, purueyaunce and artillery wer prayes to themperors souldiers whych much refreshed thẽ. After this iorney the Frẽch kyng had no army in Italy, wherfore Fraunces Sforcia seing hymself destitute of ayde, made meanes to the Emperor by Pope Clement for the appointment both of the duchy of Myllain and also for his answer of certain treasons, of the which he was accused to themperor, to whõ xi themperor answered that the next sommer he would come into Italy to receiue hys Emperial croune, ond then he would take such an order as ryght and equitie should require. This was the ende of the warres begon betwene the king of England and the Frẽch king on ỹ one party and the emperor on the other partie. in the. xix. yere of the king as you haue heard before. For after thys iorney the lady Margaret duches of Sauoy & aunt to thẽperor', and ỹ lady Loyse duches of Angulesme and mother to the French kyng continually labored for a peace, so that by their meanes a treaty was appointed' to be kept at Cãbray in June folowyng, as you shal heare after.

xxx Now let vs returne to the kyng of England which was in a great scruple of his conscience and not quyet in hysmynd, because ỹ dyuers diuines well learned secretely enformed him that he liued in adultry wỹ hys brothers wife to the great peril of his soule, and told him farther ỹ the court of Rome could not dispẽce wỹ Gods cõmaũdemẽt & precept. These thinges were talked among the cõmon people sith the fyrst day of his mariage as you haue heard before, insomuch that now the kynges counsailors aduysed hym to know the trueth. Wherfore he lyke a wyse prynce for quyeting of his conscyence called together the best lerned of the realme which were of seueral opiniõs, wherfore he thought xl to know ỹ trueth by indifferent iudges lest peraduenture ỹ Spãiardes in fauor of ỹ quene would say that hys owne subiectes wer not indifferent iudges, wherfore he wrote hys cause to Rome because ỹ best clerkes in Christendom wer there, and also he sent to al the vniuersities of Italy and Fraũce and to the great Clerkes of al christendom to know their opinions, and desired the court of Rome to send into his realm a

legate to heare the cause debated whiche should be indifferent and of a great iudgement. At whose request the whole consistorie of the college of Rome sent thyther Laurence Campeius a preest Cardinal, a man of great wit and experiẽce, but more lerned in ỹ papal law then in diuinitie, which was sent as legate into Englãd in the.x. yere of this king as you haue heard in thesayd yere, and with him was ioyned in cõmissiõ ỹ cardinal of Yorke and legate of Englãd, and so this cardinal Cãpeius by long iorneyes came into Englãd, and much preparacion was made to receiue him triumphãtly into Londõ, but he was so sore vexed with the goute, that he refused al suche solẽpnities, and desired hertely that he might without pompe be cõueyed to his lodging for his more quiet and rest, & so ỹ.ix. day of October he came from saint Mary Ouereys by water to the bishop of Bathes place wythout Temple barre, where he lodged the last tyme he was in England. Where he was visited of ỹ Cardinall of Yorke & diuers other estates and prelates. And after he had rested him a season & was somewhat releued of his payne, he was brought to ỹ kinges presence then liyng at Bridewel by ỹ cardinall of yorke & was caryed in a chayer of Crimosin veluet borne betwene.iiij. persones, for he was not able to stand, and the cardynall of yorke & he sat both on the ryght hand of the kinges throne, and there one Fraun- xx ciso secretary to cardinal Campeius made an eloquent Oracion in the latin tongue, in ỹ whiche he rehersed, first with what crueltie the Emperors soldiers had handeled the pope, what tyrãny they had shewed the cardinals and priestes, what sacrilege & spoyle thei had committed in sainct Peters churche, how thei had violat virgins, rauished mẽnes wiues, and in conclusion spoiled, robbed & tormented al ỹ Romaines & inhabitauntes in the cyty of Rome: & farther he shewed what frẽdship the college of Rome found at the kinges handes and ỹ French kynges in ỹ tyme of ỹ tribulaciõ, that yf they had not ioyned together, the cyty of Rome with al their gouernors had bene brought to vtter ruine and xxx decay, for ỹ which he sayd that pope Clemẽt and al his college of cardinals and the Senators of ỹ cyty w̃ al the cytezens rendered to ỹ king their harty thãkes, & promised him their loue, fauor & amity perpetual

The cardinal Campeius cõmyng to London.

The oracion.

Thys oracion (as cõcerning the trouble of Rome) was set forth wyth such lamentacyons, such abhominable actes and tyrannies that ỹ most part of the hearers thought it more eloquent then true. To the which Oracion doctor Fox Prouost of Cambridge made a discrete ãnswer & as to the fyrst poynt he declared that the king much lamented to heare hys frendes, yea or any other Christẽ men to be ordered or hãdeled w̃ such tyranny and oppression: and as touching the second poynt he sayd xl that the kyng did but the dutie of a christen prince to releue his frẽdes beyng in captiuitie, for the which he wold that the whole citie of Rome shoulde geue thankes to God and not to him. After whiche aunswere made the two legates communed secretely wyth the king a long space and after departed to their lodgyng.

The answere.

Of

Of the cõming of this Legate the common people beyng ignorante of the truth and in especial women & other that fauored the quene talked largely, & said that the king would for his owne pleasure haue another wife & had sent for this legate to be deuorsed frõ his quene, with many folysbe wordes, insomuche, that whosoeuer spake against the mariage was of the cõmon people abhorred & reproued, which cõmon rumour & folisbe cõmunicacions wer related to ỹ king, wherfore he lyke a prudẽ prince and circũspect doer in all his affaires, & willing all men to know his entent and purpose, caused al his nobilitie, Judges & counsaylors x & diuers other persons to come to his palace of Bridewell on sonday the.viij.day of Nouẽber at after none in his great chamber and there to them sayd as nere as my witte could beare away these wordes folowyng.

Our trustie and welbeloued subiectes both you of the nobilitie and you of the meaner sort, it is not vnknowẽ to you how that we, both by Goddes prouision and true and lawful inheritaũce haue reigned ouer this realme of England almost the terme of.xx.yeres. During which time we haue so ordered vs, thanked be God, that no outward enemy hath oppressed you nor taken any thyng from vs, nor we haue inuaded xx no realme, but we haue had victory & honor, so that we thinke that you nor none of your predecessors neuer liued more quietly, more weathly, nor in more estimacion vnder any of our noble progenitors: But when we remember our mortalitie and that we must die, then we thinke that al our doynges in our lyfe time are clerely defaced & worthy of no memorie if we leaue you in trouble at the time of our death. For if our true heire be not knowen at the time of our death, se what mischiefe & trouble shal succede to you and your children. The experience therof some of you haue sene after the death of oure noble grandfather kynge Edward the.iiij. and some haue heard what mischiefe and manslaughter xxx continues in this realme betwene the houses of Yorke & Lancaster, by ỹ which dissension this realme was like to haue bene clerely destroyed. And although it hath pleased almighty God to send vs a fayre doughter of a noble woman and me begotten to our great comfort & ioy, yet it hath ben told vs by diuerse great clerkes, that neither she is our lawfull doughter nor her mother our lawful wyfe, but ỹ we lyue together abhominably and detestably in open adultry, in so much that when our ambassade was last in Fraunce & mocion was made that the Duke of Orleance should mary our sayd doughter, one of ỹ said chief cõsaylors to the French kyng sayd, It wer wel done to know whither she bee the xl kyng of Englãd his lawfull doughter or not, for well knowen it is that he begat her on his brothers wyfe whych is directly against gods law & his precept. Thinke you my lordes that these wordes touche not by body & soule, thinke you ỹ these doynges do not daily & hourly trouble my cõscience & vexe my spirites, yes we doubt not but & yf it wer your owne cause euery man would seke remedy, whẽ the peril of your soul &

the losse of your inheritaunce is openly layd to you. For this only cause I protest before God & in the worde of a prince, I haue asked counsayll of the greatest clerkes in Christendome, and for this cause I haue sent for this legate as a man indifferent only to know the truth & so to setle my conscience, and for none other cause as God can iudge. And as touching the quene, yf it be adiudged by ỹ law of God that she is my lawfull wyfe, there was neuer thinge more pleasaunt nor more acceptable to me in my lyfe bothe for the discharge and clering of my cõscience and also for ỹ good qualities and condiciõs the which I know to be in her. For I assure you all, that beside her noble parentage of the whiche she is discended (as you wel know) she is a woman of moste gentlenes, of moste humilitie and buxumnes, yea and of al good qualities apperteignynge to nobilitie, she is wythoute comparyson, as I this. xx. yeres almoste haue had the true experiment, so that yf I were to mary agayne if the mariage myght be good I would surely chose her aboue al other women: But yf it be determined by iudgement that our mariage was against Goddes law and clerely voyde, then I shal not onelye sorowe the departing from so good a Lady and louing companion, but muche more lament and bewayle my infortunate chaunce that I haue so long liued in adultery to Goddes great displeasure, and haue no true heire of my bodye to inherite this realme. These bee the sores that vexe my minde, these be the panges that trouble my cõscience, and for these greues, I seke a remedy. Therfore I require of you al as our trust and cõfydence is in you to declare to our subiectes our mynde and entent according to our true meaning, and desyre them to pray with vs that the very trueth may be knowen for the discharge of our conscience and sauyng of our soule, and for the declaracion hereof I haue assembled you together, and now you may depart.

The prayse of ỹ Quene.

To see what coũtenaunce was made amongest the hearers of this Oracion, it was a straunge sight, for some syghed and sayd nothynge other were sory to heare the kyng so troubled in his conscience. Other that fauored the quene much sorowed that this matter was now opened, and so euery man spake as his hert serued him, but the kynge euer labored to know the trueth for discharge of his conscience.

Shortly after this the two Legates came to the quene at the same place of Bridewel, and declared to her how they wer deputed iudges indifferent betwene the kyng and her to heare and determin whether the mariage betwene them stode wyth Goddes law or not. When she heard the cause of their comming, no meruel though she wer astonnied for it touched her very nere. And when she had paused a while she answered: Alas my lordes it is now a question whether I be the kynges lawful wife or no. When I haue ben maried to him almost. xx. yeres & in the meane season neuer questiõ was made before. Dyuers prelates yet beyng alyue & lordes also & priuie coũsailors with the kyng at that tyme, then adiudged our mariage lawful and honest, and now to say it is detestable and abhominable, I thinke it great maruel: and in especi all when I consider, what a wyse prince the kinges father was, and also the loue and natural affeccion, that kyng Fernando my father bare vnto me: I thinke in my self that neither of our fathers, were so vncircumspect, so vnwise, and of so smal imaginacion, but they forsawe what might folowe of our mariage, and in especiall the kyng my father, sent to the Court of Rome, and there after long suite, with great coste and charge, obteigned a license and dispensacion, that I beyng the one brothers wyfe, and parauenture carnally knowen, might without scrupul x of conscience, mary wyth the other brother lawfully, which license vnder lead I haue yet to shew, which thinges make me to say, and surely beleue, that oure mariage was both lawfull, good and Godlye: But of thys trouble I onely may thanke you my lorde Cardinal of Yorke, for because I haue wõdered at your hygh pride & vainglory, and abhorre your volupteous life, and abhominable Lechery, and litle regard your presumpteous power and tiranny, therfore of malice you haue kindled thys fyre, and set thys matter a broche, & in especial for ỹ great malice that you beare to my nephew the Emperour, whom I perfectly know you hate worse then a Scorpiõ, because he would not satisfie your amxx bicion, and make you Pope by force, and therfore you haue sayed more then once, that you would trouble him and hys frendes, and you haue kept hym true promyse, for of al hys warres and vexaciõs, he only may thanke you, and as for me hys poore aunte and kynswomã, what trouble you put me to, by this new found doubt, God knoweth, to whom I commyt my cause according to the truth. The cardinal of Yorke excused himself saying, that he was not the begynner, nor the mouer of the doubte, & that it was sore agaynst hys wyl, that euer ỹ mariage should come in question, but he sayd that by his superior the Bishop of Rome, he was deputed as a Judge to heare the cause, which he sware on his xxx profession to heare indifferently, but whatsoeuer was said, she beleued hym not, and so the Legates toke their leaue of her & departed. These wordes were spoken in Frenche, and written by Cardinall Campeius secretary, which was present, and by me translated as nere as I could.

The kyng notwithstandyng that hys mynde was vnquiete, yet he kept a good coũtenaunce toward the Quene, with almuch loue, honor and gentlenes, as could be shewed to such a Princes, but he absteyned from her bed, til the truth was tryed, accordyng as his Ghostly coũsail had auysed hym, whych was to hym no lytle payne, for surely he loued her as wel, as any Prince might loue his wyfe, and she him againe, and xl therfore it was great pitie, that their mariage was not good.

The more to quicken hys spirites and for recreacion, the kyng kept hys Christmas at Grenewiche, wyth much solempnitie and great plẽty of vyandes, and thether came the two Legates, which wer receiued by twoo Dukes, and diuerse Erles, Barons and Gentlemen, to whom the kyng shewed great pleasures, both of Justes, Tornay, Banketres, Maskes and dysguisinges, & on the.xij.day he made the lawfull sonne of Cardinal Campeius, borne in wedlocke, knight, and gaue him a coller of ss. of golde: but the Quene shewed to them no maner of countenaunce, & made no great ioye of nothing, her mynd was so troubled.

This doyng in England, was spred ouer al Christendom by letters and in euery region except Spain, and the Emperors dominions, thei adiudged the kyng a wise, a verteous, & a prudēt prynce, for tryng out of the truthe, considerynge that the question was not onely doubtful to learned men in Diuinitie, but vpon the vncertaintie of thesame, depēded the ruine of his realme, and the succession of thesame, whyche was a waightie thing to consider, and no wysedome to let so great a doubt lye vndiscussed.

After Christmas and all Lent tyl Easter, was none other thing cōmoned of, but onely of the kinges mariage, the Archebishop of Cātorbury sent for the famous docters, of both the Vniuersities to Lambeth and ther wer euery day disputacions, and cōmoninges of this matter, and because the king perceiued & knewe wel, that the quene was wedded to her owne opinion, and that she wold that he shoulde do nothing wythout counsayl, he bad her chose the best clerkes of his realme, to be of her counsayl, and licensed them to do the best on her part ỹ thei could accordyng to the trueth: then she elected Wylliam Warhā Archbishop of Cantorbury, & Nicholas West byshop of Elie, docters of the lawes, and Jhon Fysher byshop of Rochester, and Henry Standish byshop of sainct Asse, docters of diuinitie, and many other docters and wel learned men, whiche for a suertie lyke men wel learned, defended her cause as far as learnyng myght defend it, as you shal here in the yere folowynge. This yere was sir James Spenser Maior of London, in whose tyme the watche in London on Midsomer night was laied doune.

¶ The.xxi. yere.

The.xxi.yere

The Courte at the Blacke Friers.

N the beginning of this yere, in a great Hal within ỹ black Friers of London, was ordeined a solēpne place for ỹ two legates to set in, wyth two cheyers couered with cloth of gold, & cushyons of thesame, and a Dormāt table railed before, lyke a solempne court, al couered with Carpettes & Tapissery: on ỹ right hād of the court was hanged a clothe of estate, w a chayer and cushyons of ryche Tyssue, for the kyng, and on the left hand of the courte was set a ryche chayer for the quene. When the place was redy, the kyng and ỹ quene wer ascited by docter Sampson, to appere befor the legates, and ỹ forxl named place, the twentie and eyght day of May, beyng then ỹ morow after the feast of Corpus Christi, in proper person, or by their Proctors. At ỹ daye assigned, the Legates came to the forenamed place, with Crosses Pillers, Axes, and al the Ceremonyes belonginge to their degrees, & after that thei wer set (the Cardinal of Yorke sitting on the right hād)

the ir

their Commission was redde, and the cause of their comming thyther openly declared, the effect wherof was, that the Courte of Rome was informed, that great Clerkes and learned men, had enformed the king that his mariage with his brothers wife was vnlawful, dãpnable and directly against the Law of God, wherfore they wer directed and appoynted by thesayd Court, to be iudges in the cause, and to hear what on both parties could be alledged: after this was done the kynge was called by name, for whom two procters appered, then the Quene was called, which wythin short space, beyng accompaignied wyth the foure x Bishoppes and other of her counsaill, and a great compaignie of Ladies and gentle women folowing her, came personally before the Legates, and after her obeysaunce, sadly and wyth great grauitie done, she appeled from them, as Judges not competent for that cause, to ỹ court of Rome, & after that done she departed againe. Notwithstãding this appele, the Legates sat wekely, & euery day wer argumentes on both partes, and nothing els done. appealed. The Quene

The kyng whych onely desired, to haue an ende in this matter, for discharge of his conscience, came to the Court the of June, and the Quene also, where he standyng vnder his cloth of estate, said these xx wordes in effect folowyng: My lordes, Legates of the Sea Apposto- The kynges Oracion.
lyke, whych be deputied Judges, in thys great and waighty matter, I most hartely beseche you, to ponder my mynde and entent, which only is to haue a final ende, for the discharge of my cõscience, for euery good christẽ man knoweth what pain, & what vnquietnes he suffreth, which hath his conscience greued, for I assure you on myne honour, that this matter hath so vexed my mind, & troubled my spirites, that I can scantely study any thinge, whiche should be proffitable for my Realme and people. And for to haue a quietnes in body and soule is my desyre and request, and not for any grudge that I bear to her that I haue maried xxx for I dare saye that for her womanhode, wysdom, nobilitie, and gẽtlenes, neuer Prince had suche another, & therfore yf I would willyngly chaunge I wer not wise: wherfore my suite is to you my lordes at this tyme, to haue a spedy ende, accordyng to ryght, for the quietnes of my mynd and conscience onely, and for no other cause as God knoweth.

When the kyng had sayd, the Quene departed without any thing saiyng, then she was called, to know whether she would bide by her appeale, or answer there before the Legates, her Procter answered, that she would byde by her appeale, that notwithstanding the Counsailers on both sides euery day almoste met, and debated this matter substanxl cially, so that at the last the Diuines wer al of opinion, that the mariage was against the lawe of God, yf she were carnallye knowen, by the first brother (which thing she clerely denied) but to that was answered that Prince Arthur her husbande, confessed the act done, whẽ he called for drynke earely in the morning, saiyng that he had bene in Spayne that nyght, whych was a hote countrey, meaning that he had carnally vsed her,farther,at ỹ tyme of the death of Prince Arthur, she thought and iudged that she was wyth childe,and for that cause, the king was deferred from the Title and Creacion of the Prince of Wales, almost halfe a yere, whiche thynge coulde not haue bene iudged,yf she had not bene carnally knowen.

Also she her selfe caused a bull to be purchased, in the whyche were these wordes, Vel forsan cognitam, which is asmuche to say, as peraduenture carnally knowen,whiche wordes were not in the first Bull graunted by July at her seconde mariage to the kyng, which seconde Bull wyth that clause was only purchased, to dispence with the second Matrimony, although there were carnall copulacion before, whiche Bull neded not to haue bene purchased, yf there had bene no carnal copulacion, for then the first Bull had bene sufficient. x

When the Diuines on her side, were beaten from that groũd, then they fel to perswasions of Natural reason, how this should not be vndone, for thre causes: One was because if it shoulde be broken, the onely childe of the kyng, shoulde be a Bastarde, whiche were a greate mischiefe to the realme: Secondly, the separacion should be cause of great vnkyndnes, betwene her kynred and this realme. And the third cause was, that the continuaunce of so longe space, had made the Mariage honest: These perswasyons wyth manye other, were set furthe by the Quenes Counsayl, and in especiall by the Bysshop of Rochester, which stode stiffe in her cause, but yet Gods precept was not answered, wherfore they left that ground and fel to pleading, that the Court of Rome had dispensed wyth that Mariage: To this some lawers sayd, that no yearthely persone is able to dispence wyth the positiue lawe of God. xx

When the Legates had heard the opinions of the Diuines, & sawe that their opinion for the moste parte, was against ỹ Matrimony, and that now the question was brought to dyspute the aucthoritie of the Court of Rome, they begamne a litle to quicken: For they considered ỹ if they woulde saye and determyne, that the Courte of Rome myght not dispẽce in that case, that few men wold thinke, that they might dispence in anye other case, whych shoulde be to theim, a greate losse and hurt. Wherfore they dissimuled the matter and euer told the king, that he should haue an end shortly, and tracted furth the tyme with Oracyons and Sophistical argumentes, til August began to approche: then Cardinall Campeius sayd, ỹ they myght not syt after July, tyll October, all whyche season was a vacacyon in thee Courte of Rome, and their court beynge a member of the Courte of Rome, they must nedes do thesame: thys saiyng was reported to the kynge, which by that saiyng knewe perfectly, that he shoulde then haue no ende, and then he cõplayned to ỹ dukes of Norfolk and Suffolke, and other nobles of hys counsayl, how he was delayed, and wylled them at the next Session, to require them to make an end of the cause, and what iudgement soeuer they gaue he woulde gladly accept it, for the quyetnes of his conscience. xxx xl

These

These noble men came to the place, wher the Legates sat, the.xxx. day of August, beyng Friday, where as Cardinal Campeius, declared in eloquent Latin, and sware on his honor and fayth that he bare to ỹ church of Rome, that the course of the courtes there be, at thend of July, to suspende all causes, till the.iiij. day of October, and yf anye cause be treated, and iudged in the meane season, that iudgemēt to be clerely voide, and therfore he required the kyng to take pacience, til that time, trusting that then thei should procede toward sentēce, so that he shuld be contented: the noble menne desired theim to make an ende, whatsoeuer it were, that day or the next day, which was the laste daye of July: but they answered that they coulde sitt no more till October, whyche answere sore displeased the noble menne, whiche the king had sent thether, in so much that Charles Duke of Suffolke, seyng the delay gaue a great clappe on the Table wyth his hād and sayd: by the Masse, now I see that the olde sayd saw is true, that there was neuer Legate nor Cardynall, that dyd good in Englande, and wyth that saiynge all the Temporall Lordes departed to the king, leauing the Legates sitting one lookyng on the other sore astonnied because they saw the Temporall lordes depart in anger.

xx You may be sure, that the king was not wel content, when he hard of this delay, but yet lyke a wyse Prince, he tooke it pacientlye, trusting to haue an ende in October ensuyng: But whē he heard tell, that a letter was sent for the Cardinall Campeius, that he shoulde wyth spede, returne into Italy, and that he prouided for his iorney. Then he opēly perceiued, that the Legates dissimuled the tyme to haue the matter in the Courte Rome, for the mainteynaunce of their aucthoritie, knoweyng perfectly, that there he should bee foded furth with argumentes so long, that he should be in maner wery; and also all that tyme, he should bee vnquiet in his conscience, which was the greatest care, that he had

xxx but the seconde care that he tooke, was to see the Cardinall of Yorke, (whom he so hyghly fauoured and trusted, and whom he had so highly promoted, both to the Archbishoprycke of Yorke, and the Bishoprickes of Winchester, Duresme, and the Abbay of Saincte Albones, wᵗ manye other greate dignities and promocions, beside the chauncellorshippe of Englande) so vnfaithfullye to dyssimule with hym, and not to open the very trueth, which caused hym clerely to cast hym out of hys fauor, in the which he had long bene.

When the nobles and prelates perceiued, that the kings fauor was from the Cardinal sore minished, euerye man of the kynges counsail, xl beganne to laye to hym suche offences, as they knewe by hym, and all their accusacyons were writtē in a boke, and all their handes sett to it, to the nombre of thirtie and foure, which boke they presented to the kyng. When the kyng saw the boke, he marueyled not a litle, for by the Artycles conteigned in thesame, he euidently perceiued the high pride and coueteousnes of the Cardinal, and saw openlye wyth what dyssy-inulacion and clokyng, he had hãdeled the kinges causes: how he with faire lying wordes, had blynded and defrauded the kyng, moste vntruly, wherych accusacyons sore moued the kynge agaynste hym, but yet he kepte it close for a time, and so the kyng rode on his progresse wyth the Quene to Woodstocke. And at the feast of the Natiuitie of oure Lady he came to Grafton, beside Stony Stratforde, and thether came the two Legates, and were but meanely receiued, sauyng that the kynge made to theim good semblaunce, and in especiall to Cardinall Campeius, because he came into England at his request: and after dinner the sayd Campeius toke his leaue of the king, and then the kyng him conueighed to the chamber dore, and there they departed, & the Cardinal of Yorke also went with his compaignion to Tocester, and on the morowe he came to Grafton to speake with the kyng, which was then ridyng out on hunting, and sent him worde by Henry Norreys, that he should accompaignie Campeius to London, and when the kyng came to London, he would more cõmen with hym: thus almost dismaied the Cardinall of Yorke, returned to his compaignion to Tocester, and so thei came together to London, where to the Cardinal Campeius, wer deliuered great rewardes, and so he toke his iorney toward ỹ sea side. xx

Where the kynges counsayl, caused his chestes and cariages to be opened, to to se what letters the Cardinall of Yorke had sent to the court of Rome, & ther wer but a few letters found, for they were sent before in post, but in many chestes wer found, old hosen, old coates, & such vile stuffe, as no honest man wold cary to haue it, which serch much displeased Cãpeius, & ỹ more because his coffers wer likewise opened in chepe by the rashenes of a Moyle, as you heard in the tẽth yere of this king.

The last tyme the Cardinall came to the kyngs presence.

Thus departed out of England in high displeasure, the crafty Cardinall Campeius, leauyng behynd him hys subtle felowe, whiche after their departinge from the kynge at Grafton, neuer sawe the kynge, nor came in his presence. This greate Session of the legates, was cõ- xxx muned of through Christendome, and in especyall in Spain, and other the Emperors Dominiõs, which sore grudged that the Quene should bee diuorsed from the kyng: and surely the most part of the laye people of Englande, which knew not the lawe of god, sore murmured at the matter, and much the more, because there was a gentle woman in the Court, called Anne Bulleyne, doughter to sir Thomas Bulleyne, Viscount Rocheforde, whom the kyng much fauoured in all honestie, and surely none otherwyse, as al the world wel knew after. For this cause the Quenes ladies, gentlewomen, and seruauntes largely spake & said that she so entysed the kyng, and brought him in such amours, that only for her sake and occasion, he would be diuorsed from his Quene, this xl was the foolishe communicacion of people, contrary to trueth, as you haue heard declared before.

The kinge whiche after twentie yere past, had bene ruled by other, and in especial by the Cardinal of yorke, began now to be a ruler, and a

kyng

kynge, yea, a kyng of suche wytte, wisedome and pollicie, that the lyke hath not reygned ouer this realme, as you shall playnly perceyue here after, aswell for the setting furth of true Doctryne, as also for the augmentacion of his Croune. For when he perceiued, howe the Cardinalles had handeled hym, and saw playnly that the lawe of god was clere that he myght not mary his brothers wyfe, he thoughte to sende hys Ambassadours to all the Uniuersities in Fraunce and Italy, to knowe their determinacions, and for that cause he sent Docter Stokesley, & Doctor Fore, two great Clerkes into Fraunce, which sped as you shall x hear after declared, when the matter serueth.

The kyng continually studiyng on this matter, called a counsayl of the chief of the nobles, to begin at Westminster, the first daye of October next ensuing, and also somoned a Parliamēt, to begin the third day of Nouēber, then immediatly folowyng, & declared that thesame coūsail, should deuise diuerse actes, necessarye and nedefull to bee passed at thesayd Parliament, for reformacion of certain exaccions, done by the clergie to the lay people, to which counsayl and Parliamente, the Cardinal was warned and somoned, whych muche comforted hym, that he outwardly litle abashed: and so he and al the counsayl, came to the coūxx sayl chamber at Westminster, and ther diuerse dayes, communed of diuerse thynges, but nothing was fully concluded, and there the Cardinal shewed him self, much more humblier, then he was wont to be, and the lordes shewed them selfes more hygher & straunger, then thei wer wont to bee, but for all that he abashed not his countenaunce, but came into Westminster hal with al his trayne, the first day of the Terme: but none of the kynges seruauntes would go before, as they were wont to do, and so he sat in the Chauncery, but not in the Starre chamber, for all the lordes and other the kinges counsayl, wer gone to Wynsore to the kyng, where they enformed the kyng, that all thinges that he had xxx done almoste, by hys power Legantine, were in the case of the Premunire and Prouyson: and that the Cardinall had forfected, al his lādes, tenementes, goodes and catelles to the kyng: wherfore the kyng willyng order to him, according to ỹ order of hys lawes, caused hys attorney Christopher Hales, to sue out a Writte of Premunire against him, in the whiche he lycensed hym, to make an attorney.

The kynge begynneth to rule.

The Cardynalles pryde abated.

The Cardinall in the Premunire.

And farther the seuentene day of Nouember, he sent the two dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, to hys place at Westminster, to fetch away the great Seale of Englande, whiche he was loth to delyuer, yf there had bene any remedy, but in conclusion he deliuered it, to the two Du-xl kes, whych deliuered thesame to Docter Taylor Maister of the Rolles, to cary it to the kyng, which so did the next day: & beside this the kyng sent sir William Fitz William knyght of the Garter, and Threasorer of hys house, and Docter Stephin Gardiner, newly made Secretary, to se that no goodes shuld be embeshled out of hys house: & farther ordeined that the Cardinal should remoue to Asher beside Kyngston, there to tary the kinges pleasur, & to haue all thines deliuered to him, which were necessary for him, but not after his olde pompeous & superfluous fashion. For all his goodes wer seazed to the kinges vse. Whē the seale was thus taken from the Cardinall, the Dukes of Norffolk and Suffolk, with many Erles, Bishoppes and Barons, came into the Starre chamber, the .xix. day of October, wher the duke of Norffolk declared that the kynges hyghnes, for diuerse & sondry offences, had taken frō hym his greate Seale, and deposed him of all offices, and leaste menne might complayn for lacke of Justice, he had appointed him & the Duke of Suffolk, with the assent of the other lordes, to sit in the Starre chā- ber, to hear and determin causes indifferently, and that of all thynges the Kinges pleasure and commaundement was, that they should kepe their handes close, from anye rewardes takyng, or maintenaunce, and so that weke they sat in the Starre chamber, and determined causes.

On the day of thesame moneth, the Cardinall remoued out of his house called Yorke place, with one Crosse saiyng, that he would he had neuer borne more, meaning that by hys crosse, ỹ he bare as legate which degre taking was his confusion, as you se openly, and so he toke his barge, and went to Putney by water, and there toke his horse and rode to Asher, where he remaigned til Lent after.

The Cardynalles remouinge from Yorke place.

During which tyme, he beyng called on for an answere in the kynges Bench, to the premunire, for geuynge benefyces by preuensyon, in disturbaunce of mens enherytaunce, and diuerse other open causes in the premunire, he according to ỹ kynges licence, cōstituted Jhō Scute and Edmond Jenny, apprentices of the lawe his attorneys, which by his owne warrant signed wyth hys hande, confessed all thinges cōcer- ning thesaid suite, for they wer to open to be cloked or hidden, & so iud- gement was geuen, that he shuld forfet al his lādes, tenemētes, goodes and catalles, and should be out of the kynges proteccion, but for all that the kyng sent him a sufficient protection: & of his gentlenes left to him the Bishoprikes of Yorke and Wynchester, aud gaue to him plate and stuffe, cōuenient for his degre, and the bishoprike of Duresme, he gaue to docter Tunstal bishop of London, and the Abbey of saynt Albones, he gaue to the Prior of Norwiche, and to Londō he promoted Docter Jhon Stokesley, then Ambassador to the Uniuersities, for the kinges mariage, as you haue heard before. For all these kyndnes shewed to ỹ Cardinall, yet stil he maligned against the kynge, as you shall perceyue hereafter, by his vntrue doynges, which brought him to confusyon.

The twenty and thre day of October, the kyng came to his Manor of Grenewich, and there much consulted wyth his counsayl, for a mete manne to bee his Chauncellour, so that in no wise he were no manne of the Spiritualtie, and so after long debate the kyng resoluted him selfe vpon sir Thomas More knyght, Chauncellour of the Duchie of Lan- castre, a manne well learned in the toungues, and also in the Common Lawe, whose wytte was fine, and full of imaginaciōs, by reason wher-

of, he was to'muche geuen to mockinge, whyche was to his grauitie a great blemishe. And then on the Sonday, the twentie and foure daye of the same moneth, the kynge made hym hys Chauncellour, & deliuered him the great Seale, which Lord Chauncellour, the next morow after, was ledde into the Chauncery, by the two dukes of Norffolk and Suffolk, and there swore, and then the Mace was borne before him. Sir Thomas Moze made Chaũcellor.

Now let vs returne to the treatie of Cambray, which was appointed to be kept the last sommer, for the conclusion of a peace, betwene the Emperour on the one part, and the kyng of England, and the French x kyng on the other part, for whyche conclusion there came to Cambrey, the Lady Margaret Duches of Sauoy, Aunt to the Emperour, and the Ladye Loyse Duches of Angulesme, and mother to the Frenche kyng, and Docter Tunstall Bysshop of London, and after Bysshoppe of Duresme, and sir Thomas Moze knight, after made Chauncellour of Englande, and diuerse other for the kinge of Englande, all these mette there in the beginning of July, accompanied with diuerse great Princes and Counsailers, on euery parte, and after long debating on bothe sides, there was a good conclusion taken, the fyfth day of August, in the which was concluded, that the treatie of Madrill, should stande in hys xi full strength and vertue, sauyng the thirde and fourth, and the leuenth and fourtenth articles, which touch the Duchie of Burgoin, and other lordeshippes.

Item, it was agreed that the French kyng should haue hys childrẽ deliuered again, paiyng to the Emperour two Myllyons of Crounes of gold, wherof he should paye at the deliuering of the chyldrẽ, twelue hundred thousand Crounes.

Item, that the Frenche kyng shoulde acquite the Emperor, against the kynge of Englande, of foure skore and tenne thousande Crounes, xxx whiche the Emperour ought to the king of England, and the kyng of Englande to deliuer all suche bondes and gages, as he had of the emperoures.

Item, as touching the remnãt, which was fiue hundred and tenne thousand Crounes, the Emperor shuld haue. xxv. thousande crounes rent yerely, for the which he should haue the landes, of the Duches of Uandosme, lyng in Flaunders, and Brabant bounde.

Item, that Flaũders and diuerse other coũtreys, should not be hold in chief, nor haue resort to the croune of Fraunce.
xl

Item, that the realme of Napels, the Duchy of Millain, & the countie of Ast, should for euer remain to the Emperour.

Item, that the French kynge should wythdrawe all such souldiers as he had, out of Italy.

Item

Item,that the Ladye Elianor should be brought into Fraunce, wyth the French kinges chyldren,and in time conuenient shoulde be maried to the French king.

Item,that the French kyng should ayde the Emperor wyth twelue Gallies to go into Italy.

Item,that al pryfoners on both parties should be acquited.

Item,that the French kyng should not ayde Robert de la Marche, against the Bishop of Luke.

Item,that al the goodes moueable & vnmoueable, of Charles late Duke of Burbon,should be restored to his heyres, they paiyng to lord Hēry,Marques of Dapenete,and erle of Nassaw, the lord Chamberlayne to the Emperor,tenne thousande Ducates,whith he lent to the sayed Duke of Burbon.

Item,that Jhon erle of Panthieure, should be remitted to all such goodes,as were Erle Rene his fathers.

Item,the Lord Lawrence de Gorowod,great Maister to the Emperour,should be restored to the lordshippes of Chalmount,and Monteualle,whiche he bought of the Duke of Burbon, or elles to haue hys money agayne.

Item,Philip de Chalon Prince of Orenge and Uiceroy of Napels is to be restored to al his landes in Burgoone.

Item,that the Duches of Uandosme, and Loys Earle of Nauers should haue al such ryght and accions,as they shoulde haue had,before the warre began.

In the Emperors countreis,when al thinges were written,sealed and finished,there was a solempne Masse song in the cathedral church of Cambrey,the two ladies Ambassadors of the king of Englande, sittynge in greate estate,and after Masse the peace was proclaymed,betwene the thre Princes, and Te deum song,and money cast to the people, and greate fires made throughe the citie. Thesame night the Frenche kyng came into Cambrey,wel and nobly accompanied and saluted the Ladies,and to them made diuerse banbettes,and then al persones departed into their countrey glad of this concord. xxij

The womēnes peace.

This peace was called the womēnes peace, for because that notwithstandyng this conclusyon,yet neyther ỹ Emperor trusted the Frenche kyng,nor he neyther trusted nor loued him,and their Subiectes,were in thesame case. Thys Proclamacyon was proclaymed solempnely by Heraldes,wyth trompettes of the citie of London,which Proclamacion,much reioysed the Englysh Merchauntes,repairing into Spain

Flaunders &

Flaunders, Brabant, zelande, and other the Emperors dominions, for duryng the warres, Merchauntes wer euyl handeled on both parties which caused them to be destrous of peace.

Here is to be remẽbred, that at this present time, William Tindale had newly translated and emprinted the new Testament in Englysh, and the Bishop of London not pleased with the translacion therof, debated with him self, how he might compasse and deuise, to destroy that false and erronious translacion, (as he sayd). And so it happened that one Augustine Packington, a Mercer and Merchaunt of Londõ, and x of a great honestie, the same tyme was in Andwarp, where the Bishop then was, and this Packyngton was a man that highly fauored Wyliam Tyndale, but to the bishop vtterly shewed him self to the cõtrary. The bishop desirous to haue hys purpose brought to passe, commoned of the New Testamentes, and how gladly he would bie them. Packington then hearyng that he wished for, sayd vnto the byshop, my Lord, yf it be your pleasure, I can in this matter doo more I dare saye, then moste of the Merchauntes of England that are here, for I knowe the Dutche men and straungiers, that haue bought theim of Tindale, and haue theim here to sel, so that yf it be your lordeshippes pleasure, to pay xx for them (for otherwyse I cãnot come by them, but I must disburse money for theim) I wil then assure you, to haue euery boke of them, that is imprinted and is here vnsolde. The Bishop thinking that he had God by the too, when in dede he had (as after he thought) the Deuell by the fiste, said, gentle maister Packington, do your diligence and get them and with al my hart I will paye for them, whatsoeuer thei cost you, for the bokes are erronious and naughtes, and I entend surely to destroy theim all, and to burne theim at Paules Crosse. Augustine Packingtõ came to Willyam Tyndale and sayed, Willyam I knowe thou arte a xxx poor man, and hast a hepe of newe Testamentes and bokes by thee for the whiche thou hast bothe indaungered thy frẽdes, and beggered thy self, and I haue now gotten the a Merchaunt, whiche with ready money shall dispatche thee of al that thou hast, if you thynke it so profitable for your self. Who is the Merchaũt said Tindale? The bishoppe of London saied Packyngton, O that is because he wil burne them saied Tyndale, ye Mary quod Packingtõ, I am ỹ gladder said Tyndale, for these twoo benefites shall come thereof, I shal gett moneye of hym for these bokes, to bring my self out of debt (& the whole world shall cry out vpon the burning of Goddes worde). And the ouerplus of the money that shal remain to me, shal make me more studious, to correct the sayd xl New Testament, and so newly to Imprint the same once again, and I trust the second wyl much better lyke you, then euer did the first: And so forwarde went the bargain, the byshop had the bokes, Packyngton the thankes, and Tyndal had the money.

Cuthart Tunstal bishop of Lõdõ, bought Newe Testamentes to burne.

Augustine Packyngton the Bishop of Londõs merchaunt.

Afterward, when mo new Testamentes wer imprinted, they came thicke and thyckefold into England, the bishop of London hearyng that stil there were so many Newe Testamentes abroad, sent for Augustin Packington and sayd vnto him: Sir how commeth this, that ther are so many New Testamentes abroad, and you promised and assured me ỹ you had bought al: then said Packington, I promes you I boughte al that then was to be had: but I perceiue they haue made more sence, and it wil neuer be better, as long as they haue the letters and stampes, therfore it wer best for your lordeshyp, to bye the stampes to, and then are you sure: the byshop smiled at him and said, wel Packyngton well, and so ended this matter.

Shortly after it fortuned one George Cõstantine to be apprehẽded ỹ by sir Thomas More, which then was lord Chauncellor of England, of suspicion of certain heresies. And this Constantine beyng w̃ More after diuerse examinacions of dyuerse thinges, emong other, Maister More said in this wise to Constantine. Constantine I would haue the plain with me, in one thing that I wyl aske of the, and I promes the I will shew the fauor, in all the other thinges, wherof thou art accused to me. There is beyonde the sea Tyndale, Joye and a great many mo of you, I know they cannot lyue without helpe, some sendeth theim money and succoureth theim, and thy self beyng one of them, haddest part therof, and therfore knowest from whence it came. I pray the who be thei that thus helpe them: My lord quod Constantine, wil you that I shal tel you ỹ truth: Yea I pray the quod my lord. Mary I will quod Constantine, truly quod he it is the Bishop of London that hath holpẽ vs, for he hath bestowed emonge vs, a great deale of moneye in Newe Testamẽtes to burne theim, and that hath and yet is our onely succour and comfort. Nowe by my trouth quod More, I thinke euen thesame, and I sayd so much to the bishop, when he went about to bie them. xx

While this treatie was thus in communicacion at Cambrey, themperor which knew that his people lacked ayd in Italy, and also perceiued that the people in Germany and Italy, had him not in suche honor as they would, if he wer once crouned Emperor, for in al writings thei called him only Charles elected Emperor, wherfore he determined to go into Italy with a great puyssaunce, bothe to receiue his Imperiall Croune, and also to ayde his people, which there remayned, and so accõpaigned with many Princes and noble men of Spayne, and men of war, he toke ship at Barcilona, and sailed to Geane, wher he was receiued with ỹ seigniorie of the cyty, with great triumphe & honor, & great presentes geuen to him. Pope Clement hearyng that themperor was come into Italy, with al hys Cardinalles and whole court came to his citie of Bononie, and there taryed the Emperors comming. xxi

The Pope came to Bononye.

While the Emperor lay at Geane, thither came to him diuerse great Princes of Italy, with great powers, and when al thinges wer redy he set forward in good ordre of battayl toward Bononie, and in euery toune he was receiued, & presented wyth great giftes & feasted, and so by long iorneys he came nere to Bononie, where firste met with him, al

the

the Clergie of the Citie with procession, then all the vniuersitie in ther habites, al on horsebacke, then came all the Childrē of the citie, in white sattin fringed with gold, after thē the marchauntes of the citie, al in crimosyn Damaske, then folowed the potestates & gouernors of the citie all in Crimosyn veluet, & within a myle of the citie there met hym foure and twentie Cardinalles: with this triumph thēperor was cōueyghed to the Cathedrall church, wher on the steppes, of ỹ west dore in a chair sat Pope Clement, and then the Emperour a lighted & kyssed his fote and then they embrassed together, & went into the churche together & after went in to the pallace where they wer lodged both, & daily kepte great counsayles together. While the Cardinall laye at Bonenie, ther came to hym Fraunces Sforse Duke of Millane, to excuse hymselfe of all thynges to hym obiected, and by muche entreatyng at the Popes request he pardoned hym hys offence, and restored hym to his dignitie and possession, paiyng to hym nine hundreth thousand Ducates, & tyll they wer pated, the Castle of Millarne, & the toune of Crome, shoulde abide in themperours possession. After this agrement, the Emperoure sent for Anthony de leua, and made him capitayne of his ordinaunce, & so now the duchy of Millayne was brought to quiet. In the same season the kyng of Englād sent sir Nicholas Carewe knight master of hys horses, & Doctor Sāpson to Bononie for the ratification of the league concluded at Cambray, to the performance whereof the Emperour was solemplie sworne, & so the Ambassadours departed: lyke wyse themperour sent into England, Peter Lord of Rosebec, which lyke wise sawe the kyng of England sworne to persorme the same.

Thēperoure kisseth ỹ Popes fete.

According to the somons the kyng of England began his high court of parliamēt, ỹ third day of Nouembre. On which day he came by water to his place of Bridewell, and there he & his nobles put on there robes of parliament, & so came to the blacke Freers churche, wher a Masse of the holy ghost was solemplie song by the kynges Chappell, & after the Masse, the kyng with al the Lordes of the parliament, and Commons which were somoned to appere at that day came into ỹ parliamēt chāber, wher the kyng sat in his Throne or seate royall, and Sir Thomas More his Chauncelor standyng on the right hand of the kyng behinde the barre made an eloquent Oracion, declarynge that lyke as a good shepard whiche not alonely kepeth and attendeth well his shepe, but also forseeth & prouideth for althyng, which either may be hurtful or noysome to his flocke, or may preserue and defende thesame agaynst all peryles that may chaunce to come, so the kyng whiche was the sheaperd, ruler and gouernour of his realme, vigilātly forseyng thinges to come cōsidered how diuers lawes before this tyme wer made nowe by longe continuaunce of tyme & mutaciō of thinges, very insufficient, & vnperfight, & also by the frayl condicion of man, diuers new enormities were sprong amongest the people, for the whiche no law was yet made to reforme thesame, which was the very cause why at that tyme ỹ kyng had somoned

somoned his high court of parliament: and he resembled the kyng to a shepard, or heard man for this cause, for yf a prince be compared to his riches, he is but a richeman, yf a prince be compared to his honour, he is but an honorable man: but compare him to the multitude of his people and the numbre of his flocke, thē he is a ruler, a gouernor of might and puissaunce, so that his people maketh him a prince, as of the multitude of shepe, commeth the name of a shepherd: and as you se that emongest a great flocke of shepe some be rottē and fauty which the good sheperd sendeth from the good shepe, so the great wether which is of late fallen as you all knowe, so craftely, so scabedly, ye & so vntruly iuggled wyth the kynge, that all men must nedes gesse and thinke that he thought in him self, that the had no wit to perceiue his craftie doyng, or els that he presumed that the kyng woulde not se nor know his fraudulent Jugeling and attemptes: but he was deceiued, for his graces sight was so quicke and penetrable, that he saw him, ye and saw through hym, both with in and without, so that all thing to him was open, and accordyng to his desert he hath had a gentle correction, which smal ponishmēt the kynge will not to be an example to other offendoures, but clerly declareth that whosoeuer here after shall make like attempt or commit like offence, shall not escape with lyke ponyshment: and because you of the xxv common house be a grosse multitude, and cannot speake all at one time: Therefore the kynges pleasure is, that you shall resortē to the nether house, and there emonge your selfes accordyng to the olde and aunciēt custome to chose an able person to be your cōmon mouth & speaker, & after youre election so made to aduertise his grace therof, which wyl declare to you his pleasure what day he wil haue him presēt in this place.

After this done, the cōmons resorted to ỹ nether house, & they chose Thomas Audelei chosen speaker. for there speaker Thomas Audeley Esquier & attorney of the Duchie of Lancaster, and the same day was the parliamēt adiourned to Westminster. On the sixt day of the same moneth the kyng came in to ỹ parliament chambre and all the Lordes in there robes, and ther the commons of the nether house presented there speker, which there made an An oracion. eloquent Oracion which cōsisted in two poynctes, the first poynct was that he muche praysed the kyng for his equitie and Justice, mixed with mercy and pitie, so that none offence was forgottē and left vnponished nor in the punishment the extremitie nor the rigor of the lawe not cruelly extended, which shuld be a cause to bridel all men from doinge lyke offences, and also a comforte to offendors to confesse there crime and offence, and an occasion of amendment and reconciliacion. xxvi

The second poinct was, ỹ he disabled him selfe, both for lacke of wyt learnyng and discrecio to so high an office, besechyng the kynge to cause his comons to resort eftsones to ther common house, and ther to chose an other speaker for that parliament. xxvij

To this the kyng (by the mouth of the Lord Chauncelor) answered that where he disabled hym selfe in wit and learnyng, his awne ornate

oracion there made testified the contrary, & as touchyng his discrecion and other qualities, the kyng hym selfe had wel knowē him and his doynges, sith he was in his seruice, to be both wise and discrete, and so for an hable man he accepted hym, and for the speaker he hym admitted.

When ỹ commons were assembled in the nether house, thei began to cōmon of their greses wherwith the spiritualtie had before tyme greuously oppressed them, both cōtrarie to ỹ lawe of the realme, & cōtrarie to all righte, & in especial thei were sore moued with sixe greate causes.

The first for the excesse fynes, which ỹ ordinaries toke for probat of Testamentes, in so muche that sir henry Guilford knight of the gartir and comptroller of the kynges house, declared in the open Parliament on his fidelitie that he and other beynge executors to Sir Wyllyam Compton knight paied for the probate of his wil to the Cardinall & the Archbishop of Cauntorburie a thousand Marke sterlyng: after this declaracion were shewed so many extorcions done by ordinaries for probates of willes, that it were to muche to rehearse. 1

The second cause was the great polling & extreme exaccion, whiche the spirituall men vsed in takyng of corps presentes or mortuaries, for the childzen of the defunct should al dye for hunger and go a beggynge rather then thei would of charitie geue to them the sely kow which the dead man ought yf he had but only one, suche was the charitie then. 2

The third cause was, that priestes beyng surueiors, stuardes and officers to Bishoppes, Abbotes, and other spirituall heddes, had and occupied Fermes, Graunges, & grasing in euery contrey, so that the pore husbandmen coulde haue nothynge but of them, and yet for that they should pay derely. 3

The fourth cause was that Abbotes, Priors and spirituall men kept Tanne houses, & bought and soulde woll, clothe and all maner of marchaundise as other temporall marchauntes dyd. 4

The fift cause, was because ỹ spiritual persones promoted to greate benefices & hauyng there liuyng of ther flocke, were lyng in the courte in lordes houses, & toke al of the parishoners, & nothing spent on thē at al, so that for lacke of residēce both the poore of the parishe lacked refreshyng, & vniuersally all ỹ parishioners lacked preaching, & true instruccion of Gods wordes, to the greate perell of there soules. 5

The sixt cause was to se one preest beyng litle learned to haue tenne or twelue benefices and to be residen on none, and to know many well learned scholers in the vniuersitie which wer able to preche and teache to haue nether benefice nor exhibicion. 6

These thynges before this time might in nowise be towched nor yet talked of by no man except he would be made an heritike, or lese al that he had, for the bishoppes were chauncelors, and had all the rule about the kyng, so that no man durst once presume to attempt any thyng contrary to their proffit, or commoditie.

But now when God had illumined the eies of the kynge, & that ther subtell doynges was once espied: then men began charitably to desyre a reformacion, and so at this Parliament menne began to shewe there grudges.

Where vpon the Burgesses of the Parliament, appointed suche as were learned in the law beyng of the cõmon house, to drawe one bill of the probates of Testamentes, a nother for Mortuaries, and the thirde for none residence, pluralities, and takyng of Fermes by spiritual men.

The learned men toke muche payne, and firste set furthe the byll of Mortuaries, whiche passed the common house, and was sent vp to the Lordes.

To this byll, the spirituall Lordes made a fayre face, saiynge that surely prestes and curates toke more then they should, and therfore it were well done to take some reasonable ordre, thus thei spake because it touched them litle.

But with in two daies after was sent vp the bill cõcerning probates of Testamentes, at the which the Archbishop of Cauntorburie in especiall, and all other bishoppes in generall both frowned and grunted, for that touched ther profite, in so much as Doctor Jhon Fisher bishop of Rochester, saied openlie in the Parliament chambre these woordes, my Lordes, you se daily what billes come hither from the cõmon house and all is to the distruction of the churche, for Godes sake se what a Realme the kyngdome of Boheme was, and when the Churche went doune, then fell the glory of the kyngdome, now with the Commons is nothing but doune with the Church, and all this me semeth is for lacke of faith only.

The saiyng of. J. ffisher B. of Rochester.

When these woordes were reported to the Commons of the nether house, that the bishop should say that all ther doynges were for lacke of faith, thei toke the matter greuously, for thei Imagined that the bishop estemed them as Heretikes, and so by his slaunderous woordes would haue perswaded the temporall Lordes to haue restrained ther consent from the saied twoo billes, whiche they before had passed, as you haue hard before.

Wherfore the Commons after long debate, determined to send the speaker of the Parliamẽt to the kinges highnes, with a greuous complaynt, agaynst the bishop of Rochester, and so on a day when the kyng was at layser, Thomas Audeley the speaker for the commons and thirtie of the chief of the common house, came to the kynges presence in his palace at Westminster, whiche before was called Yorke place and there very eloquently declared what a dishonour to the kyng and the realme it was to say that they which wer elected for the wysest men of all the Shyres, Cities, and borroughes with in the realme of Englãd shoulde be declared in so noble and open presence to lacke faith, whyche was equuualent to say, that thei were Infidelles and no Christians, as ill as

as Turkes or Saralins, so that what payne or studie so euer thei toke for the commō wealth, or what actes or lawes so euer thei made or stablished, shulde be taken as lawes made by Panyms and hethen people, & not worthy to be kept by christian men: wherfore he most humbly besought the kynges highnes, to call ỹ saied byshop before hym & to cause him to speake more discretly of such a nomber as was in ỹ cōmō house.

The kyng was not well contented with the saiyng of the bishop, yet he gently answered the speaker, that he would sende for the bishop and send them worde what answere he made, and so they departed agayn.

¶ After this the kyng sent for the archebishope of Cauntorburie and sire other bishopes, and for the bishop of Rochester also, and there declared to hym the grudge of the commons, to the which the byshop answered that he ment the doinges of the Bohemians was for lacke of faith, and not the doynges of them that were in the common house, which saiyng was confirmed by the bishopes being present, whiche had him in greate reputaciō, and so by that only saiyng the kyng accepted his excuse and therfore sent woord to the comons by sir William Fitz william knight treasorer of his househoulde, which blind excuse pleased the commons nothyng at all. The bishops excuse.

¶ After this diuers assemblies wer kept betwene certein of the lordes & certayne of the commons, for the billes of probates of Testamentes, and the mortuaries: the temporaltie laied to the spiritualtie ther awne lawes and constitucions, & the spiritualtie sore defended them by prescripcion and vsage, to whome an answere was made by a gentleman of Greyes Inne: the vsage hath euer ben of theues to robbe on shoters hill, ergo is it lawfull & with this answere the spirituall men were sore offended, because there doynges were called robberies, but the temporall men stode still by there saiynges, in so muche the sayed gentle man sayd to the Archebishop of Cauntorburie, that both the exaccion of probates of Testamentes, and the takynge of Mortuaries, as they were vsed were open robbery & theft: after long disputacion, the temporall lordes began to leane to ỹ cōmons, but for all that, the billes remayned vnconcluded a while.

In the meane season, there was a bill assented by the Lordes, and sent doune to the cōmons, the effect wherof was, that the whole realme by the saied acte, did release to the kynge, all suche somes of money as he had borowed of them at the loane, in the fiftene yere of his raigne (as you haue hard before) this byll was sore argued in the common house but the moste parte of the commons were the kynges seruauntes, and the other were so labored to by other, that the bill was assented to. The loane released.

When this release of the loane was knowen to the commons of the Realme, Lorde so they grudged, and spake ill of the hole Parliament, for almoste euery man counted it his dette, and reconed suerly of the payment of the same, and therfore some made there wylles of thesame, and some other dyd set it ouer to other for debt, and so many men had losse by it, whiche caused thē sore to murmur, but ther was no remedy. The Kynge lyke a good and a discrete Prince, seynge that hys commons in the Parliament house had released the loane, entendyng some what to requite thesame, graunted to them a generall Pardon, of all offences, certayne greate offences and debtes only xcept: also he aided them for the redresse of there greues against the spiritualtie, and caused twoo newe bylles to be made indifferetly, bothe for the probate of Testamentes and mortuaries, whiche billes were so resonable that the spyrituall Lordes assented to them all though thei were sore againste there myndes, and in especial the probate of Testamentes sore displeased the Byshopes, and the mortuaries sore displeased the persones and Vicars. x

After these Actes, thus agreed, the Commons made another Acte for pluralities of benefices, none residence, biyng and sellyng & takyng of fermes by spirituall persones, which acte so displeased ỹ spiritualtie that the priestes railed on the commons of the common house, and called them heretikes and scismatikes, for the whych diuerse priestes wer ponished. xx

This acte was sore debated aboue in the parliament chambre, and the Lordes spirituall woulde in nowise consent. Wherefore the Kyng perceiuing the grudge of his commons, caused eight lordes and eight of his commons to mete in the starre chambre at an after none, & there was sore debatyng of the cause, in so muche that the temporall Lordes of the vpper house, whiche were there, toke parte with the Commons, agaynst the spirituall Lordes and by force of reason caused them to assent to the byll with a litle qualifiyng, whyche byll the nexte daye was wholy agreed to in the lordes house, to the great reioysynge of the lay people, and to the greate displeasor of the spirituall persones. xxx

Duryng this Parliament was brought doune to the commons, the boke of articles whiche the Lordes had put to the Kynge agaynst the Cardinall, the chief articles were these.

First that he without the kynges assent had procured to be a Legat, by reason whereof he toke away the right of all bishopes and spirituall persons.

Item, in all writynges which he wrote to Rome or any other foreyn Prince, he wrot Ego & Rex meus, I and my Kyng, as who woulde say that the Kyng were hys seruaunt.

Item, that he hath sclaundered the church of England in the courte of Rome, for his suggestion to be legate was to reforme the churche of Englande, whiche as he wrote was Facta in reprobum censum. xl

Item, he without the kynges assent, caried ỹ Kynges great Seale, with with hym into Flaunders when he was sent Ambassad to the Emperoure.

Item, he without the kynges assent, sent a commission to Sir Gregory de Cassado, knighte, to conclude a league betwene the kyng and the Duke of Farrar, without the kynges knowlege.

Item, that he hauyng the Frenche pockes presumed to come & byeth on the kyng.

Item, that he caused the Cardinalles hat to be put on the kynges coyne.

x Item, that he woulde not suffer the kynges clarke of the market, to sit at Saunct Talbons.

Item, that he had sent innumerable substaunce to Rome, for the obteinyng of his dignities to the greate enpourishment of the realme.

These Articles with many more, red in the common house, and signed with the Cardinalles hande, was cõfessed by hym, & also there was shewed a writyng sealed with his Seale, by the whiche he gaue to the kyng all his mouables and vnmouables.

On the day of the concepcion of oure Lady, the kyng at Yorke place at Westminster, in the parliament tyme created the vicount Rochforth xx Earle of Wilshire, and the Vicount Fitzwater, was created Earle of Sussex, and the Lorde Hastynges, was created Earle of Huntyngton.

When althynges were concluded in the Parliament house, the kyng came to the Parliament chambre the seuentene day of Decembre, and there put his royall assent, to althynges done by the Lordes and commons, and so proroged his court of Parliament, tyll the next yere.

After the Parliamẽt was thus ended, the kyng remoued to Greneswiche and ther kept his Christemas with the quene in great triumph: with great plentie of viaundes, and diuerse disguisynges and Enter-xxx ludes, to the greate reioysyng of his people.

You haue harde before how the Emperoure and the Pope was at Bononie, wher the Emperour made great preparacion for the solempnisyng of his coronacion, which was appoincted to be of Saincte Mathias day, or the foure and twentie day of Februarye, on whych day, he was borne, and that day also the French kyng was taken, and because that that day had ben euer fortunate to hym he appoincted his coronacion on that daye: he apoincted it also at that place, because he woulde the soner passe into Almayne, to appece suche striefes and debates as was risen betwene the princes there.

xl And so whan the day came & euery thing was redy, he was crowned Emperor, in ỹ churhe of S. Peter, in ỹ citie of Bononi by pope Clemẽt the. viij. with al ỹ ceremonies therto belõging. At this coronaciõ were presente the Dukes of Sauoy and Millayn, duke Frederick brother to the Palantine of Rine, & the deputies to all the seuen Electors and the moste parte of all the nobles of Italye, and Spayne. Thys coronacion was done with great solemnities, there was feastyng, iustyng and tornay, and all thinges that might sounde to honoure was there shewed bothe in apparell, and viaunde: and after that the Emperoure and the Pope, with the hole college of Cardinalles, and al the noble men beyng presente rode in procession through the hie stretes of Bononi, with suche a pompe and triumphe as had not bene sene in Italye manye yeres before.

While the Emperoure lay thus at Bononie, the kynge of Englande was aduertised by hys Ambassadoures, whiche he had sent to diuers vniuersities for the assoluyng of the doubt cõcernyng his mariage, that the saied vniuersities were agreed and had clerely concluded, that the one brother to mary the other brothers wyfe, carnally knowne, was directlie agaynst Gods lawe, & that the Pope nor the courte of Rome could in no wyse dispence with the same.

Wherefore the kyng knowyng themperour and the bishop of Rome to be together at Bononie, determined to send thether a solempne ambassade, both to declare to them the law of God, and the determinacion of the vniuersities, and also to require the bishop of Rome to do Justice accordyng to the treuth, and also to shewe to the Emperoure that the kyng did not moue this matter for any displeasure that he bare to him or the quene his awnt, but only for the discharge of his conscience, and for the quietnes of his Realme.

When this purpose was agreed by the kynges counsayle, the kynge appointed Sir Thomas Bulleyne late created Earle of Wylshier and Doctor Stokesley elected bishop of London, and Doctor Edward Lee, his almoner, two great Clarkes, for his ambassadours & with thẽ he sent diuers Doctors both of the lawe and diuinitie. These Ambassadoures made greate preparacion, & about the begynnyng of Februarie thei set forward, and so muche thei trauailed that they came to Sauoy wher the Duke in the fayre toune of Cambrey, caused them honorably to be receiued and fested.

So they passed the Mountaynes, & so through the Duchie of Millain & by long iorneis thei came to Bononie in lent, wher they wer honorably receiued by the maister of the Emperoures house, and diuers Lordes & Gentlemen belongyng to the Pope, & within short space the sayed Ambassadoures were firste conueighed to the Pope, and there declared ther message and shewed the determinaciõ of the great Doctors and famous vniuersities. Pope Clement whyche was a man of no learnyng but of a great wit made to them a gentle answere, & sayed that he woulde here the matter disputed when he came to Rome and accordyng to right he woulde do Justice. But hys entent was all contrarie, for he knewe well that yf he shoulde geue sentence, that Pope July coulde not dispence wyth the breache of Godes lawe, that then the aucthoritie of the Courte of Rome woulde litle be regarded, and also he feared the Emperours displeasure yf he shoulde geue sentence againste his awnte, so that for feare of losinge aucthoritie, and of the Emperours displeasure, Bishop Clement, durste not Judge accordynge to Goddes lawe. After they had bene with the Pope, they came to the Emperour, whyche them gently receyued, and after they had x done their message, he answered them that he in no wyse woulde be agaynst the lawe of God, and yf the Courte of Rome woulde adiudge that ỹ matrimonie were not good, he would be content, but he thought all otherwyse, for he solicited the Pope and all the Cardinalles whych were hys frendes to staude by the dispensacion, whyche he iudged to be as strong as Goddes lawe. After this answere they toke ther leaue of the Emperour, whyche the nexte weke after departed out of Bononie toward Almayne in good order of battail, he him selfe in gilt harnes and hys nobles in white harnes wyth ryche cotes and trappers very curiously sene.

xx After that the Emperour was gone out of Bononie, the Ambassadoures of England toke there leaue of the Bysshoppe of Rome, whyche went toward Rome agayne, and retorned toward Englande, through the Duchy of Millayn, whiche was receiued by the Earle Lodouick, great counsaylor to the Duke of Millayn, whych Earle conducted thē through the whole Duchie of Millayne, and paied all their charges by the Dukes cōmaundemene. And when these Ambassadors wer passed the mountaynes, they receiued letters frō the kyng, which appoincted the Earle of Wilshire to go ambassade to the French kyng, whych then lay at Burdeaux makynge prouisions for money for the redemynge of xxx his childzen: & the Bishop of London was appoyncted to go to Padua and other vniuersities in Italye to know ther opinions in the kynges cace, and the kynges almoner was appoincted to retorne into Englād, and so he dyd, thus was the ende of this Ambassad.

You haue hard before how the Cardinall was attainted in the premunire and how he was put out of the office of the chauncelor and laye at Asher: In this Lent season the kynge by the aduice of his counsayle licenced hym to go into his diocesse of Yorke, and gaue him commaundement to kepe hym in his diocesse & not to returne southwarde without the kynges speciall licence in writyng.

xl So he made great prouision to go Northwarde and appareled his seruauntes newly & bought many costely thinges for his houshould & so he might wel inough, for he had of the kynges gentlenes the bishoppricks of Yorke & Winchester, which wer no smal thinges, but at this time diuers of his seruaūtes departed from him to the kynges seruice, and

and in especiall Thomas Crumwel one of his chief counsayle and chefe doer for him in the suppressiō of abbeis. After that al thinges necessarie for his iornay wer prepared, he toke his iorney northward til he came to South wel whiche is in his dioces & their he continued this yere euer grudgyng at his fall as you shall here after: but the landes whiche he had geuen to his Colleges in Oxforde & Ypswych, were now come to the kinges handes, by his atteinder in the premunire, and yet the kyng of his gentlenes and for fauour that he bare to good learnyng erected agayne the College in Oxford, and where it was named the Cardinalles College, he called it the kynges College, and endewed it with faire possessions, and put in newe statutes and ordinaunces, and for because the College of Ypswich was thought to be nothing profitable, therefore he lefte that dissolued.

The last Somer while the peace was treated at Cambray as you haue hard before, Ferdinādo brother to the Emperour, recouered certayne tounes which the Turkes had taken from hym in Hungary, and put to flighte his ennemy Jhon the Uainoda, whiche falsly named hym selfe kynge of Hungary. This Uainoda destitute of all succoure fled to Sultan Soliman the great Turke, desiryng hym of succor, to recouer Hungry a gaine. The Turke being glad to haue an occasion to distroy Hungry, assembled a puissaunt army, and entred into Hungry, & made proclamation that what toune or Citie woulde not obey kynge Jhon as ther kyng, should be put to fire & sworde. This proclamacion so feard the Hungarians, that all in maner yelded thē selfe subiectes to the Uainoda, the citie of Bude onely except: whiche at the last was yelden, by composicion that thei should depart with bag and baggage, but for al there safe conduit signed withe the great Turkes hand, they wer firste robbed of the Janizeres, and after that shamefully slayn.

Crueltie of ỹ Turkes.

When the Turke had thus Bude in possession, he left there the Uainoda, and Lewes great bastard sonne to the duke of Uenice, with fiue thousand fotemen, and two thousand horsmen, and he with all haste entered into Austrice, wher his people committed such crueltie and tirannye, as neuer hath been hard nor writtē, for of some thei put out ỹ eies of other they cut of the noses & eares, of other thei cut of the priuy mēbers, of women thei cut of the pappes, and rauished Uirgins and of women great with child, thei cut ther bellies and brent the childzen, beside this, as thei passed thei brent corne, trees, howses, & al that woulde be brent to make the contry desolate, and at the last the two & twentie day of September, the turkes armie came nye to Uienne, a riche and a famous Citie in Austrice.

The same was that he had twoo hundreth and fiftie thousande men in his armie, and fiue and twentie thosande tentes in the sighte of the Citie.

At the beginnyng of the siege certein Christian men were taken of the Turkes, which Turkes cut of the heddes of foure lepers in a lazer cote cote,without the citie & put them vpon poles, & made christē prisoners presēt thē to ỹ great turck,which therof toke great ioy:of ỹ which prisoners he released certain and bad them go to the captaynes and to tell thē that yf they would yeld ỹ citie to him, they should depart wyth bag and bagage,and yf thei would kept it by force,he woulde suerly haue it & put thē all to the swoꝛde. Now in the citie was captayn duke Phillip of Bauier,Earle Palantine of the Rine,and nephew to the Palsgraue electoꝛ,a young man, but of noble coꝛage, and with him were twentie thousand Almaynes,and two thousand hoꝛsemē,which nothing feared x the Turkes threatnynges. The Turke perceiuyng ther boldnes bent his grete oꝛdinaunce,which were thꝛe hundꝛeth peces agaynst ỹ wal-les,& commaundyd the towne to be assauted:the Turkes gaue a great assaut,but the chꝛisten men valiantly defended thē, so that the Turkes were compelled to fle,and many of them were slaine.

The fourth daye of Octobꝛe, the Turke bent all his Oꝛdinaunce against the wal which so shoke ỹ wall that all men within supposed that the walles would haue fallē doune,but thei did litle harme, which was sone amended. The sixt day of Octobꝛe, eight thousand chꝛisten men issued out of the toune,& came wher the Turkes miners wer woꝛkyng xi and slew a great nombꝛe & destroyed ỹ mines. The same day the Turkes gaue a greate assaute to the citie:the chꝛistyan men valiantly them defended,and thꝛewe doune great logges & barres of Iron,and slewe many Turkes. Thus the Turkes assauted the citie a leuen tymes,and so many tymes they wer betē away,but the great & terrible assaut was the twelue day of Octobꝛe,at which assaut ỹ chꝛistyan men so valiantly defended them selfe and slewe and hurte so many of the Turkes that after that day,foꝛ no commandement that the Turke could geue, they woulde nomoꝛe geue assaute.

The Turke perceiued well bothe the strength of the Citie and the xxx coꝛage of the capitaines with in, and also the winter there was muche moꝛe colder then in his contreys,which soꝛe troubled hym and his people,wheꝛfoꝛe he called his counsaill & concluded to bꝛeake vp his siege and to departe, & so the foureteene day of Octobꝛe he shot great stones into the citie al day till night:and aboute tenne of the cloke in the night he caused his tentes to be taken vp, and set fire on the strawe, & suche other stuffe,and so remoued all his armie,towarde Bude,sauinge fiftie thousande hoꝛsemen whiche taried all the next daye behynde,caryng with hym a greate nombꝛe of Chꝛistyan pꝛisoners, which he put to the mynes and suche other vile seruice.

pl At this siege the Turke lost by Murder,Sickes,and could, aboue foure-scoꝛe thousand men, as one of his bassates dyd afterwarde con-fesse. The nnmbꝛe of the turkes that died.

Thus was the citie of Uienne defended agaynst the greate Turke, and all his power,whiche was to him a greate displeasure, and in especially because he neuer beseged citie befoꝛe, but either it was yelden, oꝛ

Cæsar in Italiam quo uenit Carolus anno Cincta est ripheis nostra Vienna getis.

In this yere themperour gaue to the lord master of saynt Jhones of Jerusalem, and his bretherne the Iland of Malto lyng betwene Scicile and Barbarie, there to employ them selfe vpon Christes enemies which lorde master had no place suer to enhabite there sith he was put from the Rodes by this Turke that beseged Vienne, as you haue hard before.

The.xxij.yere.

the.xxij.yere

IN the beginnyng of this two and twentie yere, the kyng like a politike & a prudent prince, perceiued that his subiectes and other persons had diuers times within foure yeres last past, brought into his realme, great nombre of printed bokes, of the new Testament, translated into the English tongue by Tyndall, Joy, & other, whiche bokes the cõmon people vsed & dayly red priuely, which ỹ clargie woulde not admit, for they punished suche persones as had red, studied or taught thesame with greate extremitie, but bycause ỹ multitude was so great, it was not in their power to redresse there grefe: wherefore they made complaint to the Chauncelor (which leaned much to the spiritual menes part, in all causes) where vpon he imprisoned and punished a great nomber, so that for this cause a great rumor and cõtrouersie rose daily emongest the people: wherfore the kyng cõsideryng what good might come of readyng of the new Testament with reuerence and folowyng thesame, & what euell might come of the readyng of thesame yf it were euill translated, and not folowed: came into the starre chambre the fiue and twentie day of May, and there commoned with his counsaile and the prelates concernynge this cause, and after longe debatyng, it was alleged that the translacion of Tyndal and Joy were not truely translated, and also that in them were prologues and prefaces which sounded to heresie, and rayled against the bishopes vncharitably, wherfore all suche bokes were prohibited & commaundement geuen by the kyng to the bishoppes, that they callyng to them the best learned men of the vniuersities should cause a new translacion to be made, so that the people should not be ignorant in the law of God: And notwithstandynge this commaundemẽt the byshopes dyd nothing at al to set furth a new translaciõ, which caused the people to study Tindalles translacion, by reason where of many thinges came to light, as you shall here after.

The newe testament forbidden.

In this yere in May, the bishop of London caused all his newe Testamentes which he had bought with many other bokes to be brought into Paules churcheyarde in London and there was openly burned.

In the ende of this yere, the wilde Irishmen knowyng the Earle of Kildare to be in England, entered his lande, and spoyled and brent hys contrey

coũtrey,and diuers other contreys, and the Earle of Ossery being the kynges deputie made litle resistaunce,for lacke of power,wherfore the kyng sent the earle of Kildare into Ireland,and with him sir Wyllyam Skeuyngton knight, Mayster of the kynges ordinaunce and dyuers Gunners with hym,whych so pollitickly ordered them selfe that their enemies were glad to offre amendes and to treate for truce, and so sir Wyllyam Skeuyngton the nexte yere returned into England leuing there the Erle of Kildare for the kynges deputie.

Now I wil returne to ỹ execucion of the treatie of Cambray in the xwhich it was agreed that the Lady Elianor and the Frenche kynges chyldren should be deliuered,when the raunsome appointed was paid as you haue heard in the last yere: Wherfore ỹ French kyng gathered money of hys subiectes w̃ all spede,and when the money was ready he sent the great Master of Fraunce called Annas de Memorancy , and diuers other nobles to Bayon wyth the money,and to receiue the lady and the children. And thyther came to them the great Cõstable of Castle and Mounsire Prat for the Emperor , and there the crounes wer wayed and touched,and what fault soeuer the Spaniardes founde in theim,they would not receiue a great nõber of them,and so thei caried xx the chyldren backe frõ Foũtraby into Spayn. Thus the great maister of Fraunce , and his company lay still at Bayon wythout hauinge hys purpose performed from Marche til the ende of June,and lenger had lyen,yf ỹ king of England had not sent sir Fraunces Bryan to Bayon to warrant the payment: wherupon the day of delyueraunce was appointed to be on S. Peters daye in June. At whiche daye the greate Maister wyth.xxxj. Mulettes laden w̃ the crounes came to ỹ one side of the riuer of Auday,which ryuer departeth Spayne and Fraunce, & there taried til the first day of July: on which daye the ladye Elianor, & the children wer put into two great boates,hauing only.xij. gentlemẽ xxx of Spayne with them: and in lyke maner the great Maister with two great boates in the which the money was,and.xij. gentlemen w̃ hym. All these boates met at a bridge made in the middes of the riuer : The Constable of Spayn,and his.xij.gentlemen met with ỹ great maister of Fraunce,and his.xij.gentlemẽ on the bridge, and after a litle salutacion the Frenchmen entered into the. ij. boates wher the lady and the two children were,and the Spaniardes into the two boates wher the money was,and then eche part hasted to land. Thus wer the Frenche kyngs wyfe and children deliuered into his handes,for whych delyueraunce was great ioy, & triumph made in Fraunce, & also in July were xl fiers made in London & diuers other places for thesame consideraciõ and cause.

The delyueraunce of the Frenche kinges children.

The Emperor as you haue heard the last yere,passed out of Italy into Germany,and was receyued wyth great honor and triumph into ỹ citie of Ausborough or August,where in June were present al the electoꝛs and almoſte all the pꝛinces of the Empire: there was kept a great counſayl foꝛ the pꝛinces of Germany were of two ſeueral opinions and of ſeueral names, the part that fauoꝛed the pope, and all thynges done by hys aucthoꝛitie were called catholycal, and the other part which folowed and pꝛeached only the goſpel of Chꝛiſt were called euangelical. Of theſe and other thynges concerning our fayth ther wer many coũſayles: but Cardinal Cãpeius the Popes legate would not ſuffer the Euangelycal perſones (whom he called Lutherans) to argue againſte ỹ catholycal men (whõ ỹ Euãgelical perſons called papiſtes) leſt by the openyng of the ſcꝛypture ỹ aucthoꝛitie of ỹ court of Rome ſhould haue ꝓ bene damned, and therfoꝛe the Emperoꝛ put of the matter till another tyme: But thys matter was not ſo let ſlyppe, foꝛ of thys mocion men ſo ſerched the law of God that within a few yeres after, many people refuſed the Pope foꝛ the heade of the Churche and foꝛſoke hym and hys pardons.

A Pꝛoclamacyon.

On the.xix. daye of September in the cytye of London was made thys Pꝛoclamacyõ. The kynges hyghnes ſtrayghtly chargeth & commaũdeth ỹ no maner of perſon of what eſtate, degꝛe oꝛ condiciõ ſoeuer he oꝛ they be of, do purchaſe oꝛ attẽpt to purchaſe frõ ỹ court of Rome oꝛ elſ where, noꝛ vſe & put in execucion, diuulge oꝛ publyſh any thynge heretofoꝛe wythin thys yere paſſed, purchaſed, oꝛ to be purchaſed hereafter contaynyng matter pꝛeiudicial to ỹ hygh auctoꝛitie, iuriſdiccyon and pꝛerogatiue royal, of thys his layd realm, oꝛ to ỹ let, hynderaunce oꝛ impechement of his graces noble and verteous entended purpoſes in the pꝛemyſſes, vpon payne of incurryng hys hyghnes indignacyõ & impꝛiſonment & farther punyſhment of theyꝛ bodyes foꝛ theyꝛ ſo doing at hys graces pleaſure, to the dꝛeadful example of all other.

Thys pꝛoclamacion was muche muſed at and euery woꝛde of the ſame well noted. Some ſayd that it was made becauſe that the quene had purchaſed a newe Bull foꝛ the ratifycacyon of her mariage, other ſayde that it was made becauſe the Cardinall had purchaſed a Bull to curſe the kyng, yf he would not reſtoꝛe hym to hys old dignities, and ỹ the king ſhould ſuffer him to coꝛrect the ſpiritualtie, and he not to medle wyth theſame. This inuencyon ſounded moſte to the trueth as you ſhall heare afterward.

In October the ryuer of Tyber was of ſuche an heygth that in Rome and other places about Rome almoſt. xij. M. perſons wer dꝛowned and in the next mone th zeland, Holland and Bꝛabant were ſoꝛe noyed with waters, and many people and much cattel were dꝛowned.

You haue heard in the laſt yere how the Cardinal of Yoꝛke was attainted in the pꝛemunire and that notwithſtandyng the king had geuẽ him the biſhopꝛickes of Yoꝛke and Wincheſter wyth greate plentye of ſubſtaunce, & had lycenſed him to lye in hys dioces of Yoꝛke. He beyng this in his dioces grudgyng at his fall & not remembꝛyng the kynges kindnes

kyndnes shewed to hym, wrote to the Court of Rome and to diuers other prynces letters in reproche of the kyng, and in as much as in hym lay, he stirred them to reuenge his cause agaynst the kynge and hys realme, in so muche that diuers opprobrious woordes of the kynge were spoken to Doctor Edward Kecrne the kynges Orator at Rome, and it was sayd to him that for the Cardinals sake, the kinge should haue the worse spede in the suite of hys matrimony. The Cardinal also woulde The pryde of speake fayre to the people to wynne their heartes, and declared euer, the Cardinal that he was vniustlye and vntruely ordered, whyche fayre speakynge x made manye men beleue that he sayde true: and to gentlemen he gaue great gyftes to allure them vnto him: And to be had in the more reputacion among the people he determined to be installed or inthronised at Yorke with all the pompe that might be, and caused a throne to be erectee in the Cathedral church in such an heygth and fashyō as was neuer sene, and sent to al the lordes, Abbottes, Priors, knyghtes, esquyers & gentlemen of hys dioces, to be at hys Manor of Cawod the. vj. day of Nouember and so to bryng hym to yorke with al maner of Pompe and solempnitie.

The kyng whiche knew hys doynges and priuye conueyaunce, all x this yere dissembled the matter to see what he woulde do at length, tyll that he saw hys proud hart so hyghly exalted that he would be so triūphantly installed wythout making the kyng priuye, yea and in maner in disdayne of the kynge, thoughte it not mete nor conuenyent to suffer hym any lenger to continue in his malicious and proude purposes and attemptes: wherfore he directed his letters to Henry ỹ. vj. erle of Northumberland, willing him with all diligence to arrest the Cardinal and to deliuer him to therle of Shrewsbury great stewarde of the kynges housholde: When the erle had sene the letters, he with a conuenient nōber came to the Manor of Cawod the. iiij. day of Nouember, and when xxx he was brought to the Cardinal in his chamber, he said to him, my lord I pray you take pacience, for here I arrest you. Arrest me sayde ỹ Cardinal, yea sayd the erle I haue a commaundement so to do: you haue no The Cardy-such power sayd the Cardinall, for I am both a Cardinal and a Legate nal arrested. de Latere and a pere of the College of Rome & ought not to be arrested by any Temporall power, for I am not subiect to that power, wherfore if you arrest me, I wyl withstand it: wel sayd the erle, here is the kings Commission (which he shewed him) and therfore I charge you to obey: the Cardinal somewhat remembred hym selfe and sayd, wel my lord I am content to obey, but although that I by negligence fell into the pu-xl nishment of the Premunire and lost by the lawe all my landes and goo-des, yet my person was in the kynges protection and I was pardoned that offence, wherfore I maruell why I nowe shoulde be arrested and specially consyderynge that I am a member of the sea Apostolike on whō no temporall man ought to lay violent landes, well I see the king lacketh good counsayll: wel sayd the erle when I was swoꝛne Warden of the Marches, you your self told me, that I might with my staffe arrest all men vnder the degree of a kynge, and now I am moꝛe stronger foꝛ I haue a cõmission so to do whiche you haue sene. The Cardinall at length obeyed and was kepte in a pꝛiuye chamber and his goodes seazed, and his officers discharged, and his Phisician called Doctoꝛ Augustyne was likewyse arrested, and bꝛought to the Tower by sir Walter Welshe one of the kynges chamber. The. vj. day of Nouember he was cõueyed from Cawod to Sheffeld castle and there deliuered to therle of Shꝛewsburies keping til the kinges pleasure were knowẽ: Of this attachement was muche commoning amongest the common people, wheꝛefoꝛe manye were glad, foꝛ surelye he was not in the fauoꝛ of the communaltie. x

When the Cardinal was thus arrested the kynge sent sir Wyllyam Kingston knyght capitayne of the Garde and Constable of the Tower of London, wyth certayn yomen of the Gard to Sheffeld to fetch the Cardinall to the Tower. When the Cardinal saw the capitaine of the Garde, he was soꝛe astonnied and shoꝛtly became sicke, foꝛ then he perceyued some great trouble toward him; and foꝛ that cause men sayde, that he willingly toke so much quantitie of strong purgacion, that hys nature was not able to beare it: but sir Wyllyam Kyngston comfoꝛted him, and by easy ioꝛnaies he bꝛought him to the Abbay of Leceste the xxbij. daye of Nouember, where foꝛ very feblenes of nature caused by purgacions and vomities he dyed the second night folowynge, and in thesame abbay lyeth buryed. This Cardinall as you may perceyue in this stoꝛy was of a great stomacke, foꝛ he compted him selfe egall with pꝛinces, and by craftye suggestion gatte into his handes innumerable treasure: He foꝛced litle be symony & was not pityful and stode affectionate in his owne opinion: In open pꝛesence he would lye and say vntrueth and was double both in speche and meanyng: He wold pꝛomise muche and peꝛfoꝛme lytle: He was vicious of his body and gaue the clergie euyl example: He hated soꝛe the citie of London and feared it: It was told him ỹ he shuld dye in the way toward London, wheꝛfoꝛe he feared lest the cõmons of the citie would aꝛise in riotous maner and so slaye him, yet foꝛ al that he dyed in the waye towarde London. The authoꝛitie of this Cardinal set the clergie in such a pꝛide that they dysdayned al men, wheꝛfoꝛe when he was fallen thei folowed after as you shall heare. To wꝛyte the lyfe and doynges of thys Cardinal, it were a great woꝛke, but whatsoeuer he did, God foꝛgeue his soule hys bodies misdedes. xi

The Cardinal dead and buried at Iepcester.

The description of ỹ Cardynal.

After the Cardinal was dead, the king remoued frõ Hampton court to Grenewiche, wher he wyth quene Katherine kept a solẽpne Chꝛistmas, and on the twelfe nyght he satte in the halle in his estate, wher as were dyuers Enterludes, ryche Maskes and dispoꝛtes, and after that xii

a greate

a great banket. And after Chriſtmas he came to hys Manor of Weſtminſter, which before was called Yorke place, for after that the Cardinal was attainted in the premunire & was gone Northward, he made a feoffement of theſame place to the kinge, and the chapiter of the Cathedrall church of Yorke by their writing cõfirmed theſame feoffemẽt and then the king chaunged the name and called it the kinges Manor of Weſtminſter and no more Yorke place.

The whole clergie of England euer ſupported and maintayned the power legantine of the Cardinall, wherfore the kinges counſayl learxned ſayd plainly that they all were in the Premunire, the ſpiritual lordes were called by Proces into the kinges Benche to anſwere, but before their day of apperaunce, they in their Conuocacion cuncluded an humble ſubmiſſion in writing and offered the kyng a. C. M. pound to be their good lorde, and alſo to geue them a pardon of all offences touching the Premunire by act of Parliament, the which offer with much labor was accepted, and their pardon promyſed. In this ſubmiſſiõ the Clergie called the kyng ſupreme head of ỹ church of Englande, which thing they neuer confeſſed before, wherevpon many thinges folowed after as you ſhall heare.

The kynge firſt named ſupreme hed.

xx When the Parliament was begon the. vj. day of January, the pardon of the ſpiritual perſones was ſigned with the kynges hand & ſente to the lordes which in tyme conuenient aſſented to the byll and ſent it to the cõmons in the lower houſe, & when it was read, diuers froward perſones would in no wyſe aſſente to it, except al men were pardoned, ſaying that all men which had any thinge to do with the Cardinal wer in theſame caſe: the wyſer ſort anſwered that they would not compell the king to geue them his pardon, and beſide that, it was vncharitably done of them to hurt the Clergie and do themſelfes no good, wherfore they aduiſed them to conſent to the bill and after to ſue to the kyng for xxx their pardon, which counſayl was not folowed, but they determyned firſt to ſend the Speaker to the kinge or they woulde aſſent to the bill, wherupon Thomas Audely ſpeaker for the commons with a cõueniẽt nomber of the common houſe came to the kynges preſence and ther eloquently declared to the king how the cõmons ſore lamented and bewayled their chaunce to thinke or imagine them ſelfes to be oute of his gracious fauor, becauſe that he had graciouſly geuen his pardon of the Premunire to his ſpirituall ſubiectes and not to them, wherfore they moſt humbly beſoughte hys grace of his accuſtomed goodnes and clemency to include them in theſame pardon.

xl The kyng wyſely anſwered that he was their prince & ſoueraigne lord, & that they ought not to reſtraine hym of hys libertie, nor to cõpel him to ſhewe his mercy, for it was at his pleaſure to vſe the extremitie of his lawes, or mitigate and pardõ theſame, wherfore ſith they denied to aſſent to the pardon of the ſpirituall perſones, which pardon he ſaid he myght geue without their assent by his great seale, he would be wel aduised or he pardoned them, because he woulde not be noted to be cõpelled to do it: with this answere the speaker and the commons departed very sorowful and pensiue and some lyght persons sayd that Thomas Cromwel whiche was newly come to the fauor of the kynge, had disclosed the secretes of the commons, which thing caused the kynge to be so extreme.

The kyng like a good Prince considered how sorowful his cõmons wer of the answere that he made them, and thought that thei wer not quiet, wherfore of hys owne motion he caused a pardon of the Premunire to be drawen, and sygned it wyth his hand and sent it to the comõ house by Christopher Hales hys atturnay, whiche bill was sone assented to. Then the commons louingly thanked the king, and much praised his witte, that he had denied it to them when they vnworthely demaunded it and had bountyfully graunted it when he perceyued that they sorowed and lamented.

While the Parliament sat, on the.xxx. day of Marche at after none there came into the common house the lord Chauncellour and dyuers lordes of the spiritualtie and temporaltie to the nõber of.xij. and there the lorde Chauncelor sayde, you of this worshipful house I am sure be not so ignorant but you know well that the kyng our soueraygne lord hath maried his brothers wyfe, for she was both wedded and bedded wyth his brother prince Arthur, and therfore you may surely say ẏ he hathe maried his brothers wyfe, if thys mariage be good or no many clerkes do doubt. Wherfore the kinge lyke a vertuous prince willinge to be satisfied in his conscience, & also for the suretie of hys realme hath wt great deliberaciõ cõsulted with great clerkes, and hath sent my lord of London here present to the chiefe Uniuersities of all Christendome to know their opinion and iudgement in that behalfe. And although that the Uniuersities of Cambridge and Oxford had bene sufficient to discusse ẏ cause, yet because they be in his realme and to auoyde all suspicion of parcialitie he sente into the realme of Fraunce, Italy hath the Popes dominions and Uenicians to knowe their iudgemente in that behalfe, which haue concluded, written and sealed their determinaciõs according as you shall heat read. Then sir Brian Tuke toke oute of a boxe.xij. writynges sealed, & read thẽ word by word, as after ensueth translated out of Latin into the Englysh tongue.

The determinacion of the uniuersitie of Orleaunce.

Orleaunce. Not lõg syns there were put forth to vs the College of doctors regentes of the Uniuersitie of Orliaunce, these two questiõs that folow. The fyrste, whether it be lawful by the lawe of God for the brother to take to wyfe that woman whom his brother hath left. The seconde, yf this be forbidden by the lawe of God, whether this prohibition of the

lawe of God may be remitted by the Pope his dispensacion: Wee the forsaid College of doctors regentes accordyng to our custome and vsage came many times together, and did sat diuers times vpon the discussynge of these forsayd doubtes and questions and did examine and way as much as we might diuers & many places both of the old testament and new, and also the interpreters and declarers both of the law of God and the Canon lawe. After we had wayed and considered all thinges exactely and wyth good leysure and deliberacio, we haue determined & cōcluded that these forsaid mariages cannot be attempted
I nor enterprised except a man do wrong and plaine contrary to the law of God: yea and that althoughe it be done by pardon and sufferaunce of the Pope. And in witnes of this conclusion and determynacion we haue caused this present publike writing to be signed by our Scribe of our sayd Uniuersitie, and to be strengthed and fortefyed with the seale of thesame: Enacted in the chapel of our lady Annunciacion, or ỹ good tydynges that she had of Christes commyng in Orleaunce, the yere of our Lorde. The determinacion of the facultie of Decrees of the uniuersitie of Paris.

II In the name of the Lorde so be it. There was put forth before vs the Deane and College of the right counsail ful facultie of Decrees of the Uniuersitie of Paris this question. Whither that the Pope myght dispence that the brother myght mary the wyfe that his brother hath left, yf the mariage betwene his brother now dead and hys wyfe were once consummate: we the Deane and College of thesayd facultie after many disputacions and reasons made of bothe sydes vpon this matter and after great and longe turnyng and serching of bokes, bothe of the lawe of God & the Popes law and of the law Ciuil, we coūsayl and say III that the Pope hath no power to dispence in this forsayde case: In witnes wherof we haue caused this present writing to be strengthed with the seale of our facultie and with the signe of our Scribe or chiefe Bedle. The determinacion of Ciuilians and Canonistes of the uniuersitie of Angew.

Not long tyme syns there were purposed vnto vs the Rector & doctors, Regentes in law canon & ciuile of the vniuersitie of Angew these II ij questions here folowyng, that is to wete, whether it is vnlefull by the lawe of God and the lawe of nature for a man to mary the wyfe of hys brother that is departed wythout chyldren, so that the mariage was consummate: And agayne whether it is lawfull for the Pope to dispence wyth such mariage: We the aforsayd Rector and Doctors haue Angew.

accor-

accoꝛdyng to our custome and vsage many times communed together and syttен to dispute these questions, and to fynde out the certaintie of them. And after that we had discussed and examined many and diuers places aswel of the law of God as of the law of man, whyche semed to pertayne to thesame purpose, and after that we had brought foꝛ bothe parties and examined them. All thinges faythfully and after good cõ=science considered and vpon sufficient deliberacion and auisement taken, we defyne and determyne that neyther by the lawe of God noꝛ of nature it is permitted foꝛ any chꝛisten man, no not euẽ with the authoritie of the sea Apostolike, oꝛ wyth anye dispensacion graunted by the Pope to mary the wyfe that his bꝛother had lefte, although hys bꝛother be departed wythout childꝛen, after that the mariage is ouce finished and consummate. And foꝛ wytnes of these afoꝛsayde thinges, we haue cõmaunded our Scribe of our sayd Uniuersitie to signe this pꝛesent publik instrument, & it to be foꝛtefyed wyth the great seale of oure Uniuersitie, Enacted in the chꝛurch of S. Peter in Angew, the yere of our Loꝛde. M. D. xxx. the. vij. day of May.

The determinacion of the facultie of diuinitie in the uniuersitie of Paris.

Paris. The Deane and the facultie of the holye diuinitie of the vniuersitie of Paris, to all them to whom this pꝛesent wꝛiting shall come wysheth safetie in our sauioꝛ Jesu Chꝛist which is the very true safetie: Where of late there is risen a great controuersie of greate difficultie vpon the mariage betwene the most noble Henry the. viij. kyng of England defendoꝛ of the fayth and loꝛde of Jreland. &c. and the noble lady Katherine quene of England, doughter to the Catholike kynge Ferdinand, which mariage was not onelye contracte betwene her and her foꝛmer husband, but also consummate and fynyshed by carnall intermedeling. Thys question also was purposed to vs to discusse and examine accoꝛdyng to iustice and trueth, that is to say, whether to mary her that our bꝛother dead without chyldꝛen had left being so pꝛohibited by the law of God and nature, that it cannot be made lefull by the Popes dispensacyon, that any Chꝛisten man shoulde mary the wyfe that hys bꝛother had left: We thefoꝛesayd Deane and facultie callynge to oure remembꝛaunce, how vertuous and how holy a thynge & how agreable to our pꝛofession, vnto our dutie of loue and charitie, it is foꝛ vs to shewe the waye of Justice and ryght, of vertue and honestie to them whyche desire to leade and passe ouer their life in the law of our Loꝛd wyth sure & quiet coulscience: could not but be ready to satisfie so honest and iust requestes: wheꝛvpon after our old wont, we came together vpõ our othe in the chꝛurch of S. Maturyne, & there foꝛ thesame cause had a solẽpne Masse wyth deuout pꝛayer to the holy Ghost. And also we toke an oth euery man to delyber and to study vpon the foꝛsayd questiõ, as shoulde be to the pleasure of God, and accoꝛding to cõscieuce. And after diuers and many Sessions oꝛ sittinges, which were had and continued in the churche of saynt Maturyn, and also in the college called Sarbone frõ the.viij. day of June to the second day of July. When he had searched and examined through and through wyth as muche diligence as we coulde and with suche reuerence and religion oꝛ conscience as becomneth in suche a matter, bothe the bokes of holy scripture, and also the most appꝛoued interpꝛeters of thesame: Finally the general and synodall counsayles, decrees and constitucions of the sacre & holy churche, which by long custome hath bene receyued and appꝛobate, we the foꝛsayd Deane and facultie disputing vpon the foꝛsayd question and makyng answere to the same, and that after the iudgement and full consent of the most part of thesayd facultie haue concluded and determyned that the foꝛsaid mariage with the bꝛothers wyfe departyng without childꝛẽ be so foꝛbidden both by the lawe of God and of nature, that the Pope hath no power to dispence w̃ such mariages, whether they be cõtract oꝛ to be cõtract. And foꝛ credence, beleue, and witnes of thys our Assercion and determinacion, we haue caused the seale of oure facultie wyth our Notaries sygne to be put vnto this pꝛesent wꝛityng. The determinacion of the uniuersitie of Burges in Berry or Biturs.

We the Deane and facultie of diuinitie in the Uniuersitie of Burges, because we will accoꝛding to the example of S. Paule doctoꝛ of ỹ Gẽtiles which doeth likewyse, wyl begyn our wꝛiting with pꝛaier vnto al the beloued of God, among whom you moste deare readers vnto whom we wꝛyte be called, grace peace & quyetnes of conscience come to you from God the father and from our Loꝛd Jesu Chꝛist: while we were gathered together all into one place (in the octaues of Whytsontide) both in body and minde, and were sittyng in the house of the sayd Deane, there was a question put to vs agayne, whiche had bene purposed to vs often tymes befoꝛe, beyng no smal question which was this: Whither the bꝛother taking the wyfe of his bꝛother now dead, and the mariage once consummate and perfite doth a thyng vnlawfull oꝛ no? At the last whẽ we had sought foꝛ the trueth of the thyng and had perceiued and founde it out by much labour and studye of euery one of vs by him selfe, and by much and often turning of holy bokes, euerye one of vs not coꝛrupt, wherby we myght the lesse obey the trueth, begã as the holy gost did put in his mind to geue euery man one arbitrement & sentence which was this. I haue wel perceyued in very trueth wout regard oꝛ respect of any persõ ỹ those persõs which be rehersed in ỹ xviij cha. of ỹ Leuitical lawe, be foꝛbiddẽ by ỹ very law of nature to contract ma-matrimonye together, and that this lawe can in no wyse bee released by any authoritie of any manne, by the whiche there is made an abhominable dyscouerynge of hys brothers foulnes. And this is the signe of oure commen Bedyl or Notarie and the seale of our forsayd facultie put vnto thys present wrytyng the.x. day of June, in the yere of oure Lord. M. D.xxx. And because the fote of our writinge shalbe of one forme and fashyon wyth the head, as we began wyth prayer, so let vs ende after the example of S. Paule that we spake of before, and say, the grace and fauor of oure Lorde Jesu Christe, the charitie and loue of God and the cõmunicacion of the holy Ghost be wyth you all. Amen. f

The determinacion of the diuines in the popes vniuersitie of Bonony.

Bonony.

God best and mightiest taught first the olde lawe & testament wyth his owne mouthe, to forme and fashyon accordynge to loue and charitie, the maners and lyfe of men. And secondarely thesame God dyd take afterwardes manhod vpon hym for to be the redemer of man, and so made the newe lawe or newe Testament not onely to forme and fashyon accordinge to loue and charitie the lyfe and maners of men, but also to take away and to declare doubtes the which did aryse in manye cases whiche when they be once clerely determined shall helpe greately to perfite vertue and goodnes, that is to saye, to perfite loue and charitie. Wherefore we thought it euermore, that it shoulde be our part to folowe these most holy doctrynes and lawes of our father of heauen, and that we lightned by the lyght of God aboue, and of the holye ghost, shoulde geue oure sentence and iudgement in hygh and doubtful matters after that we haue once leyserly and sufficientlye taken aduisement vpon the cause, & haue clerely serched out and opened the thing by many reasons & writinges of holy fathers aswel for the one part as for the other, doyng nothynge as nere as we can rashly or wythout deliberacyon. Therfore where certayne great and noble men did instantly desire vs, that we would wyth xxx all diligence possible loke for thys case that after ensueth, and afterwardes to geue our iudgement vpon thesame, accordynge to moste equitie, ryght and conscience, stickynge onely to the trueth: All the Doctors of Diuinitie of this Vniuersitie, when we had euery one by hym selfe examined the matter at home in our houses, came altogether into one place and there treated vpon it many dayes wyth asmuche conning and learnynge as we could, we anon loked on the case together, we examyned it together, we compared all thynge together, we handelyng euery thing by it selfe, dyd trye them euen as you woulde saye by lyne and rule, wee brought forth al maner of reasons, which we thought could be brought xl for the contrary part, and afterward solued them, yea euen the reasons of the moste reuerende father Cardinall Caietayne, yea, and moreouer the Deuteronomy dispensacion of stirrynge vp the brothers seede, and shortly after all maner of reasons & opiniõs of the contrary part, as manye as semed to belong to thys purpose, and thys question that was asked of vs was this: Whether it was forbydden onely by the ordinaunce of the churche or els by the law of God, that a man myght not marye the wyfe left of his brother departed wythout children: and if it were commaunded by both the lawes not to be done, whether the Pope may dispence with any man to make such mariage: the whiche question nowe that we haue examined it both by your selfe secretely and also openly & diligently and exactely as we could possible, and discussed it after ỹ best maner that our wittes wold serue: we determine, geue iudgemēt and x say, and as stifly as we can we witnes and without anye doubt do stedfastly hold that this mariage should be horrible, accursed & to bee cried out vpon and vtterly abhominable not onlye for a christen man, but for an infidele, vnfaythfull or heathen. And that it is prohibite vnder greuous paynes and punishementes by the lawe of God, of nature and of man, & that the Pope, though that he almoste may do all thinges, vnto whom Christ did geue the keyes of the kingedom of heauen, hathe no power to geue a dispensacion to any man for to contract suche a mariage for any maner of cause, consideracion or suggestion: And all we bee ready at al tymes and in all places to defende and maintayne the truth xx of this our conclusion. In witnes wherof we haue made thys present writing, and haue fortefied the same both with the seale of our vniuersitie and also with the seale of oure College of Doctors of Diuinitie & haue subscribed and signed wyth our general & accustomed subscripcion in the Cathedral churche of Bonony the. x. day of June, the yere of our Lord. The determinacion of the facultie of diuinitie in the uniuersitie of Padua in Italy.

Thei that haue written for the maintenaunce of the catholick faith xxx affirme that God best and mightiest did geue the preceptes & cōmaundementes of the olde law with hys owne mouthe, to be an example for vs, wherein we might se howe we should order oure lyfe and maners, and this God had done before he became manne: and after that he had put vpon hym our manhode and was become redemer or byer of mākynde. He made the newe lawe or Testament, and of his mere liberalitie dyd geue it vs, not onely for the cause aforsayde, but also to take away & declare all maner of doubtes and questyons that myght aryse, the which once opened & declared what their very true meaning is to thentēt that therby we myght be made perfitly good, which be greatly xl fruytful to vs & holsome: and seyng that this was the mynd of God in makyng these lawes, it hath ben our entent & euermore shalbe, as it becōmeth christen men to folow these most solēpne ordinaūces of ỹ moste high workmayster God, & the help of hys light, ỹ is aboue the capacitie of nature, to vtter our iudgement in al maner of doubtes & harde questions stions. After we had once considered the thing after the best maner, & had by sufficient leysure made it clere by many euident reasons of both parties, and by many aucthorities of the fathers of the Church, determinyng nothyng as nere as we can, rashely or wythout conueniēt deliberacio. Seyng therfore that certain great Orators or ambassadors did humbly require and pray vs, that we would voucheſafe and serche out with all the diligence that we could this case folowing & afterwardes to geue our sentence vpon thesame, plainly & symply loking onelye on the trueth. After the Doctors of diuinitie of this Uniuersitie came together, and that we had euery man examined the thinge particnlerly in our owne houses, and haue beaten it with all learnynge and connyng that we were able: Anon when we wer together, we considered examined and wayed all thinges by them selfes, and brought in al maner of reasons, which we thought might by any meanes be made to the cōtrary, and without al colour or cloke dyd wholy & clerely dissolue thē and take them away. And amongest al, the dispensacion by the lawe of Deuteronomy of styrryng vp the brothers sede, & al maner other reasons and determinacions to the contrarie, that semed to vs to pertain any thing to that purpose, we vtterly cōfuted & dispatched them. And the question that is put to vs, is this: Whether to mary the wife of our brother departed wythout chyldren is forbidden only by ỹ lawe of the church or by the law of God also: and yf it be forbidden by bothe these lawes, whether the Pope may dispence w̄ any mā for such matrimony or no: which question now that we haue discussed it, and as farre as we could, haue made it clere, both priuately euery man by hym selfe & after al togethers opēly, we say, iudge, decree, witnes & for a truth affirme ỹ such mariage is no mariage, yea and that it is abhorred and cursed of euery christen man, and to be abhominate as a greuous sinne. And that it is as clearely as can be forbidden vnder moste cruel penalties by the lawes of nature, of God and of man: And that the Pope, vnto whom ỹ keyes of the kyngdome of heauen be committed by Christ the sonne of God, hath no power to dispēce by the right and law for any cause, suggestion or excuse, that anye suche matrimony shoulde be contracte. For those thinges which be forbidden by the law of God be not vnderneth hys power, but aboue it, nor he is not the Uicar of God as concernyng those thinges, but only in such thynges as God hath not determyned him selfe in his law, but hath lefte them to the determinacion and ordinaunce of man. And to maintayne the trueth of this our sentence and conciusion, and for moste certayne and vndoubted defence of thesame, we al of one minde and accorde shall at al tymes and in euery place bee redy. In witnes wherof we haue made this writing & haue authorised it with the accustomed seale of our Uniuersitie and also of our College of diuines, Dated at Padway in the Churche of the Hermites of saint Austen the first day of July, in the yere of our Lord M.D.xx.

The

¶ The Determinacion of the Vniuersitie of Tholose.

There was treated in our vniuersitie of Tholose a very harde question: Whether it be lefull for the brother to marye her whiche had ben wyfe to his brother now departed, and that without chyldren. There was beſyde this another thyng that troubled vs very ſore: Whether, yf the pope which hath the cure of Chriſtes flocke would by his diſpenſacion (as men call it) ſuffre this, that then at the leaſt wyſe it myght be lawfull. The Rector of the Vniuerſitie called to counſell all the Doctors regētes that were that tyme at Tholoſe for to ſhew their myndes xx on this queſtion, & that not once, but twyſe: For he iudged that counſell geuyng ought not to be haſted nor doone vpon head, & that we had neede of tyme and ſpace to doo anye thynge conueniently & as it ought to bee. At the laſt there came togither into one place all the beſt learned and connyngeſt doctors, both of holye diuinitie, and alſo doctors that were beſt learned in bothe lawes, yea, and finally as many as had anye experiēce in any matter & wer able to do any thing either by iudgemēt & diſcreſion, or by eloquence or their excellent wyttes. And there dyd ſwere that they woulde obey the ſacre & holy counſels, & would folowe the Decrees of ỹ Fathers, which no man that hath any good cōſcience xx wyll violate or breake. And ſo euery man ſayde hys minde, and the matter was debated & reaſoned diffuſely & at large for bothe partes.
In concluſion, we fel ſo faſt to this poynte, that this was the ſentence & determinacion that oure Vniuerſitie, with one boyce of all, dyd determine and conclude with moſte pure and cleare conſcience and defiled with no maner of leuen or corrupcion: That it is lawfull for no man, neither by the law of God, nor by the law of nature, to take her to wyfe that his brother hath left: And ſeeynge that it may not be done by the law of God nor of nature, we anſwered all: That the Pope can loſe no man from that lawe nor diſpence with him. And as for that thinge can xxx not be contrary to our ſentence & verdyct: that the brother in olde time was compelled by ỹ lawe of Deuteronomy to mary the brothers wyfe departed without iſſue: For this law was but a ſhadowe and a fygure of thinges to come, which vanyſhed away aſſone as euer the lyght and trueth of the Goſpell appeared: And becauſe theſe thynges be thus, we haue geuen our ſentence after this forme aboue, and haue cōmaunded the ſame to be ſygned by our Notary which is our ſecretory, and to be fortified and auctholiſed by the puttyng to of our autenticall Seale of our Vniuerſitie aforeſayde, at Tholoſe the Calendes or fyrſt daye of Octobre, the yere of our Lorde a thouſand. v. C. xxx.

xl After theſe Determinacions were read, there wer ſhewed aboue an hundreth bookes drawen by Doctors of ſtraunge Regions, whiche all agreed the Kynges Mariage to be vnlefull, whiche were not read, for the day was ſpent. Then the Chauncellor ſayd: Now you of this commen houſe may reporte in your coūtryes what you haue ſeene & heard and then all men ſhall openly perceyue that the kyng hath not attempted this matter of wyll or pleasure, as some straūgers reporte, but only for the discharge of his cōscience & suretie of the successiō of his realme: This is the cause of our repaire hyther to you, & now we wyll departe.

When these Determinacions were publyshed, all wyse men in the Realme moche abhorred that mariage: but women, & such as wer more wylfull then wyse or learned, spake agaynst the Determinaciō, & sayed that the Uniuersities were corrupte & entysed so to do, which is not to be thought. The kyng him selfe sore lamented his chaunce & made no maner of myrth nor pastyme as he was wont to do, & dyned & resorted to the quene as he was accustomed, & minished nothynge of her estate, & and moch loued & cherysshed their doughter the Lady Mary: but in no wyse he woulde not come to her bed. When Ester began to draw nere, the Parliament for that tyme ended, and was prorroged till the last day of Marche, in the nexte yere.

The Acte of Poysonyng.

In the Parliament aforesayde was an Acte made, that whosoeuer dyd poyson any persone, shoulde be boyled in hote water to the death: which Acte was made bicause one Richard Roose, in the Parliament tyme had poysoned diuers persons at the Bisshop of Rochesters place, which Richard, according to the same Acte, was boyled in Smythfeld the Teneber wednisday followyng, to therrible example of all other. xx

An earthquake.

This winter season, on the. xxvj. day of Janyuer, in the citie of Luxborne in Portingale, was a wonderous Earthquake, which destroied many houses and towers, and slew many people by fallynge downe of the same, the kynges Palace shoke so, that he and the Quene, and the Ladyes fled out of their Palace, without any seruauntes, and sought succour where they myght get it, & sodeinly the quaking ceassed: Then the Rockes opened, and out synange the water, that the shippes in the hauen were lyke to haue perysshed: Thē the earth quaked agayne, and dyd more harme then before, and at nyght it ceassed: of whiche Earthquake, many men were murthered and destroyed. xxx

Message sēt to ỹ Quene.

When the vniuersitie aforesayd, & a great nombre of clerkes & well learned men had determined the kynges mariage to be vnlawfull, detestable, & agaynst Gods lawe, as you haue heard, the kynge willyng the quene to haue knowledge of the same, sent to her dyuers Lordes of the coūcel the last day of Maie beyng the wednisday in Whitson weke: the which Lordes, in her chaumbre at Grenewyche, declared to her all the Determinaciō as you haue hearde, & asked her whether she would for the quyetnesse of the kynges conscience, put the matter to. iiij. Prelates, & .iiij. temporall Lordes of this Realme, or abyde by her appele. The Quene answered: The kyng my father which concluded my mariage, I am sure, was not so ignorant but he asked councell of clerkes & well learned men before he maryed me the second tyme: for yf he had had eny doubte in my maryage, he woulde not haue disbursed so great a treasure as he dyd, & then all Doctors in maner agreed my maryage to be good, in so moche that the Pope hym selfe, which knew best what was

was to be dooen, dyd both dispence and ratified my seconde mariage, agaynste whose doynge I meruayle that anye persone wyll speake ozwyte: And as to the Determinacion of the vniuersitie. I am a womā and lacke wytte and learnyng to aunswere to them, but to God I commit the iudgemēt of that, whether thei haue done iustly oz percially: foz this I am sure, that neither the Kynges father, noz my father woulde haue condiscended to our Mariage yf it had ben declared to be vnlawfull: and where you saye that I shoulde put the cause to.viij. persones of this Realme foz quyetnes of the Kynges conscience, I pzaye God x sende his grace a quyet conscience, and this shalbe your answere: That I say I am his lawfull wyfe, and to hym lawfully maryed, and by the ozdze of the holye Churche I was to hym espowsed as his trew wyfe, although I was not so wozthy, and in that poynte I will abyde tyl the cowzte of Rome which was pzeuy to the begynnng haue made therof a determinacion and finall endyng. With this answer the Lozdes departed to the Kyng, whiche was sozye to heare of her wylfull opinion, and in especiall that she moze trusted in the Popes law, then in kepyng the Pzeceptes of God.

The Kynge lyke a politike Pzince, perceyued that the Merchaunt xx straungers, and in especiall, Italians, Spanyardes, & Pozтyngales daily brought Dade, Dyle, Sylke, Clothes of Golde, Ueluet, & other Merchaūdyse into this Realme, and therfoze receyued ready money, which money they euer deliuered to other merchauntes by exchaunge & neuer employed the same money on the cōmodities of this Realme, so that therby the Kyng was hyndered in his Custome outwarde, and also the commodities of his Realme were not vttered, to the greate hynderaunce of his subiectes: wherefoze he caused a Pzoclamacion to bee made in Mydsomer Tearme, accozdynge to an olde Estatute A Pzoclamacion of Exchaunge.
xxx made in the tyme of Kynge Rycharde the second: That no persone should make any exchaunge contrary to the trew meanyng of the same Acte and Estatute, vpon payne to be taken the kynges moztall enemy, and to fozfayte all that he myght fozfayte. After this Pzoclamacion, many clothes and other commodities of this Realme were well solde, but shoztly after Merchauntes fell to exchaunge agayne, and the Pzoclamacion was shoztly fozgotten.

The Kyng after Whytsontyde and the Quene remoued to Wyndsoze, and there continued tyll the.xiiij. daye of Julye, on whiche daye the Kynge remoued to Woodstocke and lefte her at Wyndsoze, where she laye a whyle, and after remoued to the Mooze, and afterwarde to xl Estamstede: and after this day, the Kyng and she neuer saw together. Wherfoze the Commen people dailye murmured and spake their folysh fantasies. But the affayzes of Pzinces be not ozdered by the commen people, noz it were not conuenient that all thynges were opened to theim.

After this, the kyng sent certayne Lozdes to the Queene to Estam-stede to aduyse her to be conformable to the lawe of God, and to shewe vnto her, that all the Vniuersities had clearely determyned, that the Pope coulde in no wyse dispence with her Mariage, and therefore the Dispensacion to whiche she most trusted of all, was clearely voyde and of none effect. These, wyth manye mo causes and aduysementes were declared to her, whiche nothynge moued her at all, but styll she sayde: Truly I am the kynges trew wyfe, and to him maryed: and yf all Doctors were dead, or lawe, or learnyng so farre out of mannes mynde at that tyme of our maryage, yet I can not thinke that ỹ courte of Rome and the whole Churche of Englande would consent to a thing vnlaw- r full and detestable (as you call it) but styll I say I am hys wyfe, and for him wyll I pray. With this answer the Lordes departed, and came to the kyng and made report as you haue hearde.

This mariage was not alonly talked of in England, but in Fraunce Spayne, Italye, yea, thorough all Christendome in maner, and especially in the Emperours Courte, in so muche as a great Marques of Spayne sayde to syr Nicholas Heruy knyght beyng the kynges Ambassader in themperours Cowrte at Gaunte: My Lorde Ambassador of Englande, I meruayle not a lytell why the kyng your Maister dalyeth so with themperours Aunte, she is dissended I assure you of a no- rr ble bloode & hye Parentage, themperours Maiestie may not nor wyll not suffre soche iniurye to be doone to hys bloode and lynage, that she shoulde whole .xxij. yeres & more serue him as hys wyfe and bedfelow and now to reiecte her, what Princely maner is that, therein is neither loue nor loyaltie: For yf a poore verlet had so longe serued a Prince, what herte coulde haue then reiected hym or put him from hym: it can not be sayd that your kyng is well counselled: the matter is moch meruayled at amongest Christen Princes & thynke her not to be honestly handeled nor honorably: And if it be so that she be not his wyfe (bicause she was once his brothers wyfe) as your Doctors saye and affirme, rrr then no man can excuse your kynge nor saye but that she hath ben euyll handeled, and kepte lyke a Concubine or Paramour for the bodely appetite, which is a great spotte, shame, & rebuke to her and to her whole lynage, which spot no wayes can be sponged out nor recompenced, for shame in a kynred can by no treasure be redemed: Yf the kynge youre Maister remembre well this matter, he shal fynde that it transcendeth farre aboue the losse of erthly possessyons, I woulde he woulde be better aduysed.

An Answer. The Englysh Ambassador answered: My Lorde, my cõmission extẽdeth not to answer this matter, but to enforme you of ỹ truth, I wyll rl somewhat say besyde my commission: Fyrst I say to you that the kyng my maister neuer ment in this matter but honorably, truly, and vertuously bothe for the pleasure of God and the profyte and surety of hys Realme, nor neuer was nor shall be anye Prince that euer was better contented & pleased with a woman then he hath ben wyth her, nor neuer uer Prince more loued, cherished, nor honoured a woman, thē the kyng my Maister hath dooen her, & woulde with herte, mynde, and wyll her styll keepe as his wyfe, yf Goddes lawe woulde suffre it: My Lord, yf you remembre well all thynge, you shall fynde that thys doubt was fyrst moued in the Councell of Spayne, when the Emperour and the kyng of Englande were agreed, that themperoure shoulde marye the Ladye Marye the kynges Doughter: Upon that communicaciō this doubte was put to the Emperours Councell, whether she were the kynges lawfull Doughter or not, because it was well knowen that he had maryed his brothers wyfe.

This matter was not so secrete but it spred into the councell bothe of Fraunce and Flaunders, to the great defamacion of the kynge of Englande, & to the great vncertaintye of the succession of his Realme: whereof when he was aduertysed, I thynke neuer Prince tooke it more sorrowfully nor more dolently, and for satisfiynge of hys conscience, he called hys Cleargye and felte their opinions, and not trusting his owne subiectes onely (whych I ensure you be excellently lerned) sent to all the Uniuersities of Fraunce, Italye, and dyuers other Realmes to know their iudgementes in this case, and surely the kynge my master sore lamenteth his chaunce and bewaileth the time myspent yf it so succede, for then is hys Realme destitute of a lawfull heyre begotten of his body, which is the greatest displeasure that maye come to a Prince: The Mariage was well ment bothe of the kynges father & the Quenes father, & they maried together by the aduyce & councel of their frendes, and so louyngly continued together as manne and wyfe without any scruple or doubte, till you of Spayne moued fyrst the question & put the maryage in ambiguitie, and therfore you can not wyth honour thynke but ỹ the kyng hath done lyke a wyse Prince to searche out the solucion of your doubte which so neare toucheth his soule & the suretye of his Realme: And all thynge that he hath done he hath done by great aduysement and wyth a great deliberacion, wherfore no reasonable man can saye, but he hath done lyke a wyse & vertuous Prince. The Marques hearynge this aunswere sayde, that the kynge dyd wysely to trye the truthe, and was somewhat ashamed of that that he had spoken, as I was informed by them that were present.

You haue heard before howe the Cleargye in their Conuocacion had graunted to ỹ kynge the somme of one hundreth thousand pounde to be pardoned of the Premunire, for leuiynge of the whyche summe, euery Bysshop in his Dioces called before him all the Priestes as well chauntrie and paryshe Priestes as Persones and Uycars, amongest whom, Doctor Jhon Stokesley Bysshop of London, a man of greate wytte and learnyng, but of lytle discresion and humanitie (whiche caused hym to be out of the fauoure of the commen people) called before hym all the Priestes within the Citye of London, whether they were Curates or Stipendaries, the first day of Septembre beyng fridaye, in the Chapiter house of Sayncte Paull, at whyche daye the Prieſtes appeared, and the Byſshoppes policye was to haue onely ſyxe or eight prieſtes together, and by perſuaſions to haue cauſed them to graunte ſome porcion towarde the payment of the forſayd One Hundreth. M pounde, but the nombre of the Prieſtes was ſo greate, for they were ſyxe hundreth at the leaſt, & with them came many Temporall men to heare of the matter, that the Byſshoppe was diſapoynted of hys purpoſe: for when the Byſshoppes Officers called in certayne Prieſtes by name into the Chapiter house: wyth that, a great nombre entered, for they putte the Byſshoppes Officers that kepte the dore a ſyde. x

After this the officers got the dore ſhut againe: then the prieſtes without ſayde: We wyll not be kepte without, & our fellowes be within: we knowe not what the Byſshoppe wyll doo with them. The Temporall men beyng preſent ſtomaked and conforted the prieſtes to enter, ſo that by force they opened the dore, and one ſtrake the Byſshoppes Officer ouer the face and entered the Chapiter house and many temporall men with them, and long it was or any ſylence coulde be made: and at laſte when they were appeaſed, the Byſshop ſtoode vp and ſayde: Brethern, I meruayle not a lytell why you be ſo heddy and knowe not what ſhall be ſayde to you, therfore I praye you to keepe ſylence and to heare me
The biſhopes ſaiyng. xx pacyently: My frendes all, you knowe well that wee bee men fraile of condicion and no Angels, and by frayltie and lacke of wyſedome wee haue miſdemeaned our ſelfe toward the kyng our Soueraygne Lord and his lawes, ſo that all wee of the Cleargy were in the Premunire, by reaſon wherof, all our Promocions, Landes, Goodes and Catelles were to hym forfayte and our bodyes readye to be enpriſoned, yet his grace moued with pittie and compaſſyon, demaunded of vs what wee coulde ſay why he ſhoulde not extende his lawes vpon vs, then the fathers of the Cleargye humbly beſought his grace of mercye, to whom he anſwered that he was euer enclyned to mercy: then for all our great xxx offences we had lytel penaunce, for where he might by the rygor of his law haue taken all our lyuelod, goodes & catels, he was cõtented with one hundreth thouſand pounds to be payde in fyue yeres: & although that this ſõme be more then we maye eaſelye beare, yet by the rygor of his lawes we ſhoulde haue borne the whole burdeyne: Wherefore my brethren, I charitably exhorte you to beare your partes of your liuelod and ſalary towarde the paymẽt of this ſomme graunted. Then it was ſhortely ſayde to the Byſshoppe: My Lorde, twentye nobles a yere is but a bare lyuynge for a prieſt, for nowe victayle and euery thynge in maner is ſo deare, that pouertie in maner enforceth vs to saye naye: xl beſyde that, my Lord we neuer offended in the Premunire, for we medeled neuer with the Cardinals faculties, let the Byſhoppes and Abbottes whych haue offended paye. Then the Byſshoppes officers gaue to the prieſtes hyghe woordes, whyche cauſed them to be the more obſtinate. Alſo dyuers temporall men whych were preſent conforted the Prieſtes and bade theim agree to no payment. In this rumor, dyuers of the Byſhoppes ſeruauntes were buffeted and ſtryken ſo that the Byſhop begannie to be afrayde, and with fayre woordes appeaſed the noyſe, and for all thynges which were done or ſayde there he pardoned them and gaue to them his bleſſyng and prayed them to departe in charitie. And then they departed thynkyng to heare no more of ỹ matter, but they were diſceyued, for the Byſhop went to ſyr Thomas Moore then beyng Lorde Chauncellor (whych greatly fauoured the Byſhop and the Cleargye) and to hym made a greuouſe complaynte and declared the facte very greuouſly, where vpon commaundemēt was ſent to ſyr Thomas Pargitor Mayer of the Citie, to attache certaine prieſtes and temporall men, and ſo. xv. prieſtes and. v. temporall men were arreſted, of the whych, ſome were ſent to the Tower, ſome to the Fleete, and other Priſons, where they remayned long after.

In this ſeaſon were dyuers Preachynges in the Realme, one contrarye to another concernyng the Kynges Maryage, and in eſpeciall one Thomas Abell clerke, bothe preached and wrote a Booke, that the Mariage was lawfull, whiche cauſed many ſymple men to beleue hys opinion: This Abell was the Queenes Chaplayne, and wrote thys xx Booke to pleaſe her withall: wherfore the Kyng cauſed a Determinacio of the Vniuerſities, & all the iudgementz of grēt Clerkes to be compyled into a Booke and to be Printed, whiche Booke dyd ſatisfye the myndes of al indifferent & diſcrete perſons: but ſome men were percial that neither learnyng nor reaſon coulde ſatiſfy their wyllfull myndes.

This yere the Kynge kepte his Chriſtemas at Grenewyche wyth great ſolempnitie, but all men ſayde that there was no myrthe in that Chriſtemas becauſe the Queene and the Ladies were abſent.

After Chriſtemas the. xv. daye of January the Parliament began to ſytte & amongeſt dyuers grieſes which the Commons were greued xxx with, they ſore cōplayned of the crueltie of the Ordinaries, for callynge men before them Ex officio: that is, by reaſon of ther office: For the Ordinaries woulde ſende for men and ley Accuſacioas to them of Hereſye, and ſay they were accuſed, and ley Articles to them, but no Accuſer ſhould be brought furth, whiche to the Commons was very dredefull and greuous: for the partie ſo Aſſited muſt either Abiure or be burned, for Purgacion he myght make none.

When this matter and other Exactions done by the Clergy in their Courtes were long debated in the Common Houſe, at the laſte it was concluded & agreed, that all the grieſes which the temporall men were xl greued with, ſhoulde be putte in writyng and delyuered to the Kyng, whiche by great aduyce was done: wherfore, the. xviij. day of Marche the Common ſpeaker accompanyed with dyuers Knyghtes and Burgeſſes of the Common Houſe came to the Kynges preſence, and there declared to hym how the temporal men of his Realme were ſore agreued wyth the cruell demeanoure of the Prelates and Ordinaryes, which touched bothe their bodyes and goodes, all whyche griefes, the Speaker delyuered to the kyng in wrytynge, most humbly besechyng his grace to take soche an order & direction in that case, as to his hygh wysedome myght seme most conuenient. Further he beseched the king to consider what payne, charge and coste, his humble subiectes of the nether house had susteyned syth the begynnynge of thys Parliament, and that it woulde please his grace of his Princelye benignitie to dissolue his courte of Parliament, that his subiectes myght repayre into their countreys.

When the kynge had receyued the Supplicacion of the Commons, he paused a whyle and then sayde: It is not the office of a kyng which is a Judge to be to lyghte of credence, nor I haue not, nor wyll not vse the same: for I wyll heare the partie that is accused speake or I geue any sentence: your booke conteyneth diuers Articles of greate & weyghtye matters, and as I perceyue, it is agaynste the Spirituall persones and Prelates of oure Realme, of whiche thynge you desyre a redresse and a reformacion, whyche desyre and request is mere contraryant to your last Peticion: For you requyre to haue the Parlyament dissolued and to departe into your countreys, and yet you would haue a reformacion of your griefes wyth all diligence: Although that youre payne haue ben great in tarynge, I assure you myne hath ben no lesse then yours, and yet all the payne that I take for your wealthes is to me a pleasure: therefore yf you wyll haue profyte of your complaynte, you must tary the tyme, or els to be without remedy: I moche cõmend you that you wyll not contende nor stand in stryfe with the Spirituall men, whiche be youre Christen brethren, but moche more me thynketh that you shoulde not contende with me that am youre Soouereygne Lorde and kyng, consideryng that I seke peace and quyetnesse of you: For I haue sent to you a byll concernynge wardes and primer season, in the which thynges I am greatly wronged: wherfore I haue offered you reason as I thynke, yea, and so thynketh all the Lordes, for they haue set their handes to the booke: Therfore I assure you, yf you wyll not take some reasonable ende now when it is offered, I wyll serch out the extremitie of the lawe, and then wyll I not offre you so moche agayne: with this answere, the Speaker and his company departed.

The kynges saiynge.

The cause why the kyng spake these wordes was thys: Dayly men made Feoffementes of their landes to their vses, and declared their wylles of their landes with soch remaynders, that not alonly the kyng but all other Lordes lost their Wardes, Mariages and relieffes, and the kyng also lost his primer season, & the profyte of the lyuerey, which was to hym very preiudiciall and a greate losse: wherefore he, lyke an indifferent Prince, not willyng to take all, nor to lose all, caused a byll to be drawen by his learned councell, in the whyche was deuysed, that euery manne myght make his wyll of the halfe of hys lande, so that he lefte the other halfe to the heyre by discent. When thys Byll

came fyrst amonges the Commons, lorde how the ignorannt persones were greued, & howe shamefully they spake of the byll and of the Kynges learned Councell: but the wyse men which vnderstoode & sawe the myschiefe to come, woulde gladly haue had the byll to be assented to, or at the least to haue put the kynge in a suretye of the thyrde or fourthe parte, which offer I was credebly informed the kyng woulde haue taken: but many frowarde and wylfull persones, not regardynge what myght ensue (as it dyd in deede) woulde neither consent to the byll as the Lordes had agreed & set to their handes, nor yet agree to no reasonable qualificacion of the same, whiche they sore repented: For after this, the kyng called the Judges and best learned men of his Realme, and thei disputed this matter in the Chauncery, and agreed that lande coulde not be wylled by the ordre of the common law, wherupon an act was made, that no man myght declare his wyll of no parte of his land: which Acte sore greued the Lordes and Gentlemen that had manye chyldren to setfurth. Therfore you may iudge what myschiefe cōmeth of wylfull blyndnesse and lacke of forsyght in so great causes.

This Parliament was prorroged tyll the tenth day of Apryll, in the whiche Parliament was an Acte made, that Byshops shoulde paye no more Annates or money for their Bulles to the Pope: for it was opēly proued that there was payed for ỹ Bulles of Byshopes, in the fourthe yere of Kyng Henry the seuenth, the kynges father, tyll this yere, one hundreth thre score thousand pounde sterlyng, besyde al other Dispensacions and Pardones, wherof the summe was incredible.

When the Parliament was begonne agayne after Ester, there came downe to the Common house the Lorde Chauncellour, the Dukes of Norffolke & Suffolke, the Erles of Arundell, Oxforde, Northumbrelande, Rutlande, Wylshyre and Susser, and after they were set, the Lorde Chauncellor declared, howe the kynge was aduertised by hys Councell, and in especiall by the Duke of Norffolke, howe on the Marches betwene Englande and Scotlande was very lytell habitacion on the Englysh syde, but on the Scottyshe syde was great habitacion, and the Scottes dwelled euen iuste on the border, by the reason wherof they inuaded England dyuers tymes, and dyd to the kynges subiectes great hurte and displeasure: wherefore the kynge entended to make dwellyng houses there, and also to make new diuers Pyles and stoppes to let the Scottysh men from their inuasions, to the great commoditie of all his people there dwellyng. whych thynges coulde not be doone without great coste: Wherefore conslideryng the kynges good entente, he sayde, that the Lordes thoughte it conueniente to graunte to the kynge some reasonable ayde towarde hys charges, and prayed the Commons to consulte on the same, and then he and all the Lordes departed.

After their departure, the cōmons cōsidering ỹ kynges good entent, louingly graūted to him a.xb. toward his charges, but this graūt was not not enacted at this Sessyon, bicause that sodeinly began a Pestilence in Westmynster, wherfore the Parlyament was proroged tyll the next yere.

In this yere was an olde Tolle demaunded in Flaunders of Englyshmen, called the Tolle of the Hounde, whiche is a Ryuer and a passage: The Tolle is. xij. pence of a Fardell. This Tolle had ben often tymes demaunded, but neuer payed: in so muche that Kyng Henry the seuenth, for the demaunde of that Tolle, prohibited all hys subiectes to kepe any Marte at Antwerpe or Barow, but caused the Martes to be kepte at Calyes: at which tyme it was agreed that the sayde Tolle shoulde neuer be demaunded, so that the Englyshmen woulde resorte agayne into the Dukes countrey, and after that, it was not demaũded tyll now: Wherefore the Kyng sent Doctor Knyght and other to Calyes, and thyther came themperours Commissioners, and the matter was put in suspence for a tyme.

We haue heard before how the kyng had purchased the Bysshope of Yorkes place, whiche was a fayre Bysshops house, but not meete for a kyng: wherefore the kyng purchased all the medowes about sayncte James, and all the whole house of S. James, and ther made a fayre mansion and a parke, & buylded many costlye and commodious houses for great pleasure.

Now muste I declare to you a noble enterprise, although it wer not doone in England, yet bicause diuers Englyshmen were at that auenture, I wyll declare it as the Lorde Master of the Religion of Saynt Jhons wrote to the Lorde of sayncte Jhons in Englande: The Lorde Master of ỹ Religion, lamentynge sore the losse of the Rodes, whych he thought not sone to be recouered, consydered that the Turke helde the towne of Modon whiche standeth on the See syde, and is a fayre Porte, and woulde haue gladlye had that towne oute of the Turkes possession, called to him a trusty seruaunt of hys, called Caloram, which was well langaged, and to hym declared, that he woulde haue hym to sayle to Modon, and to dwell there as a Turke vnknowen, and yf he might by any meanes to come into seruice with Mallie de Huga, which was Capitayne there. Caloram answered, that to go thyther for the accomplyshyng of the Lord masters desyre, he was very well content, but to come in seruyce and fauoure wyth the Capitayne, muste come in processe of tyme and by continuaunce, and that not wythout great expence: The Lorde Maister promysed hym sufficient treasure and a great rewarde: When Caloram was perfectly enstructed in all thyng he toke his leaue & came priuely to Modon, & there dwelled, & within shorte space he was the Capitayns seruaunt, & for his great diligence was with his maister in great fauoure. Then he wrote to the Lorde Mayster all thynge, and assertayned hym that hys entent coulde not take effecte hastely, but bade hym euer be readye. Thys matter thus contynued twoo yeare, in whyche tyme Caloram well perceyued how howe the towne myght be taken, and therefore wrote to the lord Master, whiche shortly came to a place called Mucollutea. The Turkes haue a condicion in August & September, to resorte into the countrey to see the fruytes, and to solace theim selfe, wherfore the Lord Master appoynted the Prior of Rome and the Turcuplyar of England to bee Capitaynes of this enterprise, and with them were. lx. knightes of the Religion, and. vij. C. & fyftye souldiers in. vj. Galyes and Brigantes, and passed in the Cape Blanke in the lande of Calaber, the. xviij. day of August, and there they ankered: and from that place they myght sayle x lx. myle to Modon, vnder the hylles of Stroffadees. And in the waye they stopped all theshippes that passed toward Modon: & from thence they sent woorde to Caloram, which sent them woorde, not to be to hastye: for the Uenicians had reported in Modon, that ỹ Galeyes of the Religion were on the see: and also a Capitayne of the Turkes, called Frombylam was come to Modon with. ij. C. horsmẽ to bew the towne so that Caloram was in great feare of his enterprice. But the same nyght there came to Modon a Gripe or small vessell, in the which were thre knyghtes of the Religion all in marynors arrey, and there sought for fresh water and other victails necessary, which knightes spake with xx Caloram, and the same day the Capitayne Frombylam departed from Modon. Then Caloram sent worde to the Capitaynes, that he trusted that their iourney shoulde be well sped: which knightes departed and came to the Capitaynes, whiche wysely assembled all their people at a Roade called Stroffades, and there declared their commission of their Lord Master, and also shewed Caloroms letters, whereof euery man was greatly cõforted to know what enterprise they went about. Then it was appoynted that the Prior of Rome shoulde fyrst entre and take the gate of the principall tower, and the Turkeiplier with. vj. Englishe knyghtes were appoynted to defende the Nolle or Pere at the hauen xxx mouthe: and to euery gate was a Capitayn appoynted with a nombre for the gates of the towne and the Fortresses were well knowen to the Religion of S. Jhon Baptist. When all this ordre was appoynted, the Galies disancored & came to the Ile of Sapience. iij. myle from Modon. All this whyle Caloram was in great feare, tyll ỹ two Capiteins sent a vessell called a Gripe, & in her. iij. C. men: Thei wer no soner entered the peere, but the Turkes came a borde & asked for ỹ merchaunts (for all the men wer apparelled lyke Mariners) they answered that ỹ Merchauntes which had the charge wer gone a land into the towne, & sayde thei would bring them to the Merchauntes, & that al their mer-xl chaũdise was good wodde, which thyng the Turkes moch desyre: So the christẽ knyghtes lyke mariners went with the Turkes, which wer to the nombre of. xiij. entending to begyn their enterprise, & some went toward the tower, and some went toward the gate followyng the. xiij. Turkes, & after them issued all the souldiers out of the Gripe, & so with force thei got ỹ gate, & after ỹ the nolle or pyre, & on that set a banner Modõ take.

of the

of the Religion to the which Caloram helped moch: with that came all the Galyes and landed. Then began a terrible slaughter of all partes, the Turkes fled, and the Chriſten men followed, and the Capitaynes tooke the walles, and from thence Caloram lead them to the house of Melyze Huga, in whiche house was a greate strength: For his house was lyke a Fortresse or tower, whych ioyned to the walle of the towne, out of which was a Posterne, wherof issued out certayn Turkes which askryed the Chriſtē men abrode in the countrey. But in the meane season the Chriſten men assauted the sayde Fortresse, whiche was sore defended: and there the Prior of Rome was by a hackbush slayn, whyche chaunce made the Cristen men more furious, & slew in the towne. iij. C. Turkes and aboue. Then they blew to retreite & councelled together & well perceyued that they coulde not kepe the towne excepte thei had the fortresse or tower, which they could not obtayne without a Siege, and then they had no ordinaunce nor people ynough, therfore they determined to take their most aduauntage by pyllage, and so spoyled the towne & toke. viij. C. prisoners & sent them to the Galyes. And when the Turkes saw the Chriſten men styl pylfer (as the vsage of souldiers is) they issued out of their holde & fortresse & fought with the Chriſten men boldely in the stretes, so that the stretes ranne bloode in ỹ canels, for the fyghte was sore: and euer the Turkes came in at the posterne by askry, and assauted the Chriſten men, which valiauntly defended them and for all the Turkes power came to their Galies with their pray & prisoners, and came to the Ile of Malto wyth all their bootye, not leesyng. xl. persones in all their iourney, whereof the Lorde Master was moche reioyced & well rewarded Caloram, which also came with them to Malto. This enterprise was dooen on a sonday, beynge the. xviij. day of August, the yere of our Lord a thousand, fyue hundreth, thyrtie and one, and this. xxiij. yere of his Reigne.

After this enterprise, the. xxij. daye of September, dyed lady Loyse Dutchesse of Angulesme and mother to the Frenche kyng, a wyse and a sad Lady: whereof the kynge beynge aduertised, caused a solempne Obsequye to be made and kepte for her in the Abbey of Waltham in Essex, at the whiche solempnytie, the Kynge and a great nombre of the Nobles & Prelates of the Realme wer present in mournyng apparell at the kynges coste and charge.

The.xxiiij.yere.

IN the begynnynge of this. xxiiij. yere the Ladye Anne Bulleyne was so moche in the kynges fauoure, that the commen people whiche knewe not the kynges trew entent, sayd and thought that the absence of the Quene was onely for her sake, which was not trew: for the kyng was openly rebuked of Preachers for kepyng company with hys brothers wyfe, which was thoccasyon that he eschued her cōpanye, tyll the truth wer tryed.

The

The last date of Aprill the parliamẽt sittyng, the kyng sent for Thomas Awdeley, Spekar of the common house, and certaine other, and declared to thẽ, how they had exhibited a boke of their greues the last yere against the Spiritualtie, whiche at their requestes, he had deliuered to his spirituall subiectes, to make aunswere there to, but he could haue no aunswere, till withm thre daies last past: which aunswer he deliuered to the Spekar, saiyng, we thynke their aunswere will smally please you, for it semeth to vs very slender, you bee a greate sorte of wysemen, I doubt not but you wyll loke circumspectly on the matter, and we wyll be indifx ferent betwene you And for a truth their aunswere was very Sophisticall, and nothyng auoydyng the greues of the laye people: And farther the kyng saied, that he maruciled not a litle, why one of the Parliament house spake openly, of the absence of the Quene frõ hym, whiche matter was not to be determined there, for he saied it touched his soule, and wisshed the matrimony to be good, for then had he neuer bene vexed in consience, but the docters of the vniuersities saied he, haue determined the mariage to be voyde, and detestable before God, whiche grudge of consience, caused me to abstein from her compaignie, and no toliche or wanton appetite: for I am saied he. xli. yere old, at whiche age the lust of man xx is not so quicke, as in lustie youth: and sauyng in Spayne or Portyngall it hath not bene sene, that one man hath maried twoo sisters, the one beyng carnally knowẽ before: but the brother to mary the brothers wife was so abhorred amongest all nacions, that I neuer hearde it, that any Christen man did it, but my selfe: wherfore you se my consience troubled and so I praye you reporte: so the Spekar departed, and declared to the commons the kynges saiyng, bothe of the Spirituall mennes aunswere, and also concernyng the kynges mariage, which slight aunswere displesed the commons.

The occasion why the kyng spake of his mariage, was because one xxx Temse in the common house, moued the commons to sue to the kyng, to take the Quene again into his compaignie, and declared certain greate mischiefes, as in bastardyng the Lady Marie, the kynges onely chylde, and diuerse other inconuenences, whiche woordes were reported to the kyng, whiche was the cause that he declared his consience.

The. xi. daie of Maie, the kyng sent for the Spekar again, and. xii. of the common house, hauyng with hym eight Lordes, and saied to theim, welbeloued subiectes, we thought that ỹ clergie of our realme, had bene our subiectes wholy, but now wee haue well perceiued, that they bee but halfe our subiectes, yea, and scace our subiectes: for all the Prelates at xl their consecracion, make an othe to the Pope, clene contrary to the othe that they make to vs, so that they seme to be his subiectes, and not ours, the copie of bothe the othes, I delyuer here to you, requiryng you to inuent some order, that we bee not thus deluded, of our Spirituall subiectes. The Spekar departed, and caused the othes to be redde in the common house, the very tenor wherof ensueth.

The openyng of these othes, was one of the occasions, why the Pope within within two yere folowyng, lost all his iurisdiccion in Englande, as you shall here afterward. The xiiij. daie ỹ parliament was proroged, till the iij. daie of February next ensuyng. After whiche prorogacion, syr Thomas More Chaunceller of England, after long sutes made to the kyng to be discharged of that office, the. xvi. daie of Maie, he delyuered to the kyng at Westminster, the greate Seale of Englande, and was with the kynges fauour discharged, whiche Seale the kyng kept till Whitsontide folowyng, and on the Mondaie in Whitson weke, he dubbed Thomas Awdeley, Spekar of the parliament knight, and made hym lorde keper of the great Seale, and so was he called.

Thomas Awdeley keper of the great seale

The kyng beyng in progresse this Sommer, was aduertised that the Pope and the Frenche kyng, had appoynted to mete at Marcelles in Prouince, in the begynnyng of the nexte Sprynge, wherefore the kyng like a wise and pollitike prince thought it conuenient to speake with the Frenche kyng in his awne persone, before the Pope and he should come together, and to declare to hym bothe the determinacion, of the Vniuersities and Doctors, concernyng his Matrimonie, and also the generall cõsailes, whiche ordeined suche causes, to be tried in the prouinces and countreis, where the doubt should rise; trustyng that the Frenche kyng should cause the Pope to encline to Goddes lawe, and to leaue his awne tradicions, and voyde dispensacions, whereupon bothe the princes concluded, to mete in October folowyng, betwene Calice & Bulleyn: wherefore the kyng of Englande sent out his letters, to his nobilitie, prelates, and seruauntes, commaundyng them to bee ready at Cantorbury, the xxvi daie of September, to passe the Seas wyth hym, for the accomplishyng of the enteruew, betwene hym and his brother the Frenche kyng. Many men were sory to here, that the kyng should passe the sea in Winter, and specially in October, when the seas be rough, but their sayynges letted not his purpose: for he marched forward from Ampthill to Wynsore where on Sundaie beyng the furste daie of September, he created the lady Anne Bulleyn, Marchiones of Penbroke, and gaue to her one thousand pound lande by the yere, and that solempnitie finished, he rode to the College to Masse, and when the Masse was ended, a newe league was concluded & sworne, betwene the kyng and the Frenche kyng, Mesire Pomeray the Frenche Ambassador then beyng present. After whiche othe taken, Doctor Fox the kynges almer, made an eloquent oracion in Latin, in praise of peace, loue, and amitie: whiche dooen the trumpettes blewe, and the kyng returned to the Castell, where was kepte a solempne feast. From thence the kyng remoued to Grenewyche, and so forward to Cantorbury, where at the daie appoynted, he found ready furnyshed, all suche as were commaunded to passe the Sea with hym, well and tychely adorned, bothe they and their seruauntes.

A new league

The. x. daie of October, the kyng came to Douer, and on the. xi. daie in the mornyng beyng Fryday, at three of the clocke, he tooke shippyng in Douer rode, and before. x. of the clocke the same daie, he with the lady

Marchiones of Pembroke, landed at Caleis, where he was honorably receiued with procession, and brought to sainct Nicholas churche, where he hard Masse, and so to his place called Therchequer, where he lodged And on the Sondaie after came to Caleis, the lorde Roche Baron, and Monsire de Mountpesat, messengers frō the French kyng, aduertisyng the kyng of England, that the French kyng would repaire to Abuile the same night marchyng towarde Bulleyne, of whiche tidynges the kyng was very glad: but sodaynly came a messenger, & reported that the great Master of Fraunce, and the Archebyshoppe of Roan, with diuerse noble men of Fraunce, were come to Sandifeld, entendyng to come to Caleis, x to salute the kyng, from the kyng their Master. He beyng thereof aduertised, sent in greate hast the.xv. daie of October, the Duke of Norffolke the Marques of Excester, the Earles of Oxford, Darby, and Rutlande, the lorde Sandes, and the lorde Fitzwater, with.iii. C. gentelmen, which honorably receiued the French lordes, at the Englishe pale, and so brought them to the kynges presence in Caleis, which stode vnder a riche clothe of estate of suche value that they muche mused of the ryches. The kyng (as he that knewe all honor and nurture) receiued the Frenche lordes, very louyngly and amiably, and with thē toke a daie & place of metyng: these lordes were highly feasted, & after diner departed to Bullein. xx

While the kyng lay thus in Caleis, he vewed the walles, towers, and Bulwerkes, and deuised certain newe fortificaciōs, for the maintenance and defence of the toune. The toune of Caleis had at this season.xxiiii. C. beddes, and stablyng for.ii.M. horses, beside the villages adiacent.

The.xx. daie of this moneth, the kyng beyng aduertysed, that the Frēche kyng was come to a village called Marguilō, nigh to the Englyshe pale, marched out of Caleis the next daie after, accompaigned with the Dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, and with the Marquesses of Dorcet and Excester, the Erles of Arundell, Oxford, Surrey, Essex, Derby Rutlande, Huntyngdon, and Sussex, and diuerse Viscountes, Barons, xxx Knightes of the Garter, and Gentelmen, freshely appareled, and richely trymmed, and so passed toward the place, appoynted for the enteruewe, leuyng behynd thē the greatest part of the yomen in Caleis, because that Bulleyne was to litle for bothe the traynes. For the Frenchemen saied their train was.xx.M. horse, whiche caused the Englishemen to cast many perelles, and especially because it was bruted abrode, that the Frenche kyng should saye, the kyng of Englande was once his enemie, and maintened the Emperor and the duke of Burbō against hym, and nowe he was become his moost frende. The rehersyng of these olde grudges, many Englishmen suspected, and very lothe that the kyng should go to xl Bulleyne, but the kyng continued still in his iorney, and came to Sandyngfelde, and a lytle from that place in a baley, was the Frenche kyng nobely accompaigned, with three hundred horse, and not muche more. The kynges train waued on the lefte hande, to geue the Frenche kynge and his train the right hande: lykewyse did the Frenche part, to geue the warde,and welcomed the kyng of Englande, whiche theim well beheldе xxx and louyngly them receiued,as he that could as muche nurture, as any Prince that euer was. Then the Frenche kyng saied to his children opēly: My children, I am your father, but to this Prince here you are as muche bound,as to me your naturall father,for he redemed me and you from captiuitie:wherfore on my blessyng I charge you, to be to hym lo-

Euery man was appoynted to his lodgyng (whiche there was very straight) accozdyng too his degree, and great chere was made to al the Englishemen: the pouls- x ters, Larders, Spicereis, and Sellars of Wine were all open, and lykewyse Hay and Litter, and al other thinges, aske and haue and no man durst take any money, foz the Frenche kyng paied foz all.

The Frenche kyng caused twoo gounes to be made of white Uelues, pzicked with gold of damaske, and the capes and bentes, were of frettes of whipped golde of damaske very ryche, whiche twoo gounes he sent to the kyng of Englande, pzaynge hym to chose the one, and to weare it foz his sake, whiche gladly toke it, and so that Tewesdaie, the twoo kynges were bothe in one suite: thesame night the French kyng made to the king of Englande a supper in his chamber, whiche was hanged with Arras, xx and siled ouer with riche silke, and two clothes of estates were set vp, one at the one ende, & the other at the other ende, the one clothe was embzaudered with the image of an old man, and a woman with a naked child in her arme, and the woman gaue the old man sucke of her bzest, and about was wzittē in French: Better it is children wantonly to wepe, then old men for nede to perishe On the other clothe of estate, was embzaudered the sunne goyng doune of fine gold, and a beast theron, the hed couered with a helme, and a cozonall of a dukes estate, the beastes body was al perle, & the cloth was crimosyn satten. All this season the Frenche kyng and his court were freshe, and his garde were appare-

With the Frenche kyng was the kyng of Nauer, the Dolphyn of Vien, the Dukes of Orliaunce, Angulesme, Vandosme, Guise, Longuile, the Erles of Sainct Paule, Neuers, Estampes, Lauall, and many other Erles and Barons and the prince of Melffe, foure Cardinalles, and eleuen bishoppes with their traines and resort, whiche surely was a greate compaignie: so continued these twoo kynges at Bulleyn, Mondaie, Tewesdaie, Wednesdaie, and Thursdaie, and on Fridaie the.xxv. daie of October, they departed out of Bulleyn to Calice: the Frenche kynges train was twelue hundred persones, and so many horse or more, and without Calice twoo in Caleis that night, beside the toune dwellers, eight thousand persones at the least. The kyng of England brought the French kyng to his lodging, to the Staple in, where his chamber was hanged with so rich bedoze, as hath not bene sene, the ground of it was gold and damaske, and all ouer the tuffes and flowers, were of Satten Sylke and Syluer, so curiously wrought that they semed to growe, euery chamber was rycher and other: the second chamber all of Tissue, with a clothe of estate of nedle worke, set with great Roses of large pearle. Jn likewise on the Sondaie, they had al maner of flesshe, foule, spice, Uenison, bothe of falowe Dere and redde Dere, and as for wine they lacked none, so that well was thenglishe man that might well entertain the Frenche man: the lordes of Fraunce neuer fetched their viandes, but they were sent to them, and often tyme their proporcion of victaill was so abundaunt, that they refused a greate parte thereof.

gland had like courses after thenglishe fashion, the first coutle of euery kyng was. xl. dishes, the second. lx. ỹ third. lxx. which wer costly & pleasant.

After supper came in the Marchiones of Penbroke, with. vii. ladies, in Maskyng apparel, of straunge fashion, made of clothe of golde, compassed with Crimosyn Tinsell Satyn, owned with clothe of Syluer, lying lose and knit with laces of gold: these ladies were brought into the Chamber, with foure damoselles apparcled in Crimosyn sattyn, with tabardes of fine Cipres: The lady Marques tooke the Frenche kyng, and the Countes of Darby, toke the kyng of Nauer, and euery lady toke a lorde, and in daunsyng the kyng of Englande, toke awaie the ladies visers, so that there the ladies beauties were shewed, and after they had daunsed a while they ceased, and the French kyng talked with the Marchiones of Penbroke a space, & then he toke his leaue of the Ladies, and the kyng conueighed hym to his lodgyng: Thesame night the Duke of Norfolke feasted all the nobles of Fraunce, beyng there in the castle of Caleis, with many goodly sporles and pastymes.

xl On the Wondaie beyng Symon and Judes daie, there dyned with the kyng of England, the kyng of Nauer, and the Cardinal of Lorrain, and the greate Master, & Admirall of Fraunce, on whiche daie the kyng of Englande, called a Chapiter of the knightes of the Gartier, at whiche Chapiter the Frenche kyng ware the blewe Mantel of the ordre, because he was of thesame ordre, and there were elected, Annas Memorancie erle of Beaumont, greate Master of the Frenche kynges house, and Phylip de Chabbot erle of Newblanke, greate Admirall of Fraunce, whiche had to them their Collers and Garters deliuered, for the which they rendered to the kyng greate thankes.

xxx The morowe after beyng the thirtie daie of October, the two kynges departed out of Caleis, and came nere to Sādyngfeld, and there alyghted in a faire grene place, where was a table set, and there the Englishemen serued the Frenchemen of wyne, Ypocras, fruite, & spice abondantly. When the two kynges had cōmuned a litle, they mounted on their horses, and at the very enteryng of the Frenche grounde, they toke handes, and with Princely countenaunce, louyng behauor, and hartie wordes, eche embraced other and so there departed. The kynges departure.

While the kyng of Englande was in the Frenche kynges dominion, he had the vpper hand, and likewise had the Frenche kyng, in his dominion, and as the Frenche kyng paied, all the Englishemens charges at Bulleyn, so did the kyng of England at Caleis, so that euery thyng was recōpensed: sauyng that the kyng of England, gaue to the French kyng, xl diuerse precious Iuelles & great horses, and to his nobles great plentie of plate, for the which I could neuer heare, that he gaue the kyng of Englande any other thyng, but the white goune, as you haue hard, but to the lordes of the kynges counsaill, he gaue certain plate and chaines.

When the kyng was returned to Calice, many gentlemen tooke shyp to saile into Englande, but the wynd was so contrariant, that diuerse of them them were dziuen backe again into Calice, and diuerse into Flaunders, and in Nouember rose suche a Wynde, of the Nozth and Nozth Weste, that all the shippes in Caleis hauen, were in great ieoperdy, and in especial the Hoyes, at whiche season was such a spzyng tide, that it bzake the walles of Holland and Zelande, and dzouned diuerse tounes in Flaunders in so muche that the water rose thzee foote aboue the wharfe, where the Key stode in Andwerpe: this stozme continued till the fourth daie of Nouember, but for all that the wynd chaunged not. The eight daie rose suche a Wynde tempest and Thonder, that no man could conueniently sitte in the streates of Caleis: muche lamentacion was made for theim that had taken shippe into Englande, for no man knewe what was become of theim. On Sondaie the wether was faire, the kyng caused his bedde and other thynges to be shypped, and entended to departe, but sodainly rose suche a mist, that no Master could guide a ship, and so he taried that daie. On Tewesdaie at midnight he tooke ship, and landed at Douer the morowe after, beyng the.xiiii. daie of Nouember, at. v. of the clocke in the mozning, wherefoze the Saterdaie after, was song Te deum in the Cathedzall Churche of sainct Paule in London: the Lozde kepet of the great Seale, the Maioz of London, and diuerse other noble and sad persones (whiche made their abode in London, for the gouernaunce of the realme in the kynges absence) beyng pzesent. The kyng after his returne, maried pziuily the lady Anne Bulleyn, on sainct Erkenwaldes daie, whithe mariage was kept so secrete, that very fewe knewe it, til she was greate with childe, at Easter after.

The kyng maried to Lady Anne bulleine

When the kyng should passe ouer the sea, he cõsidered that the Scottes had robbed his subiectes, bothe by sea and land, and that no redzesse was made for thesame, imagined that in his absence, they would attempt some outragious enterpzise against his people, wherfoze like a pzudent pzince to be in a suretie, he sent sir Arthur Darcy knight, with thze hundzed tall menne to Barwicke, to defende the inuasions of the Scottes. The Scottes hearyng of his commyng, came into Nozthumberlande, by the middle marches, and came to a place called Fowbery, and in their iozney fired certain villages and returned. Sir Arthur Darcy hearyng of this aucnture was nothyng contente. Nowe at this season there laie at Berwicke, Archibald Doglas Erle of Angus, whiche had maried the Quene of Scottes, the kynges syster, and was banished Scotlande and she was from hym diuozsed, and maried to another. The Scottes bragged of their enterpzise, and saied that sir Arthur had bzought them good lucke, and said, that he and the Erle of Angus, slepte well in Batwicke: they hearyng of this bzagge, made a roade with.iiii. C. men into Scotland, & set a village on fire: then shozтly assembled together.viii.C. Scottes. When thenglishmen perceiued the Scottes, they caused their trompet to blowe a retreate, and the Erle and xx with hym, shewed hym self on a hill, euen in the face of the Scottes, and the trumpette blewe at their backes, so that the Scottes thought that there had bene.ii. compaignies gnies, whiche caused the Scottes to flie, and the Englishemen folowed, and slewe a greate nomber, and toke many prisoners, and brought them to Berwicke, the twentie date of October.

The kyng this yere kepte his Christemas at Grenewyche, and after Christmas sir Thomas Awdeley, Lorde keper of the great Seale, was made Chauncellor of Englande, and when the Parliament beganne, because the office of the Spekar was voyde, Hufrey Wyngfeld of Grais Inne, was elected Spekar of the parliament, whiche was presented according as you haue heard, of the other Spekar before. In the whiche Parliament was made an acte, that no persone should appeale for any cause out of this realme, to the Courte of Rome, but from Commissarie to the Byshoppe, and from Byshop to the Archebishop, and from Archebyshop to the kyng and all causes of the kyng, to bee tried in the vpper house of the Conuocation. And in thesame parliament was enacted that Quene Katheryn should from thence furth, be no more called quene, but princes Dowager, of prince Arthur.

Sir Thomas Awdeley made Chauncellor.

In this Sommer season last past, died Willyam Watham Archebyshoppe of Cantorbury, and to that Byshoprick was named, Doctor Thomas Cranmer, the kynges chappelain, a man of good learnyng, and of a verteous lyfe, whiche also not long before, was the kynges Ambassadour to the byshop of Rome, whiche was consecrate in Lent.

After the kyng perceiuing his newe wife Quene Anne, to bee greate with childe, caused all officers necessary, to bee appoynted to her, and so on Easter euen, she went to her Closet openly as Quene, with all solempnitie, and then the kyng appoynted the daie of her Coronacion, to bee kept on Whitsondaie next folowyng, and writynges were sent to all Shriues, to certifie the names of menne of fourtie pounde, to receiue the Order of knighthod, or els to make a fyne: the assessement of whiche fines, were appoynted to Thomas Cromwell, Maister of the kynges Iuell house, and counsailer to the kyng, and newly in his hygh fauour, whiche so pollityquely handeled the matter, that he raised of that sessyng of fines, a great somme of money to the kynges vse: Also the kyng wrote letters to the citie of London, to prepare pagiauntes, against thesame coronacion.

¶ The.xxv.yere.

xl

THe kyng in the beginnyng of this.xxv.yere, kepte the daie of sainct George, at his Manor of Grenewiche, with great solempnitie, and the Courte was greatly replenished, with lordes, knightes, and with Ladies and Gentelwomen, to a great nomber, with all solace and pleasure. You haue hard the last yere, how the parliament had enacted, that no person should after a date, appele to Rome for any cause, whatsoeuer it were, and that the Quene now, called the Princes Dowager, had appeled to the Court of Rome, before the Acte made, so that it was doubted, whether that appeale pele were good or not. This question was well handeled in the Parliament house, but muche better in the Cõuocacion house, but in both houses it was alleged, yea, and by bookes shewed, that in the Counsailes of Calcedone, Affricke, Toletane, and diuerse other famous Counsayles in the primitiue Churche, yea, in the tyme of sainct Augustine, it was affirmed, declared, & determined, that a cause risyng in one Province, should be determined in the same, and that neither the patriarke of Constantinople, should medle in causes moued in the iurisdiccion of the patriarke of Antioche, nor no bishop should entermit, within anothers prouince or countrey: which thinges were so clerkely opened, so connyngly set furth, to all intentes, that euery man that had witte, and was determined too folowe the truth, and not affeccionate nor wylfully wedded to his awn mind, might plainly se that al appeles made to Rome, were clerely voide and of none effect: whiche doctrines and counsailes, were shewed to the lady Katherine prynces Dowager, but she (as women loue to lose no dignitie) euer continued in her old song, trustyng more to the Popes partialitie, then to the determinacion of Christes veritie. Wherupon the Archebyshop of Cantorbury, accompanied with the bishoppes of London, Winchester, Bathe, Lyncolne, and diuerse other great clerkes, in a great nomber roade to Dunstable, which is syx myle from Ampthil, where the xx Prince Dowager laye, and there by a doctor called doctor Lee, she was sited to appere before thesaied Archebyshoppe, in cause of Matrimonie, in thesaied toune of Dunstable, and at the daie of apparaunce she would not appere, but made defaute, and so she was called peremptorie,

The kyng & quene Katherine, diuorsed. euery daie .xv. daies to gether, and at the laste for lacke of apparaunce, and for contumacie, by thassent of all the learned men there beyng present, she was diuorsed from the kyng, and their Mariage declared to bee voyde and of none effecte, whiche sentence geuen, the Archebyshop and all the other, returned whether it pleased them.

After whiche diuorse sued, many wise menne saied, that the kyng was xxx not well counsailed, to mary the lady Anne Bulleyne, before the diuorse were adiudged, for by maryng before the firste mariage was dissolued, they said, that the second mariage might be brought in question, and verely they saied true, for so it was in the monethe of Maie, three yere folowyng, as you shall here after, when I come to the tyme. Of this diuorse euery man spake, as his discrecion and witsedom was, for wise men said that it was Godly and honorably done, for the discharge of the kynges conscience, and profitable for the suretie of the realme, and that God loued this mariage, considerynge that the newe Quene, was so sone with chylde. Other saied that the byshop of Rome would curse all Englishe- xl men, and that themperor and he, would inuade the realme, and destroye the people, and specially the Spanyardes bosted muche, but thankes be to God, their doinges were muche lesse then their wordes: but after euery man had talked inough, there was no more communyng of the matter, but all was in peace.

A litle before this tyme was there a worshipfull esquier in Glocester shyre called Wyllyam Tracy of Todyngton whiche made in his wyll that he would no funerall pompe at his buriyng, neither passed he vpon Masse, and farther sayd that he trusted in God onely & hopyng by hym to be saued and not by no saint. This gentleman dyed, and his sonne as executor brought the wil to the bishop of Cauntorbury to proue, which he shewed to the cõuocacion and there vnaduisedly they adiudged hym to be taken out of the ground and to be brent as an heritike, and sent a commission to doctor Parker chauncelor of the dyoces of Worcester to execute their sentence, whiche accomplished the same. The kyng hearyng his subiect to be exhumate & brent without his knowlege or order of his lawe sent for the Chauncelor and layde the high offence to hym, whiche excused him by the archebishop of Caũtorbury whiche was late dead: but in conclusion it cost hym.CCC.pound to haue his pardon. But yet for a farther trueth to be knowē of this gentelmans death, and the cruell ignorauncye of the bishoppes, I haue here expressed his wylle worde by worde as foloweth.

Wyllyam Tracy.

In the name of God Amen, I Wyllyam Tracy of Todyngton in the countie of Gloucester esquier make my Testament & last wille as hereafter foloweth. Fyrst and before all other thinges I commit me vnto God and to his mercy, beleuyng without any doubt or mistrust that by his grace and the merites of Jesus Christ, & by the vertue of his passion and of his resurrecton I haue and shal haue remission of my sinnes and resurrection of body and soule according as it is written, I beleue that my redemer lyueth, and that in the last day I shall ryse out of the yearth and in my flesche shall see my sauior, this my hope is layde vp in my bosome. Iob.xix.

And touchyng the wealth of my soule, the fayth that I haue taken & rehersed is sufficient (as I suppose) without any other mannes worke or workes. My ground and belefe is, that there is but one God and one mediator betwene God and man, whiche is Jesus Christ, so that I accept none in heauen nor in yerth to be mediator betwene me and God: but onely Jesus Christ, all other be but peticioners in receiuyng of grace, but none hable to geue influence of grace. And therefore will I bestowe no part of my goodes for that entent that any man should say, or do, to helpe my soule, for therin I trust onely to the promises of God: he that beleueth and is baptized shal be saued, and he that beleueth not shalbe damned. Marke.xvi.

As touchyng the buriyng of my body, it auaileth me not whatsoeuer be done therto, for saint Augustine sayeth de cura agenda pro mortuis that the funerall pompes are rather the solace of them that liue, then for the welth and comforte of them that are ded, and therefore I remitte it onely to the discrecion of myne executors.

And touching the distribucion of my temporall goodes, my purpose is by the grace of God to bestowe them, to be accepted as the fruites of fayth,so that I do not suppose that my merite is by good bestowyng of them but my merite is the fayth of Jesus Chryst onely, by whom suche Mayth.xxv. wozkes are good accozdyng to the wozdes of our lozde: I was hungry and thou gauest me to eat.&c.and it foloweth,that ye haue done to the least of my bzethzen ye haue done it to me.&c. And euer we should consider the true sentence, that a good wozke maketh not a good man, but Roma.xiiii. a good man maketh a good wozke:foz fayth maketh the mã both good and righteous, foz a righteous man liueth by fayth: and whatsoeuer spzyngeth not of fayth is synne.

And all my temporall goodes that I haue not geuen oz deliuered oz not geuen by wzityng of myne own hand bearyng the date of this pzesent wzityng, I do leaue and geue to Margaret my wyfe & to Richard my sonne whom I make myne Executozs. Wytnes this myne owne hand,the.x.day of October in the.xxii.yere of the reigne of kyng Henry the.viii.

This is the true copy of his wille, foz the which e as you haue heard befoze after he was almoste thze yeres dead,they toke him vp and burned hym.

In the moneth of Maye Pope Clement sent an Ozatoz to the kyng at Grenewyche certifyng hym that he had appoynted a generall counsail to be kept at Mantua the yere folowing,and therof had aduertised all pzinces Chzisten, requiryng the kyng likewyse as he did all other pzinces Chzistẽ foz the vniuersal welth of all Chzistendome and foz the quietyng of opinions newly growen,to appeare there personally: to the whiche it was answered that it was both ieopardeous foz the king & foz his whole realme to haue their pzince absent foz feare of inuasions by vtward enemies, but he sayed he would sende thither a sufficient pzocuracie and conuenient pzoctozs,& desired to see the Ozatozs commission.

When he with an euyll will had shewed his commission, there appered neither place noz tyme of the counsaill. Foz the kyng knew well befoze his commyng that the Marques of Mantua had made a full denial to the pope that he would haue no suche assemble to be kept in his citie noz dominions foz diuers great and vrgent causes, & so the popes Ozatoz departed with an vncertain answere to an vncertain demaund but not vnrewarded.

The kyng beyng aduertised by the Frẽche kyng how that he and the Pope should mete at Nice in June folowyng, thought it conuenient to sende a solempne Ambassade to the Frẽche kyng both to accompany hym to Nice and also to comon with the bishop of Rome concernyng his vnlawfull stay in the kynges deuozce: wherupon he appointed the duke of Nozffolke, the lozde Rochefozde bzother to the newe quene, sir Wyllyam Pawlet comptroller of the kynges houshold,sir Anthonye Bzowne & sir Fraunces Bzyan knightes to be his ambassadozs which made great pzouision foz that purpose and so with the nomber of.Clx. hozses came to Douer and so to Caleys on Whitson eue,on whiche day the quene made her entry through the citie of London towarde her coro-nacion)where thei made their abode a certain space and passed through all Fraunce till they came to Lyons; where they remayned a space as you shall here after.

This very season was daily skirmishyng betwene the borderers of the marches of Englande and Scotland, and yet no warre proclaimed and many robberies,murders and mãslaughters done on both partes, and although the cõmissioners of the realmes of Englande & of Scot-lay at Newcastle vpõ Tyne entreatyng a truce and amitie, yet duryng x the communicacion,the Scottes ceased not to robbe both by sea & land, and toke dyuers litle botes laden with corne and fishe, wherof hearyng the kyng of Englande,he decked and vitailed dyuers shippes of warre and sent them to the North seas to defende his subiectes.The Scottes hearyng that the Englishe naupe was come on their cost,in al hast fled home to their harbor,but yet the Englishemen folowed them & fetched many of their praies out of their hauens maugre of their heades.

In the beginnyng of May the kyng caused open Proclamacions to be made that all men that claimed to do any seruice or execute any office at the solempne feast of the coronacion, by the way of Tenor,graunt or xx prescripcion should put their graunt.iii. wekes after Ester in the starre chamber before Charles duke of Suffolke for that tyme high steward of England and the lorde Chauncelor and other commissioners.

The duke of Norffolke claymed to be erle Marshall and to exercise hys office at that feast. The erle of Arrondell claymed to be high butler and to exercise thesame :the erle of Oxford claymed to be chamberlain: the vicount Lysle claymed to be panter:the lorde Burgainy to be chiefe larderer,and the lord Bray claimed to be almoner, and sir Henry Wiat knight claymed to be ewrer : All these noble parsonages desired theyr offices with their fees. Beside these the Maior of London claymed to xxx serue the quene with a cuppe of golde and a cuppe of assay of the same, and that.xii.citizens should attende on the cupborde and the Maior to haue the cuppe and cuppe of assay for his labor.which petition was allowed.The.v.Portes claimed to beare a Canapie ouer the quenes hed the daye of the Coronacion with.iiii. gilte Belles and to haue the same for a rewarde whiche also to them was allowed. Dyuers other put in petie claimes which wer not allowed because they semed only to be done at the kynges coronacion. Al this season great puruetaunce was made of all maner of vitailes,and lordes, knightes and squiers were sent for out of all countreys whyche came to London at their day with a great xl nomber of people.

The receiuyng,conueiyng and coronacion of quene Anne vvyfe to the high and mightie prince kyng Henry the eight

After that the kynges highnes had addressed his gracious letters to the Maior and cominaltie of the citie, signifiyng to them that his pleasure was to solempnise and celebrate the coronacion of his moste deare and welbeloued wyfe Quene Anne at Westminster the Whitsonday nexte ensuyng, willyng theim to make preparacion aswell to fetche her grace from Grenewyche to the Tower by water as to see the citie ordered and garnished with pageaũtes in places accustomed, for the honor of her grace. When she should be conueyed from the Tower to Westminster, there was a common counsaill called, and cõmaundement was geuen to the Haberdashers (of which craft the Maior sir Stephen Pe- r cocke then was) that they should prepare a barge for the Batchellers with a wafter and a foyst garnished with banners and streamers likewyse as they vse to dooe when the Maior is presented at Westminster on the morowe after Symon and Jude. Also all other craftes were commaunded to prepare barges and to garnishe them not alonely with their banners accustomed, but also to decke theim with Targettes by the sides of the barges, and so set vp all suche semely banners and bannorettes as they had in their halles or could gette mete to furnishe their sayd barges, and euery barge to haue mynstrelsie, accordyng to whiche commaundementes great preparacion was made for all thynges ne- xx cessary for suche a noble triumph.

The commyng by vvater from Grenevvyche the thursday.

The.xix.daye of Maye the Maior and his brethren all in Scarlet, and suche as wer knightes had collers of Esses & the remnant hauyng good chaynes, and the counsail of the citie with them assembled at saint Mary Hyl, and at one of the clocke discended to the Newstayre to their barge, whiche was garnished with many goodly bãners and streiners, and richely couered, In whiche barge were Shalmes, Shagbushes & diuers other instrumentes, whiche continually made a goodly armony. After that the Maior and his brethren wer in their barge seyng that all xxx the companyes to the nomber of fiftie barges were ready to wayte vpõ theim: They gaue commaundement to the companyes that no barge should rowe nerer to another then twyse the length of the barge vpon a great paine. And to see the order kept, there were thre light whereys prepared, and in euery one of them two officers to call on theim to kepe their order, after whiche commaundement geuen they set forth in order as hereafter is discribed.

Fyrst before the Maiors barge was a Foyst or Wafter full of ordinaunce, in whiche Foyst was a great Dragon continually mouing, and castyng wyldfyer, and round about the sayd Foyst stode terrible mon- xl sters and wylde men castyng fyer, and makyng hidious noyses: Next after the Foyst a good distaunce came the Maiors barge, on whose right hand was the Batchellers barge, in the whiche were trumpettes and dyuers other melodious instrumentes. The deckes of the sayd barge and the sailyardes and the toppe castles were hanged with riche cloth of golde and silke. At the forepship and the Sterne were two great banners riche beaten with the armes of the kyng and the quene, and on the toppe castle also was a long streamer newly beaten with thesayd armes. The sides of the barge was sette full of Flagges and banners of the deuises of the company of Haberdashers and marchauntes aduenturers, and the cordes were hāged with innumerable pensselles hauyng litle belles at the endes whiche made a goodly noyse and a goodly sight wauerynge in the wynde. On the outsyde of barge were thre dosen x Scochyons in metall of armes of the kyng and the quene whiche were beaten vpon square boccame deuided so that the right side had the kynges colors, and the left syde the quenes, whiche Scochyons were fastened on the clothes of gold and siluer hangyng on the deckes on the left hand. On the left hand of the Maior was another Foyst, in the whiche was a mount & on thesame stode a white Fawcon crouned vpon a tote of golde enuironed with white roses and red, whiche was the Quenes deuise: about whiche mount satte virgyns singyng & plaiyng swetely. Next after the Maior folowed his felowship the Haberdashers, Next after them the Mercers, then the Grocers, and so euery company in his xx order, and last of all the Maiors and shiriffes officers euery company hauyng melodye in his barge by hymselfe, and goodly garnished with banners and some garnished with silke and some with Arras and riche carpettes whiche was a goodly sight to beholde, and in this order they rowed to Grenewyche to the poynt next beyond Grenewyche, and there they turned backward in another order, that is to wete, the Maior and Shiriffes officers first, and the meanest craft next, and so ascendyng to the vttermost craftes in order and the Maior last as thei go to Poules at Christmas, and in that order they rowed douneward to Grenewiche toune and there cast anker makyng great melody. At thre of the clocke xxx the quene appeared in riche cloth of gold & entered into her barge accōpanied with diuers ladies and gentlewomen, and in continent the Citizens set forwardes in their order, their minstrels continually plaiyng, and the Batchelers barge goyng on the quenes right hand whiche she tooke great pleasure to beholde. She thus beyng accompanied rowed towarde the Tower, and in the meane way xl the shippes whiche were commaunded to lye on the shore for lettyng of the barges, shotte diuers peales of gunnes, and or she landed there was a meruailous shotte out of the Tower as euer was harde there. And at her landyng there met with her the lord Chamberlain with the officers of armes and brought her to the kyng, which receiued her with louyng countenaunce at the Posterne by the water syde and kyssed her, & then the turned backe againe and thanked the Maioz and the citezens with many goodly wozdes, and so entered into the Tower. After which entry the citezens all this while houed befoze the Tower makyng great melody and went not alande, foz none wer assigned to land but the Maioz, the Recozder and two Aldermen. But foz to speake of the people that stode on euery shoze to beholde the sight, he that sawe it not would not beleue it.

About this season was espied a newe founde Saincte, & holy Hypocrite called the maide of Kent, whiche by the greate labor, diligence, and paintakyng of tharchebishop of Cantorbury, and the lorde Cromewell, and one called Hugh Latimer a prieste (whiche shortly after was made Bishop of Worcester) the iugglyng and craftie deceipt of this maide, was manifested and brought to light: wherupon after diuerse examinaciõs, she with al her adherentes, wer in Nouember brought to the starre chãber: the names of them all shall folowe, firste Elizabeth Barton, whiche was she that called her self ỹ holy maide of Kẽt, Richard Master priest person of Aldyngton in the Countie of Kent, Edward Bockyng doctor in Diuinitie, Monke of Canturbury, Richarde Deryng Monke also of Cantorbury, Edward Twhaytes gentlemã, Thomas Laurẽce register to tharchedeacon of Cantorbury, Henry Gold person of Aldermary bachiler of Diuinitie, Hugh Riche Frier Obseruaunt, and Richard Risby, Thomas Gold gentleman. The holy Mayde of Kent.

In September the kyng of Stottes, sent his Commissioners to the toune of Newe Castle, where wer for the kyng of Englande commissioners, sir Thomas Clifford, and doctor Magnus, and sir Raufe Elderkare. And first the Scottes without any long communicaciõ, demaunded greate amendes, saiyng, that the Englishmen had robbed and spoyled theim to their losse, and that greatly, and saied that the kyng of England of his honor, must nedes make satisfaccion, yf he would be called honorable. Then it was answered, that notwithstandyng the leagues, writtен, sealed and sworne, the Scottishe naciõ would neuer kepe peace in somuch, while we be here in treatyng, your people are robbyng: wherfore the kyng demaundeth of you, the goodes and prisoners taken contrary to the peace, wherof we here deliuer you a writing, which the Scottes receiued, and at their next metyng thei saied, that the shippes to theim wer lawfull prises, by reason that therle of Anguishe, was maintened in Englande, whiche is rebel to our kyng, and therle and you haue doen to vs muche skathe, & we haue taken a few shippes, in recompence of some part of our greate losses, which we mate not deliuer, & therfore we praie you demaunde theim not: but here wee deliuer you our boke, whiche amounteth mounteth to a greater somme by tenne thousande marke. The Englishe commissioners receiued the boke, and in thesame the Scottes demaun-ded recompence for burning their tounes, and destroyng many of their strong Piles, aboue.xxiiii. whiche were destroyed from the.xxiiii. date of Apryll, in the laste.xxiiii. yere of the kyng, to the.xxx. date of Apryll. The Englishe cõmissioners answered, that if the Scottes would send to the kyng of Englãde, thei doubted not, but thei shoulo haue a good answer for the kyng of Englande bad hym chose peace or warre: so they agreed to sende to bothe their kynges letters of their doynges, whiche in haste x was dooen. And after muche suite of the Scottes parte, when they had muche demaunded, and litle or nothyng was graunted, thei then beyng wery of warre desired peace, whiche was concluded, duryng bothe the kynges liues, and the twentie daie of Maie, in the next yere of the kyng folowyng, it was openly Proclaimed, to the greate comforte and reioy-syng of all louers of peace.

The.xviii. daie of December, the Duke of Suffolke was sent by the kyng and his counsaill, to Bugden beside Huntyngdon, where the lady Katheryne Princes Dowager laye. For the kyng was aduertised, and had good proues of thesame, that she of froward mynde would consent, xx neither to the determinacion of the Vniuersities, nor yet to the sentence of the whole conuocacion of the realme, but beyng counsailed by a fewe Spaniardes, whiche had litle lernyng, did all that she could to infringe the determinacion of thesaid Vniuersities and clergie. In somuche that she wrote to the Pope, and to other potentates, to greue the Kyng and his realme, because he would not folowe her mynd, and breake the commaundement of God. Wherefore the kynges counsayll motioned the kyng, that suche as wer about her, and moued her thereto, should be put from her, for thei thought it no reason, that she should haue suche liber-tie to woorke that thyng, by the whiche the kyng and his realme, might xxx haue detriment or damage. Wherefore thesaied Duke was sent to her, whiche shewed to her openly, Articles of her suites to the Pope, and howe she soughte meanes to greue the Kyng and his Realme, whiche hereafter she should not bee suffered to dooe. For thesame tyme was a Curse sent from the Pope, whiche accursed bothe the Kyng, and the whole Realme, whiche Curse the bearer thereof, beeyng not by like the hardiest manne that euer shewed hymself in front of battaill, thought it a greate deale more better for hym to bestowe it without the kynges reche, then to aduenture to come within his Dominions, and therefore set it vp in the Toune of Dunkercke in Flaunders where it was taken xl doune by Wyllyam Locke, Mercer of London. The Quene answered the Duke very highly and obstinately, with many high woordes, and sodainly in a fury she departed from hym, into her priuie Chamber and shutte the dooze. Ye seeyng that, brake all the ordre of the Quenes Courte, and discharged a greate sorte of her housholde seruauntes, and yet lefte there a conuenient nomber, to serue her like a Princes. There was greate lamentacion emong theim that departed, but there was no remedy. Then thei that remaigned to serue her, were swoꝛne to serue her as a Pꝛinces Dowager, and not as Quene, some said thei were swoꝛne to her as Quene, and otherwise thei would not serue, and so they departed. Other that wer swoꝛne to serue her as Pꝛinces, and remained there, she them vtterly refused foꝛ her seruauntes, wherfoꝛe she remained with the lesse nomber of seruauntes.

The kyng kept his Chꝛistmas at Grenewiche, with greate solempnitee, and after Chꝛistmas beganne the Parliament. In whiche Parliament Elizabeth Barton, the holy Maide of Kent, with all her adherentes of whom ye haue heard befoꝛe, was attaynted. And because her offences, wer bothe against God and the kyng, so greate and wicked, that the like was neuer heard noꝛ knowen befoꝛe, I wyll declare vnto you the pꝛocesse of her matter, in suche maner as the truthe thereof, is declared in her attainder, by Acte of Parliament. Firste thesayed Elizabeth Barton (beeyng a Nonne pꝛofessed in the house and Pꝛiozy of Sainct Sepulcres of Cauntoꝛbury) whiche long befoꝛe she was pꝛofessed Nonne, dwelled with one Thomas Cobbe, in the Parishe of Aldyngton, in the Countie of Kent, and happened to bee visited with sickenes, and by occasion thereof, bꝛought in suche debilitie and weakenes of her bꝛayne, because she could not eate ne dꝛynke, by a long space, that in the violence of her infirmitie, she semed to bee in Traunses, and spake and vttered many foolishe and Idle wooꝛdes. And one Richarde Master, Clerke, beeyng Persone of thesated Parishe of Aldyngton, in thesayed Countie of Kent, after that he had made to the late Archebishoppe of Cauntoꝛbury, a farre and a larger repoꝛte, concernyng the Hypocrisy, traunses and speaches of thesayed Elizabeth, then he could iustifie and abide by, and after that he was commaunded by thesaied Archebishop, to geue good attendaunce vpō her, if she should foꝛtune to haue any mo suche traunses and speaches, and to sende hym knowlege thereof, to the intent to mainteigne, vphold and verely, suche repoꝛte as he had made. aswell to the Archebishoppe afoꝛesaied, as to other, of the wounderfull traunses and speaches of thesaied Nonne, he falsely and craftely infoꝛmed thesaid Elizabeth, that the meruelous wooꝛdes whiche she spake in her traunses, afoꝛe his tidyng to the Archebishop afoꝛsaied, pꝛoceded of the inspiracion of the holy ghost, and that she was greatly to be blamed if she would hide oꝛ dissemble the wonderful wooꝛkes of God shewed to her: foꝛ a foꝛe this his saied infoꝛmacion and instruccion, she saied constantly, that she could not remember, that she spake any suche notable wooꝛdes in her traunses, as were repoꝛted vnto her, by thesaied Richard Master. Whiche Elizabeth beeyng in this maner of wise, often tymes perswaded, pꝛocured and infoꝛmed, by thesaied Persone of Aldyngton, tooke boldenes and courage to foꝛge, feigne, and counterfeat suche maner of Traunses, and craftie speaches, as thesaied Persone of Aldyngton told her, that she vsed in her sickenes, afoꝛe he went to thesaid Archbishoppe.

bishoppe. And when thesaied Elizabeth had vsed, this false, feigned cõ-terfeating for a season, and was perfecte therein (so that the fame thereof, was greatly spred abroade, in those parties) then thesaied Person, to the intent aforsaid, and to the intent the people, should geue more faithe and credite vnto her, and because he would haue increased the deuocion of the people, in commyng on pilgrimage to a Chapell, set in Courte at Strete, within thesaied Parishe, dedicate in the honour of our Lady, for his awne lucre and auauntage, imagined, deuised, compassed, and declared, with the aide, helpe, and counsayll of one Edwarde Bockyng x Monke, professed in the Monastery in Christes Churche in Cauntorbury, and Doctor in Diuinitiee, that thesaied Elizabeth, being in the ex-tasy and extremitie of her sickenes, in a maner distract in traũles, should saie emongest other wounderfull woordes, that she should neuer take healthe of her body, till suche tyme as she had visited the Image of our Lady, beeyng in thesaied Chapell at Courte at Strete afore saied: and that our Lady had appered vnto her, and shewed her, that yt she came to thesaied Chapell, at the daie appoynted, she should bee restored to her health by Miracle, where in very deede, she was restored to her perfecte health, by diet and Phisike, and by the course of nature, whiche expelled xx the matter, beyng cause of her sickenes, in the meane tyme while thesaid person of Aldyngton, was with the Archebishoppe, as is afore reherfed.
And albeit thesaied Elizabeth, was restored to her healthe, yet she bee-yng accustomed and acquainted, with the maner and fashion, of her di-stracte Traunses, by the counsayell, conspiracie, and confederacie of thesayed Edwarde Bockyng, and Richarde Master, dyd falsely practise, vse and shewe vnto the people, diuerse and meruellous sondery alteracions, of her sensible partes of her body, craftely vttering in her saied feigned and false Traunses, diuerse and many verteous and holy woordes, tendyng to the rebuke of synne, and in reprouyng of suche xxx newe opinions, as then beganne to spryng in this Realme, whiche she called Heresyes, as she was induced and taught, by thesaied Edwarde Bockyng and Richarde Master, vsyng all the waies of false Hypocrisy, to the intent the people should geue belefe and credence vnto her, whereby they might bee the soner brought, into the detestable crymes of blasphemie and Idolatrie, agaynste almightie GOD. And thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, beeyng maliciously fixed in his opinion, agaynste the kynges highnes, in his detested Matrimonie with Quene Katheryne, and intendyng in his mynde, afterwardes for his parte, falsely and Trayterously to vse thesayed Elizabeth, as a Diabolicke instruxl ment, to stirre, moue, and prouoke the people of this Realme, aswell nobles as other, to murmoure and grudge, agaynste the Maiestie of oure Souereigne Lorde, and all his iuste and Lawfull procedynges, in thesaied Deuorse and seperacion, as after he did in very deede: for the accomplishyng of his saied false, malicious and Trayterous inten-tes, falsely deuised and conspired, with thesaied Richarde, that thesaied Elizabeth should shewe and manifest her selt, to the people, to bee an excellent verteous and an holy woman, and that all her woozdes and deedes, should appere to the wozlde, to pzocede of a marueilous holines, rebukyng the common synnes and vices of the wozlde, as though she were taught and inspired, of the holy spirite of God. And not onely moued and counsailed thesaied Elizabeth, thus to vse her self, surmittyng to her that she spake suche thynges, in the extasy of her sickenes, that came by the inspiracion of God, but also counsayled and pzocured thesaied Elizabeth, to bee bzought and conueighed, to thesaied Chapell of oure Lady, and therein openly in the pzesence of the people, (that there should be assembled by their pzocurementes) should vse and experimēt suche like Traunses, and alteracions of her face, and other the outward sensible partes of her body, as she vsed in the extremitie and extasy of her sickenes. To whose counsailes and aduertisementes, thesaied Elizabeth agreed. Whereupon at a daie by them appoynted and agreed, thesaied Edward and Richard, laboured, solicited, and pzocured, aboue the nomber of twoo thousande persones, to repaire to thesaied Chapel, surmittyng that thesaied Elizabeth, whiche as they saied, had marueilous and many Uisions and Reuelacions of God should bee bzoughte thether, and there receiue her healthe, by Miracle of oure Lady, whose Image was in thesaied Chapell. By reason of whiche false, feigned and detestable conspiracy and Hypocrisy, at the daie by theim appoynted, there assembled to thesaied Chapell, aboue the nomber of twoo thousande people. At whiche daie also, thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, and Richarde Master pzocured, and caused thesaied Elizabeth, to repaire to thesaied Chapell, where thesaied Elizabeth, albeit she at that tyme, and long afoze was restozed to healthe of her bodie, and discharged of her tozmentes and afflictions, whiche she had in the extasy of her sickenes: Yet neuertheles by the pzocurement and craftie counsaill of thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, and Richard Master, did falsely feigne and shewe vnto the people in thesame Chapell, many alteracions of her face, and other outward sensible partes of her body, and falsely feigned and shewed her self in Traunces, vttezyng wondezous woozdes, as she was befoze subtelly and craftely induced and taught, by thesayed Richarde and Edwarde to dooe. And emongest other thynges she vttered, that it was the pleasure of God, that thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, should bee her ghostly father, and that she should bee a religious woman, as she was taught by thesaied Edward Bockyng, and Richard Master. And within a while after demonstracion, of suche false feigned and dissimu-led traunces, she appered to the people, to bee sodainly releued from her sickenes and afflictions, by the intercession and meanes of the Image of oure Lady, beyng in thesame Chapell. By meanes of whiche false feigned Hypocrysy, dissimuled and cloked Sanctitee, so conspired and craftely imagined by thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, and Richarde Master, ster, thesaied Elizabeth was brought into a meruellous fame, credite and good opinion, of a greate multitude of the people of this Realme, And to increase the fame of thesaid falle feigned Hypocrisy, thesaid Elizabeth after wardes, by the counsaill and procurement of thesaied Edwarde Bockyng entered into Religion, and became a Nonne, professed in thesaied Priory of Sainct Sepulchers, to whom thesaied Edwarde Bockyng, had commonly his resorte, not without probable, behement, and violent suspicion of incontinencye, pretendyng to bee her Ghostly father, by Goddes appoyntement. And by conspiracy betwene x her and him, caused her still to persist and abide, in the practisyng of her said falle hipocrisy, and dissimulyng traunces and raptes. And that she should surmit to the people, that when she was in suche simuled alteracio, of her sensible partes of her body, that she was then rapt by almightie God, from thaffectios of this worlde, and tolde by the holy spirite of God, many thynges that should folowe to the worlde, for punishement of the synnes of the princes and the people. And that she should also say that she was muche prouoked & tempted, aswel to the synne of the flesshe as otherwise, by her ghostly enempe the deuill, at diuerse and sondry tymes, and in diuerse and sondery waies and fashions. And yet neuer the-xx les that she by the grace of almightie God was preserued, and stedfastly resisted suche temptacion. By occasion of which counsaill and procurement, of thesaid Edward Bockyng, thesaid Elizabeth by continuaunce of tyme, toke suche a courage vpon her, that she falsely feined and saied, that she had many reuelactons, of almightie God and his holy sainctes, with heuenly sightes, heuenly voyces, heuenly melodies and ioyes, and specially in a chapell of. S. Giles, in thesaid Nonnery to the whiche chapell, she often tymes resorted, to receiue visions and reuelacions, as comaunded by God, as she falsely reported, and specially by night, saiyng, that the Dorture dooze was made open to her by Goddes power, vttexxx ryng thesame, aswell to thesaied Edward Bockyng, as to diuerse other persones. By the whiche her falle feined reuelacions, & cloked hipocrisy, she was reputed emogest many people of this realme, to be a very holy woman, inspired with God, where in very deede, she neuer had vision or reuelacion from God, as she hath plainly and openly, confessed her self. And therefore her stealyng furthe of the Dorture in the nighte, whiche was not once or twise wekely was not for spirituall busines, nor to receiue reuelacios of God, but rather for bodely comunicacion & pleasure with her frendes, which could not haue so good leasure & opportunite with her by day. And for ratificacio of her falle feined reuelacios, thesaid Ed-xl ward by cospiracy, betwene him & thesaid Elizabeth, reueled thesame to the most reuered father, Willya late Archebishop of Catorbury, who by falle & vntrue surmises, tales and lies of thesaid Edward & Elizabeth, was allured, brought and induced to credite theim, and made no deligent serches, for the triall of their saied falsehodes, and confederacions, but suffered and admitted thesame, to the blasphemie of almightie

(beyng at Masse) by an Angell, and ministered vnto thesaid Elizabeth, then beyng there present and inuisible, and sodainly conueighed & rapt thence again, by the power of God into thesaied Nonnery, where she is professed, with many other false feined fables and tales deuised, conspired and defended by thesaid Elizabeth, Edward Bockyng & Jhon Deryng, wrytte as miracles in thesaid bokes for a memorial, to set furth the false and feined hypocrisy, and cloked sanctitee of thesaid Elizabeth, to x the people of this realme, as by thesayed sondery bokes and wrytinges therof made, seen and examined by the kynges moste honorable coũsaill more plainly apereth: in which bokes be written such termes & sentences of reproch and slaunder, agaynst the kynges highnes & the quene, which wer to shameful to be writte against the most vile & vngracious persõs liuyng, whiche to here, would abhorre euery true subiect of this realme.

And after thesaid Elizabeth by suche her false & feined hipocrisy, and dissimuled sanctitee, was brought in a great brute and fame of the people, in sondry parties of this realme, then thesaid Edward Bockyng by procurement & secret conspiracy, of diuerse persones vnknowen, whiche maligned agaynst the kynges procedynges, for the seperacion & deuorse in thesaied detested & vnlawfull mariage, traiterously intendyng to put xx the kynges highnes in a murmor, and euil opinion of his people, for the same, coũsailed and stirred thesaid Elizabeth, that she should aske a peticiõ of almightie God, to knowe whether God was displeased with the kynges highnes for procedyng in thesaid deuorce and seperacion of the mariage betwene his highnes, and thesaid lady Katherin, declaryng to her many tymes, that he & diuerse other learned men of this realme, and many of the common people of thesame, were in firme opinions that the kynges procedyng in thesaied deuorce, was agaynst the lawes of God. Wherupon thesaid Elizabeth subtelly and craftely, cõcerning the opinion and mynd of thesaied Edward, willyng to please hym, reueled and xxx shewed vnto thesaied Edward, that she had knowlege by reuelation frõ God, that God was highly displeased with our souereigne lorde, for the same matter. And in case he desisted not from his procedinges, in thesaid deuorse and seperacion, but pursued thesame & maried agayn, that then within one moneth after suche mariage, he should no lenger be kyng of this realme: & in the reputacion of almightie God, should not be a kyng one daie, nor one houre: and that he should dye a villeines death: saiyng farther, that there was a roote with.iii. braũches, & til they wer plucked vp, it should neuer be mery in England: interpreting the roote to be the late lord Cardinal, and the first braunche to be the kyng our souereigne

Whiche false feined reuelacios, by the mischeuous & malicious coũsaill and cõspiracie of thesaid Edward Bocking, with thesaid Elizabeth, wer writen and expressed, in thesaied bokes and volumes, conteignyng the false and feined reuelacions and Miracles, of thesayed Elizabeth, for a perpetuall memory thereof, to the vtter reproche and perell of destruction of the kynges persone, his honor, fame and name: and priuely and secretly, set furthe by thesaied Elizabeth Edward Bockyng, Jhon Deryng, and Richarde Master generally to diuerse and many of the kynges subiectes, and specially as to electe persones, to Jhon Bishoppe of Rochester, and Jhon Adeson clerke, chapelain to thesated bishop, and to one Henry Gold priest, bacheler of Diuinitee, to Hugh Riche Frier Obseruaunt, and late Wardein of the Friers Obseruauntes of Cantorbury, whiche beare malice and malignitie, to all the kynges procedynges, in thesaied deuorse and seperacion, because it was contrary to their peruerse and froward opinions, entendyng by colour of thesayed false and feined hypocrisy, and reuelacions of thesaied Elizabeth, not onely to let thesaied deuorse and seperacion, but also to bring and set furth secretly, in the heddes of the people in this realme, aswel nobles as other, that al the kynges actes and procedyngs in thesame, were agaynst holy scriptures, and the pleasure of almightie God: whereby the kynges highnes should be brought in a grudge, and euill opinion of his people. And the saied Jhon Bishoppe of Rochester, Henry Gold, Hugh Riche, Richard Risby, Richard Master, Jhon Deryng, at sondery and seuerall tymes and places, spake with thesaid Elizabeth, and toke relacion of her, of the saied false and feined reuelacions, whiche she feined that she had of al- xx mightie God, aswell concernyng the kynges highnes as other, after the fourme and termes aboue specified. And hauyng knowledge therof, the saied Hugh Riche, Richard Risby, and Henry Golde clercke, gaue suche firme and constant credite thereunto, that thei Trayterously conceled it from the kynges highnes, and trayterously beleued in their hartes, that the kyng our souereigne Lorde, after the late martage solempnized, betwene his highnes, and his moste dere and entierly beloued wife Quene Anne, was no lenger rightfull kyng of this realme, in the reputacion of almightie God, whereby in their hartes & willes, thei trayterously withdrewe from his highnes, their naturall dueties of obedience: and secret- xxx ly taught and moued other persones (to whom thei reueled the said false and feined reuelacions) that thei ought and might lawfully doo in the same wise: and practised thesaied matters, against the kynges Maiestie, falsely, maliciously, and traiterously, at sondery places and tymes, with the fathers, and Nonnes of Syon, and diuerse Monkes of the Charter house of London and Shene, and with diuerse Freers Obseruauntes, the places of Richemont, Grenewiche, and Cauntorbury, and to diuerse other, bothe spirituall and temporall persones in greate nomber, to the intent to sowe a secret murmor and grudge, in the hartes of the kynges subiectes, against the Maiestie of our souereigne lorde, and all his pro- xl cedynges, in thesaied diuorse and seperacion, intendyng therby to make suche a diuision and rebelling in this realme, emongest the kynges subiectes, whereby the kynges highnes, should not onely haue been put to peril of his life, but also in ieoperdy to be deprined from his croune and dignitie royall,

And

And for a more playne and particuler declaracion of the malicious & trayterous intentes of thesayd Elizabeth, Edward Bockyng, Jhon Deryng, Hugh Ryche, Rychard Rysby, & Henry Golde, their cõcluden by a confederacy among them selfes eche with other, to set forth in sermons & prechinges thesayd reuelacions to the people of thys realme against the kinges Maiestie, whensoeuer it should please ỹ said Elizabeth to appoint them the tyme when they should so do, and agreed ech with other secretely, and set forth thesayde false and fayned reuelaciõs x to their acquaintaunce and frendes in this realme, intendinge to make a great multitude of people of this realme, by their secret conspiracies in an aptnes to receyue and take such their sermons and preachinges which they entended to make, as is aforsayd, cõcerninge the premisses, trayterously intẽding therby to put our sayd soueraigne lord, not only in peril of hys life, but also in ieopardye of losse and depriuacion of hys croune and dignitie royal of this realme, frõ him & his lawfull succession for euer. And in accomplishyng their false, trayterous & malicious intentes against our sayd soueraygne lorde, they caused thesaid Elizabeth, at. ij. tymes, secretly to declare thesaid false & fayned reuelacions to. ij. of the Popes Orators and ambassadors at the cities of Caũtorxx bury and London. At which tyme thesayde Henry Golde toke vpon hym to be interpretor therof, betwene thesaid Elyzabeth, & thesaid Orators named Anthony Pulleon: & the interpretor to the other Orator named Syluester, was the forsayd Lawrence of Cauntorbury, to thentent the kynges highnes, and al his procedinges in ỹ said deuorce and separacion should be brought into an euill opinion wyth the Pope and other princes and Potentates. And thesayd Hugh Rych actually trauayled to sondry places of this realme, and made secrete relacion of the premisses concernynge the kinges hyghnes to diuers lordes bothe spiritual and temporal, and diuers other persones lay and learned, sexxx culer and relygyous. And thesaid Henry Gold ouer this, actually trauayled and made relacion therof to thesayd lady Katherin princes dowager, to animate her to make commocion in this realme againste our sayd soueraygne lorde, surmitting that the sayd Elizabeth shuld haue by reuelacion of God, that thesayd lady Katherin should prospere and do wel, and that her issue the lady Mary the kynges doughter should prosper and reygne in this realme & haue many frẽdes to sustaine and maintayne her. And thesayd Elizabeth and Edward Bockynge, Jhon Deryng & Richard Maister likewise actually trauailed to diuers plaxl ces in this realme and made secrete relacion of the sayd false fayned hipocrisie and reuelacions of thesayd Elizabeth & gaue knowlege hereof to dyuers other sondry persones of this realme.

The kynge first named supreme hed.

All whiche conspiracies and confederacies of thesayde Elizabeth, & other her complices aboue mencioned, was traiterously & maliciously deuysed and practised by thesayd Elizabeth, Edward Bockyng, Jhon Deryng, Richard Maister, Henry Golde, Hugh Rych, and Rychard Rysby

Rysby to the entent trayterously to destroy our sayd soueraigne lord, and to depryue him and his lawfull succession frō the croune and dignitie royall of this realme, which matter had bene practysed & imagined amongest them for the space of many yeres: wherof the whole circumstaunce were very long to be wrytten in this acte. And the sayde Jhon Fysher bishop of Rochester and one Thomas Gold gentleman, and the sayd Thomas Laurence, Edward Thwaytes, and Jhon Adson chapelein to the sayd Jhon bishop of Rochester, hauyng knowledge of the false fayned and dissimuled reuelacions, traiterously conspired against our sayd soueraygne lorde (as is aforsayd) did neuertheless make con- p celement therof, and vttered not the same to our sayd souereygne lord nor any his honorable counsayl, agaynste their duties and allegeaunce in that behalfe.

And furthermore, the sayd Thomas Gold, for the accomplishement of hys most trayterous intēt, hath of late bene a messenger frō the saide Elizabeth, sithen she was inwarde the Tower of London for the sayde most false and trayterous offences by her and her said complyces committed and done, he then beyng at libertie, by hys message hathe comforted diuerse others to stande stysly by her reuelacyons, that thei wer of God: notwithstanding that she had confessed al her said falshed before xx diuers of the kynges counsaylors, and that they were manifestly proued, found, and tryed moste false and vntrue: which thing he dyd onlye to raise and put sedicion and murmur in the people agayust the kinges highnes, his croune and dignitie royal. And one Thomas Abel clerke beyng of the confederacy aforesayd, and taking such firme and constant credite to the sayd false and fained reuelacions and miracles of the sayd Nonne, not onely caused to be Printed and set forth in this realme diuers bookes agaynst the sayd deuorce and separacyon to ỹ dissaunder of our sayd soueraygne lord, but also animated the sayd lady Katherine obstinately to persist in her wilful opinion against the same deuorce and xxi separacion: and after the sayd deuorce lawfully had, to vsurpe and take vpon her styll to be Quene, and procured diuerse wrytinges to be made by her, by the name of Quene: and also procured and abetted the seruauntes of the sayd Lady Katheryne against the kynges expresse commaundement and proclamacion, to name, call, accept and repute the said lady Katherine for quene of this realme to the entent to make a cōmon diuision and rebellion in this realme to the great peryl and daunger of our sayd souereigne lorde.

Thus much haue I recited vnto you out of the acte as it is there expressed worde for worde: now after foloweth the maner of her attain- xl der & of the other as in the acte more at large doth appere. But to conclude the. xxj. day of Apryll next folowyng she wyth other wer drawen to Tiborne and there executed as most iustly they had deserued as you may perceyue by the premisses.

the sayd these wordes, hether am I come to dye, & I haue not been the onely cause of myne owne death whiche moste iustly I haue deserued, but also I am the cause of the death of all these persones whiche at this time here suffre: & yet to say the trueth, I am not somuche to be blamed cõsideryng it was well knowen vnto these lerned men ye I was a poore wenche without learnyng and therefore thei might haue easely perceiued that the thinges that were done by me could not procede in no such sorte, but their capacities and learnynge coulde right well iudge from whence they proceded, & that they wer altogether fayned: but because the thynges which I fayned was profitable vnto them, therfore they muche praised me and bare me in hande that it was the holy ghost and not I that dyd theim, and then I beyng puft vp with their praises fell into a certain pryde and foliche phantasie with my selfe and thought I might fayne what I would, which thing hath brought me to this case, and for the which now I cry God & the kynges highnes most heartely mercy, and desire all you good people to pray to God to haue mercy on me and on all them that here suffre with me.

In this parliament also was made the act of succession for the suertie of the croune, to the whiche euery persone beyng of lawfull age should be sworne vpon the payne expressed in that acte, as in the same ye may moste euidently see.

Monday the.xxiij.day of Marche in the Parliament time, were solempnely receiued into London as ambassadors from James the.v. king of Scottes, the bishop of Aberdyne, the Abbot of kynlos & Adam Otterborne the kynges Atturney, with diuers gentlemen on them attendant whiche were brought to the Taylers hal & there lodged. And on the day of the Annunciacion of our Lady they were brought to the kynges place at Westminster, where they shewed their commission and message, for the which the kyng appointed them dayes to cõsaill. And shortly after commissioners were appointed as you shall heare.

During the Parliamẽt tyme, euery sonday preached at Paules crosse a bishop, whiche declared the Pope not to be the head of the Churche.

The.xxx.day of Marche the Parliament was prorogued, and there euery lorde and burges & all other, were sworne to the acte of successiõ, and subscribed their handes to a Parchement fixed to the same othe. This Parliament was prorogued till the third day of Nouember next. After this, commissions were sent ouer all England to take the othe of all men and women to the act of succession, at whiche fewe reppyned, except doctor Jhon Fysher, sir Thomas Moore knight late lorde Chaũcelor, and doctor Nicholas Wylson parson of saint Thomas Apostles in London: wherfore these thre persones, after long exhortaciõ to thẽ made by the bishop of Caumtorbury at Lambeth, and expresse denyall of thẽ to be sworne, they were sent to the Tower where thei remayned and were ostentymes mocioned to be sworne: but the Bishoppe and sir

Thomas Moze sayd that thei had in their writynges written the pryn-ces dowager Quene, and therfoze they might not go against that, and the doctoz sayd that he in preachyng called her quene, which he would not withsay, howbeit at length he was very wel contented, and dissembled the matter and so escaped: But the other twayne stode against all the realme in their opinion.

Wolfes wife.

In this yere it chaunced that two marchaunt straungers fell in loue with a harlot whiche was called Wolfes wyfe, & this harlot had often haunted the straungers chambers. And so one tyme thesame harlot appoynted these straungers to come to Westminster, and she had pre- & pared foz them a bote, in the whiche bote was but one manne to rowe whyche was a strong thefe, and in the ende of the boate laye Wolfe her husband couered with a lether that botemē vse to couer their Cusshyns with, and so these straungers satte them doune mistrustyng nothyng, and when this boteman had brought theim as farre as a place that is called ỹ Turnyng tree, sodainly stepped vp the sayd Wolfe & wyth his dagger thrust the one of theim thorow, the other cryed out to saue hys lyfe and offred a great somme of money to the boteman and him to saue his lyfe, but no proferres woulde be heard, noz mercy woulde they ex-tende, but as cruell murderers without pitie slewe the other also and & bound theim face to face and so threw thē into the Thames in the fozesayed place, where they were longe after befoze ther were found. But immediatly the harlot Wolfes wyfe went to the straungers chambers and toke from thence so muche as she coulde come by. And at the laste she and her husbande as they deserued, were apprehended, arraigned and hanged at the fozesayed turnynge tree, where she hanged still and was not cut doune, vntyll suche tyme as it was knowen that beastly and filthy wrethces had moste shamefully abused her beynge dead.

The nynth day of July was the lord Dacres of the North arreigned at Westminster of high treason, wher the duke of Norffolke sat as iudge and high Steward of Englād. The sayd lorde Dacres beyng brought to the barre with the axe of the Tower before him: after his inditemēt red, not only improued the sayd inditement as false and malix ciously deuised against hym & answered euery part and matter therin contained, but also so manly, wittily, and directly confuted his accusors whiche there were ready to auouche their accusacions, that to their great shames, & to his great honor, he was found that day by his peres not gūtie, which vndoubtedly the commons excedyngly ioyed & reioy-sed of, in so muche as there was in the hall at those woordes, not gūtie, the greatest shoute and crye of ioy that the like no man liuyng may re-membre that euer he heard.

The lorde Dacres of the North.

The.xiiij. day of July one Jhon Frith beyng very well learned and had an excellent goodly witte, was brought out of the Tower wher he had been long, & was there imprisoned for makynge of a booke agaynst xx Purgatory: but in ỹ meane whyle that he was there, he was required by one who heartely loued him and had a very good opinion in him, to declare to him his faith and opinion in the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, & that he would put thesame in writyng, whiche thyng he dyd. But after it chaūced that thesame persone which had this writ-tynge of Jhon Frith was acquainted with a Taylor in London called Wyllyam Holt, whiche outwardely professed muche honestye, but in-wardly was a verye spye and a very betrayer of as many menne as he might bryng in daungier. This Holt required after he had seen it, to haue this writing, & he had it, and forth with he presented it to sir Thoxxx mas More then lorde Chaūcelor, and he immediatly made answere to the same in writyng, which also by the meanes of the sayd Holt, came to the handes of Jhon Frith. Jhon Frith then perceiuyng that the thing that he was so loth to write or meddle in (for it was a matter that none could get him to talke of, sauyng suche that he as much trusted as hym selfe) was nowe so farre spred abroade that it was answered vnto, after he had not a litle rebuked the negligence and folye of his frende whom he trusted, stoode to the defence of his first treatise, and made a farther declaracion of his mynde vpon thesame matter as appereth in a booke whiche beareth his name. For the which opinion & other he was after xl diuers and sondry examinacious (aswell at Lambeth with the Bishop of Canterbury as also at Croydon, and likewyse with the bishoppe of Wynchester) brought vnto the Consistory in Paules Churche in Lon-don before diuers bishoppes, where after muche disputyng, for that he would not yelde nor submit him selfe to theim, they condempned him &

deliuered hym to the seculer power to be brent as an heretike.

At the same time was one Andrew Hewet a very simple and vtterly vnlerned yong man a Taylor, which was also betrayed by the forsayd Holt: This yonge man beyng in lyke maner accused in the Consistory before the sayd bishoppes for holding opinion agaynst the Sacrament. One of the bishoppes asked him how he beleued in the Sacrament: he answered, he beleued therin as Master Frith did: why sayd they, doest thou not beleue that it is the very body of Christ really flesshe and bloud euen as he was borne of the virgyn Mary: No sayed he, why so sayed the Byshop: because sayd he, that Christe byd me that I should not beleue them that say here is Christ and there is Christe, for false Christes & false prophetes shall arise to deceiue you sayth Christ. Then certayn of the byshoppes smyled, and Doctor Stokesley then Byshop of London sayd: Frith is an heretike and is condempned and deliuered to the temporal power to be brent, yf thou wilt not submit thy selfe & acknowlege thyne errour, thou shalt likewyse be condempned and deliuered. I am content sayd he. Wilt thou not abiure thyne heresie q̄ the bishop: No sayd he, for I wyll do as Mayster Frith doth. Then we will condempne thee sayd the Byshop: do so sayd he. And so they pronounced sentence on him, and deliuered hym to the Shiriffes: and from thence they were sent to Newgate where they remayned tyll the.xxij.day of July, & that daye were both brent at one stake in Smythfelde. Where at the same tyme one doctor Cooke which was person of Hony Lane, and one that was the Master of the Temple, willed the people to pray no more for them then they would pray for dogges, at whiche vncharitable wordes Frith smyled and prayed God to forgeue them, and the people sore grudged at them for so saiynge.

The.xiiij.day of August was a great fyer at Temple barre & diuers houses brent. And the.xvj.daye of the same moneth was burned the kynges stable at Charyng crosse otherwyse called the Mowse, wherin was brent many great Horses and great store of haye.

In this yere the third day of Nouēber the kinges highnes helde his high court of Parliament, in the whiche was cōcluded and made many and sondry good, wholsome, and godly statutes: but among al one, special estatute, which aucthorised the kynges highnes to be supreme head of the Churche of England, by the which the Pope with all his College of Cardinalles with all their Pardons and Indulgences was vtterly abholished out of this realme, God be euerlastyngly praysed therefore.

The Pope abholished.

In this Parliament also was geuen to the kynges highnes the fyrste frutes and tenthes of all dignities & spirituall promocions. And in the ende of the same Parliament the kynges Maiestie moste graciously graunted (and wylled it by the same Parliament to be established) hys moste gracious and generall free pardon.

Thys yere also came in the great Admyrall of Fraunce: whiche Admyrall myrall was honorably receiued, and at hys departyng was lyberally rewarded.

In this tyme dyed the Erle of Kyldare prisoner in the Tower. And euen at thesame tyme Thomas Fitzgarard his sonne began to rebell against the kynge and tooke all the kynges Ordinaunce, and sent Ambassadors to the Emperor to haue intreated him to take part with him. Also he slewe the bysshop of Deuelyn and brent and robbed all suche as would not obeye hym: But at the last he was apprehended and had as he deserued as after shall appeare.

The.xxvij.yere.

A the beginnynge of this yere the Duke of Norffolke & the Bysshop of Ely went to Caleys, and thether came the Admyral of Fraunce. And the.xix.day of June was thre Monkes of the Charterhouse hanged, drawen, & quartred at Tyborne & their quarters set vp about London for denyng the kyng to be supreme head of the Churche. Their names were Exmewe, Myddlemore, & Rudigate. These men when they were arreigned at Westminster, behaued them selfes very stifly & stubbornly, for hearyng their inditement red how trayterously they had spoken against the kynges Maiestie his croune and dignitye, they neyther blusshed nor bashed at it, but very folishly & hipocritically knowlegd their treason whiche maliciously they auouched, haunge no lernyng for their defence, but rather beyng asked dyuers questions, they vsed a malicious silence, thinkyng as by their examinacions after warde in the Tower of London it dyd appeare, for so they sayed, that they thought those men whiche was the Lorde Crumwell and other that there satte vpon them in iudgement to be heretiques and not of the Churche of God, and therfore not worthy to be either aunswered or spoken vnto. And therfore as they deserued, they receiued as you haue heard before.

Also the.xxij.day of thesame moneth Jhon Fysher bishop of Rochester was beheaded, and his head set vpon London bridge. This bishop was of very many menne lamented, for he was reported to be a man of great learnyng, and a man of very good life, but therin wonderfully deceiued, for he maintained the Pope to be supreme head of ỹ Church, and very maliciously refused the kynges title of supreme head. It was sayd that the Pope, for that he helde so manfully with him and stoode so stifly in his cause, did elect him a Cardinal, and sent the Cardinalles hat as farre as Caleys, but the head it should haue stande on, was as high as London bridge or euer the hat could come to Bishop Fysher, & then it was to late, & therfore he neither ware it nor enioyed his office.

Jhō Fisher bishop of Rochester.

This

This man as I sayd was accoumpted learned, yea, and that very notably learned, and yet haue you heard howe he was deceiued with Elizabeth Barton that called herselfe the holy mayd of Kent, and no doubt so was he in the defence of that vsurped authoritie, ỹ more pitie: wonderful it is that a man beyng lerned should be so blind in the scriptures of God that proueth the supreme aucthoritie of princes so manyfestly. Also the.vj. day of Julye was sir Thomas Moze beheaded foz the like treason befoze rehersed, which as you haue heard was foz the deniyng of the kynges Maiesties supremitie. This manne was also coumpted learned, & as you haue heard befoze he was lozde Chauncelor of England, and in that tyme a great persecutor of suche as detested the supremacy of the byshop of Rome, whiche he himselfe so highly fauored that he stoode to it till he was brought to the Skaffolde on the Tower hyll where on a blocke his head was striken from his shoulders and had no more harme. I cannot tell whether I shoulde call him a foolishe wyseman, or a wise foolishman, for vndoubtedly he beside his learnyng, had a great witte, but it was so myngled with tauntyng and mockyng, that it semed to them that best knew him, that he thought nothing to be wel spoken except he had ministred some mocke in the communicacion, insomuche as at his commyng to the Tower, one of the officers demaũded his vpper garment foz his fee, meanyng his goune, & he answered, he should haue it, and tooke him his cappe, saiyng it was the vppermoste garmẽt that he had. Lykewise, euen goyng to his death at the Tower gate, a poore woman called vnto him and besought him to declare that he had certaine euidences of hers in the tyme that he was in office (which after he was apprehẽded she could not come by) & that he would intreate she might haue them agayn, or els she was vndone. He answered, good woman haue pacience a litle while, for the kyng is good vnto me that euen within thys halfe houre he wyll discharge me of all busynesses, and helpe thee hymselfe. Also when he went vp the stayer on the Skaffold, he desired one of the Shiriffes officers to geue him his hand to helpe him vp, & sayed, when I come doune againe, let me shift for my selfe aswell as I can. Also the hangman kneled doune to him askynge him forgeuenes of his death (as the maner is) to whom he sayed I forgeue thee, but I promise thee that thou shalt neuer haue honestie of the strykyng of my head, my necke is so short. Also euen when he should lay doune his head on the block, he hauyng a great gray beard, striked out his beard & sayd to the hangman, I pray you let me lay my beard ouer the block least ye should cut it, thus wyth a mocke he ended hys lyfe.

sir Thomas Moore, beheded.

This yere in the tyme that the kyng went his progresse, which was to Gloucester and so Westward, the kyng of Scottes was installed at Wynsore by the lorde Erskyn his Procurator. And in October folowyng Stephyn Gardiner bishop of Winchester was sent Ambassador into Fraunce where he remained thre yeres after.

In

In Nouember was a solempne procession throngh the citie of London of all the prieftes and religious in and about the citie for the recouering of the French kyng to his health. And the.viij.day of January folowyng dyed the princes dowager at Kymbalton and was buried at Peterborough. Quene Anne ware yelowe for the mournyng.

Quene Anne brought a bed before her tyme.

And in February folowyng was quene Anne brought a bedde of a childe before her tyme, which was borne dead.

This yere in the moneth of September Wyllyam Tyndale otherwyse called Hichyns was by the crueltie of the clergie of Louayn con-x demned and burned in a toune beside Bruxelles in Brabande called Vylford. This man translated the New testament into Englishe and fyrst put it in Print, and likewise he translated the.v.bookes of Moyses, Josua, Judicum, Ruth, the bookes of the Kynges and the bookes of Paralipomenon, Nehemias or the fyrst of Esdras, the Prophet Jonas, & nomore of ỹ holy scripture. He made also diuers treatises, which of many were wellyked and highly praysed, and of many vtterly dispised and abhorred, and especially of the moste parte of the bishoppes of this realme, who often by their great labours caused Proclamacions to be made against his bookes, and gatte them condempned and brent, xx aswell the Newe testament as other woorkes of his doynges. Suche as best knewe him reported him to be a very lobre man, borne vpon the borders of Wales, and brought vp in the Uniuersitie of Oxforde, and in lyfe and conuersacion vnreprouable: and at the laste beynge in Oxford Luther then settyng fooryth certaine woorkes against the Bysshop of Rome, Tyndale occasioned by theim to searche the scriptures whether Luther sayd the truth or no, did therby not onely himselfe attaine the knowledge of the vsurped authoritie of the bishop of Rome & hys superstitious and dampnable doctrynes that he had taught and published through all Christendome, but also lamentynge the ignoraunt xxx state that his natiue countrey of England was in, who altogether wer wrapped in errours thought it hys dutie, for that God hadde reueled the light of his Gospell to him, to bestowe hys talent to the honour of God and profite of hys countrey, and thought no waye so good to reduce the people from their errour as fyrste to make theim acquaynted with Goddes woorde, that they myght knowe what Goddes will was that we should do, and what the bishoppe of Rome sayed that we muste do: and therefore fyrste as is afore sayed: he translated into Englishe the Newe Testament, a woorke no doubt very notable and to hym verye paynefull, for that he was forced to flye his owne natyue xl countrey, and to lyue in a straunge lande amonge people that as well varyed from his maners, as the persones to hym were vnknowen. Amongest whom after greate paynes by hym taken, and manye and dyuers treatises by hym published, he was at Antwarpe this yere by

by one Philippes an Englisheman and then a scholar at Louayn, betrayed and taken, and as many sayed, not without the helpe and procurement of some byshoppes of this realme: but true it is, that after he had been in prison moze then a yere & almost forgotten, he was labozed foz by letters writtẽ by the lozde Cromwell, & then in all hast because he would recãt no part of his doynges, was burned as you haue heard befoze. But yet this repozt dyd the Procuratoz generall there (which we call here the Liuetenaunt) make of hym, that he was, Homo doctus, pius & bonus, that is to say, learned, godly, and good.

The fowerth day of Febzuary the kyng held his high court of Parliament at Westminster, in the whiche was many good and wholsome statutes and lawes made and concluded. And in this tyme was geuen vnto the kyng by the consent of the great and fatte abbottes, all religious houses that were of the value of. CCC. marke & vnder, in hope that their great Monasteries should haue continued still: But euen at that tyme one sayd in the Parliamẽt house that these were as thoznes, but the great abbottes were putrified olde Okes and they must nedes folowe, & so will other do in Chzistendome ye doctoz Stokesley bishop of London oz many yeres be passed.

The.xxviij.yere.

N Maye daye were a solempne Justes kept at Grenewyche, and sodaynlye from the Justes the kyng departed hauyng not aboue. vj. persons with him, and came in the euenyng from Grenewyche to his place at Westminster. Of this sodayn departynge many men mused, but moste chiefely the quene, who the next day was apzehended & bzought from Grenewyche to the Tower of London, where after she was arreigned of high treason, and condempned. Also at thesame tyme was likewyse apzehended, the lozde Rochesozde bzother to thesayd Quene, and Henry Nozrys, Marke Smeton, Myllyam a Bzuton and sir Fraunces Weston, all of the kynges pziuy chamber. All these were lykewise commytted to the Tower and after arreigned & condempned of high treason. And al the gentlemen were beheaded on the Skaffolde at the Tower hyll: But the Quene was with a swozde beheaded within the Tower. And these folowyng were the woozdes that she spake the day of her death wiyche was the. xix. day of May. 1536.

Quene Anne sent to ye tower.

God

The wordes of quene Anne Bolleyn at her death.

Good Christen people, I am come hether to dye, for according to the lawe, and by the lawe I am iudged to dye, and therefore I wyll speake nothynge agaynst it. I am come hether to accuse no man, nor to speake auy thyng of that, whereof I am accused and condempned to dye, but I pray God saue the king and send him long to reygne ouer you, for a gētler nor a more mercifull prince was there neuer: and to me he was euer a good, a gentle and souerayne lorde. And yf anye persone wyll medle of my cause, I require them to iudge the best. And thus I take my leue of the worlde and of you all, and I hertely desyre you all to praye for me. x O Lorde haue mercy on me, to God I cōmende my soule. And then she kneled doune saying: To Christ I commende my soule, Jesu receiue my soule diuers tymes, till that her head was stryken of wyth the sworde. And on the Assencion daye folowyng, the kynge ware whyte for mournynge.

The weke before Whytsontyde the kyng maried lady Jane doughter to the ryght worshipfull sir Jhon Seymer knyght, which at Whitsontyde was openly shewed as Quene.

The.viij.day of June the kyng held his high courte of Parliament in the whiche Parliament the kynges two first mariages, that is to say xi with the lady Katheryne, and wyth the lady Anne Bulleyn were both adiudged vnlawfull, as more at large appeareth in the acte in the booke of statutes.

In the Parliamente season lorde Thomas Hawarde without the kynges assent affyed the ladye Margarete Douglas doughter to the quene of Scottes and nere to the kyng: for whych presumpteous acte he was attainted of treason, and an acte made for lyke offendors, and so he dyed in the Tower, and she was long there as a prysoner.

In the time of this Parliament, the bishoppes and all the clergie of the realme helde a solempne conuocacion at Paules churche in Londō xxx where after much disputacion and debating of matters they publyshed a booke of religion intitled, Articles deuysed by the kyngs highnes &c. In thys booke is specyally mencyoned but thre Sacramētes, wyth the whiche the Lyncolneshyremen (I meane their ignorannt priestes) wer offended, and of that occasion depraued the kynges doynges. And this was the first beginninge, as after ye shall playnly heare.

After this boke which passed by the kinges aucthoritie wyth the cōsent of the Clergie, was published, the which cōtayned certaine articles of religion necessary to be taught vnto the people, and amonge other it specially treated of nomore then thre Sacramentes, wher alwayes the xl people had bene taught.vij. Sacramentes, & besyde this boke, certaine Iniunccions were that tyme geuen wherby a nōber of their holy daies was abrogated & specially such as fel in the harueste tyme, the kepynge of whych was muche to the hynderaunce of the gatherynge in of corne, haye, fruyte, and other such lyke necessary and profitable commodities.

These

The insurrection in Lyncolneshyre.

These artycles thus ordayned and to the people deliuered. The inhabitauntes of the North partes being at that time very ignorant and rude, knowing not what true religion meant, but altogether noseled in superstition and popery, and also by the meanes of certayne Abbottes and ignorant priestes not a litle stirred and prouoked for the suppression of certaine Monasteries, and for the extirpacion and abolyshynge of the bishoppe of Rome, nowe takynge an occasion at this booke, saiynge see frendes nowe is taken from vs foure of the. vij. Sacramentes and shortly ye shall lese the other thre also, & thus the fayth of holye churche shall vtterly bee suppressed and abolyshed: and therefore sodaynly they spred abroade and rayled great and shamefull slaunders only to moue the people to sedicion and rebellion, and to kyndle in the people hatefull and malicious myndes agaynste the kynges Maiestie and the Magestrates of the realme, saiynge let vs fully bend our selues to the mayntenaunce of religion, and rather then to suffre it thus to decaye euen to dye in the felde. And amongest theim also were to many euen of the nobilitie that did not a lytle prouoke and stirre vp the ignoraunt and rude people the more stifly to rebell and stand therin, faythfully promysynge theim both ayde and succoure agaynst the kynge and their owne natiue countrey (lyke foolyshe and wycked menne) thynkyng by their so doing to haue done God hygh pleasure and seruice. There were also certaine other malycyous and busye persones who added Oyle (as the Adage sayeth) to the Fornace: These made open clamours in euery place wher opportunitie serued, that Christian religion should be vtterly violate, dissypsed and set a syde, and that rather then so, it behoued and was the partes of euerye true Christen manne to defende it euen to the death, and not to admyt and suffre by anye meanes the fayth (in the whyche their forefathers so longe and so manye thousande yeres haue lyued and contynewed) nowe to bee subuerted and destroyed. Amonge these were many priestes whyche deceyued also the people wyth manye false fables and venemous lyes and imaginacions (whych coulde neuer entre nor take place in the harte of anye good man, nor faythfull subiecte) saiyng that all mauer of prayer and fastyng & al Goddes seruyce shuld vtterly be destroyed and taken away, that no man should mary a wyfe or be partaker of the Sacramentes, or at length shoulde eate a piece of rost meate, but he should for the same first pay vnto the kyng a certayne somme of money, & that they shoulde be brought in more bondage & in a more wycked maner of life, then ỹ Sarasyns be vnder ỹ great Turk. With these and such other like errours and slaunderous tales, the people thus instructed (or as I maye trulier speake) deceyued and mocked beyng to lyght of credite, incontinent to the helpe and maintenaunce of religion once establyshed and confirmed, they stifly and stoutly dyd cõspire and agre: and in a parte of Lyncolneshire, fyrst thei assembled and shortly after, ioyned into an Army, beynge (as it was supposed) of men apte and feete for the warre, in nombre aboute twentie thousand.

Against these trayterous rebelles, with all the haste and spede that might be (after he harde therof) the kynges royal maiestie, in his awne proper persone, furnished with a goodly and warlike Armie, lackynge nothyng that to suche a company shoulde appertein, marched towarde them. But these rebelles hearyng that his maiestie was present wyth his power and armie royall, feared what woulde folow of this matter, and suche as were noble men and Gentlemen, that before fauored them began to withdrawe them selues, so that thei wer destitute of Capitai-x nes: & at the last thei in writyng made certayn peticions to the kynges maiestie, professynge that they neuer entended hurte toward hys roy-cause vpon theim dependeth muche of the rest. Concernyng chosynge of counsaylors, I neuer haue red, hard, nor knowne, that princes coun-sailors and prelates, should be appoynted by rude and ignoraunt common people, nor that thei wer persones mete, nor of habilitie to discerne x & chose mete & sufficīt counsailors for a prince: how presumpteous then x are ye the rude commons of one shire, and that one of the moste brute & beastly of the whole realme, & of the least experience, to fynd faute with your Prince for the electryng of his counsaylours and prelates, and to take vpon you contrarie to goddes lawe & mannes lawe to rule youre prince, whome ye are bounde by all lawes to obey and serue wyth both youre lyues, landes and goodes, and for no worldly cause to withstād-the contrarie wherof you like traytors and rebelles haue attempted and not lyke true subiectes as ye name youre selfes.

As to the suppression of religious houses and monastaries, we wolle that ye and all oure subiectes should well knowe that this is graunted xx bs by all the nobles spirituall and temporall, of this oure Realme, and by all the commons in thesame by acte of Parliament, and not set furth by any counsailor or counsaylors vpon there mere will and fantasie, as ye full falsely would perswade oure realme to beleue.

And where ye allege that the seruice of god is much diminished, the trouth therof is contrarie, for there be no houses suppressed where god was well serued, but where most vice, mischief and abhominacion of liuyng was vsed, and that doth wel apere by there awne cōfessions subscribed with ther awne handes in the tyme of their visitacions, & yet we suffered a great many of them (more thē we neded by the acte) to stand xl wherin yf thei amēd not ther liuyng, we feare, we haue more to answer for then for the suppression of all the rest. And as for the hospitalitie for the relief of the pore, we wonder ye be not ashamed to affirme that thei haue bene a great relefe of poore people, whā a great many or the most parte hath not past foure or fiue religious persons in them, and diuers but one which spent ȳ substaunce of the goodes of ther houses in nori-thyng of byce and abhominable liuing. Now what vnkindnes and vnnaturalitie may we impute to you and al oure subiectes that be of that mynde, that had leuer suche an vnthryftye sorte of vycyous persones, shoulde enioy such possessions, profytes and emolumentes, as growe of thesayd houses, to the mayntenaunce of their vnthryftie life, then we youre naturall prince, Souereygne lorde and kyng, whych doeth and hath spent more in your defences of our awne, then six tymes they bee woorth. As towchynge the acte of vses, we maruaile what madnes is in your brayne, or vpon what ground ye would take aucthoritie vpon you to cause vs to breake those lawes and statutes, whyche by & al the noble knightes and gentlemen of thys realme (whome thesame chiefly toucheth) hath beue graunted and assented to: seynge in no maner of thyngs it toucheth you the basse commons of our realme.

Also the groundes of all those vses were false, & neuer admytted by lawe, but vsurped vpon the prince, contrary to all equitie and iustice, as it hath bene opēly both dysputed & declared by al the well learned men in the realme of Englande in Westminster hall: whereby ye maye well perceine, how mad and vnreasonable your demaundes be, both in that and in the rest, and how vnmete it is for vs and dishonorable, to graunt or assent vnto, and lesse mete and decent for you in such a rebellious sort & to demaunde thesame of your prynce.

As touching the fyftene which ye demaund of vs to be released, think ye that we be so fayntharted, ẏ perforce ye of one shire (wer ye a greate many mo) coulde compel vs wyth your insurreccions and such rebellious demeanour to remit thesame: or thynke ye that anye man wyll or may take you to be true subiectes, that first make and shew a louynge graunt & then perforce would compel your souereigne lorde and kyng to release thesame: the time of payment whereof is not yet come, yea & seing thesame wyll not cōtreuayl ẏ tenth peny of the charges, whyche we do & dayly susteine for youre tuicion & safegarde: make you sure, by & your occasions of these your ingratitudes, vnnaturalnes & vnkindnes to vs now administred, ye geue vs cause whiche hathe alwayes ben asmuche dedicate to your wealth as euer was kyng, not so much to set or studie for the setting forward of thesame, seing how vnkyndly & vntruly, ye deale now wyth vs, wythout any cause or occasyon: and doubt ye not, though you haue no grace nor naturalnes in you to consyder your dutie of allegiaunce to your kyng, and souereigne lorde, the rest of our Realme we doubt not hath: and we and they shall so loke on this cause, that we trust it shalbe to your confusion, yf accordyng to youre former letters you submit not your selfes. &

As touching the first frutes, we let you wit, it is a thyng graũted vs by act of parliament also, for the supportacion of parte of the great and excessiue charges, which we supporte and beare for the mayntenaunce of youre wealthes and other oure subiectes: and we haue knowen also

that ye our commons haue much complained in tymes passed, that the moste parte of our gooddes, landes and possessions, of the realme, were in the spiritual mennes handes: & yet bearyng vs in hand that ye be as louyng subiectes to vs as may be, ye cannot fynd in your hartes that your prince and soueraigne lorde shoulde haue any parte thereof (and yet it is nothing preiudiciall vnto your our commons) but to rebel and vnlawfully ryse agaynst your prynce, contrary to the duety of allegeaunce and Goddes commaundement, Sirs, remembre youre folies & treiterous demeanours, & shame not your native countrey of Englād nor offende no more so greuously your vndoubted kynge and naturall prince, whiche alwayes hath shewed him self most louing vnto you, and remembre your dutie of allegiance, and that ye are bounde to obey vs youre kynge, both by Goddes commaundement and lawe of nature.

x Wherfore we charge you eftsones vpon the forsayd bondes and paines, that ye wythdraw your selfes to your owne houses, euery man, & no more to assemble contrarye to oure lawes, and your allegeaunces, and to cause the prouokers of you to this mischiefe, to be delyuered to oure lyftenauntes handes, or oures, and you your selues to submit you to suche condigne punishment as we and oure nobles shall thynke you worthy: for doubt you not els that we and our nobles cā nor will suffre this iniurie at youre handes vnreuenged, yf ye geue not place to vs of xx souereigntie, and shewe youre selfes as bounden and obedyent subiectes, and no more to entermeddle your selfes from hencefurth wyth the weightie affaires of the realme, the direccion whereof only apperteigneth to vs your kyng & such noble men and counsailors, as we lyst to elect & chose to haue the orderyng of thesame: & thus we praye vnto almighty god, to geue you grace to do your duties, to vse your selfes towardes vs lyke trew and faythfull subiectes, so as we may haue cause to ordre you therafter, and rather obediently to consent amongest you to deliuer into the handes of our liuetenaunta hundreth persons, to be ordered accordyng to their demerites, at our wil and pleasure, then by your obstinacy and wylfulnes, to put your selfes, your wyues, childzen landes, goodes and cattalles, besyde the indignacion of god, in the vtxxx ter aduenture of total destruccion, and vtter ruyne, by force and vyolence of the swerd.

After the Lyncolneshire men had receiued this the kynges answer aforsayd, made to their peticions, eche mistrusting other who should be noted to be the greatest medeler, euen very sodenly thei begā to shrink and out of hand they were all deuided, and euery man at home in hys owne house in peace: but the capitaines of these rebelles eskaped not al clere, but were after apprehended, and had as they deserued: he y̑ toke vpon him as capitain of this rowte, named hym selfe capitaine Cobler, but it was a Monke called Doctor Makerel, with diuers other which xl afterward were taken and executed.

All these thinges thus ended, the contrey appeased, and all thinges in quiet, the kynges maiestie recired, and brake vp his army.

A new insurreccon.

But le, euen within six daies folowyng, was the king truly certefied that ther was a new insurreccion made by the Northren men, whyche had assembled themselfes into a houge and great army of warlikemen & wel appoincted both w capitaynes, horse, harneys & artillary to the nombre of fourtie thousande men, whiche had encamped themselfes in yorkeshire: And these men had ech of theim to other bound them selfes by their othe to be faythfull and obedient to his capitayne: they also declared by their proclamacions solemply made, that this their insurrection, should extēd no farther but only to the maintenaunce and defence of the fayth of Christe & deliueraunce of holy churche sore decaied and oppressed, and also for the furtheraūce aswel of priuate as publick matters in the realme touchyng the wealth of al the kyngs pore subiectes. They named this there sedicious and traiterous voiage, an holye and blessed Pilgrymage: they had also certaine banners in the felde, wherupon was painted Christ hangynge on the Crosse on the one syde, & a chalice with a painted kake in it on the other syde w diuerse other banners of like hipocresie and fained sanctitie: the souldiers also had a certain cognisaunce or badge, embroudered or set vpon the sleues of their coates, which was the similitude of the fyue woundes of Christ, and in the middest therof was wrytten the name of our lorde, and this the rebellious Guarryson of Satan with hys false and counterfeated signes of holynes set forth and decked thēselfes, only to delude and deceyue ỹ symple and ignorant people.

After that the kinges highnes was credibly certefied of this new insurged insurreccion, he makyng no delay in so weightie a matter, caused with al spede the Dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, the Marques of Excetter, the Erle of Shrewsbury wyth other, accompanyed wyth his mighty & royal army, which was of great power & strēgth, forth w to set vpō the rebelles: but whē these noble capitaynes & coūsaylors approched, the rebelles & perceiued their nombre & saw how they wer bēt to battayl, they practysed wyth great pollecie to haue pacefyed al without bloudshedyng, but the Northrenmen wer so stifnecked ỹ thei wold in nowise stoupe, but stoutlye stode and mayntayned their wycked entrepryse, wherfore the nobles aboue sayd perceiuyng and seynge none other way to pacefye these wretched rebelles, agreed vpon a battayl, ỹ battail was appoicted, & ỹ day was assigned: but, se ỹ same night which was the night before the day of the battail appointed, fel a smal rain nothing to speake of: but yet as it wer by a great myracle of god, ỹ water which was but a very smal forde, & ỹ men in maner ỹ day before, might haue gone dryshod ouer, sodenly rose of such a heigth, depnes & bredth that the lyke noman that ther did inhabit could tel that euer thei sawe it so a fore, so that the day, euen when the houre of battayll should come it was impossible for the one armie to come at the other.

A true myracle of God.

Ffeer

After this appoyntmēt made betwene both the armies (disapointed as it is to be thought only by God, who extended his great mercie and had compassion on the great nomber of innocent persones, that in that deadly slaughter had lyke to haue bene murdered) could take no place: Then by the great wysedom and pollecy of thesayd capitaynes, a communicacion was had, and a pardon of the kynges Maiestie obteyned, for all the capitaynes and chief doers of this insurreccion, and thei promysed that such thynges as they founde themselues agreued wythall they shoulde gently be heard, and there reasonable peticions graūted x and that their articles should be presented to the kinges Maiestie, that by hys hyghnes aucthoritie, and wysedome of his counsayl, al thinges should be brought to good ordre and conclusion: and with this ordre euery man quietly departed, and those which before wer bent as hote as fyre to fyght, beyng letted therof by God, went now peaseably to their houses, and were as colde as water. A domino factum est istud.

In thys tyme of insurreccion, and in the rage of horley borley, euen when the kynges armie and the rebelles were ready to ioyne, the kinges banner beyng displayd, & ỹ kynges maiestie then lyng at Winsore, xi ther was a boocher dwellyng wythin fyue mile of Wynsore which caused a priest to preach that al such which toke part with ỹ Yorkshiremen whom he named Goddes people, did fyght and defend Goddes quarel & farther thesayd bocher in sellyng of his meat, one dyd byd hym a lesse price of a shepe then he made of it, he answered nay by Gods soul, I had rather ỹ good felowes of the north had it amonge them & a skore more of ỹ best I haue: this priest & boocher wer accused to the kynges maiesties counsayll, of the treasons abouesayd on the Monday in ỹ morning and thesame day wer both sent for, whych confessed there treasons and so accordyng to the law mershal they wer adiudged to die: & so thesayd Monday they were both examined, condempned and hanged, the bo-xxx cher was hanged on a new paire of Galowes set at the bridge ende before the castell gate: and the priest was hanged on a tree at the foote of Winsore bridge.

A boocher & a priest hanged.

This yere in December was the Thamis of London al frosen ouer wherfore the kynges Maiestie wyth hys beutifull spouse quene Jane, roade throughout the citie of London to Grenewich: And this Christmas the king by his messengers & herauldes sent doune into ỹ North his general pardons to all capitall offendours: and shortlye after came Aske to London, & so to the court to the kyng: this Aske was the chief capitain of the last rebellion in the North, and now bothe pardoned of xxxi the kyng, and his grace receiued hym into hys fauor & gaue vnto hym appazel and great rewardes, but as after ye shal perceyue Aske enioyed not the kyng his new frendes kyndnes a yere and a day, and pitie it was that he had any fauor at al, for there lyued not a veriar wretch aswel in parson as in condicios and dedes, specially againste hys anoynted gouernour and souereigne lorde.

The third day of Februarye was Thomas Fitz Garrad late earle of Kildare and fyue of his vncles drawen, hanged and quartered at Tiborne for hygh treason.

Also in the sayth moneth, Nichol Mulgraue, Thomas Tilbie, with other began a new rebellion at Kirbie Staphā in Westmerland wyth eight thousand persones, and besieged the citie of Carlile, from whence thei were beatē, with the only power of the citie, and in their returning the Duke of Norffolke, who then was made liuetenaunt of the North encountred with them, and toke the Capitaines, & accordyng to ỹ law & marcial, arreigned threscore and fourtene of them, and hāged them on Carlile walles, but Mulgrane escaped. And in thesame moneth of Februarye began yet another insurreccion, by the intysement of sir Fraūces Bygod, a man no doubt that loued God, & feared his prynce, wyth a right obediēt & louing fear: but now being deceyued & prouoked ther vnto by false rebellyous persones, it was his fortune to tast of the ende which apperteigneth to rebelles: such are men when God leaueth thē to them selfes, and when they wyl enterprise the doyng of that thinge whiche Goddes most holy word vtterly forbiddeth. This Bigod was apprehended and brought to the tower of London: this laste rebellion & began in Setrington, and in Pikerin Leigh, and Scarborough.

Sir ffraūces Bygod.

Also in the latter ende of thys yere, the lord Darcy, Aske, Sir Robert constable, sir Jhon Bulmer and his wyfe, sir Thomas Percie brother to the Erle of Northumberland, Syr Stephyn Hamelton, Nicholas Tempest Esquyer, William Lomley, sonne to the lord Lomley began agayn to conspyre, although they before had euery one of theim their pardons, and now they wer all taken and brought to the Tower of London.

Robert Aske taken.

In this yere one Robert Packyngton, Mercer of London, a man of good substaunce, and yet not so ryche as honest & wise, this man dwelled in Chepeside at the sygne of the legg, and vsed daily at foure of the clock Winter and Sommer to ryse and go to Masse at a churche then called saint Thomas Acres (but now named the Mercers chapel) and one morning emong al al other, beyng a great Mistie morning, such as hath seldome be sene, euen as he was crossing the strete from his house to the churche, he was sodenly murthered wyth a gonne, whiche of the neighbours was playnly hard, and by a great nombre of labozers at ỹ same tyme standynge at Soper lane ende, he was both sene go furth of his house, and also the clappe of the gonne was hard, but the dede doer was neuer espied nor knowen, many were suspected, but none could be found fawty: howbeit, it is true, that forasmuch as he was knowē to be a man of a great courage and one that both could speake & also woulde be harde: and that thesame tyme he was one of the burgeses of the parliament, for the citie of London, and hath talked somewhat against the couetousnes and crueltie of the Clergie, he was had in contempt with theim, and therfore moost lyke by one of theim thus shamefully murdered, as you perceyue that Mayster Honne was in the sixte yere of ỹ reygne of thys kynge.

IN June the lord Darcy and the lord Hosey wer arreigned at Westmynster before the Marques of Exceter, then hygh stuard of England, and thei were both found giltie and had ther iudgement as in caces of hygh treason. The Lorde Darcy Lord Hosey.

Shortly after wer also arreigned Sir Robert Constable, sir Thomas Percy, Sir Fraunces Bygod, Sir Stephin Hameiton, Sir Jhō Bulmer and hys wyfe, which some reported was not hys wyfe but his paramour, also William Lomley, Nicholas Tempest, and the Abbottes of Jerney and Kyuers, and Robert Aske, and all founde gyltye of xx high treason, and al put to death at Tiborne, sauing Sir Robert Constable, which was hāged in chaynes on Beuerley gate at Hul and Aske was also hanged in chaines in Yorke on a Tower, and Sir Jhon Bulmers Paramour, was brent in Smithfelde in London: And in the latter ende of June, was the Lorde Darcy behedded at Tower hyll, and shortly after was the Lorde Hosey behedded at Lyncolne.

Thys yere at the feaste of S. George, was the Lorde Cromewell made knyght of the Gartier.

In October on saynct Edwardes euen was borne at Hamptō court The birth of Prynce Edwarde, nowe our souereygne Lorde & Kynge Edwarde ỹ. vi.
the noble Impe Prince Edward, whose Godfathers at ỹ Christening xxi were the Archebishop of Cauntorburie, and the duke of Norffolke and hys Godmother the ladye Mary the kynges doughter, and at the bysshopyng was Godfather the duke of Suffolke. At the byrth of this noble Prince was great fyres made through the whole realme and great Joye made wyth thankesgeuing to almightie God, whiche had sent so noble a prince to succede in the croune of this realme: But lorde what lamentacion shortly after was made for the death of his noble and gracious mother quene Jane, which departed out of this lyfe the fourtene day of October, next folowyng: and of none in the realme was it more heauelier taken then of the kynges Maieiste him self, whose death caulsed the king imediatly to remoue vnto Westminster, wher he mourned and kepte hym selfe close and secret a great while: and the eyght daye of Nouembre the Corpes of the Quene was caryed to Windsore wythe great solempnitie, and there was buryed in the middes of the queer in the Castel Churche: And at thesame tyme was made in Poules a

The kinges Maiestie kept his Christmas at Grenewich in his mournyng apparel, and so was all the Courte till the morowe after Candlemas day, and then he and all other chaunged.

Also this yere the Viscount Beauchãp was created erle of Hertford and sir William Fitzwilliam highe Admirall created Earle of Southhampton.

This yere James kyng of Scottes, maried the Lady Magdalene the Frenche kynges eldest doughter. E.

Frier Forest

A May there was a Freer, called freer Forest, one of the obseruaunt freers, but he might haue bene more trulier named as after shall appeare, an obstinate Freer, this ob- xx stinat Freer had secretly in confessions declared to many of the kynges subiectes that the kyng was not supreme heade, & being herof accused & apprehended, he was examined how he could say ꝑ the king was not supreme head of the church, when he himself had sworne to the contrary, he answered ꝑ he toke his oth with his outward man, but his inward man neuer consented therunto: At this answer the lordes who examined him loked very straugly at the dissimulacion of the Freer, but being farther accused of diuerse heretical and dampnable articles, that he held cõtrary to the scripture of god, he was after sondry examinacions conuinced and confuted, and xxx gladly submitted himselfe to abide the punishmẽt of the church: But vpon this his submission, hauyng more libertie then before he had, alwel to talke with whom he would, as also, who that he would to talke with him, certein such outward men as he was so talked wyth him and so incensed him, that the outward Freer was as far from his open submission as euer he was, and when his abiuracion was sent him to read, and loke vpõ, he vtterly refused it, and obstinately stode in all his heresies & treasons before cõspired, al gẽtle meanes that was possible to besought for his reconciliacion was had, but the more gentler that the magistrates were to him, the more obstinat was the freer, and would neither ar- cl gue nor answere: wherfore instly he was cõdẽpned, & after for him was prepared in Smithfeld in Londõ a Gallowes on ꝑ which he was hanged in chaynes by ꝑ middle & armholdes al quyck, & under ꝑ gallowes was made a fire, & he so consumed & brẽt to deth. At his commyng to ꝑ place of execucion, there was prepared a greate skaffolde, on which sat the nobles of the realme, and the kynges Maiesties mooste honorable counsayle only to haue graunted pardon to that wretched creature, yf any spark of repentaunce woulde haue happened in him: ther was also prepared a Pulpit where a right reuerend father in God and a renoumed and famous Clerck the bishop of Worceter called Hugh Latimer, declared to him hys errours, and opēly and manifestly by the scripture of God confuted them, and wyth many and godly exhortacions moued him to repentaūce, but such was his frowardnes that he neyther wold hear nor speak. And a litle before the execucion, a houge & great image was brought to the Galowes, which Image was brought out of Wales, and of the Welshmen much sought and worshipped: This Image was called Daruel Gatheren, and the Welshmen had a prophesy that this Image should set a whole Forest on fyre, which prophesy now toke effect, for he set this freer Forest on fyre and consumed him to nothing. Thys Freer when he saw the fire come, and that present death was at hād, caught hold vpon the ladder, which he would not let go, but so vnpacientlye toke hys death, that noman that euer put his truste in God neuer so vnquietlye nor so vngodly ended his life: yf men myght iudge hym by hys outward man, he appered to haue litle knowledge of God and his sincere truth, and lesse trust in him at hys endyng. Upon ỹ gallowes ỹ he died on, was set with greate letters these verses folowing. A prophesie.

In July was Edmond Conyngsbey attainted of treason, for counterfeatyng of the kynges Signe Manuell: And in August was Edward Clifford for the same cause attainted, and both put to execucyō as traitors at Tiborne. And the Sondaye after Barthelemew day, was one Cratwel hangman of Loudon, and two persones moo hanged at the wrestlyng place on the backsyde of Clerken wel besyde Londō, for robbyng of a bouth in Bartholomew fayre, at which execution was aboue twentie thousand people as I my selfe iudged. A hangman hanged.

In thys moneth of Auguste, the kynge of Scottes maryed the ladye Mary late Duches of Longuile. And in Septembre by the speciall mocyon of the Lorde Cromewell all the notable Images vnto the whiche were made anye speciall Pilgrimages and Offerynges, were vtterly taken away, as the Images of Walsyngham, Ypswyche, Worceter, the Ladye of Wilsdon, wyth manye other. And lykewyse Images suppressed.

the Shrines of counterfeated Sainctes, as the Shrine of Thomas Becket and dyuerse other. And euen forth wyth by the meanes of the saied Cromwell, al the ordres of supersticious and beggyng Freers, as White, Gray, Black, Augustine, Crochet Freers, & likewise al the puling Mõnes, with their Cloisters & houses wer suppressed & put doune.

All counterfeat religiõs suppressed.

In this season, sute was made by the Emperour to the kynges Maiestie, that he would take to wife ỹ duches of Millayn, but in this matter the Emperors counsaill so dalied with the kyng, that shortly he left of that suit: of the which breakyng of with the Emperour, the Duke of Cleaue hard, and therfore forthwith he made suite to the kynges Maiestie for his fayre sister the Lady Anne: vndoubtedly the Emperours counsayl thought by a cautel to haue brought the kyng to sue to the bishop of Rome for a licence, which thing the kynges Maiestie sone smelled & perceiued wher about thei went. In the moneth of Nouẽbre one Jhõ Nicholsõ otherwise called Lãbert a preist, was accused of heresy, for deniyng the Sacrament of the Aultare to be Christes naturall body: This man appealed to the kynges Maiestie, who graciously consented to heare him, and a day was appointed: against whych daye was made in the kynges palace at Westminster called the white hall, in the kynges hall a throne or liege royall for the Kynges Maiestie, and ex Skaffoldes for all the lordes, & a stage for Nicholson to stand on: thys Nicholson was a man named to be learned, but that day he vttered no suche learnynge, as he was of many supposed, that he both coulde and would haue done, but was excedyng fearfull and timerous. The Kynges Maiesty accompanied with his Lordes and nobles of the Realme and diuers of the bishops and clergy kept the day appointed, wher before his maiestie was brought the forsaid Nicholson, to whome certein of the bishops ministred diuerse argumentes, but specially the kynges maiestie him selfe did most dispute wyth hym, howbeit Nicholson was not perswaded nor woulde not reuoke although the kynges maiestye exe graunted hym his pardon, wherfor there was he condempned and had iudgement, and shortely after was drawen and burned in Smythfeld.

Jhon Lambert otherwise called Jhõ Nicholson.

The third day of Nouembre were Henry Marques of excester & erle of Deuonshire and sir Henry Pole knight and lorde Mountagew and Sir Edward Neuel brother to the Lorde Burgany sent to the tower which three wer accused by sir gefferei Pole brother to the lord Mountagew, of high treason, and the two lordes were arreigned the last day of Decembre, at Westminster before the lord Awdeley of Walden, lord Chauncelor, and then the high stuard of England, and there found giltie, likewise on the third day after was arreigned sir Edward Neuel, & Sir Gefferey Pole and two priestes called Croftes and Collines, and one holand a Mariner and all attainted, and the ninth day of Januarie, were the saied two lordes and Sir Edwarde Neuel behedded at ỹ tower hil, and the two priestes and Holande were drawen to Tiborne, and there hanged & quartered, & Sir Gefferey Pole was pardoned.

The Lorde Marques of Excester & otheraccused & condẽpned of high treason.

On

On Alwednesday, were Jhon Jones, Jhon Potter, and William Maneryng, hanged in the princes liueries, because thei were the princes seruauntes, on the Southside of Paules churchyard for killing of Sir Roger Cholmeley esquyer in the same place of malice prepensed.

Also on the third day of March, was sir Nicholas Carew of Bedington, in the countie of Surrey knight of the Gartier, and Maister of the kyngs horse, before attainted of treason, behedded at ỹ tower hil, wher he made a godly confession, bothe of his foly and superstitious faith, geuing God most harty thankes that euer he came in the prison of ỹ tower, where he first sauored the lyfe & swetenes of Gods moste holy word meaning the Bible in English, which there he read by the meane of one Thomas Phelips then keper of that prison, but before he was a citezē and poyntmaker of London, which Phillips two yeres before had ben ther prysoner himselfe, & sore troubled aswel by syr Thomas More as also by Doctor Stokesley bishop of London, who often tymes examined the sayd Phelips, & layed many articles to his charge, but he so wisely and coldly bsed him selfe, that he maugre their euyl willes, escaped clerly their handes.

Sir Nicholas Carew behedded.

Thomas Phelips.

The nynth day of Marche, the kyng created at Westminster sir William Pawlet knight treasorer of his household, Lord Sainte Jhon, & Sir Jhon Russel comptroller of his housholde, Lorde Russel.

The same tyme the kynge caused all the hauens to be fortefyed, and roade to Douer, and caused Bulwarkes to be made on the sea coastes, and sent commissions throughout al the realm, to haue his people muster: and at the same season on Ester day, was there thre skore vnknowē shippes lyng in the dounes, wherfore all Kent arose, and mustered in harnes the same day.

¶ The.xxxi. pere.

THe eight and twentie daye of Apryll, began a Parliament at Westminster, in the which Margaret countesse of Salsbury Gertrude wyfe to ỹ Marques of Excester, Reygnold Poole a Cardiuall, brother to the lorde Mountagew, Sir Adrian Folkew & Thomas Dingley knight of saynt Jhones, & dyuerse other wer attainted of hygh treason, which Folkew & Dingley wer the tēth daye of July behedded. In thys parliament was an act made whiche bare this title: An act for abholyshynge of diuersitie of opinions, in certayne artycles concernynge Christen religion, this act establyshed chiefly sixe articles, wherof amōg the cōmon people it was called the act of syxe artycles, & of some it was named the whyp wyth syxe strynges, and of some other and that of the moste part, it was named the bloudy statute, for of truthe it so in shorte tyme after skourged a great nomber in the citie of London, wher ỹ first quest for the inquirie of the offendors of thesayd statute sat at a chur ch called Beckets house, now named the Mercers Chappel, that thesaid quest beyng of purpose selected and picked out emong all the rest of the

The first quest that inquired of the sixe Articles inhabitauntes of the citie, that none might thereof be admitted which either had red any part of the holy scripture in English, or in any wyse fauoured such as either had red it, or loued ỹ preachers of it: insomuch as this quest was so zelous & feruent in the execuciō of this statute, that they among them selues thought it not only sufficient to inquire of the offendors of the saied statute, but also by ther fine wittes and wylyng myndes, thei inuēted to inquire of certayn braunches of the same statute as they termed it, which was not only to inquire who spake again masses, but who thei were that seldome came vnto them: and also not only & who denyed the Sacramente to be Christes very naturall body, but also who helde not vp their handes at sacryng tyme, & knocked not on there brestes: And thei not only inquired who offended in the sixe articles, but also who came seldome to the churche, who toke no holy bread nor holy water, who red the Bible in the churche, or in communication contemned prestes, or Images in the Churches. &c. with a grat nombre of suche braunches: this appoincted quest so sped them selues wyth the sixe Articles, and ther awne braunches, that in fourtene daies space there was not a preacher nor other persone in the citie of name, whiche had spoken against the supremacie of the Bishop of Rome, but he was & wrapped in the sixe articles, insomuche as thei indited and presented of suspicion to the nombre of fiue hundred persones and aboue: so that yf the kynges maiestie had not graunted his pardon, for that by the good lorde Awdeley lord Chauncelor his grace was truly infourmed ỹ thei were indited of malice: a greate many of them whych all ready was in prison, had bene shortly after skourged in Smythfelde wyth firy fagottes, that would haue made the best bloud in ther bodies to haue sprong but most graciously at that time his grace remitted all: although in the tyme that these sixe Articles indured whiche was eight yeres & more, thei brought many an honest and simple persone to there deathes, for & suche was ỹ rigour of that lawe, that yf two witnesses false or true, had accused any and auouched that thei had spoken agaynst the sacrament, ther was then no way but death, for it boted not to confesse that hys faith was cōtrarie, or that he saied not as the accusors reported: for thei would beleue the witnesses, ye & sometime certain of the clergie, when thei had no winesses would procure some, or elles thei wer slaundered.

The kynges highnes whiche neuer ceased to study and take payne both for the auauncement of the common wealth of this his Realme of England, of the which he was the only supreme gouernour and hed, & also for the defence of al the same, was lately enfourmed by his trustie & & faithfull frendes, ỹ the cākerd & cruel serpēt the bishop of rome, by that Archetraitor Reignold Poole, enemie to godes worde & his natural contrey, had moued and stirred diuerse great princes & potentates of Christendome to inuade the Realme of England, and vtterlye to destroy the whole nacion of the same: Wherefore his Maiestie in his awne persone, without any deley toke very laborious & paineful iourneies towardes the sea coastes. Also he sent diuers of his nobles & counsailors to view and searche all the portes and daungers on the coastes where any mete or conuenient landing place might be supposed, aswell on the borders of England as also of Wales. And in al soche doubtful places his highnes caused diuers & many bulwarkes & fortifications to bee made. And further his highnes caused the lorde Admiral erle of Southāpton to prepare in redinesse shippes for the sea, to his great coast & charges.

And beside this, to haue all his people in a redynesse, he directed his f commissions thorough out the realme to haue his people mustered, & the harneis & weapons sene and viewed, to thentent that all thynges should be in a redinesse if his enemies would make any attempt into this Realme: And amongest other, one commission was directed to the right worshipfull sir William Forman knight Maior of Londō and his brethrē, for to certifie all the names of all men betwene the ages of .lx. and .xvi. & the nomber of harnesses, weapons, with their kyndes & diuersities: whereupon the said lord Maior & his brethren, euery one hauyng with them one of the counsaill or learned men of the citie repaired to their wardes, and there by the othe of the common counsaill & Constables of the same ff warde toke the nomber of the men, harnesses and weapons, according to their commission. And after that they had well viewed their Bookes and the nomber of the persones, they thought it not expedient to admit the whole nomber of suche as were certefied for able and apte persones for to Muster: Wherfore then they assembled theim selfes againe and chose out the moste able persones and put by thother, and specially al suche as had no harnesse, nor for whom no harnesse could be prouided. But when they were credibly aducrtysed by the kynges Counsellour Thomas lord Cromewell knyght of the Noble Ordre of the Gartier Lorde Preuye Seale (to whose prudence and goodnesse the Citie was muche bounden) fff that the kyng hymselfe woulde see the people of the Citie Muster in a conuenient nomber, and not to set furthe all their power, but to leaue some at home to kepe the Citie. Then eftsones euery Alderman repayred to hys warde, and there put asyde all suche as hadde Jackes, coates of plate, coates of mayle and bryganders, and appoynted none but suche as had whyte Harnesse, excepte suche as should beare Morysh Pykes, whiche had no harnesse but skulles: and they appoynted none but suche as had white harnesse, neither dyd they admyt any that was a Straunger, although they were Denyzens. When it was knowen that the kyng would see the Muster, Lorde howe glad the people were to prepare, and gg what desyre they had to do their Prince seruice, it would haue made any faithfull subiectes harte to haue reioysed. Then euery man beyng of any substaunce prouided hymself a coate of whyte silke, and garnysshed their bassenettes with turues lyke cappes of sylke, set with ouches, furnysshed with chaines of gold and fethers: other gylted their harnesse, their halberdes and pollaxes. Some, and especiall certayne goldsmythes had

The.viii.day of Maye, according to the kynges pleaſure, euery Aldetman in order of battell with his warde came into the common fielde at Myle ende, and then al the gonnes ſeuered them ſelues into one place, al the pykes in another, & the bowmen in another, & lykewyſe the bylmen, & there tynged and ſnayled, whiche was a goodly ſyght to beholde: for all the fieldes from White chappell to Myle ende, and from Bednal Grene to Ratclyf & to Stepney were all couered with harneſſe, men & weapōs, & in eſpeciall the battel of pykes ſemed to be a greate foreſt. ¶ The Order in goyng.

About.viii. of the clocke marched forward the lyght peces of Ordinaunce,with stone & powder,after them followed the Drommes & fiffes, and imediatly after them a Guydon of the Armes of the citie. Then followed master Sadeler capitain of the gōners vpon a good horse in harnesse & a coate of veluet with a chayne of golde &.iiii. Halbardes about him appareled as before is rehersed. Then followed the Gonners.iiii. in a ranke,euery one goyng.v.foote a sonder, euery mans shoulder euen with another, whiche shot altogether in diuers places very cherefully, & especially before the Kynges Maiestie, whiche at that tyme sate in his new gate house at his Palace at Westminster where he viewed all the whole company: In lyke maner passed the second & third battels al well and richely appointed. They passed as is saied, the formost Capitayn at ix.of the clock in the morning by the lytle conduite entering into Pauls churchyarde,& so directly to Westmynster,& so thorough the sainctuary and round about the parke of.S.James,& so vp into the fielde & came home thorough Holborne: and as the first Capitaine entered agayne to the lytle conduite, the last of the Muster entered Pauls Churchyarde, whiche then was.iiii. of the clocke at after none. The nomber was.xv. thousand,besyde Wyffelers and other wayters.

In this yere about the feast of.S.Jhon Baptist,the cōmon people of the toune in Gaunt in Flaūders, began to grudge against the Officers of the Emperour,& thoccasion was this: The cōmon people beyng supported of dyuers ryche Merchauntes of the towne complayned that the Excyse of the Wyne was so greate, that they payed of euery pottell.ii.d. for thercyse that they solde by retaile,besyde the pryce of the wyne,& likewyse payed the Merchauntes whiche sold it in great: and yet that more greued them that the Abbots, Fryers, Chanons & other Religious persones & men of the Churche(of the whiche was great store in that toune) the whiche among them had the greatest ryches & wealth of that toune, should be exempt and dronke Wyne free without paiyng Excyse,which thyng turned to the charges of other,and therwith the commons founde them selues sore greued,and sayed that they were oppressed contrarye to their olde and auncient Priuileges. The Rulers made promise that an order and way should be taken therein,but they desyred respite that they might knowe the mynde of the Quene of Hungary, Regent for the Emperoure of the lowe countrey,which Quene at that tyme was at Bruxel, and euen then was goyng to vyset the countrey of Hollande. The Quene consented to nothyng that the commons desyred, but sent them a very cruell and frowarde aunswere not without great threates,that if they would not euery man quietly remayne in their houses,and paye their excyse as they had bene accustomed to do, they should lyke rebels as they were be forced therunto whether they would or not: Wherfore the commons assembled, and when they had well digested the aunswere of the Quene, they determined to seke another meanes, & fyrste they assembled themselues into a battel to the nõbre of.x.or.xii.M. wel armed mẽ, night and day watching & warding the toune, in suche sorte that thempetours officers bare no rule: and he whom they called the chiefe Bailife or Gouernour of the toune durst not once shew his face amongest them, but by the helpe of a boy he conueied himself by a Postern and so got out of the toune. The people of Gaunt perceiuing their Rulers thus departed, the chiefest of them that were in the toune condiscended and agreed to write vnto the Frenche kyng for aide, and caused a Gentelman of their toune to deuyse a letter, for the whiche afterwarde he lost his head.

The sute and request of thesaied men of Gaunt was, that it would please the Frenche kyng to sende vnto them men and municions, and to succour them as the auncient subiectes to the Crowne of Fraũce, and to deliuer them from the bondage that they were in, & to remoue from them the great Exactions & impositions, that the Officers of thesaied Emperour had oppressed them with all, and they would yelde & deliuer all vnto hym as to their souereigne lorde, & in lyke maner would other tounes to them adioynyng do. And for a truth (saith the writer of the Annalles of Acquitain) if the Frenche kyng wouide haue herkened vnto their re- xx quest & sute, it had bene an easy thyng for hym bothe to haue enioyed the possession of the greatest nomber of all the tounes in the lowe countrey: as Flaunders, Arthoys and the rest of that countrey, & also to haue put the Emperour in great hazarde. But the Frenche kyng willing to kepe and holde the Truce which was concluded and swore, hauyng a greater respect to his faith and promyse then to his profite and gayne, thynkyng that if he should consent to the request of the Gauntoys, he should begin a newe warre to the noiaunce of the cõmen people of christendom, wherfore he refused vtterly either to ayde or succour them.

The Quene of Hungarye thynkynge to haue pacifyed all thys tu- xxi mour, sent vnto the toune of Gaunt her tyght trustie & valiaunt knight, the lorde of Sempy, of the house of Crouy, accompanied with the lorde Lyquerque and one of her Pryuy counsaill: but these men amongest the commons were not so well entertained as they thought they should haue bene, and therfore taried not long amongest them, but were glad to conuey themselfes from them in dissimuled apparell.

The Emperour being aduertised of all this businesse, and perceiuing his lowe coũtrey by the reason of sedicion was in daunger, deuised meanes howe he might come to them, for then he was in Spain. He thought he would not hazarde hymselfe vpon the sea: and he durst not truste the xl Almaynes, because he had broken promyse w̃ theim so often concerning their generall counsaill that he promised to haue assembled: wherfore he determined to moue the French king & to sue for a safeconduitie to passe thorough Fraunce, which very gladly the Frenche kyng graunted hym, insomuch that after the French kyng knew of his desire, both he and the

Dolphyn entreted moſt hertely ꝑ Emperour to paſſe that waye, truſting therby that it ſhould haue bene an occaſion of peace betwene them.

All thynges mete for themperours aſſuraunce was ſo appoynted by the Conſtable of Fraunce, that the Emperour departed out of Spain, & came to Bayon, from thence to Burdeaux & ſo to Poyters: after he came to Loches where he met with the Frenche kyng & the Quene, & then they together paſſed from thence to Orleaunce, & ſo to Paris, into whiche citie they entered the firſt daye of Januarye in the yere of our Lorde a 1539. and ſo from thence after great chere and royall entertcinement he paſſed ꝑ thorough the lower countrets, & at laſt came to Bruxelles in Brabant.

And firſt the Emperour vnder colour to haue pitie and to remedy the poore cõmons of Gaunt, & ſaiyng that he would not only pardõ their offẽces, but alſo he could not blame them being oppreſſed to cõplain, and by this meanes he obteined licence that the County of Reux accõpanyed wᵗ ii. C. men of armes & .v. M. Lanceknightes entered the toune ſaiyng to thinhabitauntes that this power was onely to kepe the toune in peace & quiet till a good & profitable ordre ſhould be taken for the cõmons. The poore inhabitauntes beleuing all that was promiſed & ſaied vnto them & miſtruſtyng nothyng, threw of their harneſſe, and euery man peaceably xx went to their houſes. Then entered into the toune themperour accompanied with his brother the kyng of Hongary, and his ſiſter the quene Dowager of Hongary, the Duke of Sauoy and many other Princes, Lordes and Gentelmen, and a great power of men of warre, whiche entery was about Mydſomer, in the yere a. M. v. C. xl.

Themperour beyng in Gaunt & hauyng thuppet hand of them, that is to ſaie, beyng ſtronger within the toune then thinhabitauntes were, in the place of his great pitie that he ſemed to haue on the poore inhabitãtes at his firſt entery, he immediatly began to do execution, & that of a great nomber of them, and without all mercy executed them, inſomuche that a- xxx mong all other, the Gentleman which the commõs enforced to write the letter to the Frẽch kyng was beheded, as before is expreſſed: & afterward themperour cauſed an Abbey of. S. Banon to be ſuppreſſed, & in theſame place at the charges of the Gauntois, he made a Caſtell of a maruelous largeneſſe, for it was. ix. C. foote long, & .viii. C. large: and not contented with ſuche as he put to death, but alſo of a great nomber he confiſcated thier landes and goodes, and finally he brake all their Priuileges and Ordinaunces, and left the poore inhabitauntes of Gaunt in a miſerable caſe: But now to returne to thaffayres of England.

In Auguſt the great Onele & Odonele entered into the Engliſh pale xl in Ireland, and brent almoſt .xx. myle within theſame: wherfore the lorde Grey then Deputie there, aſſembled a greate power and met with them the. xx. day of Auguſt and put them to flight, wherfore the kyng ſent ouer fyue hundreth freſhe ſouldiers to aide his deputie.

In the ende of Septẽber the .xvi. day of that moneth came to London Duke Frederyke of Bauyre Countye Palantyne or Palſgraue of the

Ryne, & the.xviii. daie came to London, the Marchal of duke Jhon Fredericke Prince Electoz of Saxony, & the Chauncelloz of William duke of Cleue, Gulycke, Gelder, & Berry. The Palsgraue was receiued and conducted to Wynsoze by the duke of Suffolk: and thother were accopanied with other nobles, & the.xxiii. day of thesame moneth thei al came to Wynsoze, where. viii. daies they continually were feasted and hunted, with al pleasure that might be shewed vnto them: and the Palsgraue shoztly departed & was honozably rewarded: and that season was co-cluded the mariage betwene the kyng and the lady Anne, syster to duke Willyā of Cleue, & great pzeparacō was made foz the receiuyng of her. x

The.xiiii. day of Nouembez Hugh Feringdon Abbot of Redyng and two Pziestes, the one called Rug, and the other named Onyon, were at-tainted of high treason, foz denyng the kyng to be suppzeme head of the chutche, & was dzawen, hanged, and quartered at Redyng. This Abbot was a stubbozne Monke & vtterly without learning. Thesame day was Richard Whityng Abbot of Glascenbury likewise attainted and hanged on Tower hyll beside his monastery, foz thesaid case and other great treasons, which also was quartered: & the first day of Decēb. was Jhon Beche Abbot of Colchest. put to execucō foz ỹ same cōfederacy & trealō.

In December were appointed to wayte on the kynges hyghnes per- xx son fiftie Gentelmen called Pencioners oz Speares, lyke as they were in the first yere of the kyng.

The Recey-uyng of the Lady Anne of Cleue.

The.xi. day of December at the Tutneppke on thysside Grauelyng was the Lady Anne of Cleue receiued by the lozde Lysle Deputie of the toune of Calice and with the Speres & hozsemen belongyng to the reti-

Calice a myle & moze from the toune met her Grace the Erle of South-hampton great Admirall of England, & apparelled in a coate of purple chely apparelled with great & massy chaynes, and in especial syz Frauncis Bzyan & sir Thomas Seymers chaynes were of greate valure and straunge fassion. Beside this, the Lozde Admirall had a great nomber of gentelmen in blew veluet and crimosyn sattyn and his yomen in dāmask low obeysaunce welcomed her, & so bzought her into Calyce by the lanterne gate, where the Shippes laye in the Hauen garnysshed with their xl banners, pencelles and flagges, plesauntly to beholde. And at her entry was shot suche a peale of gōnes, that all the retinew much marueiled at it. And at her entery into the toune, the Mayer of the toune pzesented her with an.C. marke in golde. And befoze the Staple hall stode Merchaū-tes of the Staple wel aparelled, which likewise pzesented her with an. C souereynes of golde in a ryche purse, whiche hertely thanked them, and so she rode to the kynges place called the Checker, and there she lay. xv. dayes for lacke of prosperous wynde. During whiche tyme goodly iustes and costly banketes were made to her for her solace and recreacion. And on. s. Jhons day in Christmas, she with. l. sayle toke passage about none and landed at Dele in the downes about. v. of the clocke, where syr Thomas Cheiny lord Warden of the portes receaued her, and there she taried a space in a castle newly builte, and thether came the duke and duches of Suffolke and the bysshop of Chichester, with a great nomber of x knightes and esquiers and ladies of Kent and other whiche welcomed her grace, and so that nyght brought her to Douer castell, where she rested till monday: on whiche day for all the stormе that then was she marched toward Caunterbury, and on Baram downe met her the Archebysshop of Caunterbury accompanied with the bysshop of Ely, sainct Asse, saynt Daupes and Douer, and a great company of gentelmen well apparelled, & so brought her to. s. Austens without Caũterbury, where she lay that nyght: and on the nexte day she came to Syttyngburne & there lodged that nyght. And as she passed toward Rochester on Newyers euen, on Reynam down met her the duke of Norffolke & the lorde Dacre

On whiche day the kyng whiche sore desired to see her grace accompanied with no more then. viii. persons of his preuy chamber, & both he & they all apparelled in marble coates preuely came to Rochester, & sodainly came to her presence, which therwith was sumwhat astonied: but after he had spoken and welcomed her, she with most gracious & louyng countenaunce & behauior hym receiued & welcomed on her knees, whom he gently toke vp & kyssed: & all xxx that after none commoned & deuised with her, & that nyght supped with her, & the next day he departed to Grenewyche, & she came to Dartford.

On the morow being the third day of January, & saturday, in a faire playne on black heth more nerer the foote of shoters hill then the ascendent of the hyll called blacke heth hyll, was pitched a ryche cloth of gold and diuers other tentes & pauilions in the whiche were made fyers and perfumes for her and suche Ladies as should receiue her Grace: and frõ the Tentes to the parke gate of Grenewyche were all busshes and fyrres cutte downe, and a large and ample waye made for the shew of all persones. When the kyng knew that she was ariued in her tent, he with all dyligence set out thorough the parke. And first issued the kynges Trompettes, then the kynges officers beyng sworne of his Counsail, next after them folowed the Gentelmen of the kynges preuy Chamber, some apparelled in coates of veluet embroudered: other had their coates garded with chaines of golde, very ryche to beholde, whiche were wel horsed and trapped: after them ensued Barons, the yongest first, and so sir Wil- xl lyam Hollys knyght Lorde Mayer of London rode with the lord Par beyng yongest Baron. lace mixed betwene of thesame gold and other laces of thesame so goyng trauerse wyse, that the ground litle appered: about whiche garment was a ryche garde very curiously embroudered, the sleues and brest were cut, lyned with cloth of golde, and tied together with great buttons of Dia-mondes, Rubyes, and Orient Perle, his sworde and swordgyrdle adorn-ned with stones and especial Emerodes, his night cappe garnished with stone, but his bonnet was so ryche of Juels that fewe men coulde value xx them. Besyde all this he ware in baudryke wyse a coller of such Balisties and Perle that few men euer sawe the lyke: and aboute his persone ran ten footemen all richely apparelled in goldsmithes worke. And notwith-standyng that this ryche apparell and precious Juelles were plesaunt to the Nobles & al other being present to beholde, yet his Princely countenaunce, his goodly personage and royall gesture so farre exceded all other creatures beyng present, that in comparyson of his persone, all his ryche apparell was litle estemed. After hym folowed his Lorde Chamberlain, then came syr Anthony Browne Master of his horse, a goodly Gentelman and a comly personage, well horsed trapped and richely apxxx patelled leadyng the kynges horse of Estate by a long reyne of golde, whiche horse was trapped in maner lyke a barde with Crymosyn veluet and satten, all ouer embroudered with golde after an antyke fassion, very curiously wrought. Then followed the pages of honour in coates of ryche tynsell and Crymosyn veluet paled, rydyng on great coursers, all trapped in crymosyn veluet, embroudered with new deuyses and knottz of gold whiche were both plesannt and costly to beholde. Then followed syr Anthony Wyngfeld Capitaine of the Garde, and then the Garde wel horsed and in riche coates. In this order the kyng rode to the last ende of the ranke where the speares or pencioners stode: and there euery person xl that came with the kyng placed hymselfe on the one syde or the other, the kyng standyng in the myddes.

When her grace was aduertysed of the kynges commyng, she issued out of her tent beyng apparelled in a riche goune of cloth of golde reyssed, made rounde without any trayne after the Duche fassyon, and on her head a kall, and ouer that a rounde bonet or cappe set full of Orient

Pearle

Pearle of a very proper fassion, & before that she had a cornet of blacke veluet, & about her necke she had a partelet set full of ryche stone whiche glistered all the fielde. And at the dore of the tente she mounted on a fayre horse rychely trapped, with her fotemen about her in goldsmithes worke embroudered with the blacke Lion, & on his shoulder a Carbuncle gold, and so she marched towarde the kyng: which perceiuing her to approche came forwarde somewhat beyonde the crosse on Blacke Heth, and there pausod a litle in a faire place tyll she came nerer: then he put of his bonnet and came forewarde to her, and with moste louely countenaunce and Princely behauiour saluted, welcomed and embraced her to the great reioysyng of the beholders: and she lykewyse not forgettyng her duty, with most amiable aspecte and womanly behauiour receiued his grace with many swete wordes and greate thankes and praisynges geuen to hym. And while they two were thus communyng, the fyftie Pencioners and the Garde departed to furnyshe the Courte and Halle of Grenewiche. And when the kyng had talked with her a lytle whyle, he put her on his ryght hande, and so with their footemen they roade as though they had bene coupeled together. O what a syght was this to se so goodly a prince and so noble a kyng to ryde with so fayre a Lady of so goodly a stature and so womanly a countenaunce, and in especial of so good qualities, xx I thynke no creature could se them but his herte reioysed.

Nowe when the kyng and she were mette and bothe their companyes ioyned together, they returned thorough the rankes of Knyghtes and Esquyers whiche stode styll all this while & remoued not, in this ordre: Fyrst her Trompettes went forwarde, whiche were twelue in nomber beside two kettle Drommes on horsebacke, then followed the Kynges Trompettes, then the Kynges Counsaylours, then the Gentlemen of the Preuy Chamber, then the Gentelmen of her Graces Countrey in coates of veluet, all on great horses: after them the Mayor of London in crymosyn veluet with a riche collor, coupled with the yongest Baron, xxx then all the Barons, nexte folowyng Bysshoppes, then Earles, wyth whom roade the Earles of Duersteyn and Waldocke, of her countrey, then Dukes and the Archebysshop of Caunterbury and Duke Phillip of Bauire, nexte folowed the Ambassadours, then the Lorde Preuye Seale and the Lorde Chauncellor, then the Lorde Marques wyth the Kynges sworde, nexte folowed the kyng hymselfe equally rydyng wyth his faire lady, & behind hym rode sir Anthony Browne with the kynges horse of Estate as you hearde before, and behynde her roade syr John Dudley Master of her Horses leadynge her spare Palferaye trapped in ryche Tyssue downe to the grounde: After them followed the Henxemen or Pages of Honoure, then folowed the Ladye Margarete Douglas, the Ladye Marques Dorset, the Duches of Richemond and Suffolke, the Countesses of Rutland & Hertforde, & other Countesses: then followed her Graces Chariot in the whiche she rode all her iourney, well carued & gylte with Armes of her countrey curiously wrought & couered with cloth with cloth of gold, all the Hoꝛses were trapped with blacke veluet, and on them rode Pages of Honoꝛ in coates of veluet, in the which Chariot rode. ii. auncient ladies of her countrey: nexte after the Chariot folowed vi. ladies and gentelwomen of her countrey all richely apparelled with cappes set with Pearle, and great chaynes of diuers fassions after the vsage of their countrey, whiche were very fayꝛe of face, and with them rode. vi. ladyes of Englande well beſene. Then folowed another Chariot likewyſe gilte & furniſhed as thother was: after that Chariot folowed. x Engliſhe ladyes well apparelled, next them another Chariot al couered & with blacke cloth, and in that. iiii. gentlewomen whiche were her Graces Chamberers: then folowed all the remnaunt of the ladies, gentlewomen and Maydens in a greate nomber whiche dyd weare that daie Frenche whodes: laſt of all came another Chariot all blacke with. iii. Launders appertaynyng to her grace: next after folowed a Hoꝛſelytter of cloth of golde and Crimoſyn veluet vpon veluet paled, with hoꝛſes trapped accoꝛdyngly whiche the kyng ſent her. Then followed the ſeruyng men of her trayne, all clothed in blacke and on great hoꝛſes.

In this oꝛdꝛe they rode thoꝛough the rankes, & ſo thoꝛough the parke and at the late Freers walle all men alyghted ſauyng the kyng the two & Maſters of the Hoꝛſes & the Henxmen whiche rode to the halle doꝛe, and the Ladies rode to the Courte gate. And as they paſſed they beheldc on the wharfe howe the Citezens of London were rowyng vp and down on the Thames euen beſoꝛe them, euery crafte in his barge garniſhed with Banners, Flagges, Stremers, Pencelles and Targettes, ſome paynted and beaten with the kynges armes, ſome with her Graces Armes, and ſome with the armes of their crafte oꝛ Miſtery. Beſide the Barges of euery cratte, there was a Barge made like a ſhip, called the Batchelers barke, decked with cloth of gold, penons, pencels, & targettes in great nomber, on whom wayted a Foyſt that ſhot great peces of Artillary. And in eue- & ry barge was diuerſe ſoꝛtes of Inſtrumentes & childꝛen & men ſyngyng, whiche ſang and plaied altogether as the kyng and the Lady paſſed on the wharfe, whiche ſigbt and noies they muche pꝛaiſed and allowed.

When the kyng & ſhe were within the vtter court, they alygbted from their hoꝛſes, and the kyng louyngly embꝛaſed her & kiſſed her, byddyng her welcome to her owne, & led her by her lyfte arme thoꝛough the Halle whiche was furniſhed beneth the harth with the kynges Garde, & aboue the harth with the fyftie Pencioners with their batel Axes, & ſo bꝛought her vp to her pꝛeuy chamber, where he lefte her foꝛ that tyme.

And aſſone as the kyng and ſhe was entered the courte, was ſhot out of the Tower of Grenewiche and there about, a great peale of Gonnes.

When the kynges company and hers was entered the parke, as you haue heaꝛde, then all the hoꝛſe men on Blacke Heath bꝛake their aray and had licence to departe to London, oꝛ to their lodgyng. To ſe howe longe it was oꝛ the hoꝛſemen coulde paſſe, and howe late it was in the nyght per the footemen coulde get ouer London bꝛydge, I aſſure you

you it was wonderous to beholde, the nomber was so great.

This the noble lady remained vnmaried vntill the tuesday folowing beyng the daie of the Epiphany: on whiche daie about. viii. of the clocke in the mornyng, his grace beyng appareled in a gowne of clothe of gold, raised with great flowers of syluer, furred with blacke Jennettes, his cote Crimosyn sattyn all to cutte and enbraudered and tied with great Diamondes, and a ryche coller about his necke, came solemply with his Nobilitie into the galery next the closettes, and there pausel.

Then the Lordes went to fetche the Ladie Anne, whiche was apparelled in a gowne of ryche cloth of gold set full of large flowers of great x and Orient Pearle, made after the Duche fassion rownde, her here hangyng doune, whiche was faire, yellow and long: On her head a Coronal of gold replenished with great stone, and set about full of braunches of Rosemary, about her necke and middle, Juelles of great valew and estimacion. In this apparell she goyng betwene the erle of Duerstayn & the Graunde Master Hostonden, whiche had the conduitie and ordre of the perfourmaunce of her mariage, with moste demure countinaunce and sad behauiour, passed thorough the kynges chamber, all the Lordes goyng before her till they came to the galery where the kyng was, to whom she made thre low obeysaunces & curtesies. Then the Archebishop of Caun- xx terbury receiued them & maried them together, and the erle of Duerstein did geue her: & about her mariyng ryng was writen: God send me wel to kepe.

When the Mariage was celebrate, they went hande in hande into the Kynges closet and there hard Masse and offered their tapers, and after Masse had wyne and spyces, and that done, the kyng departed to his chamber, and all the Ladies wayted on her to her chamber, the Duke of Norffolke goyng on the ryght hande, and the Duke of Suffolke on the lefte hande on her grace.

After nyne of the clocke, the kyng with a gowne of ryche Tyssue lyned wyth Crymosyn Veluet embroudered, came to his closet, and she in xxx her here in thesame apparell that she was Maried in, came to her Closet with her Seriant of Armes and all her Officers, lyke a Quene, before her. And so the kyng and she went openly on Procession and offered and dyned together. And after dyner she chaunged into a gowne lyke a mannes gowne, of Tyssue with longe sleues gyrte to her, furred wyth ryche Sables, her narrowe sleues were very costly, but on her head she had a cap as she ware on the saterdaie before with a cornet of laune, whiche cap was so ryche of Perle and Stone, that it was iudged to bee of greate valew. And after her fassion, her Ladies and Gentlewomen were appareled very riche and costly with chaynes of diuers fassyons, xl and in this apparell she went that nyght to Euensong, and after Supped with the kyng: and after Supper were Bankettes, Masks, and diuerse dysportes, tyll the tyme came that it pleased the kyng and her too take their rest.

The Sonday after were kepte solempne Justes, whiche muche pleased the sed the straungiers. On whiche daie she was appareiled after the Englishe fashiō, with a Frenche whode, whiche so set furth her beautie and good vysage, that euery creature reioysed to behold her.

When the erle of Duerstein, and other lordes and ladies which had geuen their attendaūce on her grace al that iorney, and had been highly feasted of the kyng & other nobles, very sūpteously, thei toke their leaue and had greate giftes geuen to theim, bothe in money and plate, and so returned toward their countrey, leauyng behynd them the erle of Waldocke, and diuerse other gentlemen and damoselles, which wer reteined x with her grace, till she wer better acquainted in the realme.

The fourth daie of Februarv next ensuyng, the kyng and she came to Westminster by water accompaignied with many nobles and prelates in Barges, on whom the Maior and his brethren in skarlet, and.xii. of the chief compaignies of the citee, all in Barges garnished with Banners, Penons, and targettes, richely couered and replenished with minstrelsy, gaue their attendaunce, and by the waye al the shippes shot their ordinaunce, and out of the tower was shot a greate peale of Gonnes, in goodly ordre.

The.xii. daie of Februarv, the Duke of Norffolke was sent in Am-xx bassade to the Frenche kyng, of whom he was well enterteigned, and in thende of thesame moneth, he returned agayn into Englande.

The.xxiii. daie of Februarv, wer foure readers sent for to the Starre Chamber, of euery house of the foure principall Innes of Courte one, where sat the lorde Chauncellor, the lorde Preuie seale, and.xiiii. of the chief of the kynges counsaill, and there the lorde Chauncellor declared, how sir Jhon Sheltō knight, had by the aduise of sir Humfrey Broune knight, the kynges Seriaunt, sir Nicholas Hare knight, the kynges counsailor, and Speaker of the Parliament, and Willyam Coigneiby Esquire, attornay of the Duchie of Lancastre, all beyng his seruauntes xxx and of his Fee, declared a fraudulent will of his landes, contrary to the statute made, anno.xxvii. to the greate hynderaunce of the kynges prerogatiue, and the true meanyng of thesaied statute, and also to the euill example of all other, that should defraude the lordes of their seignories Wherfore thesaied sir Humffrey Browne, and sir Nicholas Hare, wer that daie by the whole Counsayll of the kyng, dismissed of their Offices and seruice to the kyng, and sent to the tower: and within thre daies after was William Coignisby sent thether, where thei remaigned ten dayes, and after wer deliuered: but thei three lost all their offices, that thei had of the kyng.

xl The first Sondaie in Lent, Stephyn Gardiner Bishop of Winche- Stephē Gardiner Bishop of Wynchester.
ster, preached at Paules crosse, and there intreated of the Gospel of that daie: and in his sermon especially, he touched the article of Justificatiō, and so he handled it, that the third Sondaie in Lent next folowyng, one Doctor Barnes, of whom before you haue heard, reproued in thesayed pulpit at Paules, the doctryne of thesaied Bishoppe: and beeyng vexed Doctor Barnes.

with the Bishoppes Doctrine,he vsed many tauntes against hym, but one spectally whiche was this,that he saied if the Bishoppe and he, wer togethet in Rome with the Pope, he knewe that greate sommes of money,could not saue his life,but for the Bishoppe,there was no feare,but that a litle intreataunce, should purchase fauour enough for hym: By this he noted the Bishop to bee but a Papist, whiche the Bishop so vnquietly tooke,that he complained of Barnes to the kyng,and there had hym examined,and at the last by the kynges commaundement,he came to the bishoppes house,where likewise the bishoppe not onely examined hym,but also toke vpon hym to be his skolemaster,and as moste menne and specially suche,as muche knewe and least cause had to lye,reported, he prepared the tower for his skole house,and made suche a rod to beate his skoler,that he beate hym as small as ashes,or he left hym: although Barnes,with twoo other persones, that is to saie, Jherom and Garret, of whom in the next yere folowyng, ye shall here more, were by the Bishoppes procurement,appointed in the Easter weke folowyng,to preache at sainct Mary Spittle beside London,the three solempne sermons in one of the which sermons that Barnes made, Barnes openly and before al the people,asked the Bishop forgeuenes,for speaking so vntreuerently of him,in his former sermon,and he required the bishop if he forgaue hym,in token thereof to holde vp his hande,whiche like as it was long before he did, so it appered afterwarde to many, that it was but a counterfeat forgeuenes.

The.xii.daie of Aprill began a Parliament, and sir Nicholas Hare restored to the office of speaker, in the whiche was frely graunted,without contradicios,foure fiftenes & a Subsedy,of twoo.s.of landes, and xii.d.of goodes,toward the greate charges of Bulwarkes.

Thomas lord Crõwe'l created Erle of Essex.

The.xviii.daie of April,at Westminster was Thomas lorde Cromewell,created Erle of Esser,and made greate Chamberlain of England, whiche euer the Erles of Oxenford had, whiche promocions he enioyed xxx short tyme,as after in the next yere maie appere.

The xxxiii.yere.

A Justeh.

THe first daie of Maie, sir Jhõ Dudley, sir Thomas Seimour,sir George Carew sir Thomas Ponynges, sir Richard Cromewell,sir Anthony Kyngston knightes,enterprised a royall Justes,Tornay,and Barriers,whiche wer in white Veluet barded and based. The Justes began the first daie of Maie,the Tornay the third daie,and the Barriers the fifth which chalenge thei valiaũtly performed,agaynst all commers,and also they kept open houshold at Duresme place,and feasted the kyng and the Quene,and all the Lordes. Beside this,on Tewesdaie in the Rogacion weke,thei feasted all the Knightes and Burgesses of the Cõmon house: and the morowe after thei had the Maior, the Aldermen and all their wifes to dinner,and so the Fridaie thei brake vp houshold.

In this Parliament whtche began the.xviii.daie of April,as is afore rehersed,

reherſed, the religion of ſainct Jhones in Englande, whiche of moſt mé was named the knightes of the Rhodes, was diſſolued, wherof hearyng ſir Willyam Weſton knight, Pryor of ſainct Jhones, for thought died on the Aſſencion daie, beyng the fift daie of Maie.

In this monethe was ſent to the Tower, Doctor Wilſon, and docter Sampſon biſhop of Chicheſter, for releuyng of certain traiterous perſones, whiche denied the kynges ſupremacie: and for the ſame offence was one Richard Farmer Grocer of London, a riche and welthy man, and of good eſtimacion in the citee, committed to the Marſhall See, & after in Weſtminſter hall was arraigned and attainted in the Premunire, and loſt all his goodes.

Richard Farmer Grocer condempned in a Premunire.

The.xix.day of July, Thomas lorde Cromewel, late made erle of Eſſex, as before you haue hard, beyng in the counſail chãber, was ſodainly apprehended, and committed to the tower of London, the whiche many lamented, but mo reioyſed, and ſpecially ſuche, as ether had been religious men, or fauored religious perſones, for thei banqueted, and triumphed together that night, many wiſhyng that that daie had been ſeuen yere before, and ſome fearyng leaſt he ſhould eſcape, although he were impriſoned, could not be merry. Other who knewe nothyng but truth by hym, bothe lamented hym, and hartely praied for hym: But this is true that of certain of ỹ Clergie, he was deteſtably hated, & ſpecially of ſuche as had borne ſwynge, and by his meanes was put from it, for in deede he was a man, that in all his doynges, ſemed not to fauor any kynde of Popery, nor could not abide the ſnoffyng pride of ſome prelates, which vndoubtedly whatſoeuer els was the cauſe of his death, did ſhorten his life, and procured the ende that he was brought vnto: whiche was that the.xix.daie of the ſaied monethe, he was attaynted by Parliament, and neuer came to his anſwere, whiche lawe many reported, he was the cauſer of the makyng thereof, but the truthe thereof I knowe not: The Articles for whiche he died, appereth in the Record, where his attaynder is written, whiche are to long to bee here reherſed, but to conclude he was there attainted of hereſy, and high treaſon. And the.xxviii.daie of July was brought to the ſkaffold on the tower hill, where he ſaied theſe wordes folowyng.

Thomas lord Crõwel committed to the Tower.

The wordes of the Lorde Crõwell ſpoke at his death.

I am come hether to dye, and not to purge my ſelf, as maye happen, ſome thynke that I will, for if I ſhould ſo do, I wer a very wretche and miſer: I am by the Lawe condempned to die, and thanke my lorde God that hath appoynted me this deathe, for myne offence: For ſithence the tyme that I haue had yeres of diſcrecion, I haue liued a ſynner, and offended my Lorde God, for the whiche I aſke hym hartely forgeuenes. And it is not vnknowne to many of you, that I haue been a greate traueler in this worlde, and beyng but of a baſe degree, was called to high eſtate, and ſithẽs the tyme I came therunto, I haue offended my prince, for the whiche I aſke hym hartely forgeuenes, and beſeche you all to praie to God with me, that he will forgeue me. O father forgeue me. O sonne forgeue me, O holy ghost forgeue me: O thre persons in one God forgeue me. And now I prate you that be here, to beare me record, I die in the Catholike faithe, not doubtyng in any article of my faith, no nor doubtyng in any Sacrament of the Churche. Many hath sclaundered me, and reported that I haue been a beater, of suche as hath maintey- gned euill opinions, whiche is vntrue, but I confesse that like as God by his holy spirite, doth instruct vs in the truthe, so the deuill is redy to seduce vs, and I haue been seduced: but beare me witnes that I dye in the Catholicke faithe of the holy Churche. And I hartely desire you to praie for the kynges grace, that he maie long liue with you, in healthe and prosperitie. And after hun that his sone prince Edward, that good- ly ympe, maie log reigne ouer you. And once again I desire you to pray for me, that so long as life remaigneth in this flesh, I wauer nothyng in my faithe. And then made he his prater, whiche was long, but not so long, as bothe Godly and learned, and after committed his soule, into the handes of God, and so patiently suffered the stroke of the axe, by a ragged and Boocherly miser, whiche very vngoodly perfourmed the Office.

Sergeauntes Feaste.

On sainct Peters euen, was kept the Serieantes feast at sainct Jhos- nes with al plentie of victaile. At which feast wer made ten Serieaun- tes, three out of Greyes Inne, and three out of Lyncolnes Inne, and of euery of the Tempels twoo. At whiche feast were present, all the lordes and commons of the Parliament, beside the Maior and the Aldermen, and a greate nomber of the commons of the citee of London.

Quene Anne deuorced, and called Ladie Anne of cleue.

The morowe after Midsomer daie, the kyng caused the Quene to re- moue to Richemond, purposyng it to bee more for her health, open ayre and pleasure: but the first daie of July, certain Lordes came doune into the neither house, whiche expressly declared causes, that the mariage was not lawfull, and in conclusion, the matter was by the Conuocacion cle- rely determined, that the kyng might lawfully mary where he would, & so might she: and so were thei clerely deuorsed and seperated, and by the Parliament enacted and concluded, that she should bee taken no more as Quene, but called the Lady Anne of Cleue.

In this yere the lord Leonard Gray, brother to Thomas lord Mar- ques Dorset, beyng the kynges lieutenaunt in Ireland, practised son- dery feates for his profite, as in deliuerying treytors beeyng hostages, and especially his nephew Fitzgarard, brother to Thomas Fitz- garard before executed, and also caused suche of the Irishe menne, as he had intelligence with all, to inuade suche of the kynges frendes, whiche he fauored not: Wherefore the kyng sent for hym, and he mistrustyng and seyng no refuge wrote to the kynges enemies, to inuade thenglishe pale after his departure. And also he kept the kynges Treasure, to his awne vse, without reteignyng souldiours, accordyng to his commission whereupon, when he came to London, he was sent to the Tower.

The Lorde Graye sent to the Tower.

In July the Prince of Salerne, in the Realme of Napels, and the

lorde

lorde Lois Deuola, came into England to se the kyng whiche had high chere and greate rewardes, and so departed. And after them came Done Fredericke Marques of Padulla, brother to the Duke of Farrar, and the Prince of Macedonia, and the Marques of Tarra Noua, and Mounsire de Flagy and sixtene other gentlemen, from the Emperours Courte into Englande, to see the kyng, whiche on the daye of Mary Magdalene, came to the Court to Westminster, and wer highly feasted and well intertened, and with greate rewardes departed.

The twentie and eight daie of July, as you haue heard before in this x yere, was the Lorde Cromewell behedded, and with him likewise was behedded the Lorde Hongerford of Heytesbury, whiche certainly at the tyme of his death, semed to bee very vnquiet in mynde and rather in a frenesy then otherwise. Lorde Hungerford behedded.

The thirtie daie of July, were drawen on herdelles out of the Tower to Smithfeld, Robert Barnes Doctor in Diuinitee, Thomas Garard, and Wyllyam Jerome Bachelers in Diuinitee, Powell, Fetherston, and Abell. The firste three were drawen to the stake, there before set vp, and were burned: and the latter three drawen to the Galowes, likewise there set vp, & were hanged, behedded, and quartered. Here ye must note, xx that the first three, wer menne that professed the Gospell of Jesu Christ, and were Preachers thereof: But wherefore they were now thus cruelly executed, I knowe not, although I haue searched to knowe the truth. But this I finde in their atteindor, for ye muste vnderstande, that after thei had Preached at sainct Mary Spittle, as before I haue declared, Barnes for learnyng his lesson no better was cõmitted to the Skole-house before prepared, whiche was the Tower, where he was kepte, and neuer called to examinacion, till his rod that he should bee beaten withall, was made, whiche was a sharp and greate Fire in Smithfelde: and for compaignie sake, was sent to the Skolehouse with hym, the for xxx named Garet, and Jerome, whiche dronke all of one Cuppe. And as I saied before, thus muche I finde in their attaindor, that they were detestable and abhominable Heretickes, and that thei had taught many heresies, the nomber whereof was to greate in the attendor to be recited, so that there is not one alleged, whiche I haue often wondered at, that their heresies wer so many, and not one there alleged, as special cause of their deathe. And in deede at their deathe, thei asked the Shirifes, wherfore thei were condempned, who answered, they could not tell: but if I maie saie the truthe, moste menne said it was for Preachyng, agaynst xl the Doctryne of Stephen Gardiner Bishoppe of Wynchester, who chiefly procured this their death, God and he knoweth, but greate pitie it was, that suche learned menne should so bee cast a waie, without examinacion, neither knowyng what was laied to their charge, nor neuer called to answere. Barnes, Garrard & Jerom

The laste three whiche were Powell, Fetherston, and Abell, were put to death for Treason, and in their attaindor, is speciall mencion made Powell, Fetherston, and Abell.

of their offences, whiche was for the denying of the kynges supremacie, and affirmyng that his Mariage with the Lady Katheryne was good: These with other were the treasons.that thei wer attainted of.and suffered death for.

The fourthe daie of August Thomas Epsam, sometyme Monke of Westminster, whiche had been prisoner for treason, thre yeres and more in Newgate, came before the Justices of Gaole deliuery at Newegate, and would not aske the kynges pardon, nor be sworne to be true to him wherefore his Monkes garment, was plucked from his backe, and he repried till the kyng knewe his malicious obstinacie: and this was the last Monke that was seen in his clothyng in Englande. xx

In this monethe were certain Commissioners, sent by the kyng into Ireland, to inquire of the lorde Leonard Gray, whiche certefied diuerse articles against him, as ye shall here in the nexte yere folowyng.

Katheryn Hayward shewed as Quene.

The eight day of August, was the Lady Katheryn Hayward, nece to the duke of Norffolk, and daughter to the lord Edmond Hayward, shewed openly as Quene at Hampton Court, whiche dignitie she enioyed not long, as after ye shall here.

In ỹ latter ende of this moneth, was vniuersally throughout the realme greate death, by reason of newe hote agues and Flixes, and some Pestilence, in whiche season was suche a drought, that Welles and small Riuers were cleane dried, so that muche cattell died for lacke of water: and the Thamis was so shalowe, and the freshe water of so small strength, that the Salt water flowed aboue London bridge, till the raine had encreased the freshe waters. xxi Egerton hanged.

On the.xxii.daie of December, was Raufe Egerton seruaunt to the Lorde Audeley, lorde Chauncellor, hanged, drawen, and quartered, for counterfetyng of the kynges greate Seale, in a signet, whiche was neuer seen, and sealed a greate nomber of Licenses for Denizens, and one Thomas Harman that wrote theim, was executed: for the statute made the last parliament, sore bounde the straungiers, whiche wer not Denizens, whiche caused theim to offre to Egerton, greate sommes of money, the desire whereof caused hym to practise, that whiche brought hym to the ende, that before is declared. xxx

In the ende of this yere, the Frenche kyng made a strong Castle at Arde, and also a Bridge ouer into the Englishe pale, whiche bridge the Crewe of Calice did beate doune, and the Frenchmen reedified the same and the Englishemen bet it doune again. And after the kyng of Englād sent fiftene hundred woorke men, to wall and fortefie Guysnes, and sent with them fiue hundred men of warre, with capitaines to defende them. xl The noyes ranne in Fraunce, that there wer fiftie thousande Englishemenne, landed at Calice with greate ordinaunce: wherefore the Frenche kyng sent in all hast, the Duke of Vandosme, and diuerse other capitaines, to the Frontiers of Picardy, to defende thesame. The kyng of Englande hearyng thereof, sent the Erles of Surrey and Southhampton

and the lorde Russell, his greate Admirall, into the Marches of Calice, to set an orde there: and after them sent.CC. light horsemen, of the borders of Scotlande: whom the Frenchmen called stradiates, whiche lordes when they had set all thynges in a good orde, shortly returned.

In this yere was burned in Smithfeld, a child named Richard Wekins, this child passed not the age of.xv. yeres, and somewhat as he had heard some other folkes talke, chaunced to speake against the Sacrament of the aultar. This boye was accused to Edmond Boner Bishop of London, who so diligently folowed the accusacion, that he first found x the meanes to Indite hym, and then arreigned hym, & after burned him And at the tyme he was brought to the stake, he was taught to speake muche good, of the Bishop of London, and of the greate Charitee, that he shewed hym: and that he defied all heresies, and cursed the tyme that euer he knewe Doctor Barnes, for of hym had he learned that hereue, whiche he died for: The poore boye would for the sauegarde of his life haue gladly said that the twelue Apostles taught it hym, for he had not cared of whom he had named it, suche was his childishe innocencie and feare. But for this deede many spake and saied, that it was great shame for the Bishop, who thei saied ought rather to haue labored to haue his xx life, then to procure that terrible execucion, seyng that he was suche an ignorant soule, as knewe not what the affirmyng of an heresie was.

Richard Wekyns burnt.

You haue hard before in the beginning of this yere, that doctor Wilson, and doctor Sampson Bishop of Chichester, wer sent vnto the Tower: who now wer perdoned of the kyng, and set agayn at their libertie.

The.xxviii.yere.

xix In the beginnyng of this yere, v. priestes in Yorke shire began a new rebellio, with thassent of one Leigh a gētlemā, and.ix. temporall men, whiche were apprehended, & shortly after in diuerse places put in execucion, in so muche that on the.xvii. daie of Maie, thesaid Leigh & one Tatersall, and Thornton, wer drawen through London to Tiborne, and there wer executed. And sir Jhon Neuell knight was executed for thesame at Yorke.

A newe rebellion.

On the same daie was Magaret Countesse of Salisbury, which had been long prisoner in the Tower, behedded in the Tower, and she was the last of the right lyne and name, of Plantagenet.

The.ix. daie of June, wer Damport and Chapman, twoo of the kynges Garde, hanged at Grenewhich by the Friers Wall, for robberies in example of all other.

During this season, the commissioners that before wer sent into Irexl land, to inquire of the lord Gray, certified.xx, articles of high treason against hym, wherupon he was arreigned & tried by knightes, because he was a lorde of name, but no lorde of the parliamēt: howbeit he discharged the Jury, & confessed the inditement, & therupon was iudged, & after behedded at the tower hill, where he ended his life very quietly & godly.

The Lords Grayc condempned.

In this season was arreigned and condempned three gentlemen, called Mantell, Roydon, and Frowdes, and were hanged at saínct Thomas of Waterynges. Likewise was Thomas Fines Lorde Dacres of the Southe, arreigned before the Lorde Awdeley of Walden, then Chauncellour of Englande, and that daie high Stuard of thesame at Westminster, and there before thesaied Lorde Chauncellour and his Peres, he confessed the Inditement, and so had Iudgement to bee hanged. And so the twentie and nyne daie of June, beeyng Saínct Peters daie at after None, he was led on foote, betwene the twoo Shirifes of London, from the Tower through the citee to Tyborne, where he was strangled, as common murderers are, and his body buried in the chur- x che of saínct Sepulchres. The cause of the death of this noble manne, and the other gentlemen, was a murder of a symple manne, and an vnlawfull assemble made in Sussex. Greate moane was made for them al. but moste specially for Mantell, who was as wittie, and towarde a gentleman, as any was in the realme, and a manne able to haue dooen good seruice.

The Lorde Dacres of the South hãged

Submissions

This Sommer the kyng kepte his progresse to Yorke, and passed through Lyncolne Shire, where was made to hym an humble submission by the temporaltie, confessyng their offence, and thankyng the kyng for his pardon: and the Toune of Staunforde gaue the kyng twentie xx

And on Barnesdale met the kyng, the Archebishoppe of Yorke, with three hundred Priestes and more, and made a like submission, and gaue the kyng sixe hundred pounde. Like submission was made by the xxx

Quene Katheryne beheded.

At this tyme the Quene late before maried to the kyng called Quene Katheryne, was accused to the kyng of dissolute liuyng, before her mariage, with Fraunces Diram, and that was not secretely, but many knewe it. And sithe her Mariage, she was vehemently suspected with Thomas Culpeper, whiche was brought to her Chamber at Lyncolne, xl in August laste, in the Progresse tyme, by the Lady of Rocheforde, and were there together alone, from a leuen of the Clocke at Nighte, tyll foure of the Clocke in the Morning, and to hym she gaue a Chayne, and a riche Cap. Upon this the kyng remoued to London, and she was sent to Sion, and there kepte close, but yet serued as Quene. And for the offence

offence confessed by Culpeper and Diram, thei wēre put to death at Tiborne, the tenth daie of December. And the twentie and two daie of the same monethe, were arreigned at Westminster, the lorde Wyllyam Hawarde and his wife, which Lorde Wyllyam was Uncle to the Quene, Katheryne Tilney whiche was of counsaill of her hauyng to dooe with Diram, Elizabeth Tilney, Boulmer, Restwould, the Quenes women, and Walgraue, and Wyllyam Asby, and Damport gentle menne, and seruauntes to the olde Duches of Norffolke, and Margaret Benet a Butter wyfe, all indited of misprision, for concealyng the euill demeanor of the Quene, to the slaunder of the kyng, and his succession: all thei confessed it, and had Judgement to perpetuall prison, and to lose their goodes, and the proffite of their lādes, duryng their lifes: howbeit shortely after, diuerse of theim wer delinered by the kynges Pardon.

The sixtene date of January the Parliament began, in the which the Lordes and Commons assented, to desire of the kyng certain petitions. 1.
First, that he would not vexe himself, with the Quenes offence, and that she and the lady Rocheford, might be attainted by Parliament.

Also, because of protractyng of tyme, whiche the more should bee to his vnquietnes, that he would vnder his greate Seale, geue his royall 2. assent, without tariyng the ende of the Parliament.

Also, that Duram and Culpeper, before attainted by the commō law 3. might also be attainted by Parliament.

Also, that Agnes Duches of Norffolke, and Katheryn Countesse of Bugewater her daughter, whiche wete for concealyng thesaied offence committed to the Tower & Indited of misprision, & the lorde William and other, arreigned of thesame, might be likewise attainted. 4.

Also, that whosoeuer had spoken or doen any act, in the detestacion of her abhominable liuyng, should be pardoned.

To the whiche peticions the kyng graunted, satyng that he thanked the Commons, that thei tooke his sorowe to bee theirs: Whereupon tye Quene and the Lady Rochefordе, were attainted by bothe the houses. And on Saterdaie beyng the leuenth daie of Febzuary, the kyng sent his royall assent, by his greate Seale: and then all the Lordes were in their Robes, and the Common house called vp, and there the acte redde, and his assent declared. And so on the thirtene daie, these twoo Ladies were behedded on the Grene, within the Tower with an axe, and confessed their offences, and died repentaunt. Quene Katherin and the Lady Rocheford beyeded.

At this Parliament the kyng was Proclaymed kyng of Irelande, The kyng Proclaymed kyng of Irelande. whiche name his predecessors neuer had, but wer alwaies called lordes of Irelande.

In the beginnyng of Marche died sir Arthur Plantagenet biscount lisle bastard to kyng Edward the fourth, in the tower of London vnattainted, when he should haue been deliuered and put at his liberty. And

the

the twelue daye of thesaied moneth, sir Jhon Dudley sonne and heire to the saied Loyde Lisles wife was at Westmynster created Uiscount Lisle.

George Ferreys.

The Parliament sittyng, in Lent one George Ferreis Bourgeoys for the toune of Plimmouth, was arested in London vpon a condempnacion, at the suite of one White. Whereupon the Seriaunt at armes, of the Common house, was sent to the Counter in Bredestrete to fetche hym: but the Clerkes would not deliuer hym, wherfore the Serieaunt and his manne, would haue brought him awaie perforce. Diuerse of the Shirifes officiers there present, withstoode the Serieaunt, so that they fell to quarellyng, and the Serieauntes man was sore hurte. After the Fraie ended, the Shirifes of London whose names wer Rowland Hill, and Henry Suckely came to the Counter, and first denied the deliuerye of the prisoner, howbeit afterward they deliuered hym. But this matter was so taken in the Common house, that the Shirifes and the Clercke, and fiue Officiers, and the partie plaintife were sent to the tower, and there laye twoo daies, and were deliuered agayn by the Speaker and Common house.

Although I haue not vsed muche to declare of priuat thynges doen, in other forrein Realmes, yet will I now tell of one because the thyng was so reported to me, and the matter it self so writtē and deliuered me, that I must nedes iudge it to be a truthe, and the like in al this woorke is not expressed, therfore I purposed woorde by woorde, as it was writen vnto me, here to expresse it. The matter is of a certein Gentleman in Scotlande, who for contemning of the Bisshop of Romes vsurped authoritie, and for praisyng and commendyng the affaires and procedinges of Englande, and reprouyng the naughtie life of the Scottishe Clergie, was, as an hereticke accused, and conuented before diuerse of theim, as after maie appere, there to make answere to suche Articles as should bee obiected against hym. He knowyng their accustomed fauor, fled from theim into Englande. Agaynst whom after he was gone, they proceded in suche sort, as by this that followeth whiche is the true copie of the processe maie appere.

Sir Jhon Borthwike.

Sir Jhon Borthwike, commonly called Capitain Borthwike, accused, suspected, defamed and conuicted by witnesses, whiche were men of suche honestie, against whom could none exception bee taken, the yere of our lorde, a thousande fiue hundred and fourtie, the .xxviii. day of May in the Abbay of sainct Androwes, in the presence of the moste worshipfull fathers in Christ, Gawyn Archebishoppe of Glasgue, Chauncellor of Scotlande, William of Aberdowyn, Henry Bishoppe of Galloway and of the Kynges Chapell of Sterlyng, Jhon Bishoppe of Brechyn. William bishop of Dunblan: Andrew Abbot of Melros, George Abbot of Dumfermelyng, Jhon Abbot of Paslay, Jhon Abbot Lundros, Robert Abbot of Kyllos, and Willyam Abbot of Culros: Malcolme Prior of Whitytern, and Jhon Prior of Pettywerin. Master Alexander der Balfour Vicar of Kylmane, and Rector of thē Vniuersitie of sainct Androwes. And afore the cunnyng Masters, Master Jhon Mair, and Walter Peter Chapilain, professors, and doctors of Diuinitee. S. Andrewes, & Jhon Patersone, vicar of thesame couent. And also before x the noble mightie & right worshipfull lordes, George Erle of Huntley, James erle of Arrain, Willyam erle Marshall, William erle of Montrosse, Malcolme lorde Flemmyng, Chamberlain of Scotlande, Jhon lorde Lindesay, Jhon lorde Erskyn, George lorde Seiton, Hugh lorde Symeruall, sir Jaines Homilton of Finnard, Walter lorde of. S. Jhones of Torphecten knightes, master James Foules of Colynton clerke of the Register, to our moste souereigne Lorde the kyng and many and diuerse and sondery other lordes, barons, and honest persones, required to be witnesses in the premisses, doth affirme that he hath holdē these errors folowyng, openly taught them, and instructed them, that is to sate.

xx First, that our moste holiest lorde the Pope, the Vicar of Jesu Christ, 1. cannot haue nor exercise, any more aucthoritie emongest christians, then any other bishop or priest.

Secondly, that Indulgences and Pardons, graunted by our moste 2. holiest lorde the Pope, is of no value strēgth and efficacie, but vtterly to the abusion of the people, and the deceiuyng of our soules.

Thirdly, he sated that the Pope was a Simoniack, euer sellyng gyftes, and that all priestes might mary. 3.

Fourthly, that al Englishe heresies (as thei are called) or at the least, 4. the greater and better part obserued by Englishemen, hath been and is xxx good, and to be obserued by christen men, as true & consonant to the law of God: in so much ẏ he perswaded very many people to accept thesame.

Fiftly, that the people of Scotlāde, & the clergie therof hath been and 5.
is vtterly execated and blinded, by affirmaciō that thei had not the true catholike faith, affirmyng and opēly saiyng, that his faith was of more value & better, then all the Ecclesiasticalles, of the realme of Scotland.

Item, likewise accordyng vnto tholde opinions, of Jhō Wiclief and 6.
Hus, hereſiarches and Master heretikes, condempned in the counsail of Constantine, he hath affirmed and farther declared, that Ecclesiasticall xl persones, should not possesse, haue nor enioye, any temporall possessions neither exercise iurisdiccīō, or any kynd of aucthoritie in temporall matters, neither vpon their awne subiectes, but that all should vtterly bee taken awaie from them, as it is in these dates in Englande.

Item, he hath sated, holden, and affirmed falsely, and contrary to the 7. honor, state, and reuerence, of our sacred kynges maiestye of Scotlande that our kynges maiestie of Scotland, the moste clereſt defendor of the Christian

chzistian faith, would contrary to the lawe and libertie of the holy churche, vendicat and chalenge vnto his pzиuate vses, all ecclesiasticall possessions, landes, and yerely rentes, geuē by his foze fathers, and also by hymselfe, and to infozce this matter he hath also by wzityng perswaded our moste noble kyng, with all his endeuoz.

8. Item, he hath willed and sought, and many times hath desired harte-ly, that the Churche of Scotlande should come, and be brought to the-same poynt and ende, and to suche like fal, as the Churche of England, is now come to in deede.

9. Item, he hath saied, affirmed, and taught openly, the Cannon lawes and the Decrees of our holy fathers, appzoued by the Catholike and apostolike Churche, is of no valewe noz strength, bzyngyng in and affir-myng thesame, foz to be made and set furth, cōtrary to the lawe of God.

10. Itē, he hath saied holden & affirmed many waies ẏ no religiō should be kept, but that should bee abolished and destroyed, and to bee as it is now destroyed in Englande, and vilepending all holy Religion, affir-myng it to bee an abusion of the people, whose clothyng sheweth manifestly, to be defozmed mōsters, hauyng no vtilitie oz holines, bzyngyng in by this and perswadyng, asmuche as in hym lay, all adherentes of his opinion, that all the religion in this realme of Scotlande, should be destroyed and vtterly taken awaie, to the moste greatest losse of the Catholike Churche, and to the deminishyng of Chzisten religion.

11. Item, it is plainly knowen by lawfull pzobacions, that thesame Jhō Bozthwike, hath had and actually hath, diuerse bokes suspect of heresy dampned, aswell by the Papall, as by the Regall and ozdinary auctho-rities fozbidden (that is to saie) fitste of all the newe Testament in Englishe, pzinted in Englande, Decolampadius, Melancthon, & diuerse tractes of Erasmus, and other cōdempned heretickes, and also the boke of Vnio Dissidentium, conteinyng moste manifest errozs, and that he hath red, studied, and communicated, and pzesented thesame to other men, aswell openly as pziuatly, and that he hath instructed and taughte, very many Chzistians in thesame, to the effect, to turne them from the very true and Catholike faithe.

12. Item, it is openly knowen, thesame Jhon Bozthwike, to bee so stub-burne in all these fozesaid errozs and heresies, and to haue susteined and taught thesame, with suche an indurate mynde, so that he would not declyne by no maner of meanes frō thesame, foz diuerse of his frendes, and persons whiche loued hym, and would haue had hym conuett, to the catholike faithe, neither would he consent to theim in any wyse, but rather vnmoueably persist in his errozs.

13. Foz the whiche said articles, and many other errozs holden, saied, pu-blicated and taught by hym and (as the common voyce is) which he stil holdeth and teacheth, the fozsaid Jhon Bozthwike to bee taken, holden, and coumpted as an Heretike, and a Master heretike, and as a very euil iudger of the holy faithe,

Therfoze,

Therfore we Dauid of the title of sainct Stephyn in the mount Celo of the holy churche of Rome priest Cardinall, Archebyshop of saint Androwes, Primate of this whole realme of Scotlande and of the Apostolike seate Legate create, syttyng in our seate of iustice in nature of Iudges, the holy Euangelistes of God set afore vs, that our iudgementes procede from the sight of God, and our iyes must loke to equitie, hauing onely God and the catholike faith afore our iyes, the name of God being called vpon and folowyng the counsayll aswell of the deuines as lawyers, this foresaied Jhon Borthwike called cayptain Borthwike condempned of the foresaid heresies, accused, suspected and infamed by lawfull probacions had and brought against hym in all the foresaides, convicted, cited, called and not appearyng but absentyng hym selfe lyke a runaway: Therfore let vs thinke, pronounce, and declare hym to be convicted and to be punyshed worse then an heretike. And further more all his mouables and vnmouables by whatsoeuer title they be gotten and in whatsoeuer parties they lye, they to be geuen to the secular power. And all offices had by dower or by his wyfe to be confiscat and spent to the vse and custome of the lawe. Also we do declare by these presentes the image of the foresayed Jhon to be made to the likenes of hym, and to be brought into the metrapolitan Churche of sainct Andrewes and after that to the market crosse of the citie, there to be brent as a sygne & a memorall of his condemnyng to the example and feare of all other. Likewise we do declare that if thesame Jhon be taken within our lyberties to be punyshed accordyng to the lawe of heretikes. Also we warne all true beleuers in Christ of whatsoeuer state and condicion they bee, that they from this date do not receiue or admit into their houses, tentes, villages or townes Jhon Borthwike to eate or to drinke or to preferre any kynd of humanitie in paine of such like punishment: Further, if there be any founde culpable in these foresaied that they shalbe accused as fautours and maintayners of heretiques, and they shalbe punished accordyng to the law. This sentence red and made and put in writyng in the Metrapolitan Churche of sainct Androwes we sittyng in our Tribunals seate, the yere of our Lord 1540. the xxviii. day of Maye drawen out of the Regester made against heretikes and agreyng with the sentence of Jhon Borthwike.

The sentence or iudgement.

¶ The.xxxiiij. yere.

N this yere James erle of Desmond came to the kyng and was honorably entertained & wel rewarded. And in September the great Onele came to the kyng to Grenewyche, where he and a captaine of the North partes of Irelande called Magannylle and the Bysshop of Cloar, made their submission in writing, confessyng their offences, and promisyng to serue the kyng and his heires truely: whiche submission by the kyng considered, he vpon the first daie of October created at Grenewyche the said sir Eustace Onele called greate Onele (because he was the chiefe of his linage called Onele) Erle of Tereowen, commonly called Tyron and gaue hym a great chayne, and made Magaunylle and his cosyn knightes and gaue them both chaynes, and he gaue to the lord Mathias sonne to the erle, the Barony of Duncan. x

At this season the kynges Maiestie prepared for warre into Scotlande: the cause why this warre was made is moste manifestly declared by that whiche foloweth, which the kynges Maiestie published by this title, A declaracion conteignyng the iust causes and consideracions of this present vvarre vvith the Scottes: vvherin also appeareth the true and ryght title that the kynges moste royall maiestie hath to his souereigntie of Scotland. And it begynneth thus. xx

A declaracion of the cause of warre with Scotland set forth by the kyng.

Kyng now enforced to the warre, whiche we haue alwayes hytherto so muche abhorred and fled, by our neighbour and Nephieu the kyng of Scottes, one, who aboue all other, for our manifolde benefites towardes him, hath moost iust cause to loue vs, to honour vs, and to reioyce in our quietnes: we haue thought good to notifie vnto the worlde his doynges and behauour in the prouocacion of this warre, and likewise thee meanes and wayes by vs vsed to exchue and aduoide it, and the iust and true occasions, wherby we be now prouoked to prosecute the same, & by vtteraunce and diuulgyng of that matter, to disburden some part of our inwarde displeasure and griefe, and the circumstaunces knowen, to lament openly with the worlde, the infidelitie of this tyme, in whiche thynges of suche enormitie do vprest out and appeare. xxx

The kyng of Scottes our Nephieu and neighbour, whom we in hys youth and tender age preserued and maintained from the greate daunger of other, and by our authoritie and power conduced him safely to the realll possession of his estate, he nowe compelleth and forceth vs for preseruacion of our honoure and right to vse our puissaunce and power against hym. The like vnkyndnes hath bene heretofore shewed by other in semblable cases against Goddes lawe, mannes lawe and all humanitie: but the oftener it chaunceth, the more it is to be abhorred, and yet in the persones of princes for the raritie of theim can so happē but seldome, as it hath nowe come to passe. xl

It hath bene very rarely and seldome sene before, that a kyng of Scottes fo. Duo.

Scottes hath had in mariage a daughter of Englande: We can not, ne will not reprehende the kyng our fathers act therein, but lament and bee sorry it toke no better effect. The kyng our father in that matter myn̄ded loue, amitie, and perpetuall frendshyp betwene the postery of both, which how sone it fayled, the death of the kyng of Scottes, as a due punishmēt of God for his iniust inuasion into this our realme, is and shalbe a perpetuall testimony to their reproche for euer, and yet in that present tyme could not the vnkyndnesse of the father extinguyshe in vs the naturall loue of our Nephieu his sonne, beyng then in the miserable age of tender youth: but we than forgetting the displeasure that should haue worthyly prouoked vs to inuade that realme, norysshed and brought vp oure Nephieu to achieue his fathers possession and gouernement, wherein he nowe so vnkyndly vseth and behaueth hym towardes vs, as he compelleth vs to take armour and warre against hym.

It is specially to be noted, vpon what groundes, & by what meanes we be compelled to this warre, wherein among other is our chiefe griefe and displeasure, that vnder a coloure of fayre speche and flatteryng wordes, we be in dedes so iniured, contempned and dispised, as we ought not with sufferaunce to pretermitte and passe ouer. Wordes, writinges, letters, messages, ambassates, excuses, allegacions, could not more pleasantly, more gently, ne more reuerently be deuised and sent, then hath bene made on the kyng of Scottes behalfe vnto vs, and euer we trusted the tree would bryng forth good fruite, that was of the one partie of so good a stocke, and continually in apparaunce put forth so faire buddes: and therfore would hardely beleue or geue eare to other, that euer alleged the dedes of the contraty, beyng neuertheless thesame dedes so manyfest, as we must nedes haue regarded theim, had we not bene so lothe to thynke euyll of our Nephieu, whom we had so many wayes bounde to be of the best sorte toward vs. And therefore hauyng a message sent vnto vs the yere past from our saied Nephieu, and a promyse made for the repairing of thesaid kyng of Scottes vnto vs to Yorke, and after great preparacion on our part made therfore, thesame metyng was not onely disappointed, but also at our beyng at Yorke, in the lieu thereof, an inuasion made by oure saied Nephieu his subiectes into our realme, declaryng an euident contempt and dispite of vs: We were yet glade to impute the defaute of the metyng to the aduise of his counsaill, and the inuasion to the lewdnes of his subiectes: And accordyng thereunto gaue as benigne & gentle audience to suche ambassadours, as repaired hither at Christmas afterwarde, as if no suche causes of displeasure had occurred, specially consyderyng the good woordes, swete woordes, pleasaunt woordes, excusones proponed by thesaied Ambassadours, not onely to excuse that was past, but also to persuade kyndnes and perfite amitie to ensue. And albeit the kyng of Scottes hauyng contrary to the article of the league of amitie, receiued and enterteigned suche rebelles, as were of the chiefe and principle, in stirryng the insurrecton in the North against vs wyth retulall before tyme, vpon request made to restore thesame: yet neuertheless vpon offer made thesayde Ambassadors, to sende cõmission to the boxdures, to detetmyne the debates of the confines in thesame, wyth so great a pretence of amitie and so fayre woxdes as could be in speche desired: we were content for the tyme to forbeare too presse them ouer extremely in the matier of rebelles. Albeit we neuer remitted thesame, but desyrous too make triall of our sayde Nephieu in some correspondence of dedes, condescended to thee sendyng of commissioners to the boxders, whyche to our greate charge we dyd, and thee kynge of Scottes our sayde Nephieu the semblable. Where after great trauaile made by our commissioners, this fruit ensued, that beyng for our parte chalenged a piece of our grounde, plainely vsurped by the Scottes, and of no greate value, beyng also for thesame shewed suche euidence, as more substancial, more autentique, more plaine and euident, can not be brought furth for any part of grounde wythin our realme. Thesame was neuertheless by theym denyed, refused, and the euidence onely for thys cause reiected, that it was made (as they alleged) by Englishemen. And yet it was soo auncient, as it could not be counterfaite nowe, and the value of the grounde so lytle, and of so small wayte, as no manne would haue attempted to falsifie for suche a matter. And yet thys denial beyng in thys wyse made vnto our commissioners, they neuertheless by our commaundement departed as frendes fro the cõmissioners of Scotland, takyng order as hath been accustomed for good rule vpon the boxders in the meane tyme.

After whiche their recesse, the lorde Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches of Scotlãd, made proclamacion for good rule, but yet added therwith, ỹ the boxderers of Scotlande should withdrawe their goodes from the boxderers of Englande: And incontinently after the Scotishe men boxderers, the fowretth of July, entred into our realme sodaynly, & spoyled our subiectes, contrarye to our leagues, euen after suche extremitie, as it had been in tyme of open warre. Whereat we muche meruailed, and were compelled therefore to furnishe our boxder wyth a garison for defence of thesame. Where vpon the kyng of Scottes sent vnto vs James Leyrmouth, Master of his household, wyth letters deuised in the moste pleasaunt maner, offeryng redresse and reformacion of all attemtates. And yet neuertheless at the entry of the sayde Leyrmouth into Englande, a great nombre of the Scottes, then not looked for made a forrey into our boxders, to the great annoyaunce of our subiectes, and to their extreme detriment, wherewith and wyth that vnsemely dissimulacion, we were not a litle moued, as reason would we should. And yet did we not finally so extremely persecute and continue our sayd displeasure, but that we gaue benigne audience to the sayde Leyrmouth, and suffered ourselfe to be somewhat altred by hys woxdes and fayre promises miſes, tendyng to the perſwaſion that we euer deſired, to fynde the kyng of Scottes ſuche a Nephieu vnto vs, as our proximitie of bloud, wyth our gratuitie vnto hym, did require.

In the meane tyme of theſe laſte woordes, the dedes of the borders were as extreme as myght be, and our ſubiectes ſpoyled: and in a roade made by Sir Robert Bowes for a reuenge therof, theſame Sir Robert Bowes with many other taken priſoners, and yet deteined in Scotland, without puttyng them to fine and raũſome, as hath be euer accuſtomed. And beyng at theſame tyme aſſurcaunce made on both ſydes at the ſuite x of theſaid Leyrmouth for a ſeaſon: the Scottes ceaſſed not to make ſundry inuaſions into our realme in ſuch wiſe, as we were compelled to forget fayre woordes, and onely to conſider the kyng of Scottes dedes, whiche appeared vnto vs of that ſorte, as they ought not for our dutie in defence of our ſubiectes, ne could not in reſpect of our honour, be paſſed ouer vnreformed: and therefore put in a readineſſe our armye, as a due meane wherby we might atteigne ſuche a peace, as for the ſafegard of our ſubiectes we be bounde to procure.

After whiche preparacion made, and knowledge had therof, the kyng of Scottes ceaſſed not to vſe his accuſtomed meane of fayre woordes, xx whiche in our naturall inclinacion wrought eftſones their accuſtomed effect, euermore deſirous to fynde in the kyng of Scottes ſuche a regard and reſpect to be declared in dedes as the correſpondence of naturall loue in the Nephieu to ſuche an Vncle, as we haue ſhewed our ſelf towardes hym, doth require. Wherfore vpon newe requeſt and ſuite made vnto vs, we determined to ſtaie our armye at Yorke, appoyntyng the duke of Norffolke our Lieutenaunt, the lorde Preuiſeale, the Byſhop of Durcham, and the Maſter of our horſes, there to commen, treate and conclude with the Ambaſſadours of Scotland, for an amitie and peace vpõ ſuche condicions, as by reaſon and equitie were indifferent, wherby the xxx warre might be eſchued, beyng by ſundry inuaſion of the Scottes then open and manyfeſt.

In this communicacion betwene our and theyr commyſſioners, after diuers degrees of commiſſions, ſhewed by the Scottes, and finally one, that was by our commiſſioners allowed, matiers were propoſed for cõcluſion of amitie, nothyng difficile or hard on our part, but ſo agreable to reaſon, as the commiſſioners of Scotlande ſayed, they doubted not, but if it myght be brought to paſſe, that the kyng of Scottes our Nephieu might haue a metyng with vs, all matters ſhould eaſely be compoſed and determined. Whereupon they left ſpeakyng of any attycles xl of amitie, and the ambaſſadours of Scotland made much outward ioy in communicacion of metyng, thei ſhewed theimſelfe in woordes, faſſion & behauour muche to delight in it, to reioyce in it, and therewith thought it eaſy and facile to be concluded and accompliſhed, and for their part they toke it then for a thyng paſſed, a thyng concluded, and moſte certaine to take effect, and onely deſired ſyx daies to obteigne aunſwere from their

Master, and our armye for that tyme to stay and go no further: Where-vnto our commissioners then agreed.

After these. vi. dayes was sent a Commission out of Scotland, with power to conclude a metyng precysely at suche a place, as they knewe well we would not, ne could not in wynter obserue and kepe, wherewith when our Commissioners were miscontent, the Ambassadours of Scotland to relieue that displeasure, and to tempre the matter, whereby too wynne more tyme, shewed forth their instruccions, wherein libertie was geuen to the Ambassadours to excede their commission in the appointment of the place, and to consent to any other by our commissioners thought conuenient, whiche maner of procedyng, when our commissioners refused, allegyng that they would not conclude a metyng with men, hauyng no commission therevnto: The Ambassadours of Scotland vpon pretence to send for a more ample and large cõmission agreable to their instruccions for appointment of the place, obteined a delay of other syxe dayes, to send for thesayd ample commission without restraint of place. And after those syxe dayes they brought forth a newe commission, made in a good fourme, and without exception: But therewith they shewed also newe instruccions, conteinyng suche a restrainte as the former commission did conteine, so as the libertie geuen to the commissioners in the commissiõ was now at the last remoued and taken away by the instruccions, with addicion of a speciall charge to the Ambassadours not to excede the same.

Bodin. 604.

And thus fyrst the Ambassadours of Scotlãd semed to haue wyl and desire to conclude a place semely and conuenient, whiche for want of cõmission they myght not do, and at the last might haue cõcluded a meting by vertue of their commission, and then for feare of the cõmaundement in their second instruccions they durst not. And so they shewed their first instruccions partly to excuse their kyng; who should seme secretely to wyll more, than in the commission he did openly professe.

And than with an ample commission from the kyng, they shewed their secrete instruccions for defence of themselfe, why they proceded not according to their commission, not carying howe muche they charged therin their kyng, whose faulte they disclosed to discharge theim selfe, trusting that by benefite of the Wynter approchyng, and the tyme lost in their communicacion, their Master should be defended against our power for this yere, without doyng for their part that by honoure, tyght, lawe, and league they be oblyged and bound to do. And in this meane tyme our subiectes taken prisoners in Scotland could not be deliuered vpon any raunsome, contrary to all custome and vsage of the borders in the tyme of peace and warre, and in this meane tyme stayed a greate part of our armie already prested, and in our wages to go forward. In this tyme Ambassadours (as ye haue heard) assembled to talke of an amitie and cõcluded it not. The treatyng of amitie was put ouer by communicacion of a metyng.

The

The communicacion of meting was so handled by alteracion of commission and instruccions on their behalfe, as it appereth a plaine deuise onely excogitate for a delay, whiche hath geuen vs lyght, whereupon more certainly to iudge the kyng of Scottes inwarde affeccion towardes vs, whose dedes and woordes well wayed and considered, doeth vs plainely to vnderstande, how he hath continually laboured to abuse vs with swete and pleasaunt woordes, and to satisfie the appetites of other at home and abrode with his vnkynde and displeasaunt dedes. In his woordes he professeth an insoluble amitie, he allegeth kynred, he knowxlegeth benefites, only the faulte is that he speaketh an other language to all the woorlde in dedes, and thereby so toucheth vs in honoure and denegacion of iustice, as we bee inforced and compelled to vse the sworde, whiche God hath put in our hand as an extreme remedy, wherby to obteigne both quietnes for our subiectes, and also that is due vnto vs by right, pactes, and leagues.

We haue paciently suffered many delusions, and notably the last yere when we made preparacion at yorke for his repaire to vs: But should we suffre our people and subiectes to be so oft spoyled without remedy? This is done by the Scottes whatsoeuer their worde be. Should we xx suffre our rebelles to be deteigned contrary to the leagues without remedy? This is also done by theim whatsoeuer their woordes be.

Should we suffre our land to be vsurped contrary to our most plaine euidence, onely vpon a wille pryde, and arrogancie of the other partie? This is done by them whatsoeuer their woordes be. And all these be ouer presumpteously done against vs, & geue suche signification of their arrogancie, as it is necessary for vs to oppresse it in the beginning, lest thei should gather further courage to the greater displeasure of vs & our posteritie hereafter. And yet in the intreatyng of this matter, if we had not euidently perceiued the lacke of suche affeccion as proximitie of bloud xxx should require, we would much rather haue remitted these iniuries in respect of proximitie of bloud to our Nephieu, then we did heretofore the inuasion of his father. But considerying we be so surely ascertained of the lacke therof, & that our bloud is there frorne with the cold ayre of Scotland, there was neuer prince more violently compelled to warre then we be, by the vnkynde dealyng, vniust behauour, vnprincely demeanour of him that yet in nature is our Nephieu, and in his actes and dedes declareth hymselfe not to be moued there with, ne to haue suche ernest regarde to the obseruacion to his pactes and leagues, ne suche respect to the interteinement of the administracion of iustice, as naturall equitie bynxl deth, and conseruacion of amitie doeth require: whiche we muche lament and be sorry for, and vse nowe our force and puissaunce against hym, not for reuengeaunce of our priuate displeasure (beyng so often deluded as we haue bene) but for recouery of our right, the preseruacion of our subiectes from iniuries, & the obseruation of suche leagues as haue passed betwene vs, fyrmely trustyng, that almightie God vnder whome wee

reigne, woll assist and aide our iust procedinges herein to the furtheraũce and aduauncement of the right, whiche we doubt not shall euer preuaile against wrong, falsehead, deceipte and dissimulacion.

Hytherto it appeareth how this present warre hath not proceded of any demaunde of our right of superiorite, whiche the kyng of Scottes haue alwaies knowleged by homage and fealtie to oure progenitours euen from the beginnyng: But this warre hath bene prouoked and occasioned vpõ present matter of displeasure, present iniurie, present wrõg ministred by the Nephieu to the vncle moste vnnaturally, and supported contrary to the desertes of our benefites moste vnkyndly. If we had x mynded the possession of Scotlande, & by the mocion of warre to attaine thesame, there was neuer kyng of this realme had more opportunitie in the minoritie of our Nephieu. Ne in any other realme a prince that hath more iust title, more euident title, more certain title, to any realme that he can claime, then we haue to Scotlãd, not deuised by pretence of mariage, nor imagined by couenaunt, or contriued by inuencion of argument, but lineally descended from the beginning of that estate establyshed by our progenitours, and recognised successiuely of the kynges of Scotland by dedes, woordes, actes, and writynges continually almoste without interrupcion, or at the least intermission, till the reigne of our xx progenitour Henry the. vi. in whose tyme the Scottes abused the ciuyle warre of this realme, to their licence & boldnes, in omitting of their duty: whiche for the proximitie of bloud betwene vs, we haue bene slacke to require of them, beyng also of our selfe inclined to peace, as we haue euer bene alwayes glad, rather without preiudice to omitte to demaunde our right, if it might conserue peace, than by the demaundyng therof to bee sene to moue warre, specially against our neighbour, against our Nephieu, against him, whom we haue preserued from daungier, and in such a tyme as it were expedient for all Christendome to be vnite in peace, wherby to be the more able to resist the common enemy the Turke. xxx

But for whatsoeuer cõsideracions we haue omitted to speake hytherto of the matter, it is neuertheles true, that the kynges of Scottes haue alwayes knowleged the kynges of England superiour lordes of the realme of Scotland, and haue done homage and fealtie for thesame.

This appeareth fyrst by history, written by suche as for confirmacion of the truthe in memory, haue truely noted and signified thesame. Secondly it appeareth by instrumentes of homage made by the kynges of Scottes, and diuers notable personages of Scotland, at diuers and sundry tymes sealed with their seales, and remaynyng in our treasory. Thirdly it appeareth by Regesters and Recordes iudicially and autenxl tiquely made, yet preserued for confirmaciõ of thesame. So as the matter of title beyng moste playne, is furnyshed also with all maner of euydences for declaracion therof.

Fyrst as concernyng histories, whyche be called witnesses of tymes, the the lyght of truthe, and the life of memory, & finally the conuenient waye and meane, whereby thynges of antiquitie may be brought to mennes knowlege, they shew as playnly this matter as could be wyshed or required, with suche a consent of writers, as could not so agree vppon an vntruthe, conteignyng declaracion of suche matter as hath moste euydent probabilitie and apparaunce. For as it is probable and lykely, that for the better administracion of iustice amonges rude people, two or mo of one estate might be rulers in one countrey vnite as this Ile is: so is it probable and likely, that in the begynnyng it was so ordred for auoydyng dissencion, that there shoulde one superior in ryght, of whom the sayd estates should depend. Accordyng whereunto we rede how Brute, of whom the Realme then called Britayn tooke fyrst that name (beyng before that tyme inhabited with Giauntes, people without order or cyuilitie) had thre sonnes, Locrine, Albanact, and Camber, and determinyng to haue the whole Ile within the Occean sea to be after gouerned by theim thre, appointed, Albanact to rule that now is called Scotland, Camber the parties of Wales, and Locrine that nowe is called England: vnto whom as being the elder sonne, the other two brethern should do homage recognisyng and knowlegyng hym as their superior. Nowe consider, if Brutus conquered all this Iland, as the history saieth he did, and then in his awne tyme made this order of superiozitie as afore: how can there be a title deuised of a more plaine beginnyng, a more iust beginnyng, a more conuenient beginnyng for the order of this Iland, at that tyme specially when the people were rude, whiche cannot without continuall strife and variaunce conteine twoo or thre rulers in all pointes equall without any maner of superiozitie, the inward cõscience and remorse of whiche superiozitie should in some part dul and diminish the peruerse courage of resistence and rebellion. The fyrst diuision of thys Ile we fynde it written after this sort without cause of suspicion why they should write amisse. And accordyng here vnto we fynde also in history set forth by diuers, how for transgression against this superioritie, our predecessours haue chastised the kynges of Scottes, and some deposed, and put other in their places.

We will here omit to speake of the rudenes of the antiquitie in particularitie, whiche they cared not distinctly to commit to writyng, but some authors, as Anthonius Sabellicus amonges other diligently enserchyng, what he might truely wryte of all Europe, and the Ilandes adioynyng, ouer and beside that whiche he writeth of the natures, maners, and condicions of the Scottes, whiche who so lyst to rede, shall fynde to haue bene the very same in tymes paste, that we fynde theym now at this present, he calleth Scotland part of England, whiche is agreable to the diuision afore sayed, beyng in dede as in the lande continuall without separacion of the Sea, so also by homage and fealtie vnite vnto the same, as by particuler declaracions shal more manifestly appere ly appere by the testymony of suche as haue left writyng for profe and confirmacion thereof. In whiche matter passyng ouer the death of kyng Humber, the actes of Dunwald kyng of this realme, the deuision of Be-Ioan. Anglor. 8. lin and Brene, the victories of kyng Arthur, we shall beginne at the yere of our Lorde DCCCC. whiche is D Crlii. yeres past, a tyme of lufficient auncientie, from which we shall make speciall declaration and euident proke of the execucion of our right and title of superiorite euermore continued and preserued hytherto.

Edward the first before the conquest, sonne to Alured kyng of Englande had vnder his dominion and obedience the kyng of Scottes. And x here is to be noted, that this matter was so notorious and manifest, as Maryon a Scot writyng that story in those daies, graũteth, confesseth, and testifieth the same, and this dominion continued in that state xxiii. yere: At whiche tyme Athelstaine succeded in the croune of England, and hauyng by battayle conquered Scotlande, he made one Constantyne kyng of that partie, to rule and gouerne the countrey of Scotlande vnder hym, addyng this princely worde. That it was more honoure to him to make a kyng, then to be a kyng.

Xxiiii. yeres after that, whiche was the yere of our Lorde D cccxlviii. Eldred kyng our progenitour, Athelstaines brother, toke homage of Ix xx rise then kyng of Scottes.

Xxx. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our lorde D ccclxxviii. kyng Edgar our predecessor toke homage of Kinald kyng of Scottes. Here was a litle trouble in England by the death of S. Edward kyng and martir, destroyed by the deceite of his mother in lawe: but yet within memory.

Xl. yeres after the homage done by Kynald to kyng Edgare, that is to say, in the yere of our lord. M. xvii. Malcolme kyng of Scottes did homage to Knute our predecessor. After this homage done the Scottes vttered some pece of their naturall disposicion, whereupon by warre made xxx by our progenitour sainct Edward the Confessor. xxxix. yere after that homage done, that is to say, the yere of our lord. M. lvi. Malcolme kyng of Scottes was vanquished, and the realme of Scotlãd geuen to Malcolme his sonne by our saied progenitour sainct Edward: vnto whome thesaied Malcolme made homage and fealtie.

Within. xi. yeres after that Willyam Conqueror entred this realme whereof he accounpted no perfect conquest, vntill he had likewise subdued the Scottes, and therfore in thesaied yere, whiche was in the yere of oure Lorde. M. lxviii. thesaied Malcolme kyng of Scottes dyd homage to thesaied Wyllyam Conqueror, as his superior by conquest xl kyng of England.

Xxv. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our Lord. M. xciii. the sayd Malcolme dyd homage and fealtie to Wyllyam Rufus, sonne to thesaied Wyllyam Conqueror: and yet after that was for his offences

and

and demerites deposed, and his sonne substitute in his place, who lykewise sayled of his dutie, and therefore was ordeined in that estate by the said Willyam Rufus, Edgare brother to the last Malcolme, and sonne to the first, who did his homage and fealtie accordyngly.

Seuen yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our Lorde. M. C. thesaied Edgar kyng of Scottes, did homage to Henry the firste, oure progenitour.

xxvii. Xxvii. yere after that Dauid kyng of Scottes did homage to Matilde the Emperatrice, as daughter and heire to Henry the first. Wherefore beyng after required by Stephyn, then obteignung possession of the realme, to make his homage, he refused so to do, because he had before made it to thesaied Matilde, and therupon forbare. After which Dauids death, whiche ensued shortly after, the sonne of thesaied Dauid made homage to thesaied kyng Stephyn.

Xiiii. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of oure Lorde. M. Cl. Wyllyam kyng of Scottes, and Dauid his brother, with all the nobles of Scotland made homage to Henry the secondes sonne, with a reseruacion of their dutie to Henry the second his father.

xx Xxv. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our Lorde. M. Clxxv. Wyllyam kyng of Scotlande, after muche rebellion and resistence, accordyng to their natural inclinacion, kyng Henry the seconde, then being in Normandy, Willyam then kyng of Scottes knowleged finally hys errour, and made his peace and composicion, confirmed with his greate seale, and the seales of the nobilitie of Scotlande, makyng therewith his homage and fealtie.

Within. xv. yeres after that, which was ỹ yere of our lord. M. C. lxxx. thesaied Willyam kyng of Scottes, came to our citie of Cauntorbury, and there did homage to our noble progenitour kyng Richard the first.

xxx Xiiii. yeres after that, thesaied Willyam did homage to oure progenitour kyng Jhon, vpon a hyll besides Lyncolne, makyng his othe vpon the crosse of Hubert then archebyshop of Cauntorbury, beyng there present a marueilous multitude assembled for that purpose.

Houeden. 811

Xvi. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our lorde. M. CC. xvi. Alexander kyng of Scottes maried Margarete, the daughter of oure progenitour Henry the. iii. at our citie of Yorke, in the feast of Chrystmas: at whiche tyme thesaied Alexander dyd his homage to our saied progenitour: who reigned in this realme. lvi. yeres. And therfore betwene the homage made by thesaied Alexander kyng of Scottes, and the homage done by Alexander, sonne to thesaied kyng of Scottes, to Edward the xl first at his Coronacion at Westminster, there was aboute fyfty yeres at whiche tyme thesaied Alexander kyng of Scottes repayred to thesaied feast of coronacion, and there did his duetie as is aforesaied.

Within. xxviii. yeres after that, whiche was the yere of our lorde. M. CC. lxxxii. Jhon Baliol kyng of Scottes, made his homage and fealtie to thesaied kyng Edward the first, our progenitour.

But.

Aftes

After this began Robert Bruse to vsurpe the croune of Scotlande, and to moue seoicion therfore, agaynst theim of the house of Baliol, whiche made for a season some interrupcion in the saied homage: but yet no intermission without the termes of memory. For within. xliiii. yere after, whiche was the yere of our lorde. M. CCC. xlvi. Edward Baliol, after a great victory had in Scotland against the other faccion, and entoying the croune of Scotlande, made homage to our progenitour Edwarde the thyrd.

And. xx. yeres after that, whiche was in the yere of our lord. M. CCC. xlvi. Dauid Bruse, who was euer in the contrary faction, dyd neuertheiesse in the title of the croune of Scotland, wherof he was then in possession, make homage to our sayed progenitour Edward the third.

Within. ix. yeres after this, Edward the third, to chastise the infidelitie of the Scottes, made warre against theim: where after greate victories, Edwarde Baliol hauyng the iust and right title to the Realme of Scotlande, surrendred clerely thesame to our sayed progenitour at the toune of Rokysborough in Scotlande: where our sayd progenitour accepted thesame, and than caused hymselfe to be crouned kyng of Scotland, and for a tyme enterteigned it, and entoyed it, as very proprietary and owner of the realme, as on thone partie by confiscation acquired, & on the other parte by free will surrendred vnto hym.

And then after the death of our sayd progenitour Edward the third, beganne seditions and insurrections in this our realme, in the tyme of our progenitour Richard the second, whiche was augmented by the alteracion of the state of thesaied Richard, and the deuolucion of thesame, to Henry the fowerth, so as the Scottes had some leysure to play their vagues, and folowe their accustomed maner. And yet Henry the. v. for recouery of his right in Fraunce, commaunded the kyng of Scottes to attende vpon hym in that iourney. And in this tyme the realme of Scotlande beyng descended to the house of the Stewardes, of whiche oure Nephieu directly commeth, Iames Stewarde kyng of Scottes, in the yere of our Lorde. M. CCCC. xxii. made homage to Henry the fift at Wyndsore. Whiche homage was distaunt from the tyme of the other homage made by Dauid Bruse. ix. yeres and more, but farre within the fleshe memory of man.

All whiche homages and fealties as they appeare by storye to haue bene made and done at tymes and season as afore: so do there remayne instrumentes made therupon and sealed with the seales of the kynges of Scotland testifyng thesame. And yet doeth it appere by story, howe the Scottes practised to steale out of our treasurye dyuers of these instrumentes, whiche neuertheiesse were after recouered agayne. And too the intent ye may knowe of what fourme and tenour thesaied instrumentes be, here is inserted the effecte in worde and sentence as they be made, whiche we do to mete with the cauellacion and contriued euasion of the Scottes, allegyng the homage to haue bene made for the Erledome of Huntyngdon hũtyngtõ, which is as trew as the allegatiõ of him that is burnt in the hande, to saye he was cut with a sikle. And therfore the tenour of the homage is this.

I Jhon. N. kyng of Scottes shall be trew and faithfull vnto you lorde Edward by the grace of god kyng of England, the noble and superior lorde of the kyngdome of Scotland, and vnto you I make my fidelitie of thesame kyngdome of Scotland, the which I hold, & claime to holde of you: and I shall beare to you my faith and fidelitie of life & lymme and worldly honour against all men, & faithfully I shall know & lege, and shal do to you seruice due vnto you of the kyngdome of Scotland a foresaied, as god so helpe and these holy euangelies.

Now for the thrd parte touchyng recordes and registres, wee haue them so formall, so autentiquall, so seriously handeled, and with such circumstaunces declaryng the matiers as they be & ought to be a great corroboracion of that hath ben in stories writen & reported in this matter. For amonges other thynges we haue the solempne act, and iudicial processe of our progenitour Edward the first, in discussion of the title of Scotland, when the saine was challenged by twelue competitours: That is to say, Florentius comes Holandie.

Patricius de Dũbar comes de Merchia.
VVillielmus de Vesti VVillielmus de Ros.
Robertus de pinbeni.
Nicholaus de Soules Patritius Galightly.
Rogerus de Mnndeuille.
Ionnes de Comyn.
D. Ioannes de Hastinges.
Ioannes de Balliolo.
Robertus de Bruse.
Ercius rex Norvvegie.

And finally, after a great consultacion and mature deliberacion, with discussion of the allegacions proponed on all parties, sentence was geuen for the title of Balliol, accordyng wher vnto he enioyed the realme. But for confirmaciõ of the dutie of the homage before that tyme obserued by the kynges of Scottes, it appereth in those recordes, how when those competitours of the Realme of Scotlande repaired to oure saied progenitour, as to the chief lorde for discussion of thesame, in as muche as the aucthoritie of the iudgement to be geuen depended ther vpon: It was than ordered, that the whole parliament of Scotlande spirituall tempozall and of all degrees assembled for that purpose, and cõsidering vpon what ground and foundacion the kynges of Scotlande had in tymes past made thesaied homages and recognition of superiozitie, the saied parliament fyndyng the same good and trew, should if thei so demed it, yeld and geue place, and by expresse consent recognise thesame. At whiche parliament was alledged vnto them, as apperth in the same recordes, not only these actes of the princes before those daies, & before rehersed: but also besides the testimonye of stories, the writynges and letters of forein princes, at that time recityng and reherſyng theſame: Wherevpon theſaied parliament did ther agree to this our ſuperiorite, and enſuyng their determinacion dyd particularly and ſeuerally make homage and fealtie with Proclamacion, that whoſoeuer withdrue him ſelfe from doyng his duetie therein, ſhould be reputed as a rebell: And ſo all made homage and fealtie to oure progenitour Edward the firſt. This Realme was in the tyme of the diſcuſſion of the title ruled by Gardians deputed by hym, al caſtels and holdes were ſurrendered to him as to the ſuperior lord, in the tyme of vacacion, benefiſes, offices, fees, promotiõs paſſed in that tyme from the mere gift of our ſaied progenitour, as in the right of this croune of England, Shirifes named and appointed, writtes and preceptes made, obeied, and executed: and finally all that wee do nowe in the Duchie of Lancaſter, the ſame dyd our progenitour for the tyme of our contencion for that title in the realme of Scotlande, by the conſent of an agrement of all eſtates of the realme aſſembled and conſulted with for that purpoſe. At whiche tyme the biſhopes of ſainct Andrewes and Glaſcoo wer not as thei now be archebiſhopes, but recogniſed the archebiſhop of Yorke, whiche extended ouer all that countrey, x

Spel. Counsels. 3. a. 275.

Now if the Scottes wil take exception to the homage of ther princes as made in warr and by force whiche is not true: what will thei ſay or can thei for ſhame allege againſt ther awne parliament not of ſome but of all confirmed and teſtefied by there writynges and ſeales: wherunto nothyng enforced them, but right and reaſon, beyng paſſed in peace & quiet without armoure or compulſion. If thei ſay thei did it not, they ſpeake like them ſelfes, If thei ſay thei did it, then do thei now like them ſelf, to withdraw ther duetie, not ſo much to be blamed, as to be amẽded. xx

Thus apereth vnto you the begynnyng of the right of ſuperioritie, with a perpetuall continuaunce, without intermiſſion within memorie, certayne omiſſion and forbearyng vpon the groundes and occaſions before ſpecified we deny not. Wherby thei haue many tymes ſought and take there opportunities, to withdraw the doyng of ther duetie in knowlege of our ſuperiorite ouer them, which to auoyde, thei haue not cared what thei ſaied or alleged, though it wer neuer ſo vntrue: lyeng alwaies in a wait whan thei might annoy this Realme, not without there awne great daunger, peril, & extreme detryment. But as thei detracted the doyng of their dutie, ſo god euer graunted vnto this realme force to compell them therunto within memorie, notwithſtandyng any their interruptiõ by reſiſtaunce, which vnto the tyme of our progenitor Henry the firſt neuer indured ſo long as it made intermiſſion within tyme of mynd wherby the poſſeſſion might ſeme to be enpaired from the time of Henry the firſt vnto the ſeuenth yere of oure reigne, oure Realme hath bene for a ſeaſon lacerate and torne by diuerſitie of titles tyll oure tyme and ſithence by war outwardly vexed & troubled: The ſtorye is ſo lamentable xxx xl lamentable for some parte therof as were tedious to reherse, Sythen the death of our progenitor, Henry the.vi.our Graundfather Edward the.iiii.reigned, who after great traueyls to attayne quietnes in his Realme,finally in the tyme of preparation of warr agaynst Scotland,dyed.

Rychard the.iii.then vsurped for a small tyme in yeres, whom the Kyng our father by the strength of Gods hand ouerthrew in battayll, and most iustly attayned the possession of this Realme, who neuertheless after the great tempestious stormes, kyndynge all matters not yet x brought to perfecte quyet and rest, ceassed and forbare to requyre of the Scottes to do their duty, thinkyng it policy rather for that tyme to assay to tame their nature by the pleasaunt contunction & conuersation of affinitie,then to charge them with their faulte, and requyre dutye of them,when opportunitie serued not, by force and feare to constrayne and compell them.

And thus passed ouer the reigne of our father, without demaunde of this homage. And beyng our reigne nowe.xxviii.yeres, we were.xxi. yeres letted by our Nephieu his minoritie,beyng then more careful how to bryng him out of daũger,to the place of a kyng,then to receiue of him xx homage when he had full possession of thesame. Wherefore beyng now passed sithens the last homage made by the kyng of Scottes to our progenitor Henry the.vi.C.xxii.yere, at which tyme the homage was done at Wyndesore by James Stuard,then kyng of Scottes,as afore,lvi. of these yeres the crowne of this Realme was in contencion,the trouble wherof engendred also some busynesse in the tyme of the kyng our father,which was.xviii.yere: And in our tyme.xxi.yere hath passed in the minoritie of our Nephieu. So as finally the Scottes resortynge to their only defence of discontinuaũce of possession,can only alledge iustly but.xiii.yere of sylence in the tyme of our reygne, beynge all the other xxx tymes sythens the homage done by James Steward,suche as the sylence in them had thei ben neuer so long,could not haue engendred preiudice to the losse of any ryght,that may yet be declared & proued due. For what can be imputed to Kyng Edward for not demaundyng homage beynge in stryf for that estate, wherunto the homage was due. What should Rychard the,iii.serch for homage in Scotland, that had neither ryght ne leasure to haue homage done vnto hym in England. Who can blame our father, knowyng the Scottes nature neuer to do their dutie but for feare, yf he demaunded not that of them,whych they woulde exchue if thei might,beyng his Realme not clerely then purged xl from yll seede of sedicio, sparkled & scattered in the cruell ciuile warres before.

Lawe and reason serueth,that the passyng ouer of tyme not commodious,ỹ the purpose, is not allegeable in prescriptiõ for the losse of any ryght. And the minoritie of the kyng of Scottes hath endured.xxi. yeres of our reigne, whiche beynge an impediment on their parte, the whole prescription of the Scottes, yf the matter were prescriptible, is thus deduced euidently to.xiii.yere, which.xiii.yere without excuse we haue ceassed and forborne to demaunde our dutie, lyke as the Scottes haue lykewyse ceassed to offer and tende thesame. For which cause neuertheless we doo not enter this warre, ne mynded to demaunde anye suche matter, nowe beyng rather desirous to reioyce and take comfort in the frendship of our Nephieu, as our neyboure, then to moue matter vnto hym of displeasure, wherby to alienate suche naturall inclinacion of loue, as he should haue toward vs: But such be the workes of God, superior ouer all, to suffer occasions to be minystred, wherby due super- p rioritie maye be knowen, demaunded and requyred, to the entent that accordyng ther vnto all thynges gouerned in due ordre here, we may to his pleasure passe ouer this lyfe to his honor & glorye: which he graunt vs to doo, in suche rest, peace and tranquilitie, as shalbe mete and conuenient for vs.

When the kyng had setfurth the Declaracion of the cause of his war as is aboue mencioned. Then sent he furth the duke of Norffolke Lieu-tenaunt generall, accõpanyed with the Erles of Shrewisbury, Darby, Comberland, Surrey, Hertford, Anguysh, Rutland, and the Lordes of the North parties, and syr Anthony Browne Master of the kynges xx horsse, sir Jhon Gage Comptroller of the kynges house, and.xx.M. men well appoynted, whych entered Scotland the.xxi.day of October, and taryed there, viii.dayes without battell, and brent the townes of Paxton, Ramrige, Styne, Gradyn, Shylles, Lang Ednem, Newton, Skytshell, Newthorne, Smellem Spyttle, the two Werdens, Slederyke, and the two Brorlawes, Florys and the Fayre Crofte, Ednem Spyttle, Rorborough, Kelsey & the Abbey, Lang Spronstow, Ryden, and Hadenston. And whyle the Duke was at Farneton in Scotlande the.viii.daie, there came to speake with him halfe a myle from the Hoste, from the kyng of Scottes, the Bishop of Orkeney and James Leire- xxx mouth Maister of the houshold, to entreate peace, but they agreed not. And the Armye laye so long in Scotlande as they myght for honger & colde without anye countenaunce of harme, and so for necessitie returned to Barwycke. And all this iourney the Standarde of the Erle of Hampton which dyed at New Castell, was borne in the forwarde, because he was appoynted Capitayne of the same.

The kyng of Scottes hearyng that the Army was returned, reysed an army of.xv.thousand chosen men of all partes of his realme vnder the guydyng of the Lorde Warwell Wardeyn of his west Marches, bosting to tary as long in England as the Duke dyd in Scotlãd. And so on fridai beyng s. Katheryns euen, thei passed ouer the water of Eske & brent certayne houses of the Greues on the bery border. Thomas bastard Dacres with Jacke of Musgraue sẽt word to sir Thomas wharton Wardein for the kyng on the west Marches, to come on to succour them: but the sayd.ii. valiaũt Captayns, although the Scottes entered fiercly, yet thei manfully and coragiously set on theim, with an, C. light horsse, and left a stale on the side of a hill, where withal the Scottes wer wonderfully dismaide, either thinkyng that the duke of Norffolke, had been come to the west Marches, with his great army: or els thei thought that some greater armie came, when they espied sir Thomas Wharton, commyng with .iii. C. men onely. But at that tyme, so God ordeined it to be, that thei at the first bront fled, and thenglishemem folowed, and there wer taken prisoners therles of Cassilles, and Glancarne, the lorde Maxwell, Admirall and Wardein, the lorde Flemmyng, the lorde Somerwell, the lorde Oliphant, the lorde Gray, sir Oliuer Senclere, the kynges minio, Jhon Rosse lorde of Oragy, Robert Eskyn sonne to the lord Eskyn, Carre Lorde of Gredon, the Lorde Maxwelles twoo brethren, Jhon Lesley Bastard to the Erle of Rothus, and twoo hundred gentlemenne more, and aboue eight hundred common people, in so muche that some one man, yea, and women had three or foure prisoners. They toke also twentie and foure gonnes, foure cartes with speares, and ten pauilios. This was onely the handstroke of God, for the Cardinal of Scotlande promised them heauen, for destruccion of Englande.

The kyng of Scottes tooke a greate thought, for this discomfiture, and also because that an Englishe Herauld called Somerset was slain at Dunbarre, whiche thynges together he tooke so vnpaciently that he died in a Frenesy. Although many reported that the kyng hymself was at this bickeryng, and there receiued his deathes wounde, and fled therwith into Scotlande. But howsoeuer it was, true it is as is afforesaied he died, and the Quene his wife was deliuered of a daughter, on our lady Euen before Christmas, called Mary. Of the prisoners aforesaied twentie and foure of the chief of theim, were brought vp to the Tower of London, and there were twoo daies. And on Saincte Thomas daye the Apostle before Christmas, they were solemply conueighed through London to Westminster, where the kynges counsaill sat, and there the Lorde Chauncellor, declared to theim their vntruthe, vnkyndenes, and falle dissimulacion, declaryng farther how the kyng had cause of warre against them, bothe for the denyng of their homages, and also for their traiterous inuasions without defiaunce, and also for kepyng his subiectes prisoners without redemption, contrary to the olde Lawes of the Marches, for whiche doynges, God as they might perceiue had skourged theim: Howbeit the kyng more regardyng his honor, then his princely power, was content to shewe to theim kyndenes, for vnkyndenes, and right for wrong. And although he might haue kept theim in straite prison, by iuste lawe of Armes, yet he was content that thei should haue libertie, to bee with the nobles of his Realme, in their houses. And so accordyng to their estates, thei wer appoynted to Dukes, Erles, Bishoppes, Knightes, and other Gentlemen, whiche so entreteigned theim that thei confessed theimselfes, neuer to bee better enterteigned, nor to haue had greater there,

The victorie at the Water of Eske.

The death of the Scottish kyng.

But after their newe gladnes, tidinges came to them, of the death of their Kyng, whiche thei sore lamented, and hearyng that he had lefte an onely daughter his heire, thei wisshed her in Englande, to bee maried to the Prince the kynges sonne. The kyng and his Counsaill, perceiuyng the ouerture nowe to bee made, whiche waie without warre these twoo realmes, might bee brought into one, sent for all the prisoners fewe lackyng, to his Manor of Hãpton Court, on sainct Stephens daie, where thei wer so wel enterteigned, bothe of the kyng and his nobles that thei saied, thei neuer sawe kyng but hym, and saied that God was better serued here, then in their countrey: howbeit their Kirkmen preached, that in Englande was neither Masse, nor any seruice of God. And thei promised the kyng, to doo all that in theim laie with their frendes to performe asmuche as he required. Whereupon not without greate rewardes, thei departed towarde Scotlande, on Newe yeres daie, and by the waie thei sawe the Prince, and came to Newe Castle to the Duke of Suffolke, who vpon hostages deliuered theim, and so thei entered Scotland and wer well and gladly welcomed.

Likewise therle of Angus, which was banished Scotlande, and had of the kynges Fee, yerely a thousande marke, and sir George Douglas his brother, had fiue hundred marke. These wer accepted into Scotlãd, and restored by the last kynges will, and therle of Angus and diuerse of the Lordes that were prisoners, were made of the priuie counsail of the realme, by the Erle of Arrein, Gouernour of the young Quene, and the realme as next heire apparaunt: notwithstandyng that the Archebishop of Sainct Andrewes and Cardinall, enemye mortall to the Kyng and realme of Englande for the Bishoppe of Romes aucthorite (and partly set on by the Frenche kyng, for thesame cause) had forged a will, that the kyng had made hym Gouernour, associate with twoo Erles of his affinitie, bothe of the Realme, and of the young Quene, contrary to the Lawes of Scotlande. Wherupon thesaied Erle of Arrain, accordyng to his right, with the helpe of his frendes, tooke vpon hym the rule of Gouernour, and put thesaied falle Cardinal in prison, and deliuered sir Robert Bowes and other prisoners, by their bandes, accordyng to the custom of the Marches. And so in March next folowyng, the Scottes begaune their Parliament.

All this yere there was neither perfite peace, nor opẽ warre betwene Englande and Fraunce, but Shippes were taken on bothe sides, and Merchantes robbed. And at the laste the Marchantes goodes on bothe parties were seazed, and likewyse the Ambassadours, of bothe Realmes were staied: howbeit shortly after, the Ambassadours wer deliuered, but yet the Marchauntes wer robbed, and no warre proclaimed.

In the ende of this yere, came from the Gouernour of Scotlande as Ambassadours, sir William Hambelton, James Leyzemouthe, and the Secretory of Scotland, whose message was so meanely liked, that thei were fain to sende an Herauld into Scotlande, for other Ambassadors

and.

and so hether came the erle of Glancarn, and sir Geoyge Douglash: and whatsoeuer their answere was, sir Geoyge returned in Poste, and within twentie daies, came agayn with an honest answere, but that honestie endured a small tyme.

The.xxxv.yere.

IN the beginning of this yere on Trinitie Sondale, was a newe League swoyne, betwene the Kyng and the Emperour, at Hampton Courte, to bee frendes to their frendes, and enempes to their enemies.

x The thirde date of June came to the Courte, from the Realme of Irelande, the Loyde Obyyn, the Loyde Wacke Willyam Byough, the Loyde Wacke Gilpatricke. And in July thesaied Obyyn was created Erle of Townon, and Loyde Wacke Willyam, was created Erle of Claurikard, and sir Dunon Obyyn was made Baron of Ebyanky and so with rewardes they tooke their leaue, and returned. Also thesame Monethe, the Scottishe Ambassadours returned with greate rewardes.

At this season the Kyng and the Emperoure, sent Garter and Toyson Kynges at Armes, to demaunde certayne thynges of the Frenche xx Kyng, whiche if he dyd deny, then to defie hym, but he would not suffer theim to come within his lande, and so they returned. Whereupon thesaied demaundes, were shewed to the Ambassadoure at Westminster. And in July the Kyng sent ouer sixe thousande tall menne, whereof was Capitain generall, sir Jhon Wallop, and sir Thomas Seymour Marshall, and sir Richarde Cromewell Capitain of the hoysse menne, whiche assaulted a Toune called Laundersey, vnto the whiche assaulte came the Emperoure in proper person. And shortely after came doune the Frenche Kyng in proper persone, with a greate armye, and offered the Emperoure battail, by reason whereof the siege was reysed, and xxx streight the Frenche menne victayled the Toune, whiche was the onely cause of their commyng. For the nexte daie, the Emperoure beeyng ready, at the houre appoynted to geue battaill, and the Frenchemenne made greate shewe, as though thei would haue come forwarde, but they dalted of all that Daye, and in the Night, they ranne awaye, and trusted some to their Hoysses, and some to their legges like tall fellowes.

Foure perkis condempned.

In this Monethe were Indited, arraigned and condempned at new xl Wynsoye, foure menne, that is to saye, Anthony Persone Prieste, Robert Testwood Syngyng manne, Henry Filmer Tayloy, and Jhon Marbeck Syngyng manne. All these menne were at one tyme, as is afoyesaied, arreigned and condempned of Heresie, by foyce of the sixe Articles. The Heresies that they were condempned foy, were these as thei are alleged in their Inditementes: Firste, that Anthony Persone should should Preache twoo yere before he was arreigned, in a place called

1. Wynkefelde, and there should saie. That like as Christe was hanged betwene twoo Theues, euen so when the prieste is at Masse, and hath consecrated, and lifteth hym vp ouer his hedde, then he hangeth betwene twoo Theues, excepte he Preache the woorde of God truly, as he hath taken vpon hym do.

2. Also, that he saied to the people in the Pulpet, ye shal not eate the body of Christe, as he did hang vpon the Crosse, gnawyng it with youre teethe, that the bloud ronne about your lippes, but you shal eate it this daie, as ye eate it to morow, the next daie and euery daie, for it refresheth not the body, but the spirite.

3. Also, after he had preached and commended the Scripture, calling it the woorde of God, saied as foloweth. This is the woorde, this is the bread, this is the body of Christ.

4. Also he saied that Christe sittyng with his disciples, tooke bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples saiyng. This is my flesshe, take it and eate it: and like wise tooke the Wyne and blessed it, and gaue it to his Disciples saiyng, take it and drynke it: This is my bloudde: What is this to vs, but to take the Scripture of God, and to breake it to the people.

Henry Filmer. Item, Henry Filmer the Taylour arraigned of this Article, that he should saie. That the sacrament of the Aultare, is nothyng but a similitude and a Ceremony. And also, if God be in the Sacrament of the aultare, I haue eaten twentie Goddes in my life.

Robert Testwood. Robert Testwoode arreigned of this Article, that he should saye in the tyme that the Prieste was liftyng vp the Sacrament, what, wilte thou lifte hym vp so high, what yet higher, take hede, let hym not fall.

Jhon Warbecke. Jhon Warbecke arreigned, for that he had with his awne hande, gathered out of diuerse mennes writynges, certayn thynges that were expresly against bothe the Masse, and the Sacrament of the Aultar.

These foure persones, were arraigned, condempned, and burned for the articles aboue saied, except Jhon Warbecke, whose honestie and innocencie, purchased hym the Kynges Pardon, the other thre wer burned at Wynsore aforesaied.

Beside these menne, were a greate nomber of Gentlemenne, aswell of the Kynges priuie Chamber, as other Indited, by the procurement of Doctor London. Wyllyam Symons. one Doctor London, a Prebendary of Wynsore, and one Wyllyam Symons a Vaunt Parler: Whiche Gentlemenne made suyte to the kynges Maiestie, declaryng in what case they stoode. Whereupon Doctor London was examined, and so was thesaied Symons, whiche vpon their Othe of allegeunce, denied their Trayterous purpose, as after it was proued to their faces. Wherefore they were adiudged as Periured persones, to weare Papers in Wynsore, and so thei did, and were after committed to the Flete, where thesayed Doctor London died. And here haue I an occasion, because of doctor Londons periury, to tell you how he was also the occasyon that another commytted wylfull periury. The matter was, that a certayne robbery was commytted in Oxford in a College wherof the layd Doctor London was Master, and certain plate by one of thesaid College was taken away & brought to London to sell, and it was solde to a Goldsmyth in London named Willyam Caloway. This Goldsmyth had before bought muche plate of the partye (which now solde the sayde stollen plate) beynge a man of credyte, and therfore suspected of nothynge. But this matter was so followed, that the partye that stole it was taken, and so was dyuers accessaries. At the last, Doctor London knowyng to whom it was solde, and that the Goldsmyth was a man of the Newe learnynge (as they called hym) sware a great othe that he would hang hym or elles it shoulde coste hym fyue hundreth pounde: wherevpon he caused also the sayde Goldsmyth to be attached as accessarye, and arreygned hym at the Sessions holden at Newgate in London: where it was alleged that they ought not by the lawe to enquyre of the accessarye before the principall: and there for the dispatche of thesayed Goldsmyth, it was alleged that the principall was hanged, whiche was nothynge so, for he was set at his lybertye and lyueth styll. But to be shorte, the Goldsmyth (which vndoubtedly is a knowen, tryed and proued honest man and euer was of honest name and fame) was founde gyltye, and no remedy but he must declare what he coulde say why he should not dye accordyng to the law: he prayed to haue his booke: which was answered that he coulde not haue it, for he was Bigamus. And now cometh the periury that I promysed to tell you of: His wyfe, which of all persõs that knoweth her, is certaynly knowen to be an honest woman, and frõ her byrth hathe euer ben of as muche honesty as any woman maye be: And this woman had had two husbandes before, which also wer honest men, and she had children by them, and therefore was it alleged against this Goldsmyth that he was Bigamus: This good woman perceyuyng that her former mariages shoulde shorten her husbandes dayes, came into the open Courte before the Judges and affirmed by her othe contrarie to the truthe, that she was neuer maryed to mo men then to the sayde Goldsmyth, although she had chyldren by her other husbandes and contynued dyuers yeres with theim, yet she sware she was whore to them bothe and not maryed. And so by defamyng of her selfe, to her great prayse, she delyuered her innocent husband.

Willyam Caloway.

In this yeare was in London a great death of the Pestilence, and therfore Myghelmas Tearme was adiourned to Saynt Albons, and there was kepte to the ende.

In the weke of Christmas, came to the kyng to Hampton Courte Ferdinando de Gonzaga Viceroy of Cicile Prince of Malfeta, Duke of Juano, of Juano, Capitayne generall of the chyualrye and Army of the Emperour Charles, whiche came to the kyng, to appoynt what tyme the Army and the Emperour shoulde be readye to inuade Fraunce, and the appoyntment taken he departed, & had for his reward a C.liii.oũces in golden plate, & .xiii. M. iii. oz in gylte plate, which al was very curiously wrought. And all the tyme that he lay here, he lay at the kynges cost.

The sonday before Christmas was Lorde Wyllyam Parre, brother to the Queene, which had maryed the doughter & heyre of Lorde Henry Burchier Erle of Essex, at Hampton Courte, created Erle of Essex. And syr Willyam Parre Knyght vncle to them bothe was made Lord Par of Horton & chaumberleyn to the Quene. And on Newyeres day was Syr Thomas Wryothesley the kynges Secretary made Lorde Wryothesley of Tychefelde.

Also this yere was open warre proclamed with Fraunce, and lycence geuen to the kynges subiectes to seaze vpon the Frenchemen and their goodes as in lyke cases before had been accustomed.

The.xxxvi.yere.

THIS YERE the kyng sent a gret army into Scotlande by sea, and he made the Erle of Hertford Lieutenaunt Generall of thesame. And the Vicount Lisle hygh Admirall, whiche valyaunt Capitaynes so sped them, that the thyrd day of Maie the Lorde Admirall arryued with all his Fleete which was two hundreth sayle in the Fryth, where he landed dyuers of his men and there tooke dyuers vessellos whiche after dyd hyghe seruyce. And shortly they approched vnto the towne of Lyth where they landed their men, and marched forwarde in three great batteyles, wherof my Lorde Dompyall led the bawarde, the Erle of Shrewsbury the arrerewarde, and the Noble Earle of Hertforde beyng Lieutenaunt, the battayle: Where they founde the Scottes assembled to the nombre of syxe thousande horsemen beside footemen to stop the passage of the army. And at the fyrst the Scottes made towarde the Englyshmen as thoughe they would haue set on the bawarde; but when thei perceiued the Englishmē so willynge to encountre with theym, namely the Cardinall who was there present, which perceiued the deuocion the Englyshmen had to see his holynesse, after certayne shot on bothe sydes, they made a sodayne retreate, and leauyng their artillary behynde them fled towarde Edenborough. The fyrst man that fled was the Cardinall lyke a valyaunt Champion, and with hym the Gouernour, the Erle of Huntley, Murrey and Bothwell, with manye other great men of the Realme. And shortly after the Englishmen mauger al the Scottes might do, entered the towne of Lith wher that night the army encamped them, & there thei found such richesse as they thought not to haue founde in any towne of Scotland.

Lyth taken.

The

The next daye the Armie went towardes Edenborough toune, and when thei approched nere, the prouoſt of the toune accõpanied with one or two Burgeſſes, and twoo or thre officers at armes deſired to ſpeake with the kynges lieutenaunt, and in the name of all the toune ſated, that the keyes of the toune ſhoulde be deliuered vnto his lordſhip condicionally, that they might go with bag & baggage & the toune to be ſaued from fire: Wherunto anſwer was made by theſayd lorde lieutenaunte, that wher as the Scottes had ſo manifeſtly broken there promiſes confirmed by othes and Seales and certefied by the whole parliament as x is euidẽtly knowen to the whole worlde, he was ſent thether by the kynges highnes to take vengeaunce of there deteſtable falſehed, to declare and ſhewe the force of his highnes ſworde to all ſuche as ſhoulde make any reſiſtence vnto his graces power ſent thether for that purpoſe: And therefore he tolde them reſolutely that oneleſſe thei woulde yelde vp the toune frankly without condicion, and cauſe man, woman and chylde, to iſſue into the feldes, ſubmittyng theim to his wyll and pleaſure, he would put thẽ to the ſworde and ther toune to the fire. The prouoſt anſwered that it wer better for them to ſtãd to ther defẽce. Whereupon cõmaundement was geuen to theſaied prouoſt and officers at armes vp-xx on there perill to depart. And forth with the lord lieutenaunt ſent to the bawarde that thei ſhoulde marche towardes the toune, whiche courageouſly ſet forwarde, and the Engliſh gonners manfully ſet on the gates, ſpecially ſir Chriſtopher Moryce, that they did beat the Skottes from there ordinaunce, and ſo entred the gate called Cany gate by fine force, and ther ſlew a great nombre of the Skottes: And finally it was determined by theſaied lorde lieutenaunt vtterly to ruinate and deſtroy theſaied toune with fire, whiche thyng immediatly was attempted, but becauſe night was come, the armie withdrue to their campe, & then a freſh the next day ſet fyre where none was before, which continued that day & two dayes after burnyng. And ſhortly after came vnto this Army by xxx land foure thouſande light horſemen ſent by the kyng whiche after thei were come, the army forſoke there Shippes and ſent theim home laden with ſpoyle and goneſhot whiche thei founde there, and diſlodged their camp out of the toune of Lith, and ſet fire in euery houſe, and brent it to the grounde: and ſo returned home by land, through all the mayn country of Scotlande, burnyng and deſtroiyng euery pile, forteſſe and village that was in their walke, and ſo with great honour to the great reioyſyng aſwel of the kynges maieſtie as of all his faithful and louyng ſubiectes, they returned a gayn into Englãd with the loſſe ſkant of forty perſones: and becauſe their great exployt may be the better knowen,

In this yere alſo the kynges mateſtie prepared two great armyes to Fraunce, the one was conducted and led by the duke of Norffolke and the gentle lozde Ruſſell lozde preuy ſeale, which encamped at Huttrell and beſeged the toune where they lay a long tyme, and left the toune as they founde yt: The other army was led by the valiante duke of Suffolk which was the kynges liuetenaunt of that armie, and beyng accũpanyed with the lozde chamberleyn, the Erle of Arondell Marſhall of the felde, and Sir Jhon Gage comptrolloz of the kynges houſe, and Sir Anthony Browne maſter of the kynges hozſſes, with diuerſe and many other capitaynes: the ninetene day of July encamped befoze Bulleyn on the Eſt ſyde of theſame vpon the hill, where after many ſharpe ſkyrmiſches they gayned firſt the old man, & ſhortly after baſſe Boleyn.

Boleyn beſeged.

The fourtene day of July the kynges mateſtie in his royall perſone paſſed the ſes from Douer to Calis, and the ſix and twentie day encamped him ſelfe befoze Bolleyn, on the nozth ſyde, with in leſſe then halfe a myle of the toune, where his grace remayned tyll the toune was ſurrendered vnto his mateſtie: the which toune he ſo ſoze aſſauted & ſo beſeged with ſuche a boundaunce of greate ozdinaunce that neuer was there a moze valtaũter aſſaute made, foz beſyde the vndermyning of the caſtel, tower and walles, the toune was ſo beaten withe ozdinaunce that there was not left one houſe whole therein: & ſo ſoze was laied to the charge of the Frẽchmen that after the kyng had aſſauted theim by the ſpace of a moneth, thei ſent furth of the toune to the kyng two of their chief captaynes, called Mounſire Semblemound, & Mounſire de Hates, whiche declared that the chief capitayne of the toune with his retinew was contẽted to delyuer the toune vnto his grace, ſo that they might paſſe with bag and dag and baggage, which requeſt the kynges maieſtie, merciſully graũted theim. And ſo on the next day, the duke of Suffolke rode into Bullein, to whõ in the kynges name, they deliuered the keyes of the toune. And at after none departed out of Bulleyn al the frenchmen. The nũber of the men of warre, that wer ſtrong and galaunt, that came out of the toune, were of horſemen, lxbij. of footmen. xv. C. lxiij. of Gonners viij. C. of hurte menne. lxxxvij. of women and chyldren. xix. C. xxvij. So there was in al that came oute of the toune, foure thouſaud, foure hundred, fiftie and foure, beſide a great nomber of aged, ſicke and hurt x perſones, that was not able to go furth of the toune. The laſt perſon ẏ came furth, was Monſire de Ueruine, grand capitaine of the Toune, which when he approched nere the place, wher the king ſtode, he alighted from his horſe, and came to the king. And after he had talked with hym a ſpace, the kyng toke him by the hand, and he reuerently kneling vpon his knees, kyſſed hys hande, and afterwarde mounted vpon hys horſe and ſo departed.

The kinges enteraũce in to Bullein.

The. xviij. day, the kinges highnes hauing the ſworde borne naked xi before him, by the Lorde Marques Dorſet, like a noble and valyaunt conqueror rode into Bulleyn, and the Trompetters ſtandyngon the walles of the toune, ſounded their Trompettes, at the time of his entring, to the great comfort of al the kynges true ſubiectes, theſame beholdyng. And in the enteryng there met him the duke of Suffolk, and deliuered vnto him the keyes of the toune, and ſo he roade toward his lodgyng, which was prepared for him, on the South ſide of the toune. And within two dayes after, the kyng rode about al the toune within the walles, and then commaunded that our Lady Church of Bullein, ſhould be defaced and plucked doune, where he appoynted a Mouũt to be made, for the greate force and ſtrength of the toune.

When the kyng had ſet all thinges ther in ſuche order, as to hys wiſxii dom was thought beſt, he returned into England, to the great reioyſynge of al hys louyng ſubiectes.

In the meane ceaſon, that the kyng laye before Bulleyn, a was like to haue cõquered theſame, as at the laſt he did, as before you haue hard the Emperor toke a peace with the French kyng, to the no litle grefe and diſpleaſure of the kinges maieſtie, and that was the cauſe that the kyng ſo ſodainly brake vp his army, aſwel at Bulleyn as alſo at Muttrell.

Shortly after beſyde diuerſe and many ſharpe ſkirmiſches, made by xi the Frenchmen at Bulleyn, aſwel by the Dolphyn with a great power which in the night ſeaſon, ſtale vpon Baſe Bullem, taking ther a great ſort of ſicke perſones, and women in their beddes, whõ without mercy they ſlew. How beit ſo mãfully the Englyſhmen, which eſcaped out of Baſe Bulleyn, behaued themſelfes, gettyng weapons out of the hyghe toune, that they bet the Frenchmen agayn out of ẏ Baſe toune, and after wyth the helpe of the higẏ toune, they ſlewe a great nõber of them, and so agayn possessed quietly, the sayed Base toune: Besyde I say this skirmishe and many mo, Monsire de Bees came with.xb.M. men, and encamped ryght agaynst the toune, on the other side of the water, entēdyng there to haue buylded a Foyte. But the fourth daye of Febyuary, he was set vpon his owne campe, by the moste valiaunt and foytunate Erle of Hertfoyd and Loyd Lisle, the Loyd Gray and other: at whose comming thesayde Monsire de Bees, wyth al his puyssaunce fled, leauynge behinde them al their oydinaunce, Tentes and plate.

¶ The. xxxvii. yere.

THe.vij.day of June, a great armye of Frenchemen, came nere to the hauen of Bulleyn, and skirmished wyth thenglyshemen to the no great gayne of the Frenchmen: but this army which was accōpted to the nomber of.xx.M. ther encamped & begā again to buyld a Foyt, which before they departed, accōplished thesame. x

In June the loyd Lisle Admirall of Englande, wyth thenglyshe flete entered the mouthe of the riuer of Sain, and came before Newehauen, where the great army of Fraunce laie, which were.CC.sayl of shippes and.xi vi. Galies of Foyce, wherof the bishop of Rome had sent.xx.wel furnished wyth men and money, to ayde the French king. Thenglyshemen beyng but an an.C.ix.sayle, & all great shyppes, did not determine to set on the whole nauie, but shot certayn peces of oydinaunce at theim, whiche caused the Galies to come abyoade, and shot at the Englyshmen whiche Galies had greate aduauntage, by reason of the calme wether: twyse eche part assauted other with oydinaunce, but sodainly the wynd rose so greate, that the Galies could not indure the rage of the seas: and thenglyshmen were compelled to entre the main seas, foy feare of flattes and so sayled vnto Poytesmouth, where the kyng then laye, foy he had knowelage by his espyalles, that the French army, entended to lande in ỹ Isle of Wyght, wherfoye he repaired to ỹ cost, to se his realm defēded. xx

After the departyng of thenglyshe nauy, from Newhauen, the Admyrall of Fraunce, called the Loyde Dombalt, a man of greate experyence, halsed vp hys sayles, and with hys whole nauie, came to the point of the Isle of Wyght, called. S. Helenes poyut, and there in good oydye cast their Ankers, and sent.xvi. Galies dayly, to the very hauen of Poytesmouthe. Thenglyshe nauye liyng in the hauen, made them pyest and set out towardes thē, and styl the one shot at the other. But one day aboue all other, the whole nauie of the Englishmen made out, and purposed to set on the Frenchmen: but in their settyng foyward, a goodly shyp of Englande called the Mary Rose, was by to much foly, dyouned in the middest of the hauen, foy she was laden wyth much oydinaunce, and the poytes left open, which were very lowe, and the great oydinaunce, vnbyeched, so that when the shyp should turne, the water entred, and sodainly she sanke. In her was sir Geoyge Carewe knight, Capitain of the said shyppe, and foure hundyeth men, and much oydinaunce. xxi

At

At the same tyme certayn of the French menne, landed in the Ile of Wyght, where their capitayn was slayne and many other, and were to their great losse and payn, dryuen again to their Galies.

The kyng perceyuing the great nauie of the Frenchmen to approch sent letters for men into Hampshire, Somersetshire, Wilshire, and dyuerse other places adioyning: which repaired to his presence in greate nombers, wel furnished wyth armure and victayl, and all thynges necessary, so that the Ile was garnished, and all the Frontiers on the sea coast, furnished wyth men in great nomber.

x The French capitaines hauing knowlege, by certain Fysher menne which they toke, that the kyng was present, and also of the great power that he had in readines, they disancred and sayled a long the coastes of Sussex, and a smal nomber of them landed in Sussex, whiche neuer returned to their shyppes, for they were taken vp by the waye.

Whē they had searched al ẏ coastes, & saw men euer redy to receiue them, thei turned the sterne and returned home again, without any act worthy to be wrytten, done or enterprysed: sauing ẏ in this mean tyme their newe Fort against Bullein, was strongly furnished and fynyshed.

The nōber of the Frenchmen, as diuerse prisoners that wer takē in xx the isle of Wyght, & in Sussex did report, wer. lx. M. And at this time the French kyng wrote to the Emperor, and declared to him, that hys army had gotten the isle of Wight, the Portes of Hampton and Portesmouth, & diuerse other places, which writyng was as true, as ẏ French kyng hath in al his leagues & promyses, bene to the kynge of England.

In August folowyng, the noble erle of Hertford entered into Scotland, wyth. xij. M. men, and destroied al the tounes in the midle Marches, and passed to the West marches, to the great detriment and losse of Scotlande, and destroyd Coldingham Abbey: & yet the Frenchmen and Scottes, whiche lay at Kelsey, durst not once encountre wᵗ hym.

xxx In thys moneth died Charles, the noble and valiaunt duke of Suffolke a hardye gentleman, and yet not so hardy, as almoste of all estates and degrees of menne hygh and lowe, rych and poore, hartely beloued and hys death of them muche lamented, he was buryed at Wyndsore. The death of charles duke of Suffolke.

The. xxiiij. day of Nouember, a Parliament began at Westmynster by aucthoritie whereof, was graunted to the kyng a Subsedy, of. ij. s. viij. d. of the pound, of moueable goodes, and. iiij. s. the pounde in lande to be paied in two yere. And all Colleges, Chaunteries, and Hospitalles wer committed to the kynges ordre, dūryng hys life, to alter & trāspose, wheych hys grace at the Prorogacion of the Parliament, promised xl to do to the glory of God, and the common profite of the realme.

A litle before this tyme, the noble and valiaunt lord Lisle, lord Admiral landed in Normandy, and brent the subbarbes of Treiport, and diuerse villages alonge the sea cost, and destroyed and toke almoste all the shyppes in the hauen, which was a ryche and a goodly pray, and so returned wythout any dammage.

The French kyng sore moued wyth these doynges, sent Mõsire de Bees with.xij.M.men, which entered into thenglish pale, beside Grauelyn, and brent Marke and diuerle smal villages, and then returned.

Euer in maner wer skirmisches & Alarmes betwene high Bullein & the new builded fortresse, but the losse ran euer on the frechmẽs side.

This wynter was meanes made by thẽperor, that certain Ambassadors of England & Fraunce might mete, to cõmon of a peace, whereupon the king of Englãd sent to Guisnes, Cutbert bishop of Duresme sir William Paget his secretary, & doctor Tregonel. And the French kyng sent to Arde a bishop, the chief President of Roan, and a Notary, & but no conclusion came to effect. Wherfore the kyng hauynge perfyte knowlege, how the Frenchmen intended to buyld a new fortresse on s. Jhones rode, betwene Bullein and Calice: whiche thing had not onely sore distrussed Calice, but daily had put Bullein in trouble. Wherefore he meaning to preuent so great a mischief, sent ouer the noble Earle of Hertford, and the valiaunt lord Lisle Admiral, and many valiaunt capitaines with.vij.M.good souldiers, which gat the rode but.ij. daies before the Frenchmen appointed to haue bene ther, & in that place encãped thẽselfes. Monsire de Bees leader & conducter, of all the French affaires, encãped himself beside Hardelow, & durst not once come furth xx to set on our men, notwithstandinge his former preparacion & deuyce.

These thinges thus hangyng, many great skirmisches were daylye betwene the Bullenoys, and the French Bastilió: & one day thone part lost, & the other gayned, & likewise the losers regained: but in one skirmishe wer lost.xvj. Englysh gentlemen, and.lxxx.other, although ther were slayne three rascal Frenchmen, and in this skurmish was slain, sir George Dollard. And in a like iorney was slayn sir Rause Elderkare Capitain of the light horsemen, wyth a fewe other Englyshemen, but yet a great multitude of the Frenchmen, at that time lay on the groũd.

The.xxiiij.day of December, the kinges maiestie came into the parliament house, to geue his royal assent, to suche actes as there had passed, where was made vnto him by the Speaker, an eloquent oratiõ, to the which it hath euer ben accustomed, that the lord Chauncellor made answere, but at this time it was the kynges pleasure, that it should be otherwyse, for the kyng himself made him answer, as followeth worde for worde, as nere as I was able to report it. xxx Kyng Henry the. VIII. answere to the speaker of ỹ Parliament.

Although my Chauncelor for the time beyng, hath before this time vsed, very eloquently and substancially, to make answer to suche orations, as hath bene set furth in this high court of Parliamente, yet is he not so able to open and set furth my mynd and meanyng, and the secretes of my hart, in so plain and ample maner, as I my selfe am and cã do: xl

» wherfore I taking vpon me, to answer your eloquent oration maister » Speaker, say, that wher you, in the name of our welbeloued commons » hath both praysed & extolled me, for ỹ notable qualities, that you haue » conceiued to be in me, I most hartely thanke you all, that you haue put me

me in remembraũce of my dutye, whiche is to endeuor my self to obtein " and get suche excellent qualities, and necessary vertues, as a Prince or "

that you consideryng our greate charges (not for our pleasure, but for " a certain subsedy, here in an act specified, whiche verely we take in good " part, regarding more your kindnes, then the profite thereof, as he that " setteth more by your louing hartes, then by your substaũce. Beside this " hartie kindnes, I cannot a litle reioyse whẽ I consider, the perfite trust " and sure cõfidence, whiche you haue put in me, as men hauing vndoub- " dre and disposicion, all Chauntryes, Colleges, Hospitalles, and other " ex places specefied in a certain act, firmely trustyng that I wil ordre them " to the glory of God, and the profite of the common wealth. Surely if I " contrary to your expectacion, should suffre the ministres of the Church " to decaie, or learnyng (whiche is so great a iuell) to be minished, or more " and miserable people, to be vnrelieued, you might say that I beyng put " in so speciall a trust, as I am in this cace, were no trustie frende to you, " nor charitable man to mine euen chrystian, neither a louer of the publyk " of all our doynges. Doubt not I praye you, but your expectacion shal- " be serued, more Godly and goodly then you wil wish or desire, as here- " xx after you shall plainly perceiue. "

Now, sithence I find suche kyndenes, on your part towarde me, I can " taken from the Englyshmen before. And in their way they fortuned to mete sodainly wyth a litle Craer,of whom was Maister one Golding, which Golding was a fearce and an hardy man. The barck perceiuing this small Craer to be an Englyshman,shott at hym and bouged hym, wherfore the Craer drew straycht to the great ship, and six or seuen of the men lept into the Barke. The Frenchmen lookyng ouer the boord whyche clymed into the shyp,founde in the ende thereof, a great nõber thereof is,set them a fyre,and threw them at the Frenchmen that wer the shippe,vanquished al that were therein,and dryue them vnder hat= ches,and brought the Barck clerely awaye agayn into Englande.

¶ The. xxviij. yere.

IN the monethe of Apryll,by meanes of diuerse Prynces,an assemble was had,betwene both the Realmes, of Englande and Fraunce, at Guysnes and Arde. There were for the kynge of Englande, the Eerle of Hertforde, the Lorde xl Lysle Admyrall, Syr Wyllyam Paget Secretarye, and Doctor Wotton Dean of Cauntorbury. And For the Frenche kynge,the lorde

A peace cõcluded betwene Englãd and ffraunce.

Clado Doneball Admirall, and Marshall of Fraunce: the byshoppe of Eureux, a president and a Secretary. After long debating, and diuerse byeches, a peace was coucluded, and proclaymed in the kynges Court, and in the citie of London on Whitsonday, with sound of Trompettes. And likewyse was it done at Paris and Roan. For the performaunce whereof, the Uiscount Lisle Admiral, wyth the bishoppe of Durelme, and dyuerse lordes, and abone an hundred gentlemē, all in Ueluet coates and cheynes of golde, went to Paris, and were there solemplye receyued and feasted, and shortly retnrned.

After whose returne, the Admirall of Fraunce, accompanyed wyth the bishoppe of Eureux, the Erles of Naunteuile, and Uilliers, and diuerse great Lordes, besyde two hundreth Gentlemen well appointed, tooke his Galey at Depe, and hauinge in hys compaignie twelue fayre Gelies wel trimmed and decked, sayled into Englande, and neuer toke lande, till he came to Grenewiche, where he was receiued by the Erles of Essex and Darby, the.xix. day of August. And the next day, he wyth al hys Galies, landed at the Tower Wharfe, and on al the bankes by ỹ water syde, laye peces of ordinaunce which shot of, but especially ỹ Tower of London, where was shot a terrible peale of ordinaunce. And frō thence he rode through London, in greate triumphe, the Maior & the .xx. craftes standing in the stretes in good ordre, to the Bishoppes Palaice of London, wher he lodged, tyl Bartholomew euen, on whyche day he was conueighed toward Hampton Court, where in the way the prince hauyng wyth hym the Archebyshoppe of Yorke, the Erles of Hertford and Huntyngdon, and about two thousande horse, mette hym and enbraced hym, in such lowly and honorable maner, that all the beholders gretely reioysed, and much marueyled at his wyt and audacitie, and so he came to the Court, geuyng the Prynce the vpper hand as he roade. And at the vtter gate of the Courte, the Lord Chauncellor, and al the kynges counsayll receiued him, and brought him to his lodgynge. xxx

On Barthelemew daye, the kyng rychly appareled, welcomed hym and in great triumph went to the chapel, wher the league was sworne and signed. To tel you of the costlye banquet houses, that were built, & of the great banquettes, the costly Maskes, the liberal huntynges that were shewed to hym, you woulde much maruel, and skant beleue. But on Friday folowyng, he beyng rewarded with a Cupborde of plate, to the valure of twelue hundred pound, returned to Londō, and on Sondaye tooke his Galies and departed. Beside this diuerse of his cōpayny had much plate, and manye horsses, and Greyhoundes geuen them. Also the Admiral had geuen to hym, of the citie of London, twoo Flagons gylte, and twoo parcel gylt, to the somme of an hundred and syxe and thirtie pounde, beside Wine, Waxe, and Torches: and thus thei laden wyth more ryches then they brought, returned into Fraunce. xxxi

Althoughe this peace pleased, both the Englysh and the French nacions, yet surely both mistrusted, the continuaunce of the same, consideringe king the old Prouerbe, that the iye seeth, the harte rueth, for the Frēch men styll longed for Bulleyn, and the Englyshmen minded not to geue it ouer: in so much as duryng the Admiralles of Fraūce beynge in England, the captayn of the newe fortresse, began to make a Pile, euen at the very hauen mouth of Bulleyn: but the Lorde Gray capitain there put awaye the worke men, and toke awaye their tooles, and filled the trenches, to the Frenchmennes great displeasure. And after the Frenche kynge caused vpon a great payn, that al the trenches, and newe inuencions should be cast doune, and fylled by hys owne people, leaste he should seme to be the breaker of the peace.

In this yere was arreigned, cōdempned and burned, for affirming opinions, contrary to the syxe artycles, foure persones, that is to saye, Anne Askew Gentlewoman, Jhon Lacelles a Gentleman, Nicholas Otterden Prieste, and Jhon Adlam a Taylor: all these were burned in Smithfelde, the. xvj. day of July: and because the whole processe of their matters is by diuerse wryters set furth, therfore I passe it ouer. In January were attaynted of hygh treason, Thomas duke of Norfolke, and Henry his sonne erle of Surrey which erle was behedded at the Tower Hill.
